

~~San Diego State University~~ ~~College of Law~~
~~San Diego, California~~

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY SAN DIEGO

NON CIRCULATING

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2023 with funding from Kahle/Austin Foundation

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

Covering Cases Reported in PACIFIC REPORTER

114 P.—117 P.

Cite by Volume and Page
of the
PACIFIC REPORTER

Thus:

114 P. 46

ST. PAUL, MINN.
WEST PUBLISHING CO.
1956

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

Containing Cases Reported in

PACIFIC REPORTER

114 P.-117 P.

COPYRIGHT, 1911, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.
Pacific Reporter, Vol. 114, Nos. 1-5; Vol. 115, Nos.
1-9; Vol. 116, Nos. 1-7; Vol. 117, Nos. 1-9.

COPYRIGHT, 1956, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.

Cite by Volume and Page

of the

PACIFIC REPORTER

Volume

114 P. 46

AT SAN FRANCISCO

WEST PUBLISHING CO.

1967

CASES REPORTED

Vols. 114-117 P.

	P.
	Vol.	Page
Abbott, Ex parte, Sup.	116	763
Abbott; California Raisin Growers' Ass'n v., Sup.	117	767
Abbott Quicksilver Min. Co.; Ridgely v., App.	117	1036
Ackerman; Seaboard Nat. Bank v., App.	116	91
Adams; Naylor v., App.	114	997
Adams; Naylor v., App.	115	335
All Persons, etc.; Boland v., Sup.	117	547
All Persons, etc.; Kaufman v., App.	117	586
Allstead v. Laumeister, App.	116	296
A. Mautz & Co.; Jules Levy & Bro. v., App.	117	936
American Transfer Co.; Bondy v., App.	115	965
Andreen v. Andreen, App.	115	761
Arberry; People v., App.	114	411
Ashley; Carpenter v., App.	115	268
Ashley; Carpenter v., App.	116	983
Asiatic Club v. Biggy, Sup.	117	912
Associated Oil Co.; Coalinga Pac. Oil & Gas Co. v., App.	116	1107
Avery v. Cullen, App.	114	1022
Ayers; Perry v., Sup.	114	46
Ayhens; People v., App.	117	789
Babcock; People v., Sup.	117	549
Bachman & Co.; John Bollman Co. v., App.	117	690
Baiersky; Morcom v., App.	117	560
Balmain; People v., App.	116	303
Bank of Napa; Gardiner v., Sup.	117	667
Bannerman v. Boyle, Sup.	116	732
Barnnovich; People v., App.	117	572
Bartlett Springs Co. v. Standard Box Co., App.	117	934
Bartley v. Fraser, App.	117	683
Bauhofer v. Crawford, App.	117	931
Beaudry; Porters Bar Dredging Co. v., App.	115	951
Beaumont Land & Water Co.; Walker v., App.	115	766
Beaver v. Continental Building & Loan Ass'n, App.	116	1105
Bedolla v. Williams, App.	115	747
Bell; Kearney v., Sup.	117	925
Bell v. Staacke, Sup.	115	221
Bender v. Hutton, Sup.	117	322
Bennett v. Potter, App.	116	681
Benson; Conklin v., Sup.	116	34
Bernou v. Bernou, App.	114	1000
Berryman v. Hotel Savoy Co., Sup.	117	677
Best; Union Trust & Realty Co. v., Sup.	116	737
Beyrle; Clark v., Sup.	116	739
Biggy; Asiatic Club v., Sup.	117	912
Birchfield; Stewart v., App.	114	999
Birk v. Hodgkins, Sup.	114	822
Blackinton; First State Bank v., App.	116	311

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Blaisdell; McArthur v., Sup.	115	52
Blanchard; Johnston v., App.	116	973
Board of Sup'rs of Inyo County; Inyo Development Co. v., App.	114	1006
Board of Sup'rs of Merced County; McCarthy v., App.	115	458
Board of Sup'rs of Santa Barbara County; Swift v., App.	116	317
Board of Trustees of Town of Burlingame; McGregor v., Sup.	114	566
Bobrick Chemical Co. v. Prest-O-Lite Co., Sup.	116	747
Bodwell; McMurray v., App.	117	627
Boggs v. Dunn, Sup.	116	743
Bohn v. Bohn, Sup.	116	567
Bohn v. Bohn, App.	116	568
Boland v. All Persons, etc., Sup.	117	547
Bollman Co. v. S. Bachman & Co., App.	117	690
Bond v. Karma-Ajax Consol. Min. Co., App.	115	254
Bondy v. American Transfer Co., App.	115	965
Bonynge; McLauchlan v., App.	114	798
Boyd; People v., App.	116	323
Boyle; Bannerman v., Sup.	116	732
Bradshaw; Walsh v., App.	117	689
Breitenbucher v. Oppenheim, Sup.	116	55
Brenner v. City of Los Angeles, Sup.	116	397
Briare v. Superior Court of San Joaquin County, App.	117	1127
Broadbent v. Keith, App.	114	996
Broads v. Mead, Sup.	116	46
Brockway; Edwards v., App.	117	787
Brode v. Gosslin, App.	117	778
Brook v. City of Oakland, Sup.	117	433
Brown v. Northern California Power Co., Sup.	114	54
Brown v. Northern California Power Co., App.	114	74
Brown; People v., App.	114	1004
Brown; Weller v., Sup.	117	517
Bruce v. Bruce, Sup.	116	66
Bruce v. Bruce, App.	116	994
Buck; McGregor v., Sup.	114	566
Buisseret; Merchants' Nat. Union v., App.	115	58
Burk; People v., Sup.	115	1101
Burke, Ex parte, Sup.	116	755
Burr v. Maclay Rancho Water Co., Sup.	116	715
Butler v. Ng Chung, Sup.	117	512
Byrne; People v., Sup.	116	521
Caldwell; Shaw v., App.	115	941
Calhoun, Ex parte, Sup.	116	763
California Development Co.; Title Ins. & Trust Co. v., Sup.	114	838
California Raisin Growers' Ass'n v. Abbott, Sup.	117	767
California Safe Deposit & Trust Co.; People v., Sup.	117	321
Cargnani v. Cargnani, App.	116	306
Carley v. Vallecita Min. Co., App.	117	1037
Carnahan; Stanton v., App.	115	339
Carpenter v. Ashley, App.	115	268
Carpenter v. Ashley, App.	116	983
Carr v. Carr, App.	115	261
Carroll v. Superior Court of San Joaquin County, App.	117	1127
Case; Hadsall v., App.	115	330
Casey, Ex parte, Sup.	116	1104
Cashman; Hynes v., Sup.	114	570
C. Ganahl Lumber Co. v. Weinsveig, App.	117	954
Chadbourne v. Chadbourne, App.	114	1012

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Chadbourne's Estate, In re, App.	114	1012
Chase; King v., Sup.	115	207
City of Lindsay v. Mack, Sup.	117	924
City of Los Angeles; Brenner v., Sup.	116	397
City of Los Angeles; Clark v., Sup.	116	722
City of Los Angeles; Clark v., Sup.	116	966
City of Los Angeles v. Kerckhoff Cuzner Mill & Lumber Co., App.	115	654
City of Los Angeles; Pierce v., Sup.	114	818
City of Los Angeles; Pierce v., App.	115	746
City of Madera v. Madera Canal & Irrigation Co., Sup.	115	936
City of Oakland; Brook v., Sup.	117	433
City of San Diego; Clouse v., Sup.	114	573
City of Santa Monica v. Los Angeles County, App.	115	945
Civil Service Commission of City and County of San Francisco; Cook v., Sup.	117	662
Civil Service Commission of City and County of San Francisco; Cook v., Sup.	117	663
Clark v. Beyrle, Sup.	116	739
Clark v. City of Los Angeles, Sup.	116	722
Clark v. City of Los Angeles, Sup.	116	966
Clark Const. Co.; Snell v., App.	116	699
Clarke; Spencer v., App.	115	248
Clifton v. Herrick, App.	117	622
Clouse v. City of San Diego, Sup.	114	573
Coalinga Pac. Oil & Gas Co. v. Associated Oil Co., App.	116	1107
Coghlan v. Quartararo, App.	115	664
Colby v. Title Insurance & Trust Co., Sup.	117	913
Conde v. Sweeney, App.	116	319
Conklin v. Benson, Sup.	116	34
Conlan; Hagerty v., App.	115	762
Connecticut Fire Ins. Co.; Loomis v., App.	117	642
Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. of Hartford; Fountain v., App.	117	630
Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn.; Moodey v., Sup.	117	773
Consolidated Lumber Co.; First Nat. Bank v., App.	116	680
Continental Building & Loan Ass'n; Beaver v., App.	116	1105
Cook v. Civil Service Commission of City and County of San Francisco, Sup.	117	662
Cook v. Civil Service Commission of City and County of San Francisco, Sup.	117	663
Cook; Vulcan Iron Works v., App.	114	995
Cook v. W. S. Ray Mfg. Co., Sup.	115	318
Cooper v. Spring Valley Water Co., App.	116	298
Cordano v. Ferretti, App.	115	657
Cordano v. Wright, Sup.	115	227
Corey v. Struve, App.	116	975
Counts; Porter v., App.	116	377
Courteney v. Standard Box Co., App.	117	778
Cousins; Harrison v., App.	117	564
Cowell v. Snyder, App.	115	961
Crawford; Bauhofer v., App.	117	931
Creditors' Union v. Lundy, App.	117	624
Cucamonga Water Co.; Smith v., Sup.	117	764
Cullen; Avery v., App.	114	1022
Curran v. Hubbard, App.	114	81
Curran v. Hubbard, Sup.	114	83
Currie; People v., App.	117	941
Daly v. Wedemeyer, App.	114	787

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Daly's Estate, In re, App.	114	787
Davis v. Hearst, Sup.	116	530
Davison's Estate, In re, Sup.	115	49
Desmond; Hicks v., App.	117	943
Diepenbrock v. Luiz, Sup.	115	743
Dorr; Jensen v., Sup.	116	553
Doudell v. Shoo, Sup.	114	579
Doyle v. Hampton, Sup.	116	39
Dresser; People v., App.	117	688
Dryden; Smith v., App.	115	455
Dunn; Boggs v., Sup.	116	743
Dwyer's Estate, In re, Sup.	115	235
Dwyer's Estate, In re, Sup.	115	242
Eastern Outfitting Co.; Holland v., App.	117	562
East Shore Lumber Co. v. Healy-Tibbitts Const. Co., App.	114	1016
Edwards v. Brockway, App.	117	787
Edwards v. Superior Court, Alameda County, Sup.	115	649
Edwards v. Sweigert, App.	115	256
Egan v. Southern Pac. Co., App.	115	939
Elderton; Smith v., App.	117	563
Emerson; Goddard v., App.	115	63
Engebretsen; Willcox v., Sup.	116	750
Erro; Justy v., App.	117	575
Erving v. Napa Valley Brewing Co., App.	116	331
Evalina Gold Min. Co. v. Yosemite Gold Min. & Mill. Co., App.	115	946
Fair v. Home Gas & Electric Co., App.	115	754
Ferretti; Cordano v., App.	115	657
Fieg; Gjurich v., Sup.	116	745
Figuroa; People v., Sup.	116	391
Finnell v. Finnell, Sup.	114	820
First Nat. Bank v. Consol. Lumber Co., App.	116	680
First State Bank v. Blackinton, App.	116	311
Firth v. Marovich, Sup.	116	729
Fisher; People v., App.	116	688
Ford, Ex parte, Sup.	116	757
Fountain v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. of Hartford, App.	117	630
Fraser; Bartley v., App.	117	683
Fresno Home Packing Co. v. Hannon, App.	116	687
Furlong; Smith v., Sup.	117	527
Gaba; Walti v., Sup.	116	963
Galvin v. White, Sup.	116	42
Ganahl Lumber Co. v. Weinsveig, App.	117	954
Gardiner v. Bank of Napa, Sup.	117	667
Garibaldi; O'Brien v., App.	115	249
Gassner v. McCarthy, Sup.	116	73
Gate City Oil Co.; Smith v., Sup.	117	525
Gee Gong; People v., App.	114	78
Gee Gong; People v., Sup.	114	81
Gervais v. Joyce, App.	114	409
Gibson; People v., App.	116	987
Gjurich v. Fieg, Sup.	116	745
Goddard v. Emerson, App.	115	63
Goethe; Smith v., Sup.	115	223
Golden Gate Tile Co. v. Superior Court of California, City and County of San Francisco, Sup.	114	978
Goodrich, Ex parte, Sup.	117	451
Gosslin; Brode v., App.	117	778

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Gray; Morrissey v., Sup.	117	438
Gray; Morrissey v., Sup.	117	442
Green; Púritas Laundry Co. v., App.	115	660
Gregorson's Estate, In re, Sup.	116	60
Grieve; Jones v., App.	115	333
Grow; People v., App.	116	369
Gruwell; Park v., App.	115	252
Guichard; Logan v., Sup.	114	989
Gurnsey v. Northern California Power Co., Sup.	117	906
Hadsall v. Case, App.	115	330
Haese v. Heitzeg, Sup.	114	816
Hagerty v. Conlan, App.	115	762
Hamilton; Osborn v., App.	117	786
Hammond v. McCollough, Sup.	115	216
Hampton; Doyle v., Sup.	116	39
Handley; Rushton v., App.	115	56
Hannon; Fresno Home Packing Co. v., App.	116	687
Hansberger; Hotchkiss v., App.	115	957
Hanson v. Jordan, Sup.	114	810
Hanson's Estate, In re, Sup.	114	810
Harrison v. Cousins, App.	117	564
Hatch, Ex parte, App.	114	410
Haub v. Leggett, Sup.	117	556
Hawley v. Los Angeles Creamery Co., App.	116	83
Hawley v. Los Angeles Creamery Co., App.	116	84
Hayter, Ex parte, App.	116	370
Healy-Tibbitts Const. Co.; East Shore Lumber Co. v., App.	114	1016
Hearst; Davis v., Sup.	116	530
Heier v. Krull, Sup.	117	530
Heitzeg; Haese v., Sup.	114	816
Heivner; People v., App.	114	411
Henne v. Summers, App.	116	86
Herrick; Clifton v., App.	117	622
Hershey; Reclamation Dist. No. 730 v., Sup.	117	904
Hicks v. Desmond, App.	117	943
Higgins v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Co., Sup.	115	313
Hilborn v. Nye, App.	114	801
Hill v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, App.	114	805
Hilton; Yuba Consol. Goldfields v., App.	116	712
Hilton; Yuba Consol. Goldfields v., Sup.	116	715
Hincheon's Estate, In re, Sup.	116	47
Hodgkins; Birk v., Sup.	114	822
Hogan v. Superior Court of Merced County, App.	117	947
Holland v. Eastern Outfitting Co., App.	117	562
Home Gas & Electric Co.; Fair v., App.	115	754
Hoover v. Lester, App.	116	382
Hopkins; Osborn v., Sup.	117	519
Hopkins; Western Union Tel. Co. v., Sup.	116	557
Hotchkiss v. Hansberger, App.	115	957
Hotel Savoy Co.; Berryman v., Sup.	117	677
Hubbard; Curran v., App.	114	81
Hubbard; Curran v., Sup.	114	83
Hughes, Ex parte, Sup.	117	437
Hughes Bros. v. Rawhide Gold Min. Co., App.	116	969
Hutton; Bender v., Sup.	117	322
Hynes v. Cashman, Sup.	114	570
Imperial Val. Mercantile Co. v. Southern Pac. Co., App.	114	1003

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Insurance Co. of North America; Irwin v., App.	116	294
Inyo Development Co. v. Board of Sup'rs of Inyo County, App.	114	1006
Irwin v. Insurance Co. of North America, App.	116	294
Jackson; O'Brien v., App.	115	252
Jacobs; People v., App.	117	615
James; Wood v., App.	114	587
Jensen v. Dorr, Sup.	116	553
Jensen; People v., App.	114	585
John Bollman Co. v. S. Bachman & Co., App.	117	690
John M. C. Marble Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Bank of Los Angeles, App.	115	59
John Rapp & Son v. Kiel, Sup.	115	651
Johnson; Parkinson v., Sup.	117	1057
Johnston v. Blanchard, App.	116	973
Jones v. Grieve, App.	115	333
Jones; People v., App.	115	1008
Jones; People v., Sup.	117	176
Jordan; Hanson v., Sup.	114	810
Joyce; Gervais v., App.	114	409
Jules Levy & Bro. v. A. Mautz & Co., App.	117	936
June v. Superior Court of Sonoma County, App.	116	293
Justy v. Erro, App.	117	575
Kafoury; People v., App.	117	938
Karlson, Ex parte, Sup.	117	447
Karma-Ajax Consol. Min. Co.; Bond v., App.	115	254
Kast v. Miller & Lux, Sup.	115	932
Kaufman v. All Persons, etc., App.	117	586
Kearney v. Bell, Sup.	117	925
Keesey v. Keesey, Sup.	117	1054
Keith; Broadbent v., App.	114	996
Kerckhoff Cuzner Mill & Lumber Co.; City of Los Angeles v., App.	115	654
Kerr; People v., App.	114	584
Kiel; John Rapp & Son v., Sup.	115	651
King v. Chase, Sup.	115	207
King v. Pauly, Sup.	115	210
Kingsbury; McDonald v., App.	116	380
Kingsbury; Standard Inv. Co. v., App.	116	314
Kinney v. Maryland Casualty Co. of Baltimore, App.	115	456
Kinney; Reeves v., App.	116	309
Kirby; People v., App.	114	794
Klemmer; Patton v., App.	115	62
Knapp; People v., App.	117	792
Korander v. Penn Bridge Co., App.	116	384
Kraker v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, App.	115	663
Kritzer v. Tracy Engineering Co., App.	116	700
Krull; Heier v., Sup.	117	530
Kullman, Salz & Co. v. Superior Court of California in and for Solano County, App.	114	589
La Due, Ex parte, App.	117	586
Landwehr; Sheldon v., Sup.	116	44
Lane; Miller v., Sup.	116	58
Lange; Royal v., App.	115	750
Langford; Maze v., App.	117	929
Langford; Maze v., App.	117	930
Lapique; Sheehan v., App.	115	965
Larson v. Larson, App.	115	340
Lathrop v. National Sugar Co., App.	116	982
Latimer; People v., Sup.	117	1051

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Laumeister; Allstead v., App.	116	296
Law Credit Co. v. Tibbitts, Sup.	117	772
Lawson v. Lawson, App.	115	461
Lawson v. Lawson, App.	115	463
Lawson v. Lawson, two cases, Sup.	115	464
Le Breton v. Stanley Contracting Co., App.	114	1028
Leggett; Haub v., Sup.	117	556
Lester; Hoover v., App.	116	382
Levy & Bro. v. A. Mautz & Co., App.	117	936
Litch v. White, Sup.	117	515
Logan v. Guichard, Sup.	114	989
Loomis v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co., App.	117	642
Los Angeles County; City of Santa Monica v., App.	115	945
Los Angeles County; Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v., Sup.	116	566
Los Angeles County; Western Union Tel. Co. v., Sup.	116	564
Los Angeles Creamery Co.; Hawley v., App.	116	83
Los Angeles Creamery Co.; Hawley v., App.	116	84
Los Angeles Gas & Electric Co.; Higgins v., Sup.	115	313
Los Angeles Gas & Electric Co.; McKernan v., App.	116	677
Loucks' Estate, In re, Sup.	117	673
Luitweiler Pumping Engine Co. v. Ukiah Water & Improvement Co., App.	116	707
Luitweiler Pumping Engine Co. v. Ukiah Water & Improvement Co., Sup.	116	712
Luiz; Diepenbrock v., Sup.	115	743
Lund v. Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco, Sup.	114	569
Lundy; Creditors' Union v., App.	117	624
Lusk; Title Ins. & Trust Co. v., App.	115	53
McArthur v. Blaisdell, Sup.	115	52
McCarthy v. Board of Sup'rs of Merced County, App.	115	458
McCarthy; Gassner v., Sup.	116	73
McCollough; Hammond v., Sup.	115	216
McDonald v. Kingsbury, App.	116	380
McDougald; Trefts v., App.	115	655
McGregor v. Board of Trustees of Town of Burlingame, Sup.	114	566
McGregor v. Buck, Sup.	114	566
Mack; City of Lindsay v., Sup.	117	924
McKernan v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Co., App.	116	677
McKinney; Pearson v., Sup.	117	919
McLauchlan v. Bonyng, App.	114	798
McLaughlin, Ex parte, App.	116	684
Maclay Co. v. Superior Court of Sonoma County, App.	117	568
Maclay Rancho Water Co.; Burr v., Sup.	116	715
McMurray v. Bodwell, App.	117	627
McQuiddy v. Worswick Street Pav. Co., Sup.	116	67
Madera Canal & Irrigation Co.; City of Madera v., Sup.	115	936
Marble Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Bank of Los Angeles, App.	115	59
Marovich; Firth v., Sup.	116	729
Maryland Casualty Co. of Baltimore; Kinney v., App.	115	456
Mautz & Co.; Jules Levy & Bro. v., App.	117	936
Maze v. Langford, App.	117	929
Maze v. Langford, App.	117	930
Mead; Broads v., Sup.	116	46
Merchants' Nat. Bank of Los Angeles; John M. C. Marble Co. v., App.	115	59
Merchants' Nat. Union v. Buisseret, App.	115	58
Meseros; People v., App.	116	679
Miklauschutz v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, App.	116	376
Miller v. Lane, Sup.	116	58

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Miller's Estate, In re, App.	115	329
Miller & Lux; Kast v., Sup.	115	932
Minaker; Sheehy v., App.	117	616
Mitchel; Robison v., Sup.	114	984
Mitchell v. Moses, App.	117	685
Mitchell's Estate, In re, Sup.	117	774
Monte Cristo Oil & Development Co.; Scott v., App.	115	64
Montgomery; People v., App.	114	792
Moodey v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., Sup.	117	773
Morcom v. Baiersky, App.	117	560
Morgan v. Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co., App.	116	385
Morgan v. Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co., Sup.	116	389
Morrissey v. Gray, Sup.	117	438
Morrissey v. Gray, Sup.	117	442
Moscone; Saul v., Sup.	116	1134
Moses; Mitchell v., App.	117	685
Mousnier v. Superior Court of Alameda County, Sup.	115	221
Muhly; People v., App.	114	1017
Mullally, Ex parte, Sup.	116	763
Mullally; People v., App.	116	88
Murphy; Sacramento Bank v., Sup.	115	232
Murray Show Case & Fixture Co. v. Sullivan, App.	115	259
Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co.; Morgan v., App.	116	385
Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co.; Morgan v., Sup.	116	389
Napa Valley Brewing Co.; Erving v., App.	116	331
Nash; People v., App.	114	784
National Sugar Co.; Lathrop v., App.	116	982
Naylor v. Adams, App.	114	997
Naylor v. Adams, App.	115	335
Ng Chung; Butler v., Sup.	117	512
Nicholson v. Nicholson, App.	117	1038
North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. of London and Edinburgh; Winchester v., Sup.	116	63
Northern Assur. Co. of London v. Stout, App.	117	617
Northern California Power Co.; Brown v., Sup.	114	54
Northern California Power Co.; Brown v., App.	114	74
Northern California Power Co.; Gurnsey v., Sup.	117	906
Nye; Hilborn v., App.	114	801
Obear; Rutz v., App.	115	67
O'Brien v. Garibaldi, App.	115	219
O'Brien v. Jackson, App.	115	252
O'Brien v. O'Brien, App.	116	692
O'Brien v. O'Brien, App.	116	696
Ocean Park Realty, Min. & Inv. Co.; Spaeth v., App.	116	980
O'Donnell; People v., App.	117	933
Oliver v. Warren, App.	116	312
Oppenheim; Breitenbucher v., Sup.	116	55
Osborn v. Hamilton, App.	117	786
Osborn v. Hopkins, Sup.	117	519
Overacker; People v., App.	115	756
Pacific Electric Ry. Co.; Simoneau v., Sup.	115	320
Pacific Electric Ry. Co.; Stephens v., App.	117	559
Pang Sui Lin; People v., App.	114	582
Park v. Gruwell, App.	115	252
Parkinson v. Johnson, Sup.	117	1057
Parsons' Estate, In re, Sup.	114	570
Patton v. Klemmer, App.	115	62

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Pauly; King v., Sup.	115	210
Pealer v. Weinsveig, App.	117	954
Pearson v. McKinney, Sup.	117	919
Peck v. Peterson, App.	115	327
Penn Bridge Co.; Korander v., App.	116	384
People v. Arberry, App.	114	411
People v. Ayhens, App.	117	789
People v. Babcock, Sup.	117	549
People v. Balmain, App.	116	303
People v. Barnnovich, App.	117	572
People v. Boyd, App.	116	323
People v. Brown, App.	114	1004
People v. Burk, Sup.	115	1101
People v. Byrne, Sup.	116	521
People v. California Safe Deposit & Trust Co., Sup.	117	321
People v. Currie, App.	117	941
People v. Dresser, App.	117	688
People v. Figueroa, Sup.	116	391
People v. Fisher, App.	116	688
People v. Gee Gong, App.	114	78
People v. Gee Gong, Sup.	114	81
People v. Gibson, App.	116	987
People v. Grow, App.	116	369
People v. Helvner, App.	114	411
People v. Jacobs, App.	117	615
People v. Jensen, App.	114	585
People v. Jones, Sup.	117	176
People v. Jones, App.	115	1008
People v. Kafoury, App.	117	938
People v. Kerr, App.	114	584
People v. Kirby, App.	114	794
People v. Knapp, App.	117	792
People v. Latimer, Sup.	117	1051
People v. Meseros, App.	116	679
People v. Montgomery, App.	114	792
People v. Muhly, App.	114	1017
People v. Mullally, App.	116	88
People v. Nash, App.	114	784
People v. O'Donnell, App.	117	933
People v. Overacker, App.	115	756
People v. Pang Sui Lin, App.	114	582
People v. Perry, App.	117	1036
People v. Piercy, App.	116	322
People v. Rameriz, App.	117	933
People v. Roderiquez, App.	116	986
People v. Ruef, Sup.	114	48
People v. Ruef, App.	114	54
People v. Schweichler, App.	117	939
People v. Shimonaka, App.	116	327
People v. Spencer, App.	117	1039
People v. Stevens, App.	114	800
People v. Thompson, App.	117	1033
People v. Town of Larkspur, App.	116	702
People v. Town of Larkspur, App.	116	706
People v. Treschenko, Sup.	114	578
People v. T. Wah Hing, App.	114	416
People v. Walker, App.	114	1009

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
People v. Wolfrom, App.	115	1088
People v. Wong Loung, Sup.	114	829
Perce; Scudder v., Sup.	114	571
Perry v. Ayers, Sup.	114	46
Perry; People v., App.	117	1036
Peters v. Southern Pac. Co., Sup.	116	400
Peterson; Peck v., App.	115	327
Pierce v. City of Los Angeles, Sup.	114	818
Pierce v. City of Los Angeles, App.	115	746
Pierce v. Pierce, App.	117	580
Piercy; People v., App.	116	322
Pierson v. Pierson, App.	115	461
Police Court of City of Riverside; Simpson v., Sup.	117	553
Porter v. Counts, App.	116	377
Porters Bar Dredging Co. v. Beaudry, App.	115	951
Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Los Angeles County, Sup.	116	566
Potter; Bennett v., App.	116	681
Potter v. Santa Barbara County, Sup.	116	1101
Prest-O-Lite Co.; Bobrick Chemical Co. v., Sup.	116	747
Puritas Laundry Co. v. Green, App.	115	660
Quartararo; Coghlan v., App.	115	664
Quartararo; Swett-Davenport Lumber Co. v., App.	115	664
Rameriz; People v., App.	117	933
Rapp & Son v. Kiel, Sup.	115	651
Rawhide Gold Min. Co.; Hughes Bros. v., App.	116	969
Rawhide Gold Min. Co.; Zany v., App.	114	1026
Ray Mfg. Co.; Cook v., Sup.	115	318
Reclamation Dist. No. 730 v. Hershey, Sup.	117	904
Reclamation Dist. No. 730 v. Snowball, Sup.	117	905
Reeves v. Kinney, App.	116	309
Regan v. Superior Court of Marin County, Sup.	114	53
Regan v. Superior Court of Marin County, App.	114	72
Regents of University of California v. Turner, Sup.	114	842
Reis Estate Co.; Southern Pac. R. Co. v., App.	114	808
Reis Estate Co.; Southern Pac. R. Co. v., Sup.	114	810
Ricks v. Ricks, Sup.	117	532
Ricks' Estate, In re, Sup.	117	532
Ricks' Estate, In re, Sup.	117	539
Ridgely v. Abbott Quicksilver Min. Co., App.	117	1036
Riggins v. Sweatt, Sup.	114	824
Robinson's Estate, In re, Sup.	115	49
Robison v. Mitchel, Sup.	114	984
Roderiquez; People v., App.	116	986
Rogers; Weldon v., Sup.	115	464
Rogers; West Riverside 350-Inch Water Co. v., App.	116	683
Rogers Development Co. v. Southern California Real Estate Inv. Co., Sup.	115	934
Rohrer's Estate, In re, Sup.	117	672
Rooney; Van Ness v., Sup.	116	392
Root; Sunrise Land Co. v., Sup.	116	72
Rosenholz v. Rosenholz, Sup.	117	1018
Royal v. Lange, App.	115	750
Ruef; People v., Sup.	114	48
Ruef; People v., App.	114	54
Rushton v. Handley, App.	115	56
Rutz v. Obear, App.	115	67
Sacramento Bank v. Murphy, Sup.	115	232
San Francisco Relief & Red Cross Funds; Wong Fung Hing v., App.	115	331

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
San Joaquin & K. R. Canal & Irrigation Co. v. Stevenson, App.	116	378
Santa Barbara County; Potter v., Sup.	116	1101
Saul v. Moscone, Sup.	116	1134
S. Bachman & Co.; John Bollman Co. v., App.	117	690
Schweichler; People v., App.	117	939
Scott v. Monte Cristo Oil & Development Co., App.	115	64
Scott; Segerstrom v., App.	116	690
Scudder v. Perce, Sup.	114	571
Seaboard Nat. Bank v. Ackerman, App.	116	91
Segerstrom v. Scott, App.	116	690
Sessions v. Southern Pac. Co., Sup.	114	982
Seymour's Estate, In re, App.	114	1023
Shaw v. Caldwell, App.	115	941
Shaw v. Shaw, Sup.	117	1048
Shaw v. Town of Sebastopol, Sup.	115	213
Shay, In re, Sup.	117	442
Sheehan v. Lapique, App.	115	965
Sheehy v. Minaker, App.	117	616
Sheldon v. Landwehr, Sup.	116	44
Sheppard v. Sheppard, App.	115	751
Shimonaka; People v., App.	116	327
Shoo; Doudell v., Sup.	114	579
Simoneau v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., Sup.	115	320
Simpson v. Police Court of City of Riverside, Sup.	117	553
Smith v. Cucamonga Water Co., Sup.	117	764
Smith v. Dryden, App.	115	455
Smith v. Elderton, App.	117	563
Smith v. Furlong, Sup.	117	527
Smith v. Gate City Oil Co., Sup.	117	525
Smith v. Goethe, Sup.	115	223
Snell v. Clark Const. Co., App.	116	699
Snowball; Reclamation Dist. No. 730 v., Sup.	117	905
Snyder; Cowell v., App.	115	961
Somer; Webster v., Sup.	114	575
Southern California Real Estate Inv. Co.; Rogers Development Co. v., Sup.	115	934
Southern Pac. Co.; Egan v., App.	115	939
Southern Pac. Co.; Imperial Val. Mercantile Co. v., App.	114	1003
Southern Pac. Co.; Peters v., Sup.	116	400
Southern Pac. Co.; Sessions v., Sup.	114	982
Southern Pac. Co.; Walther v., Sup.	116	51
Southern Pac. Co.; Zibbell v., Sup.	116	513
Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Reis Estate Co., App.	114	808
Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Reis Estate Co., Sup.	114	810
Spaeth v. Ocean Park Realty, Min. & Inv. Co., App.	116	980
Spear v. United Railroads of San Francisco, two cases, App.	117	956
Spencer v. Clarke, App.	115	248
Spencer; People v., App.	117	1039
Sprague; Zanone v., App.	116	989
Spranger, In re, App.	114	597
Spring Valley Water Co.; Cooper v., App.	116	298
Staacke; Bell v., Sup.	115	221
Standard Box Co.; Bartlett Springs Co. v., App.	117	934
Standard Box Co.; Courteney v., App.	117	778
Standard Inv. Co. v. Kingsbury, App.	116	314
Stanley Contracting Co.; Le Breton v., App.	114	1028
Stanton v. Carnahan, App.	115	339

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Stephens, Appeal of, Sup.	117	547
Stevens, Ex parte, App.	117	1127
Stephens v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., App.	117	559
Stevens; People v., App.	114	800
Stevenson; San Joaquin & K. R. Canal & Irrigation Co. v., App.	116	378
Stewart v. Birchfield, App.	114	999
Stout; Northern Assur. Co. of London v., App.	117	617
Strait v. Wilkins, App.	116	685
Struve; Corey v., App.	116	975
Suiter; Webster v., App.	114	1007
Sullivan; Murray Show Case & Fixture Co. v., App.	115	259
Sulloway v. Sulloway, Sup.	117	522
Summers; Henne v., App.	116	86
Sunrise Land Co. v. Root, Sup.	116	72
Superior Court, Alameda County; Edwards v., Sup.	115	649
Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco; Lund v., Sup.	114	539
Superior Court of Alameda County; Mousnier v., Sup.	115	221
Superior Court of California in and for Solano County; Kullman, Salz & Co. v., App.	114	589
Superior Court of California, City and County of San Francisco; Golden Gate Tile Co. v., Sup.	114	978
Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco; Kraker v., App.	115	663
Superior Court of Los Angeles County; Miklauschutz v., App.	116	376
Superior Court of Los Angeles County; Times-Mirror Co. v., App.	115	248
Superior Court of Marin County; Regan v., Sup.	114	53
Superior Court of Marin County; Regan v., App.	114	72
Superior Court of Merced County; Hogan v., App.	117	947
Superior Court of Sacramento County; Hill v., App.	114	805
Superior Court of Sacramento County; Western Union Tel. Co. v., App.	115	1091
Superior Court of Sacramento County; Western Union Tel. Co. v., Sup.	115	1100
Superior Court of San Joaquin County; Briare v., App.	117	1127
Superior Court of San Joaquin County; Carroll v., App.	117	1127
Superior Court of Sonoma County; June v., App.	116	293
Superior Court of Sonoma County; Maclay Co. v., App.	117	568
Supreme Lodge of Fraternal Brotherhood; Vance v., App.	114	83
Sweatt; Riggins v., Sup.	114	824
Sweeney; Conde v., App.	116	319
Sweigert; Edwards v., App.	115	256
Swett-Davenport Lumber Co. v. Quartararo, App.	115	664
Swift v. Board of Sup'rs of Santa Barbara County, App.	116	317
Thomas v. Wentworth Hotel Co., App.	117	1041
Thomas v. Wentworth Hotel Co., Sup.	117	1046
Thompson; People v., App.	117	1033
Tibbitts; Law Credit Co. v., Sup.	117	772
Tilton's Estate and Guardianship, In re, App.	114	594
Times-Mirror Co. v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, App.	115	248
Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. California Development Co., Sup.	114	838
Title Insurance & Trust Co.; Colby v., Sup.	117	613
Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Lusk, App.	115	53
Town of Larkspur; People v., App.	116	702
Town of Larkspur; People v., App.	116	706
Town of Red Bluff v. Walbridge, App.	116	77
Town of Sebastopol; Shaw v., Sup.	115	213
Tracy Engineering Co.; Kritzer v., App.	116	700
Trefts v. McDougald, App.	115	655
Treschenko; People v., Sup.	114	578

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Turner; Regents of University of California v., Sup.	114	842
T. Wah Hing; People v., App.	114	416
Ukiah Water & Improvement Co.; Luitweiler Pumping Engine Co. v., App.	116	707
Ukiah Water & Improvement Co.; Luitweiler Pumping Engine Co. v., Sup.	116	712
Union Trust & Realty Co. v. Best, Sup.	116	737
United Railroads of San Francisco; Spear v., App.	117	956
University of California v. Turner, Sup.	114	842
Vallecita Min. Co.; Carley v., App.	117	1037
Vance v. Supreme Lodge of Fraternal Brotherhood, App.	114	83
Van Ness v. Rooney, Sup.	116	392
Vulcan Iron Works v. Cook, App.	114	995
Wah Hing; People v., App.	114	416
Wakefield v. Wakefield, App.	116	309
Walbridge; Town of Red Bluff v., App.	116	77
Walker v. Beaumont Land & Water Co., App.	115	766
Walker; People v., App.	114	1009
Walker's Estate, In re, Sup.	117	510
Walsh v. Bradshaw, App.	117	689
Walther v. Southern Pac. Co., Sup.	116	51
Walti v. Gaba, Sup.	116	963
Warren; Oliver v., App.	116	312
Weber's Estate, In re, App.	114	597
Webster v. Somer, Sup.	114	575
Webster v. Suiter, App.	114	1007
Wedemeyer; Daly v., App.	114	787
Weinsveig; C. Ganahl Lumber Co. v., App.	117	954
Weinsveig; Pealer v., App.	117	954
Weldon v. Rogers, Sup.	115	464
Weller v. Brown, Sup.	117	517
Wentworth Hotel Co.; Thomas v., App.	117	1041
Wentworth Hotel Co.; Thomas v., Sup.	117	1046
Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hopkins, Sup.	116	557
Western Union Tel. Co. v. Los Angeles County, Sup.	116	564
Western Union Tel. Co. v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, App.	115	1091
Western Union Tel. Co. v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, Sup.	115	1100
West Riverside 350-Inch Water Co. v. Rogers, App.	116	683
White; Galvin v., Sup.	116	42
White; Litch v., Sup.	117	515
Wilkins; Strait v., App.	116	685
Willcox v. Engebretsen, Sup.	116	750
Williams; Bedolla v., App.	115	747
Winchester v. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. of London and Edinburgh, Sup.	116	63
Winchester; Woodson v., App.	117	565
Winston, Ex parte, Sup.	116	390
Wolfrom; People v., App.	115	1088
Wong Fung Hing v. San Francisco Relief & Red Cross Funds, App.	115	331
Wong Loung; People v., Sup.	114	829
Wood v. James, App.	114	587
Wood's Estate and Guardianship, In re, Sup.	114	992
Woodson v. Winchester, App.	117	565
Worswick Street Pav. Co.; McQuiddy v., Sup.	116	67
Wright; Cordano v., Sup.	115	227
W. S. Ray Mfg. Co.; Cook v., Sup.	115	318
Yoell's Estate, In re, Sup.	117	1047
Yosemite Gold Min. & Mill. Co.; Evalina Gold Min. Co. v., App.	115	946

CASES REPORTED

	P.
	Vol. Page
Young, Appeal of, App. -----	117 586
Yuba Consol. Goldfields v. Hilton, App. -----	116 712
Yuba Consol. Goldfields v. Hilton, Sup. -----	116 715
Yun Quong, Ex parte, Sup. -----	114 835
Zanone v. Sprague, App. -----	116 989
Zany v. Rawhide Gold Min. Co., App. -----	114 1026
Zibbell v. Southern Pac. Co., Sup. -----	116 513

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

114 PACIFIC REPORTER

159 Cal. 414

PERRY v. AYERS. (Sac. 1,872.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 24, 1911.

Rehearing Denied March 24, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1011*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Findings of fact on conflicting evidence are conclusive on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3983; Dec. Dig. § 1011.*]

2. SALES (§ 62*)—ENTIRE CONTRACT—CONSIDERATION.

Where one contracted to pay $10,000 for a part interest in a mine, and 25,000 shares of stock of another mining company, the price not being apportioned to the various items, the contract was an entire one, and where the buyer received the shares of stock, in the absence of a rescission and return of such stock, he could not compel a repayment of his money as paid without consideration, because the interest bought in the other mine was worthless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 171-179; Dec. Dig. § 62.*]

3. FRAUD (§ 58*)—FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS—ACTIONS—DAMAGES.

In an action for deceit by one who purchased stock in one mine and an interest in another on fraudulent representations as to the value of the mine in which the interest was bought, such interest being alleged to be worthless, mere proof that plaintiff had paid the amount alleged, and that the interest in the mine which was part of the consideration to be received by him was valueless, would not justify a recovery without evidence as to what the interest in the mine would have been worth if the facts had been in accord with the seller's representations, and it being impossible to determine what price he paid for the item alleged to have been misrepresented, the contract of sale being an entire one.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1078*)—BREACH—WAIVER OF POINTS NOT ARGUED.

Alleged errors in the admission or exclusion of evidence not argued by appellant in his brief, but merely covered by the statement, "we think the court erred," cannot be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4256-4261; Dec. Dig. § 1078.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Action by H. G. Perry against C. W. Ayers. From a judgment for defendant and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. G. Perry, in pro. per., and Rowan Hardin, for appellant. Street & Street, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The action is one to recover damages for deceit. The complaint alleges that in April, 1907, the defendant owned a one-fourth interest in an agreement under which he and others had a right to purchase certain mining property known as the Crystalline Mine, and that the defendant was in charge of the development of said mine. It is alleged that on the 29th day of April, 1907, the defendant represented to the plaintiff that a large and valuable vein of ore over 10 feet in thickness and carrying average values of $5 or $6 a ton in gold had been discovered and opened up in said mine, and that said vein would produce enough money to pay the purchase price of the property, and that the defendant and his associates would acquire said mine by paying the purchase price named in the agreement which they held. The complaint sets forth further representations that the property was of the value of $150,000, and that defendant was contemplating and arranging for the incorporation of a company to take over the mine under said agreement of sale. The defendant, it is alleged, agreed to sell to plaintiff one-half of the interest which he would have in said corporation, which would be one-quarter of the capital stock, for the sum of $5,000, and further agreed that upon the incorporation of said company stock would be issued to plaintiff for his interest so purchased. The complaint alleges that plaintiff, believing said representations and relying wholly thereon, paid over to defendant the sum of $3,000 on account thereof on said 29th day of April, 1907. It is then alleged that each of these representations was false and was made by defendant with knowledge of its falsity and with the intent to deceive and defraud the plaintiff; that shortly thereafter the mine was closed down and the contract for the purchase of the property forfeited; that no company was ever incorporated to take over said mine, and no stock was ever issued to plaintiff; and that no consideration of any nature has been received by plaintiff for the money so paid.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The answer admits the allegations concerning the nature of defendant's interest in the mine; admits the making of some of the representations alleged and denies the making of others; alleges that all of said representations were true to the best of defendant's judgment and belief; denies that any representations made by defendant to plaintiff were false when made, or that they were known to defendant to be false, or were made with any intent to deceive plaintiff. It admits that the mine was abandoned, and that no corporation was formed, and alleges that the reason for this was that the development work proved that said mine could not be made to pay. The answer denies that the plaintiff received no consideration of any nature for his money, and alleges that he received full and adequate consideration for all money paid by him. There is an affirmative defense averring that on January 26, 1909, all claims and demands of plaintiff against defendant were settled by the payment of the sum of $1,802 to plaintiff by defendant. In addition to what has been stated, the answer denies that the agreement between the parties was as averred in the complaint, and alleges that their real agreement was for a sale by defendant to plaintiff of 25,000 shares of the capital stock of the Mother Lode & Table Mountain Gold Mining Company and a one-half interest in defendant's share of said Crystalline mine for the sum of $10,000. It is alleged that, on account of this agreement, the plaintiff paid to the defendant the sum of $4,000 on or about March 21, 1907; that he paid to said Mother Lode & Table Mountain Gold Mining Company the sum of $4,000 on or about April 29, 1907; that on the 5th day of May, 1908, he paid the defendant the sum of $1,800; and that said 25,000 shares of stock were delivered to plaintiff prior to July 1, 1907. It is denied that the sum of $3,000 was paid by plaintiff to defendant on account of said Crystalline mining transaction.

The findings are, in the main, in support of the denials and averments of the answer, and judgment in favor of the defendant followed.

Much of the discussion in appellant's brief is devoted to the questions whether certain findings are sustained by the evidence, whether some of the findings on material issues are not contradictory of the admissions of the pleadings, and whether or not the court erred in finding as a fact that the representations made by defendant to plaintiff were statements of opinion merely. In particular it is earnestly contended that the finding of a settlement is unsupported by the evidence. It will not be necessary to examine the legal propositions relied on in this behalf. The findings in favor of the defensive matter last mentioned in the foregoing summary of the answer are fully supported by the evidence, and these findings are of such a nature as to compel the affirmance of the judgment, regardless of any view that might be taken with regard to other questions argued by the appellant.

The plaintiff alleges that he made a contract whereby he was to receive one-half of the stock to be issued to defendant for his interest in the agreement to purchase the Crystalline mine. He alleges that in reliance upon false representations he paid $3,000 upon this agreement, and that he received nothing therefor. Upon these facts, he bases his claim of a right to recover the sum paid, either as damages for the fraud practiced upon him or upon the ground that the consideration for the money so paid has totally failed. But the answer denies that the agreement was as claimed, and alleges that, in fact, the moneys paid by plaintiff to defendant were paid as a part of the sum of $10,000 which plaintiff agreed to pay, not for a part interest in the Crystalline mine, but in consideration of such part interest, together with 25,000 shares of the stock of the Mother Lode & Table Mountain Gold Mining Company, which stock he, in fact, received. That the agreement was as averred in the answer is found by the court, and this finding finds ample warrant in the record. Testimony supporting such finding was given by the defendant and by his wife. The testimony of the plaintiff was, to be sure, to the contrary, but the conflict so raised presented a question to be answered by the trial court. That court was vested with the power to determine whether the weight of the evidence was in support of one or the other version of the transaction and its conclusion is binding upon us.

If the agreement was as claimed by defendant and found by the court, it was clearly an entire contract for the sale of various items of property for a lump sum of $10,000. The purchase price was not apportioned to the various items of property, and there is no basis upon which this court can divide the purchase price, and say that any specific part of it was applicable to the stock of the Mother Lode Company and any other part to the interest in the Crystalline mine. See Norris v. Harris, 15 Cal. 226, 256. If there was an entire contract, it cannot be said that the plaintiff received no consideration for his payments. He did receive the 25,000 shares of stock and, in the absence of a rescission and a return of this stock, he certainly can have no claim for the repayment of his money as money paid without consideration. Nor (under the assumption that the contract was as found by the court) did plaintiff furnish any foundation, either in his pleadings or his proof, for a judgment for damages for the fraud practiced upon him. All that he showed was the fact that he had paid certain money and that a part of the consideration to be received by him for this money was not received or was valueless. But this does not show what his damage was. The measure of damages for a fraud inducing the plaintiff to purchase property is the difference between the actual value of what he received and the value which it would have had if the fraudulent representations had been true. Spreckels v. Gorrill, 152 Cal. 383, 389, 390, 391, 92 Pac. 1011. Some cases adopt, as the proper measure, the difference between the price paid and the actual value. But the plaintiff did not prove facts from which his damage could be ascertained under either of these rules. He showed that the interest in the Crystalline mine was valueless, but he did not show what it would have been worth if the facts had been in accord with the defendant's representations. And he failed to establish a right to recover the difference between the actual value (i. e., nothing) and the price paid, because, as has been said, it cannot be determined what price he paid for this item of the property which he was to receive under his contract covering both the Crystalline and the Mother Lode ventures. To permit him to recover what he paid under this entire contract would be to say that because of a fraud going to a part of the consideration the party defrauded may recover all that he has paid and still retain the consideration which he has received, a proposition which is so obviously untenable that it is not necessary to cite authority to disprove it.

The findings upon the issue we have been discussing are not affected by any of the errors relied on by the appellant. The motion for new trial was based in part upon newly discovered evidence, but the affidavits setting forth that evidence do not, we think, touch this issue in any material point. In any event, the counter affidavits contradicted those of plaintiff to such an extent that the trial court was fully justified in refusing to grant a new trial upon this ground.

The alleged errors in the admission or exclusion of evidence are not argued by the appellant; his brief merely stating that "we think the court erred" in making the respective rulings. Points so presented will not be considered here. Duncan v. Ramish, 142 Cal. 689, 76 Pac. 661; Bell v. S. P. R. Co., 144 Cal. 573, 77 Pac. 1124; Pigeon v. Fuller, 156 Cal. 691, 105 Pac. 976.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.

14 Cal. App. 576

PEOPLE v. RUEF † (Cr. 1,655.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1020½*) — APPEAL — TRANSFER OF CAUSE TO SUPREME COURT—ORDER TIME.

Under Const. art. 6, § 4, providing that the Supreme Court may order that any cause pending before a District Court of Appeal be heard and determined by the Supreme Court, which order may be made before judgment has been pronounced by the District Court of Appeal or within 30 days after such judgment shall have become final therein, the expiration of 30 days after the judgment of the District Court of Appeal has become final without an order transferring the cause to the Supreme Court terminates the power of that court to transfer the cause, and renders the judgment of the District Court of Appeal final for all purposes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2577; Dec. Dig. § 1020½.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1020½*)—APPEAL—REVIEW BY SUPREME COURT—ORDER—FILING.

The filing of an order by the Supreme Court transferring a cause pending in the District Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court for hearing is valid if otherwise regularly made by a majority of the court, though not filed in the clerk's office within the prescribed time, filing not being essential.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1020½.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r indexes

† Rehearing denied March 30, 1911.

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1020½*) — APPEAL — TRANSFER OF CAUSE TO SUPREME COURT—ORDER—JUDICIAL FUNCTIONS.

The granting of an application for hearing in the Supreme Court of an Appeal after decision by a District Court of Appeal is the exercise of a purely judicial function.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1020½.*]

4. JUDGES (§ 30*) — POWERS — AUTHORITY TO ACT—PLACE—EXTRATERRITORIAL JURISDICTION.

A justice of the Supreme Court has no power to exercise his judicial functions outside the territorial limits of the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judges, Cent. Dig. § 143; Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1020½*) — APPEAL — TRANSFER OF CAUSE TO SUPREME COURT—ORDER—TIME OF TAKING EFFECT.

Since an order transferring a criminal case to the Supreme Court for hearing requires the concurrence of four justices of the Supreme Court qualified and with power to act, such an order does not become effectual until signed by the fourth justice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1020½.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1020½*) — APPEAL — TRANSFER TO SUPREME COURT—ORDER—VALIDITY.

A judgment of a District Court of Appeal affirming a conviction became final at the expiration of December 23, 1910. On January 3, 1911, a petition to transfer the cause to the Supreme Court was filed and an order drawn and left in the chambers of the chief justice to be subscribed by such of the judges as were in favor of granting the same. On January 10, 1911, one of the justices, being about to leave the state for an absence extending beyond the period within which the order might lawfully be made, and believing the application should be granted, subscribed his name and on the next day left the state, and continued without its limits until the authorized period expired. Three other justices thereafter signed the order within the period and three others declined to concur. Held, that since the order took effect from the date of the signature of the fourth justice only, and at that time the signature of the absent justice was ineffective because of his then absence, the order did not have the concurrence of a majority of the court, and was ineffectual.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1020½.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; W. P. Lawlor, Judge.

Abraham Ruef, having been convicted of offering a bribe to a member of the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco, and such conviction having been affirmed by the District Court of Appeal, an order was entered transferring the case to the Supreme Court for hearing in bank, after which the Attorney General moved the court to set aside the same as having been improperly allowed. Motion granted.

At the opening of the argument Mr. Chief Justice BEATTY, for the court, made the following statement:

After consultation, the court has thought it proper to make the following statement, so that the legal discussion may proceed upon an express and distinct understanding of the facts:

In the matter of judicial opinions and decisions. During the service upon this bench of every member of it, and, as we are informed, ever since the organization of the court, the uniform practice has been as follows: The Chief Justice assigns to the justices in regular order the causes pending in bank. Each justice to whom a case is assigned prepares his opinion with or without consultation with other justices as he elects. Having prepared and signed his opinion, it is passed on to his associates for consideration. If in due course it is signed by three or more of his associates, it then expresses the opinion and judgment of a majority of the court, and, when finally handed to the secretary and by him transmitted to and filed with the clerk of the court, it becomes the opinion and judgment of the court. The court never convenes as a court, nor in chambers, in consultation, to approve opinions so signed previous to their filing. When they bear a sufficient number of signatures, they are filed, usually at the instance of the author. Signatures are thus separately attached, frequently with intervals of weeks or months between the respective dates of signing—as one or another justice may defer action until he has completed his examination. When he has done so, he then passes the opinion on to the next associate. In so filing opinions and decisions, no account has ever been taken of the matter whether at the time of filing any justice whose signature the decision bears is or is not at the place where the court is held.

In the matter of applications for hearings before the court in bank after decision in department, for hearing before the court after decision by the Court of Appeals, and for rehearings by the court in bank after decision in bank, the uniform practice is and has been for the justices to meet in consultation for their consideration. It has been a not uncommon practice for a justice who believes a hearing or rehearing should be granted, and who, for any reason, will not be present at such consultation, to affix his signature to the order granting a hearing or rehearing in advance of such consultation. Such signatures attached to orders for hearings and rehearings have always been regarded by the court as valid, although at the time the order granting the hearing or rehearing takes effect the justice so signing may be absent from the place where the court is held. When signed by a sufficient number of justices, the original order is delivered to the secretary. In cases of petitions for hearing or rehearing of causes decided by this court, the original order, and in cases of petitions for a hearing after decision in the courts of appeal, a copy of the order is filed with the clerk of the court.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It has also been a matter of frequent occurrence for an opinion or decision, or for the order granting a hearing or rehearing to be sent or taken to an absent justice for his action thereon apart from any consultation and from the presence of his associates. It has happened several times that a member of the court has been absent from the state for a period of time, varying in length from two to eight weeks. In filing opinions and decisions and orders for hearing or rehearing, no question has ever been raised as to whether at the time of filing any justice whose signature the decision or order bears is or is not within the state. The court has not heretofore been called upon to consider the effect of the absence of a justice from the state at the time an order signed by him was made. This court has never considered that the presentation of an application for hearing or petition for hearing or rehearing is necessary or prerequisite to the exercise of its jurisdiction to consider and review for the correction of errors. It has always acted in the belief that it is vested with this constitutional power to be exercised of its own initiative in any appropriate case.

The Attorney General, we make sure, will join the court in saying that the facts contained in his affidavit on file herein were freely made known to him by the court, and he was advised by the court that it would welcome the motion here made and now to be considered.

C. W. Cross and W. H. H. Hart (amicus curiæ), for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is a motion made by the Attorney General of the state for an order vacating an order of this court, dated January 22, 1911, and filed in the office of the clerk of this court on January 23, 1911, assuming to grant the application of defendant in the above-entitled cause for a hearing of said cause in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal for the First District. 114 Pac. 54. The motion is based on the ground that the said order is a nullity, and was inadvertently made and entered.

While several claims are urged in support of this motion, there is but one deemed by us to be of any importance, or as affording any ground for doubt as to the validity of the order in question. Upon the first point made by the Attorney General, which is, as we understand it, that no decision or order can be made by this court except when a sufficient number of justices are personally present at the place where court is held and there assembled as a court, and concur therein, we do not entertain any doubt whatever. The practice of this court in this behalf has been fully outlined in the unanimous statement of the court filed at the commencement of the argument on this motion. This statement will be published in our reports preceding this opinion. It is enough to say, in answer to the point, that the joint action or concurrence of four justices is the thing required to constitute the action of the court, and that, in contemplation of law, this joint action is taken when four justices have in writing declared their concurrence in a particular order or judgment, with intent to make it an order or judgment, and it is immaterial whether their respective signatures are appended when they are together, or whether they are made separately, at wide intervals of time and place, provided always, that at the time such order or judgment becomes effective such four justices are qualified to act in the particular matter.

The facts material to the consideration of the real question presented by this motion are not at all in dispute, and, so far as necessary, were furnished to the attorney-general by the members of this court. We will briefly recite them.

The appeal of the defendant from the superior court to the District Court of Appeal was decided by that court on November 23, 1910. The judgment of the superior court and its order denying defendant's motion for a new trial were affirmed. Under the provisions of section 4 of article 6 of the Constitution, the judgment of the District Court of Appeal became final in that court at the expiration of December 23, 1910. The Supreme Court was by said section empowered to order said cause to be heard and determined by the Supreme Court, provided, however, that such order was made "within thirty days after said judgment" became final in the District Court of Appeal. The language of the constitutional provision is: "The Supreme Court shall have power to order any cause pending * * * before a District Court of Appeal to be heard and determined by the Supreme Court. The order last mentioned may be made before judgment has been pronounced by a district court of appeal, or within thirty days after such judgment shall have become final therein." It is necessarily conceded that the expiration of said period of 30 days without the making of such an order by this court ends its power in that regard, and renders the judgment of the District Court of Appeal final for all purposes. See, as bearing on this question, Adams v. Dohrmann, 63 Cal. 420. The last day for action by this court in this cause was therefore January 22, 1911. A petition on behalf of the defendant invoking this action by this court was duly filed herein on January 3, 1911, and there was thereupon prepared by our secretary, in accordance with the usual custom, a form of order granting the application, which was as is usual in such cases left in the chambers of the Chief Justice to be subscribed by such of the justices as were in favor of such granting. On January 10, 1911, Justice Henshaw, being about to depart from the state for a brief absence extending beyond the period within which the order might lawfully be made, and believing that the application should be granted, subscribed his name to said order so prepared. On January 11, 1911, he departed from the state, and thereafter continuously remained without its limits until the period expired within which said order might lawfully be made. On January 19, 1911, Justice Melvin, deeming that the application should be granted, subscribed his name to said prepared form of order. On January 21, 1911, the remaining five justices of this court namely, Chief Justice Beatty, and Justices Shaw, Angellotti, Lorigan, and Sloss, met in the chambers of the Chief Justice for consultation regarding said application, and Justice Lorigan, deeming that the application should be granted, subscribed his name to said order. Justices Shaw, Angellotti, and Sloss declined to concur in such order, and the Chief Justice reserved his decision in the matter until January 22, 1911, when he, having concluded that the application should be granted, subscribed his name to the order. The order was filed, by copy, in the office of the clerk of this court on January 23, 1911, the original order, in accordance with our uniform practice, being retained in the office of our secretaries.

We are entirely satisfied that the filing of the order in the clerk's office within the prescribed time was not essential to its validity, if it was otherwise regularly made by a majority of the court. See Niles v. Edwards, 95 Cal. 41, 43, 47, 30 Pac. 134. It is clear that to make such an order there must under the constitutional provision already set forth be a concurrence therein of a majority of the members of the court, namely, four justices. As only three justices concurred in this order, if Justice Henshaw be excluded from consideration, the real question presented by this motion is the effect of his absence from the state commencing prior to any action on the part of the other three justices in the matter and continuing until after the time expired within which such order might legally be made.

It cannot be doubted that the granting of an application for a hearing in this court after decision by a District Court of Appeal is the exercise of a purely judicial function. It is admitted by learned counsel for defendant that a justice of this court can exercise no judicial function while absent from the state of California. The authorities agree upon the proposition that a judicial officer must exercise his judicial power within the territorial limits of his jurisdiction, and that any attempted exercise thereof while without such territorial limits is in the absence of express provision of law authorizing the same a nullity. In the Matter of Steele (D. C.) 156 Fed. 853, Hundley, J., says: "I fail to find a single case or authority wherein the judge is held to be the court, or a part of the court, while absent from the territory, prescribed by law within which the court is required to be held." An examination of such authorities as we have been able to find, including all that have been cited in the argument, shows nothing to impugn the accuracy of this statement. In the opinion of Justice Anderson in People v. Wells, 2 Cal. 219, we find an interesting discussion of the distinction between the vested right of tenure in the term of a justice of the Supreme Court and the functions of that office. He says: "The vested right of tenure for the term carries with it the privilege of enjoying certain emoluments. This vests solely that personal right, which only determines the power of exercising the functions of the office, under particular qualifications of time and place." While a justice continues within the state, the vested right in the tenure of the office is determinative of the functions, and they attach by reason of that vested right. "But the moment the judge passes beyond the territorial line they cease to exist. Anywhere within the state he has certain prescribed functions. * * * But, when he absents himself from the state, his vested right of tenure in the term of the office is distinct from that, and is not parted from by him, but attaches to his person. It goes with him, and keeps with him. The functions of the office are left behind, and cannot be taken out of the state. They become temporarily vacant." While this discussion was contained in the opinion of only one of the three justices of the court, there is nothing in the other opinions that is at all inconsistent therewith, and, while it cannot be taken as having the force of a decision on the question, it appears to us to be a correct statement of the law. In Lynde v. County, 83 U. S. 6, 21 L. Ed. 272, the Supreme Court of the United States made a distinction between the exercise of judicial power and the performance of ministerial acts by one occupying a judicial office and clothed by law with authority to perform such ministerial acts, saying: "Judicial power is necessarily local in its nature, and its exercise, to be valid, must be local also." In Phillips v. Thralls, 26 Kan. 780, the Supreme Court of Kansas, speaking through the late Justice Brewer, then a member of that court, said: "Unquestionably a judicial officer must exercise his jurisdiction within the territorial limits of that jurisdiction. This, as a general proposition, will not be questioned by any one. * * * Every act of jurisdiction exercised by a judge without his territory * * * is null." In the later Kansas case of Dunn v. Travis, 45 Kan. 541, 26 Pac. 247, a judge of a district court of Kansas, while in the state of Illinois, made an order extending the time within which a case for the Supreme Court on appeal from his court could be served, settled, and signed. The order was held to be a nullity; the court saying: "The order extending the time is therefore a nullity as it will not be seriously contended that he could make judicial orders while absent from his district." In Buchanan v. Jones, 12 Ga. 612, a judge of the superior court granted a writ of certiorari while out of the state. This was dismissed on the ground that judges of the superior court of that state have no authority to do any official act required by the laws thereof beyond its jurisdiction. The court said: "His official acts derive all their force and authority from the Constitution and laws of this state, which are only coextensive with the territory thereof. * * * When a judicial officer of this state goes beyond the operation of the laws by virtue of which all his official acts derive their binding force and authority, he cannot be considered as acting there, in obedience to the mandate of the sovereign will of the state, for the simple reason that that mandate of the sovereign will of the state has no extraterritorial operation." In Price v. Bayless, 131 Ind. 437, 31 N. E. 88, a temporary restraining order was made by an Indiana judge while in the state of Michigan, and the Indiana Supreme Court said: "This action was unquestionably erroneous. His authority as judge was conferred alone by the Constitution and laws of this state. Our laws have no extraterritorial operation. When the judge passed the boundaries of the state, the power to exercise judicial functions did not follow him. He could not, as judge, sit in chambers in the state of Michigan and issue a valid restraining order."

In view of what has been said, it is clear that the concurrence of a justice in an order granting an application for a hearing in this court after decision and judgment by a District Court of Appeal cannot lawfully be given while such justice is not within the state, and, as we understand the argument of learned counsel for defendant, it is not claimed that Justice Henshaw could have assisted or participated in any way in making the order effectual as an order of this court while he was absent from the state, had he not indicated his assent before leaving the state by subscribing his name thereto. This brings us to what is, in fact, the only real question presented by this motion, viz.: The effect, during his absence from the state, of Justice Henshaw's signature to this order, such signature having been attached thereto prior to his departure from the state. We have seen that the concurrence of four justices is essential to the validity of an order of the character here under consideration. This necessarily implies a concurrence of four justices, qualified and with power to act, at the very moment of action as a court, or, to put it in the language of the New York Court of Appeals in the Matter of Kings County, etc., Co., 78 N. Y. 383, "when the decision is actually made." In that case the court was composed of three justices, any two of whom had power to render judgment. A motion to confirm a report of commissioners had been argued before three justices, and one of them had departed for Europe before any decision was reached. While absent from the state, he communicated his decision to the Chief Justice. The two justices remaining in the state, one of whom was the Chief Justice, then attempted to decide the case, one being for confirmation, the other opposed, upon the theory that the communication from the absent justice was sufficient to make a concurrence of two, and sufficient therefore to render a judgment, and an order was entered accordingly, one of the two justices present dissenting. The order so made was held to be a nullity; the court saying: "That the absent judge has previously indicated his conclusion is not enough, for he must participate or take part when the decision is actually made, to render it lawful." It is not necessary here to determine just when an order granting such hearing is actually made, whether when, at any time prior to the expiration of the 30-day period, four justices have assented thereto and have subscribed their names to the order as a decision of the court, or when, the order not having as yet been filed, but bearing the signatures of four justices, the time expires within which such action may lawfully be had. Such order certainly is not made until four justices have concurred therein.

The word "concurrence," as used in this connection, means agreement or union in action and design. There must be such agreement or union on the part of at least four justices qualified to act to make such an order effectual as an order of this court, and the uniting therein on the part of each justice is an exercise by him of a judicial function. When Justice Henshaw left the state, no other justice had joined with him in assenting to such order, and the assent theretofore given by him amounted to nothing more than an indication by him to his associates of his then willingness to concur with three or more of them in such proposed order. If he had thenceforth remained within the state, and three other justices had within the time allowed by law also indicated their assent by signing the order, the consent of Justice Henshaw, indicated by his signature, if the same had not been withdrawn by him, would have shown a concurrence of four qualified justices in the order, his previously indicated consent continuing to the time of such concurrence. It is undoubtedly true, and is the settled practice of this court, that any justice may withdraw his previously indicated assent to either decision or order at any time before the decision or order is actually made. It is likewise true that such previously indicated assent on the part of any justice to either decision or order is ineffectual for any purpose, if, pending the actual making of the decision or order, such justice dies, or, for any reason, ceases to be a member of this court. The reason that this is true is that his previously indicated assent becomes ineffectual for any purpose the moment that he is no longer able to exercise judicial functions (Broder v. Conklin, 98 Cal. 360, 33 Pac. 211), and that an assent, to be in any way effectual to the making of a decision or order must be operative at the moment of the making of the decision or order. There is no difference material to the motion under consideration between the facts in the case at bar and the case of a justice who has died, or who has otherwise ceased to be a member of the court. The moment Justice Henshaw left the state, in view of the authorities already referred to, he became unable to exercise any judicial function as a justice of the Supreme Court, in this state or out of it, and this disability continued during the whole period of his absence. During that time his situation was the same as if he had absolutely ceased to be a member of this court. It is true that there was a suspension only of his judicial power, instead of a final abrogation thereof, but the suspension, while it continued, was as absolute in its effect on his judicial power as would have been a complete vacancy in his office. Assent to or concurrence in a decision or order of the court being the exercise of a purely judicial function, his previous proposal to concur in a proposed order, one that had not yet been made and one that had not yet received the assent of other justices making it an accomplished decision, temporarily ceased to be effectual for any purpose, and so continued ineffectual for any purpose during the whole period of his absence. Such previously indicated willingness to concur could not accomplish that which the absent justice himself could not accomplish. The time having expired before he returned, it follows that he never concurred with even a single other justice in the purported order. Admittedly this order, if it ever did become effectual, did not become so until January 22, 1911, when the fourth justice appended his name. At that time, however, Justice Henshaw could not effectually join therein, because of his absence from the state, and his previously indicated willingness to join therein could have no legal effect. The result is that only three justices of this court concurred in the purported order, and, as such order could be made only by the concurrence of four justices, it was ineffectual for any purpose and void.

As was said in our written statement filed at the commencement of the argument on this motion, the question of the effect of the absence of a justice from the state at the time a decision or order signed by him is made has never heretofore been raised in this court, and it was taken for granted by all the justices, including Justice Henshaw, that the absence of such justice would not preclude him from participating in such decisions and orders as he had signed prior to his departure from the state. The mere suggestion of the point made in support of the pending motion and discussed in this opinion was sufficient to raise in our minds the gravest doubt as to the correctness of this conclusion, and our subsequent consideration of the question has left us entirely satisfied that the point is well made.

It therefore follows that the purported order must be held to be void for want of concurrence therein of the necessary number of justices. Without such concurrence there could be no valid order, and it becomes the duty of the court to strike the void order from its records. The order being void, jurisdiction of the case is still in the District Court of Appeal for the First District for action under its final judgment, from which court it has never, in truth, been removed, and it will be the duty of our clerk, upon the purported order being vacated, to return the original record to the clerk of such District Court of Appeal.

The order of January 22, 1911, filed January 23, 1911, assuming to grant the application of the defendant in the above-entitled cause, for a hearing in this court after decision in the District Court of Appeal for the first district, is vacated.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.; SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

14 Cal. App. 572

REGAN v. SUPERIOR COURT OF MARIN COUNTY. (S. F. 5,767.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1911.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1020½*)—APPEAL—TRANSFER OF CAUSE TO SUPREME COURT.

Where only four of the justices of the Supreme Court concurred in the removal of a cause to the Supreme Court for determination after final judgment in the District Court of Appeal, and one of the judges concurring was out of the state at the time and from thence continuously until after the time for making the order had expired, the order of transfer was inoperative.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1020½.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Thos. J. Lennon, Judge.

Petition by Henry Regan for writ of review against the Superior Court of Marin County. An order granting the writ and annulling the superior court's proceedings having been granted by the District Court of Appeal, an order was entered transferring the case to the Supreme Court. Annulled.

George H. Harlam, for petitioner. Wal J. Tuska, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. An order having been filed herein on January 16, 1911, purporting to transfer this cause to the Supreme Court for hearing and determination, after final judgment thereof in the District Court of Appeal of the First District, 114 Pac. 72, which order was concurred in by only four justices, namely, BEATTY, C. J., HENSHAW, J., SHAW, J., and LORIGAN, J., and Justice HENSHAW being at that time, and from thence continuously until after the time for making such order had expired, out of the state of California, the court is of the opinion that said purported order was and is, by reason of such absence, inoperative and void. See People v. Ruef, 114 Pac. 48, this day decided. Wherefore it is ordered by the court that said order be vacated and annulled, and that the papers in said cause be returned to the said District Court of Appeal.

14 Cal. App. 651

BROWN v. NORTHERN CALIFORNIA POWER CO. (Sac. 1,798.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1911.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1020½*)—APPEAL—TRANSFER OF CAUSE TO SUPREME COURT.

Where only four of the judges of the Supreme Court concurred in the removal of a cause to the Supreme Court for determination after final judgment in the District Court of Appeal, and one of the judges concurring was out of the state at the time the fourth justice signed the order, and from thence continuously until after the time for making the order had expired, it was inoperative.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1020½.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Action by Thomas Brown against the Northern California Power Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. After judgment in the District Court of Appeal for the Third District, the case was transferred to the Supreme Court. Remanded.

Charles L. Donohoe and Frank Freeman, for appellant. Reid & Dozier, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. An order having been filed herein on January 16, 1911, purporting to transfer this cause to the Supreme Court for hearing and determination, after final judgment thereof in the District Court of Appeal of the Third District (114 Pac. 74), which order was concurred in by only four justices, namely, BEATTY, C. J., HENSHAW, J., SHAW, J., and LORIGAN, J., and Justice HENSHAW being at that time, and from thence continuously until after the time for making such order had expired, out of the state of California, the court is of the opinion that said purported order was and is, by reason of such absence, inoperative and void. See People v. Ruef, 114 Pac. 48, this day decided. Wherefore it is ordered by the court that said order be vacated and annulled, and that the papers in said cause be returned to the said District Court of Appeal.

14 Cal. App. 576

PEOPLE v. RUEF. (Cr. 273.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Nov. 23, 1910. On Petition for Rehearing, Dec. 23, 1910.)

1. BRIBERY (§ 11*)—EVIDENCE—WEIGHT.

Evidence held to sustain a verdict convicting defendant of bribing one of the supervisors of a city and county to influence his official action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bribery, Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1186*)—APPEAL—REVIEW.

Under Pen. Code, § 1258, requiring the court to give judgment without regard to technical errors or defects, or to exceptions which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties, a conviction will be affirmed unless it appears that defendant has not been accorded a fair trial according to law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1186.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1152*)—MATTERS OF DISCRETION—COMPETENCY OF JURORS—OPINION—STATEMENTS IN PUBLIC JOURNALS—PUBLIC RUMOR.

Pen. Code, § 1076, provides that a juror shall not be disqualified by reason of an opinion founded on public rumor, statements in public journals, or common notoriety, provided it appears to the court that he can and will act impartially notwithstanding such opinion. Held that, where a juror's opinion was founded on public rumor, statements in public journals, and common notoriety, a finding by the court in the exercise of discretion that the juror could and would notwithstanding his opinion impartially and fairly act on the matters submitted to him would not be interfered with on appeal except in case of palpable abuse of discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3056; Dec. Dig. § 1152.*]

4. JURY (§ 103*)—QUALIFICATION OF JURORS—OPINION—EVIDENCE BEFORE A GRAND JURY.

Pen. Code, § 1076, provides that an opinion acquired by a venireman from public rumor, statements in public journals, and common notoriety will not disqualify him if it appears to the court from his declaration, under oath or otherwise, that he can and will act impartially, etc. Held, that the publication in a newspaper of the evidence given before the grand jury in more or less detail by question and answer from which a venireman formed an opinion was not more than "statements in a public journal," and did not disqualify him, where the court found that the juror could and would act impartially notwithstanding such opinion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 461-479, 497; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

5. JURY (§ 133*)—ACTS OF DISTRICT ATTORNEY—UNFAIR TRIAL.

While it is improper for a district attorney to willfully endeavor to pack a jury or endeavor to get thereon men who are biased against the defendant to such an extent as to make them unfair jurors under the law, he is still the attorney for the people, and may properly use legal means to secure a conviction, and in a legitimate way ascertain the character, standing, and integrity of jurors before they are sworn.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

6. JURY (§ 133*)—CHALLENGE—REPORT CONCERNING JURORS.

Where during the examination of a juror on his voir dire the defendant called the assistant district attorney to the stand, and inquired whether he had not in his possession a report made by an agent or employé of the district attorney's office as to an alleged interview with the juror or concerning the juror's state of mind or opinion concerning the case, the court did not err in refusing over the district attorney's objection to compel him to produce such report or to divulge its contents.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

7. JURY (§ 133*)—CHALLENGE—QUALIFICATION OF JURORS—ANTECEDENT REPORTS.

Where, during the examination of a juror on his voir dire, it appeared that an employé of the district attorney's office had interviewed the prospective juror with reference to his qualifications, and as to whether he had formed an opinion as to defendant's guilt or innocence, and had made a report concerning the same to the district attorney's office, such employé might be called and examined with reference to such interview, during which the court might require the production of the report in aid of eliciting the whole truth from the witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 656*)—TRIAL—CONDUCT OF JUDGE.

During the examination of a witness defendant's counsel, claiming that the witness hesitated, asked why he testified on direct examination without qualification or hesitation and on cross-examination always waited from five to ten seconds before he answered. The court sustained an objection, stating that, if the witness was engaged in an effort to collect his thoughts and render a proper answer, his hesitation was proper, and that every man had temperamental qualities rendering it possible for some to make immediate response and requiring others to hesitate. The court thereupon laid down a rule that counsel should propound a question, and must wait until the witness answered, and after answer, if there was anything about the witness' hesitancy in answering, that matter might be taken up as a special subject of inquiry. The court also stated to counsel that he should not assume a harsh demeanor toward the witness and had no right to use insulting language, nor to detain the witness longer than the interests of justice seemed to require. Held, that the court's remarks did not constitute misconduct, nor were they objectionable as indicating the court's opinion that the witness was credible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 656.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 655, 656*)—TRIAL—COMMENTS OF TRIAL JUDGE.

It is improper for a trial judge to make any comments on the credibility of a witness, or in excuse of his manner of testifying, or in disparagement of counsel because of his manner of examination.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1520-1535; Dec. Dig. §§ 655, 656.*]

10. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 372*)—EVIDENCE—OTHER OFFENSES.

Where, in a prosecution for offering a bribe through G. to a supervisor to influence his official action with reference to a street railroad franchise, defendant pleaded not guilty, denied that he offered to bribe such supervisor, and claimed that the testimony of G. was not corroborated by other evidence tending to connect defendant with the commission of the offense, evidence of a general plan through which defendant was claimed to be in control of the board of supervisors, and had been in the habit of paying them money through G., as his confidential agent, to influence their action, and that, in pursuance of such plan, defendant had paid various sums to the supervisors to influence their action on other matters that had come before them, was admissible under the rule that where several crimes are connected as part of one scheme or plan, all of the same general character tending to the same common end, they may be proved to show the process or motive and design leading up to the particular crime for which the accused is being tried, directly tending to show that the crime in question was part of such common scheme.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 833, 834; Dec. Dig. § 372.*]

11. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 396, 673*)—EVIDENCE—RECORDS.

Where, during the cross-examination of a witness, his attention was called to an affidavit which he had made and which was introduced in evidence to impeach him by showing that he had sworn that he had never committed any felony nor been guilty of any crime, the state was properly permitted to introduce the complaint in the action in which the affidavit was made as a part of the same transaction and without which the affidavit could not be fully understood, and the court properly limited the jury's consideration of the complaint to explain the transaction referred to in the affidavit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 861, 862, 1597, 1872-1876; Dec. Dig. §§ 396, 673.*]

12. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 930*)—NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS.

During the trial of accused, the assistant district attorney was shot while in the courtroom, and badly wounded, by one having an alleged or imaginary grievance against him, while the jury were temporarily in the hallway. The jurors had just started to enter the courtroom, two of them having passed the door when the shooting occurred. The deputy sheriff immediately pressed the jurors back into the jury room, and closed the door, and defendant was afterwards, but not in the presence of the jury, placed in custody and guarded by a policeman on his trips to and from the courtroom. Public meetings were held and defendant denounced, and insinuations made by leading citizens against the courts. It did not appear that the jurors knew of such meetings or of threats against accused, nor did it appear that the assailant of the assistant district attorney had any connection with the case, or with accused, and the court directed the jury not to consider the transaction in any manner in their determination of the case. Held, that the court's refusal to discharge the jury and grant a new trial was not an abuse of discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 930.*]

13. JURY (§ 131*)—CHALLENGE—RE-EXAMINATION.

Where during the trial of accused the assistant district attorney was shot and seriously wounded, though not in the immediate presence of the jury, the court did not err in refusing to permit defendant's counsel to re-examine the jurors as to any bias or prejudice resulting therefrom.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Dec. Dig. § 131.*]

14. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 956*)—NEW TRIAL—AFFIDAVIT.

Where, during the trial of accused, the assistant district attorney, while in the courtroom, was shot by a third person, and in support of a motion for a new trial defendant filed an affidavit setting forth expressions used by a juror as to his bias and prejudice against defendant while the trial was in progress after the shooting, and also alleged that another juror after the shooting went to the judge and informed him that he did not think he could fairly and impartially try the case and requested the judge to discharge him from further duty, and that such request was refused and the juror directed to keep his feelings to himself, and that in due time he would be instructed as to his duties as a juror, there being nothing to show how defendant acquired knowledge of such matters, they were hearsay, and insufficient to impeach a conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 956.*]

15. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1172*)—APPEAL—PREJUDICE—FAILURE OF ACCUSED TO TESTIFY—INSTRUCTIONS.

The court charged that it was the jury's duty to carefully and conscientiously abstain from indulging in every inference, presumption, or consideration in the least unfavorable to defendant from his failure to testify, that there was nothing in that circumstance for the jury to consider in arriving at a verdict, that the law required them to give no consideration at all and to attribute no significance whatever to that fact, and under no circumstances to permit it to influence their minds, but that the defendant entered on his trial with a presumption that he was innocent, and was not bound to prove himself innocent, it being the jury's duty to act on the presumption of innocence and lack of intent during their entire consideration of the evidence, and until that had been overcome by evidence of guilt so strong, ample, and conclusive as to convince their minds, and the mind of each of them, to a moral certainty, and beyond a reasonable doubt, that defendant was guilty of the crime charged. Held, that accused, not having elected to testify, was not prejudiced by the fact that the court read to the jury Pen. Code, § 1323, providing that accused cannot be compelled to be a witness against himself, but, if he offers himself as a witness, he may be cross-examined as to all matters concerning which he was examined in chief, but his neglect or refusal to be a witness could not in any manner prejudice him or be used against him on the trial of the proceedings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1172.*]

16. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 787*)—FAILURE OF ACCUSED TO TESTIFY—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where accused has not testified as a witness in his own behalf, it is not proper practice for the court to charge the language of Pen. Code, § 1323, providing that he is a competent witness in his own behalf, but shall not be required to testify, and that no presumption against him shall be indulged in case of his failure so to do.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1902, 1903; Dec. Dig. § 787.*]

17. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1137*)—APPEAL—ESTOPPEL TO ALLEGE ERROR.

Where accused by his requests to charge invoked certain of the presumptions specified in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1963, 2061, he could not complain on appeal that it was not a proper occasion for giving other instructions on the same subject.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3007-3010; Dec. Dig. § 1137.*]

18. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1172*)—APPEAL—INSTRUCTIONS—PREJUDICE.

Where, in a prosecution for offering a bribe, defendant did not testify, he was not prejudiced by instructions with reference to presumptions created by Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 6, that evidence is to be estimated, not only by its own intrinsic weight, but also according to the evidence which it is in the power of one side to produce and of the other to contradict, and subdivision 7 that, if weaker and less satisfactory evidence is offered when stronger and more satisfactory evidence is within the power of the party to produce, the evidence offered must be viewed with distrust, and section 1963, subds. 5, 6, that evidence willfully suppressed would be adverse if produced, and that higher evidence not produced would be adverse from inferior evidence produced, since it would not be presumed that the jury improperly applied such abstract propositions in the face of a positive instruction that no inference or presumption unfavorable to accused could be indulged by reason of his failure to testify.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1172.*]

19. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 507*)—BRIBERY—"ACCOMPLICE."

The word "accomplice," as used in a statute providing that a person may not be convicted of a crime on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, means an accomplice in the commission of the offense charged and under investigation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1082-1098; Dec. Dig. § 507.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 75-79; vol. 8, p. 7561.]

20. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 507*)—ACCOMPLICES—INSTRUCTIONS.

In a prosecution for offering a bribe to a member of the board of supervisors to influence his official action, the court properly instructed that one who offers a bribe is not for that reason alone an accomplice of the one to whom it is offered, and that one to whom a bribe is offered or who asks or agrees to receive a bribe is not, for that reason alone, an accomplice of one who offers the bribe.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 507.*]

21. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 507*)—OFFER TO BRIBE—ACCOMPLICES.

Where defendant was indicted for offering to bribe F., a supervisor, to influence his official action through G., and there was no evidence that F. entered into a combination or agreement with the defendant and the other supervisors to offer a bribe to himself, the fact that F. invited bribes did not authorize the granting of a request to charge that, if defendant and the other supervisors together with F. entered into a general scheme to obtain money from all persons for permits and franchises, then F. was an accomplice, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 507.*]

22. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 507*)—ACCOMPLICES—TESTIMONY.

In a prosecution for offering a bribe to a supervisor to influence his official action with reference to an application for a particular franchise pending before the board of which he was a member, he was not rendered an accomplice because of an agreement between himself and accused and other supervisors to get money from other third persons not named in the indictment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 507.*]

23. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 721½*)—ARGUMENT OF DISTRICT ATTORNEY—CODEFENDANT—FAILURE TO TESTIFY.

It is not error for the district attorney in argument to refer to the fact that a codefendant had not been called as a witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1673; Dec. Dig. § 721½.*]

24. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 730*)—MISCONDUCT OF ATTORNEY—CURING ERROR.

In response to objection to argument of the district attorney, the court instructed the jury to disregard any statement made by counsel which was in excess of the testimony, and again directed counsel to refrain from personal allusions to the counsel on the other side, and to refrain from anything that was not justified by something said by counsel during the trial of the case. Held, that the argument, in so far as it was not within the record, was cured by the court's rulings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1693; Dec. Dig. § 730.*]

25. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1171*) — APPEAL — HARMLESS ERROR—ARGUMENT OF DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

Remarks of the district attorney in argument, in order to constitute reversible error, must be willful, not supported by the record, must contain a statement of something as a fact, either directly or by innuendo, and must have been objected to or the court's attention called to the same at the time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3126, 3127; Dec. Dig. § 1171.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; William P. Lawlor, Judge.

Abraham Ruef was convicted of offering a bribe, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Henry Ach, Thos. B. Dozier, and Frank J. Murphy, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, John O'Gara, F. J. Heney, and W. H. Langdon, for the People.

COOPER, P. J. The defendant was indicted by the grand jury for the crime of offering a bribe, to wit, $4,000 to John J. Furey, a supervisor of the city and county of San Francisco, with the corrupt intent to influence the official action of said supervisor in the matter of granting a franchise to the United Railroads of San Francisco, a corporation, to operate and maintain its street cars by means of an overhead trolley electric system, instead of the underground cable which it had been using. No question is raised as to the sufficiency of the indictment. The trial commenced August 27, 1908, and continued thereafter until December 10, 1908, at which time the jury returned a verdict finding the defendant guilty as charged. He made a motion for a new trial and also a motion in arrest of judgment, both of which motions were denied, and he was thereafter sentenced to a term of fourteen years in the state prison at San Quentin. This appeal is prosecuted from the judgment and from the order so made. Counsel have seen fit to bring up the whole record, including the testimony in full by question and answer, together with the arguments of counsel on questions of law during the trial, and the rulings thereon, the full and complete examination of the jurors in the impanelment of the jury, and even the argument of counsel as made to the jury. The record consists of 24 bound volumes, containing over 12,000 printed pages, and there are 10 volumes of briefs, aggregating some 2,800 printed pages. We have never before known of such a record being presented to an appellate court. The examination of the record and of the many points raised has been a Herculean task, and such as the law never contemplated being imposed upon an appellate court, whose function is to pass upon questions of law. We have, however, performed the task as fully as our strength, time, and endurance would permit, and have passed upon apparently the most plausible and material points urged by the appellant to the best of our ability. If we were to discuss minutely every point raised, this opinion would fill a volume in the Reports and be protracted to an unreasonable length.

1. It is claimed that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. In the discussion of this question, it must be borne in mind that we have the power only as a matter of law to say as to whether or not there is sufficient evidence, conceding every syllable of it to be true, to support the ultimate finding of the jury. The jury is the sole judge of all questions of fact, and its finding, based upon evidence, upon any controverted question, is conclusive on this court. It has the right to believe or to disbelieve any witness, and draw all reasonable inferences from the facts proven. The question, and the sole question, for the jury in this case, was as to whether or not the defendant offered a bribe to Furey as charged in the indictment. All the testimony offered at the long and protracted trial was for the sole purpose of solving this one question. The direct evidence of the offer was that of Gallagher, Wilson, and Furey, each of whom were supervisors at the time the offer is said to have been made.

Gallagher testified that he made the offer to Furey, and that he was authorized by the defendant to make such offer. It is urged that in cross-examination Gallagher destroyed the effect of his testimony by admitting that the statement as to the offer to Furey was "his best recollection"; but upon a careful reading of this testimony we conclude that, while his evidence may have been weakened by the qualifications as to his best recollection, yet it was not destroyed to such an extent that we can say that the jury had no right to believe it. In fact, the qualification as to the best recollection of the witness appears in his cross-examination. Gallagher testified in direct examination: "The next matter that Ruef spoke to me about was the matter of the permit for the United Railroads to use electricity on its lines of railroad in this city and county. No one was present. It was perhaps a week before the fire of April 18, 1906. He said the United Railroads wanted to get a permit to use electricity on their lines, asked me to speak to the members of the board about it, and let him know whether it could be done, whether it could go through the board, and what amount of money it would take. I told him that I would do so, but I had not spoken to any of the members previous to the fire. Q. With whom did you speak? A. I spoke to Wilson, Coleman, Boxton, Davis, Mamlock, and Furey. I spoke to other members, but I don't recall which other ones at this time. * * * Q. When and where did your conversation with Furey take place, and who, if any one, was present? A. There was no one present. The conversation took place within a few days after my conversation with Ruef. I cannot fix the place any more definitely than that it was upon the streets of this city and county. Q. State what was said by each of you upon that occasion upon that subject. A. I said to him that the United Railroads wanted to secure a permit to use electricity on their lines, and asked him if he would stand favorable. He said he would. Q. Did you have any further conversation with Ruef on that subject after the conversations which you have just related with these supervisors? A. I saw Ruef and had a conversation with him. I said to Ruef that I thought the proposition could be put through, or words to that effect. Ruef said he would allow the sum of $4,000 to each of the supervisors on that trolley matter proposition in the United Railroads permit matter. He asked me to see the members about it, see if that would be satisfactory, and I told him I would do so. That is the substance of the conversation. * * * Q. When and where did your conversation with Furey on that subject take place, and who, if any one, was present? A. My conversation with Furey took place at the meeting rooms of the board according to my remembrance, my best recollection. There was no one else present. It was within a few days after my conversation with Ruef. Q. State what was said by each of you on that occasion? A. I stated to him there would be $4,000 in the United Railroads trolley matter. He said it would be all right. That is the substance of the conversation."

In cross-examination, after he had been several days on the witness stand, and after having been asked and having answered hundreds of questions, he was asked by counsel for the defendant and answered as follows: "Q. You are absolutely positive you spoke to Furey, are you not? A. My best recollection is that I spoke to Furey, but I would not be willing to say that there could not be a mistake about it. * * * Q. How much of a qualification is there now in your statement as to John J. Furey when you say that it is according to your best recollection, that you cannot be positive about it? A. My remembrance is that I spoke to Furey about it, but I would not be willing to say that there is no possibility of my being in error about it. Q. You are positive now, are you? A. I would not say I am so positive as to say there could not possibly be any question about it."

It will be noticed that Gallagher nowhere and at no place expressed any doubt, or any best recollection, as to the fact that he was authorized by defendant to make the offer, and that he did talk with various members of the board of supervisors as to the offer and as to the amount to be paid to each supervisor. His testimony in this respect is direct and unequivocal, and it is only when questioned in cross-examination about the particular supervisor, Furey, that he uses the words "according to my best recollection." In view of the testimony of Furey the qualification by Gallagher of his testimony in chief does not appear to be essentially material. Furey testified without any hesitation on the subject. His testimony is as follows: "Q. Do you remember, Mr. Furey, of the passage of the overhead trolley ordinance in the board of supervisors in the month of May, 1906? A. I do. Q. Were you present when the matter first came up in board on May 14, 1906? A. I believe I was; yes. Q. Now, Mr. Furey, before that matter came up in board, had you any conversation with any person in relation to the passage of that ordinance by the board at which anything was said about the action of the board? A. Yes, sir. Q. With whom had you any such conversation? A. James L. Gallagher. Q. How many such conversations did you have? A. My best recollection is I had three. Q. Where did those conversations take place? A. In Mowry's Hall. Q. Did these conversations take place after the fire? A. Yes, sir. * * * Q. Now, Mr. Furey, about how long before the matter was brought up in board did Mr. Gallagher first speak to you about that trolley matter? A. About a week or ten days, something like that. * * * Q. What did he say to you at this first conversation? A. He told me that the program was that the trolley be granted, that the trolley franchise be granted to the Market Street Railway Company as a trolley line. That is the substance of it. That is possibly not the exact words. Q. What, if anything, did you say to him at that time in that conversation? A. I said 'All right. I will stand for it.' * * * Q. How long afterwards did you have your next conversation with Mr. Gallagher on that matter? A. I am not positive as to the time. Some little time afterwards. Q. Well, give the best recollection that you have as to the time. How many days? A. It possibly might have been a week. Q. At that second conversation what, if anything, was said by James L. Gallagher to you, and by you to him, in relation to the trolley matter? A. He told me there was $8,000 or $10,000 in it. Q. What, if anything, did you say to him? A. I said, 'All right. I would stand program.' Q. At your third conversation with James L. Gallagher what, if anything, did he say to you, and what, if anything, did you say to him? A. He said it was brought down to $4,000. Q. Can you give his exact words as he spoke them in that conversation? A. No; I cannot give his exact words. Q. Well, give the substance of his statement, if you please. A. As I remember it he said, 'Furey, the trolley was brought down to $4,000.' Q. What, if anything, did you say in reply to James L. Gallagher then? A. I said 'All right.'"

Wilson corroborated the testimony of Furey on the same point. He was asked: "Q. Do you now recall the conversation which you had with Furey before the vote on the passage to print of the trolley permit ordinance? A. Yes, sir. Q. How long before the actual passage to print did that conversation take place? A. Before the board went into session, about 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Q. About 2 o'clock in the afternoon? A. Yes, sir. Q. Of what day? A. May 14th. * * * Q. State whether or not Mr. Ruef was present at the board rooms that day before the passage to print of that ordinance. A. Yes, sir. Q. Now, what did Furey tell you on that day before the passage to print of the ordinance, in relation to the trolley ordinance? A. He said that Gallagher had told him that there was $4,000 in it. 'Is that right?' I told him that I hadn't had a talk with Mr. Gallagher yet; I would see; I would let him know. Q. And did you see him? A. I had a talk with Mr. Gallagher, and then I told him that the trolley matter was all right. Q. How long after you had the talk with Furey did you have the talk with Gallagher? A. About an hour."

There is other evidence in corroboration of the testimony of the three supervisors tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense. There is evidence that $200,000 was placed at the United States mint in the city and county of San Francisco to the credit of the president of the United Railroads; that Cole, the cashier of the mint, at the request of the attorney for the United Railroads, exchanged the gold to the extent of $50,000 for that amount of currency from the relief fund, of which Cole was also treasurer; that all this sum was paid to the defendant in currency, and that afterwards $150,000 more, making a total of $200,000, was paid to defendant, also in currency; that defendant paid or handed over to Gallagher $85,000 of this sum, also in currency, of which Gallagher paid Wilson $10,- 000, and the other supervisors $4,000 each, and retained $15,000 himself for his special services in negotiating with the other supervisors; that while the ordinance granting the permit was pending defendant said, in speaking of the matter, in the presence of W. W. Sanderson and others, that "this thing will go through on Monday. It is all settled;" that on the same day the money was received from the mint by the officers of the United Railroads, defendant hired a new safe deposit box of large dimensions at the vaults of the Western National Bank, where he already had two such boxes; that he was driven back and forth from the offices of the United Railroads to the Western National Bank about the time and while the money was being transferred to him, and that Wilson deposited $5,000 of the money received by him with the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company, as shown by a deposit tag produced from the files of said bank, on the day he received the money; that the money taken from the mint, the $200,000, did not appear of record in the books of the United Railroads; that caucuses were held before each regular meeting of the board of supervisors at which defendant was always present; that various other matters had been put through and passed by the board of supervisors at defendant's dictation, for which various sums in each case were paid to the supervisors—among these being the prize fight ordinance, the Parkside franchise, the order fixing gas rates, the franchise for the Home Telephone Company; that defendant, upon hearing that some of the supervisors had been paid for their votes by an agent of the Pacific States Telephone Company without his knowledge, said to one Pohelm, a physician, "They tried to take my supervisors away from me, but I fixed them. I would like to see one of them get away from me;" that after these matters were attracting great public attention, and Langdon, the district attorney, was procuring evidence and preparing to prosecute the offenders, defendant had Gallagher, who was then acting mayor of San Francisco, make an order purporting to remove Langdon from the office of district attorney, and appointing himself as such district attorney, which order was afterwards held void by the courts.

There are many other facts and circumstances in evidence, but the above is sufficient to show that the supervisors were corroborated in regard to defendant's connection with the crime. These corroborating facts and circumstances all stand out as clear as the midday sun, with nothing to explain them or in any manner to free defendant from his connection therewith. While it is true that no one save Gallagher testified as to defendant's authorizing him to offer the bribe, there is evidence that defendant received $200,000, that he had it converted into currency, that he had the ordinance passed, and that Furey was one of the supervisors who voted for the ordinance. No one could reasonably draw any other inference from these facts than the one that Gallagher was the agent and mouthpiece of defendant. In our opinion the evidence not only supports the verdict of the jury, but no other verdict could reasonably be justified.

We will now pass to the discussion of other questions, bearing in mind that where defendant has been found guilty upon a valid indictment, and the evidence supports the verdict, the court "must give judgment without regard to technical errors or defects or to exceptions which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties." Pen. Code, § 1258; People v. Stokes, 5 Cal. App. 205, 89 Pac. 997; People v. Hutchings, 8 Cal. App. 550, 97 Pac. 325. Of course, the defendant was entitled to a fair trial according to the law, and, if anything occurred which deprived him of such fair trial, we would not hesitate to reverse the judgment.

2. It is claimed that the court erred in denying defendant's challenge of several jurors. The volume of defendant's brief devoted to this subject is volume 7, and contains 410 printed pages. The proceedings on the impanelment of the jury take up 6,600 pages of the printed transcript; hence it is apparent that we cannot discuss the several challenges in detail. The first, and a sample of all, is the challenge to the juror Arthur. Arthur testified on his voir dire that he had heard a great deal about the "graft" cases; that he had read the newspapers; that he had a general opinion that graft had been going on in San Francisco, and that money had been paid to the supervisors, but that the opinion was not so fixed and positive that he would act upon it, and that such opinion was founded upon newspaper accounts and upon public rumor; that he knew nothing personally of the facts of the case, nor had he talked with any witness in regard to it. In cross-examination the juror was asked and answered questions as follows: "Q. Do you recall anybody ever reading to you from a newspaper or from anything else a verbatim report of what purported to be the testimony taken before the grand jury by question and answer? A. Well, I could not say that I have, though I might have. I could not say that I ever heard anybody read it. Q. At the present time you have no recollection of having heard any one read it? A. No. Q. You have no recollection of ever having read it yourself in that form? A. No; I have not. Q. Now, then, have you any information upon the subject of the trolley matter itself in any way to form any opinion in your mind other than the newspaper reading and general notoriety, common notoriety, and general rumor? A. No, sir. * * * Q. Did you ever talk with any person about it who claimed to have any personal knowledge of the facts or any of the facts in relation to the trolley matter? A. No; I have not. Q. Did you say you had an opinion or impression in regard to the trolley matter? A. I could not say you would call it an opinion or not. I suppose it must be an opinion. Q. Whatever it may be, whatever you may term it, if you were accepted as a juror, could you set it to one side by will power alone, and prevent it from interfering in any way or influencing you in any way in your consideration of the testimony or your consideration of the case or reaching a conclusion in the case? A. I certainly could. Q. You don't feel that it is strong enough to give you any trouble to set it aside, or that it would put you to any trouble in trying this case solely on the sworn testimony produced here under the instructions of the court? A. No, sir; it would not be any trouble to set it aside. * * * Q. Have you any business interests that you know of that might in any way influence you to lean even ever so slightly either one way or the other in this case? A. No, sir. I don't allow anything of that kind, even if there was. Q. You have no personal feeling against Mr. Ruef? A. No, sir; I don't know the man. * * * Q. If you were selected as a juror in this case, the court will probably tell you that this defendant, Mr. Ruef, notwithstanding the fact that he is indicted, is presumed to be innocent of this offense, the offense charged being that he made an offer to John J. Furey of $4,000 in the trolley matter, and that the jury when selected are to presume him absolutely innocent of that crime, and that presumption is not a mere fiction or matter of form, but it is a substantial right, if the court so instructs you, and you are taken as a juror, do you think that you could start in and give Mr. Ruef, notwithstanding your present opinion, the full benefit of that presumption in its enlarged sense? A. I could. Q. And would you? A. I would. * * * Q. The mere fact that after hearing the testimony of any witness or any witnesses in this case that you did not believe what they said, or that their testimony coincided with your opinion, would that govern you at all in reaching a conclusion as to whether you believed the witness or not? A. If I were selected as a juror I would not have any opinion. * * * Q. In that event you would not believe the testimony of the witness simply because your opinion might come back to you, and his statements be in accordance with your opinion, would you? A. I would not allow my opinion to come back to me. Q. You would shut it out completely, I understand? A. I certainly would. * * * Q. And you could do so, notwithstanding that the testimony of the accomplices was in line with what your opinion had formerly been, you could still view that testimony with distrust, could you? A. If I were selected as a juror the opinion I might have would not have anything to do with it. Q. I see. Because of that fact, notwithstanding the possibility that the testimony of the accomplices, if there be any such, should concur with the opinion that you did have, you could still view the testimony of the accomplices with distrust if the court instructed you that you should do so or ought to do so? A. I could."

Our Penal Code provides (section 1076) that "no person shall be disqualified as a juror by reason of having formed or expressed an opinion upon the matter or cause to be submitted to such jury founded upon public rumor, statements in public journals or common notoriety, provided it appear to the court, from his declaration, under oath or otherwise, that he can and will, notwithstanding such an opinion, act impartially and fairly upon the matters to be submitted to him." The opinion of the juror was beyond question founded upon public rumor, statements in public journals, and common notoriety; and in such case it is the province of the trial court to pass upon and examine the question as to whether or not a juror can and will, notwithstanding such opinion, act impartially and fairly upon the matter to be submitted to him; and, where the trial court has heard the evidence and observed the juror as he gave his answers, every presumption is in favor of the finding of the court. It is only in cases of palpable abuse of discretion that this court will interfere. The finding of the trial court is like the finding upon any question of fact within its function. It was said by the Supreme Court in People v. Fredericks, 106 Cal. 559, 39 Pac. 945: "This court is only allowed to review an order denying a challenge to the juror on the ground of actual bias when the evidence upon the examination of the juror is so opposed to the decision of the trial court that the question becomes one of law; for it is only upon questions of law that this court has appellate jurisdiction in criminal cases." To the same effect are People v. Scott, 123 Cal. 434, 56 Pac. 102; People v. Sowell, 145 Cal. 300, 78 Pac. 717; People v. Ryan, 152 Cal. 371, 92 Pac. 853.

Much stress is laid upon the fact that the juror stated that he had read in the papers statements purporting to be the testimony of witnesses before the grand jury, and perhaps in the form of questions and answers in some cases. We are asked to hold that in such case the publication of the evidence is more than a statement in a public journal; but, if we should so hold, it would be in effect to make that a disqualification of a juror which is not made so by the statute. In these days of modern journalism the newspapers publish everything, particularly in regard to criminal cases of great notoriety or involving some private scandal that will furnish food for the eager multitude. To hold that the publication of the evidence of witnesses, given before a grand jury or a committing magistrate, by question and answer, by an enterprising public journal, would disqualify a juror who had formed or expressed some kind of an opinion upon it, notwithstanding it was clearly made to appear that he could and would, notwithstanding such opinion, act impartially and fairly, would in many cases make it almost impossible to procure a jury. All intelligent people read public journals, at least to some extent; and no intelligent man can read the statements concerning the commission of a crime of great notoriety, or even hear the general public talk about such crime, without forming, and in many cases also expressing, an opinion about it. But in most cases jurors are honest in their intentions to do what is right; and, if they are intelligent and fit to be jurors, they will discard any opinion that they may have as to the merits of the case when such opinion is not based upon knowledge of some fact, or where their minds are not so biased by the facts as to disqualify them. Of course, the trial court in such case should use the utmost caution to see that no juror, who has such an opinion or prejudice that he cannot act impartially and fairly, should sit upon the jury; but no reasonable thinking man can help having to some extent formed an opinion. Even the judge himself has such opinion, and often a very positive one, but he is not for this reason disqualified to sit in the case. If the trial judge is from the examination of the juror, or other evidence, doubtful as to whether or not the juror can and will discard his opinion, and fairly and impartially try the case, he should resolve such doubt against the juror and excuse him. This is the safe rule; and, if followed, would save much trouble and grave questions before the Courts of Appeal. But we hold that the mere reading of what purports to be the evidence, even by question and answer, as published in some public journal, does not of itself disqualify a juror, and it has been so held. People v. Irwin, 77 Cal. 494, 20 Pac. 56; Hopt v. Utah, 120 U. S. 430, 7 Sup. Ct. 614, 30 L. Ed. 708. In the latter case it was said by Judge Field: "We think that evidence or what purports to be evidence printed in a newspaper are statements in a public journal within the meaning of the statute, and that the judgment of the court upon the opinion of the juror in such cases is conclusive."

Defendant relies upon People v. Helm, 152 Cal. 532, 93 Pac. 99, in support of his contention that the juror is disqualified. We have no fault to find with that case. In fact, it was considered by this court and cited with approval in People v. Schmitz, 7 Cal. App. 350, 94 Pac. 407, 419, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 717, and it is not in conflict with what we have said in this case. The court there simply held that the opinion of the juror must be based upon one or all of the matters enumerated in section 1076 of the Penal Code, or he would be disqualified. A sample of the evidence of the jurors who were disqualified and passed by the trial court in that case is that of the juror Neely, who testified: "I do not believe I could act as fairly and impartially in this case if selected as a jurymen as I could in a case where I have never heard anything about. The little impression that I have would bob up until all the evidence was in. I think that opinion or impression that I have would crop up in my consideration of the case." And we might add that of the juror Winters, who testified: "If selected as a jurymen, I would possibly require the prosecution to convince me beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendant. In my present state of mind, it would not require as much evidence to convince me of the guilt of this defendant in this case as it would where I had never heard anything about the facts and circumstances. It might require more evidence on the part of the defense to prove the young man innocent than it would be in a case that I had never heard anything about." What we have said in regard to the ruling on the challenge to the juror Arthur applies to rulings of the same character as to the other jurors. Under the rule as we understand it, we cannot disturb the finding of the trial court as to the qualifications of any one of them.

3. During the examination of the juror Arthur, the attorney for the defendant asked permission to and did call Assistant District Attorney Heney to the witness stand for the purpose of eliciting information concerning said juror. Heney was asked as to whether or not he had in his possession a report made by an agent or employé of the district attorney's office as to an alleged interview with the juror, or concerning the state of mind or opinion of the juror regarding the case. It appeared by the answer of the witness that he had a report as to the juror Arthur as to his qualifications as such juror. The court, upon objection being made by the assistant district attorney, refused to compel him to show the report to the attorney for the defendant or to divulge its contents. Such ruling is now claimed to be erroneous. There is nothing in the record in any manner showing the contents of the report or who it was made by. It was at most hearsay, and the attempt to get at its contents was in the nature of a "fishing" expedition, as it does not appear that the defendant's attorney had any knowledge of its contents, nor is it clear as to the object of counsel in endeavoring to get a view of it. The district attorney is an officer of the court, and in the prosecution of a defendant charged with crime he should be fair, and only seek a conviction by legal means and through a fair and impartial jury. A district attorney who would willfully endeavor to pack a jury, or endeavor to get upon it men who are biased against the defendant to such an extent as to make them unfair jurors under the law, should not be permitted to conduct the case, and, in fact, should not be entitled to practice in a court of justice. But in this case we must presume in favor of the officer as performing his official duty. While the district attorney should always be fair, and use only legal means to secure a conviction, yet he is the attorney for the people. We know of no law or principle which requires him to divulge to his adversary the private information he has, either in the way of evidence or information concerning jurors. It is the province of the district attorney, and also of the attorney for the defendant, in a criminal case to find out all he can in a legitimate way as to the character, standing, and integrity of the several jurors. Of course, after a juror has been summoned, and is in contemplation of law at least in attendance upon the court, no interview of a juror or tampering with him outside of the courtroom should for a moment be tolerated, no matter which side attempts it. The examination of the juror and all questions put to him should be in open court in the presence of all parties and of the judge. In this case the information, if any, in the possession of the district attorney may have been of a confidential nature, and such as it was entirely proper for him to have. It may have contained a statement that the juror was and always had been an upright law-abiding citizen, and that he would do his duty fearlessly. It may have contained information as to whether or not the district attorney intended to peremptorily challenge the juror, and thus have been of much advantage to the defendant. While a defendant in a criminal case is guaranteed a fair trial by an impartial jury, and while he is given the right to peremptorily challenge twice as many jurors as the prosecution, we have never heard of that right being extended so as to give him access to the district attorney's memorandums, papers, or documents until they are legally produced in court. In any event, we cannot hold that it was reversible error for the court to refuse to compel the district attorney to show to the attorney for the defendant a paper the contents of which, so far as the record is concerned, is a matter of mere conjecture. Defendant's counsel did not attempt to find the name of the person who had made the report, or to bring such person into court for examination. If this had been done, or if it had transpired in the course of the examination of the witness, that such witness had made a report or statement in writing concerning the same matter, the court, if it appeared necessary, no doubt would have compelled the production of the writing in aid of getting the entire truth from the witness. But such is not this case. It was merely an attempt to get a paper from the possession of the district attorney, the contents of which the defendant's attorney knew nothing about.

4. Counsel for the defendant have devoted volume 2 of their brief, containing 541 pages, to the subject of alleged misconduct of the judge during the course of the trial, claiming that the judge was not only biased and prejudiced against the defendant, but that he had made certain injurious remarks during the course of the trial as to the credibility of witnesses, and in disparagement of defendant's counsel.

One of the most objectionable matters in the opinion of counsel is certain remarks made while defendant's counsel was cross-examining the witness Gallagher. The direct examination of Gallagher occupied about 3½ days, and his cross-examination twice as long. The most minute details as to other transactions, evidence in other cases, and evidence given before the grand jury, were subjects which occupied not only hours, but days, in cross-examination. It is evident in such case that the patience of the jurors and of the trial judge must have been put to a severe test. After counsel for the defendant had asked Gallagher many questions as to why he answered promptly and positively on direct examination, and as to why it was that upon cross-examination on several occasions he hesitated and said "according to my best recollection," and after controversies in which the counsel on each side and the judge took part, counsel for defendant said: "The question is this—let me get away from these things—I asked a question of the witness concerning a subject-matter he has testified to upon direct examination without qualification at all, and we will say, without hesitation, I asked the question and waited five or ten seconds, and he does not answer. Haven't I a right to ask the question why he hesitates? The Court: I don't think you have, if the witness is apparently engaged in an effort to collect his thoughts and render a proper answer. Every man has temperamental qualities. You have yours, and the witness has his. It may be possible for you to make a quick, satisfactory response to every question propounded to you. Another witness may not be so gifted, or his mind may be so filled with a recollection of events that he owes it to himself and to the interests of truth to answer prudently and carefully."

After exception taken by counsel to this remark, the court said:

"I will lay down a rule for you in that regard so you will know exactly where you stand. When you propound a question to the witness, you must wait until he answers. When he has answered, if there is anything about his hesitancy in answering it, you may take that up as a special subject of inquiry.

"Mr. Ach: I will adopt that course.
* * * If the court gets the idea I am insulting the witness, or attempting to insult the witness, the court can fine or imprison me for contempt.

"Mr. Heney: Your honor stopped me a number of times on Mr. Ach's suggestion because my tone of voice was a little loud.

"Mr. Ach. No, your honor.

"The Court: We will perhaps advance with more celerity if there is less of this side discussion. I think I understand the prerogatives of the court in dealing with witnesses and kindred matters. No counsel has any right to assume a harsh demeanor towards any witness. The statute law of this state expressly protects or seeks to protect a witness in that behalf. He has no right to use insulting language. He has no right—neither the court nor counsel have any right—to detain a witness on the stand longer than the interests of justice seem to require. A witness has rights, and they must be respected. I shall see that the rights of every witness produced here are respected."

The court, during another controversy while this witness was being cross-examined, remarked that the frequent interruptions and exceptions to the remarks of the court were "well calculated to undermine the administration of justice." The above remarks were evidently addressed to counsel during the progress of the trial; and, while parts of them might well have been omitted and are not to be commended, we do not think that they were injurious to defendant. The remark by the court that every man has temperamental qualities is a common-place and self-evident proposition. It was known to every juror before it was uttered by the court. And so of the statement that the witness owed it to himself and the interests of truth to answer prudently and carefully. We do not think that by the remarks the judge expressed his opinion to the effect that Gallagher was a credible witness. The language complained of was addressed to counsel, and not to the jury, and was merely intended to explain the reasons why the judge made the rulings. In such case the remarks were not a charge to the jury with respect to matters of fact. People v. McLean, 84 Cal. 483, 24 Pac. 32; Reed v. Clark, 47 Cal. 200. In the latter case it was said: "It is not unusual or improper for the judge in passing upon such a question to announce for the guidance and benefit of counsel the reasons which control him in the admission or rejection of proffered evidence. This necessarily involves an expression of opinion upon the evidence already introduced; but this expression is not addressed to the jury nor intended for their guidance, as is an instruction given at the request of counsel or by the court upon its own motion, and which it is the duty of the jury to follow strictly and without questioning." The court in this case instructed the jury: "The court charges you that you are not to use in the consideration or determination of any fact in the case any reference to or comment on the evidence which may have been made by the court in connection with the admission of testimony or otherwise. The determination of the facts of the case is solely within your province, and you are not to be assisted or influenced in any way by anything which the court may state or do, in that behalf except as to matters of law applicable thereto." Under our system, the trial judge should be careful to refrain from making any comment upon the credibility of a witness, or in excuse of his manner of testifying, or in disparagement of counsel; but, as we have said before, this court would not be justified in reversing a case for light or trivial reasons, but should examine the whole record in determining as to whether or not the defendant has been injured. Taking this view of the matter, we cannot say that it appears that the judge willfully attempted to credit or discredit any witness, or that he willfully cast discredit upon counsel. As the remarks were made to counsel at the time the rulings were made, and the court expressly instructed the jury they were not to consider any reference to or comment made by the court in connection with the admission of the testimony or otherwise, we do not think, upon the application of the practical principles which govern Courts of Appeal, that we would be justified in holding them to have been prejudicial to defendant.

5. It is insisted that the court erred in the admission of evidence as to other and independent crimes committed by defendant. The various assignments of error in this regard may all be considered under the one general head. The evidence was, in substance, that after the election of the board of supervisors which went into office in January, 1906, defendant had control of them; that he called Gallagher into his confidence, telling him in effect that there would be "deals" coming up; and that he desired Gallagher to act as his representative with the other members of the board; that in pursuance of this plan the prize fight ordinance was put through, for which the defendant paid $500 to each of the supervisors, the gas rate ordinance, for which he paid each supervisor $750, and the Home Telephone Company ordinance, for which he paid the board $62,500, which was distributed in different amounts among the board according to his view of their respective merits or demerits. In each of these matters the money came directly from defendant and was paid to Gallagher. In each case the "deal" was with the same board of supervisors, which was controlled by defendant. In each case the defendant attended the caucuses held by the board on Saturday night prior to the regular meeting. In each case the crime was the same as in this case, the paying of money to the same supervisors to influence their official action. In other words, to sum up, the evidence shows that the defendant was the "boss" in control of the board of supervisors; that no franchises or matters of importance could be put through the board except by "seeing defendant"; that the board of supervisors was referred to by defendant as "my supervisors."

Did this evidence logically tend to show that defendant, through the same channel, Gallagher, offered to bribe one of the same board of supervisors? Defendant, by his plea of "not guilty," had denied that he offered to bribe Furey. He claimed, and now claims, that the testimony of Gallagher is not corroborated by other evidence tending to connect him with the commission of the offense. Did not the fact that defendant was in control of the board of supervisors, that he had been in the habit, we might say, of paying them money through Gallagher, naturally and logically tend to corroborate Gallagher's statement that he was authorized by Ruef to make the offer to Furey? A general plan has been shown, and Gallagher was the confidential agent. The plan had been in operation and was being continued, and the authority of the agent had not been revoked. The general rule, which is founded upon reason and justice, forbids the introduction of evidence which will tend to show that the accused had committed any other crime wholly independent of that for which he is on trial; but the rule does not apply when the other offenses are not wholly independent of the crime for which the prisoner is on trial. The rule is that where several crimes are connected as part of one scheme or plan, all of the same general character, and tending to the same common end, they may be given in evidence to show the process or motive and design leading up to the particular crime for which the prisoner is being tried, and thus directly tending to show logically that the crime in question was a part of such common scheme. If the several crimes are part of a chain of cause and consequence so linked as to be necessarily connected with the system or general plan, they are admissible. In a case cited by Lord Ellenborough in R. v. Whitley, 2 Lea. 985, 1 New Rep. 92, where a man had committed three burglaries in one night, and stole a shirt at one place and left it at another, they were all so connected that the court heard testimony of all three burglaries, Lord Ellenborough remarked, "If crimes did so intermix, the court must go through the detail." In an indictment for obtaining goods by false pretenses, it is allowable to prove that the same pretenses were used to another. Collins' Case, 4 Rog. Rec. 143. So, on an indictment for obtaining money under false pretenses, evidence of obtaining money at other times from other parties by similar pretenses were held admissible. Long v. State, 56 Ind. 206. On the trial of a criminal prosecution, where the facts and circumstances offered in evidence amount to proof of a crime other than that charged, and there is ground to believe that the crime grew out of it, such facts and circumstances may be admitted to show the quo animo of the accused. Commonwealth v. Ferrigan, 44 Pa. 386.

In People v. Cunningham, 66 Cal. 669, 6 Pac. 701, where defendant, accused of larceny, had shown that he acquired certain cattle properly, it was held admissible for the prosecution to prove that another steer, belonging to a third person, was found in defendant's possession with the cattle of the complaining witness. In that case the remarks of Brockenborough, J., in Walker v. Commonwealth, 1 Leigh (Va.) 574, are quoted with approval: "It frequently happens that, as the evidence of circumstances must be resorted to for the purpose of proving the commission of the particular offense charged, the proof of those circumstances involves the proof of other acts, either criminal or apparently innocent. In such case it is proper that the chain of evidence should be unbroken. If one or more links of that chain consist of circumstances which tend to prove the prisoner has been guilty of other crimes than that charged, this is no reason why the court should exclude those circumstances. They are so intimately connected and blended with the main facts adduced in evidence that they cannot be departed from with propriety; and there is no reason why the criminality of such intimately connected circumstances should exclude them more than other facts apparently innocent." See, further, People v. Rogers, 71 Cal. 565, 12 Pac. 679; People v. McGilver, 67 Cal. 55, 7 Pac. 49; People v. Ebanks, 117 Cal. 652, 49 Pac. 1049, 40 L. R. A. 269; Underhill on Criminal Evidence, § 88; 1 Roscoe's Criminal Evidence, p. 93; Guthrie v. State, 16 Neb. 667, 21 N. W. 455. In the latter case the defendant was charged with the commission of bribery, and on appeal it was urged that the court committed error in permitting the state to prove other and distinct acts of bribery; but the court held the evidence competent, and in the opinion said: "It is clearly shown that the agreement was a continuing one, and contemplated a system of payments to be made in the future, and for which the same course was to be pursued by plaintiff in error as for the three hundred dollars. It was known by plaintiff in error when Branch received money, and no gambling house was molested after its share of the money had been paid. He was fully advised of what occurred in the workings of the plans and designs, not only at the time of the receipt of the $300, but at all times so long as the system under which they were working continued. This system was fully developed and exposed by Branch in his testimony. It was properly admitted as a part of the transaction by which the $300 was paid by Branch to the plaintiff in error. The fact of the carrying out of this system was proper evidence for the purpose of corroborating the testimony of Branch, and showing the purpose, understanding, and intent with which the money was received as alleged in the indictment, and for the purpose of showing the system under which the several transactions were had. For these purposes, the testimony was competent. State v. Bridgman, 49 Vt. 202 [24 Am. Rep. 124]; Thayer v. Thayer, 101 Mass. 111 [100 Am. Dec. 110]; Kramer v. Commonwealth, 87 Pa. 289; Rex v. Hough, Ross & R. Cr. Cas. 120; Rex v. Ball, Id. 132; Comm. v. Price, 10 Gray [Mass.] 472 [71 Am. Dec. 668]; Rex v. Francis, 12 Cox's Crim. Cas. 612; Regina v. Garner, 4 Fost. & F. 346; Whart. Cr. Ev. § 38 et seq."

In Moody v. Peirano, 4 Cal. App. 411, 88 Pac. 380, it was held in an action upon a warranty of certain seed wheat as being "White Australian" that evidence of similar warranties to other parties at about the same time was admissible. This court there said, speaking through Mr. Justice Harrison: "The tendency of modern decisions is to admit any evidence which may have a tendency to illustrate or throw any light on the transaction in controversy, or give any weight in determining the issue, leaving the strength of such tendency or the amount of such weight to be determined by the jury. And in determining the relevancy of evidence that may be offered upon an issue of fact much depends upon the nature of the issue to sustain which or against which it is offered, and a wide discretion is left to the trial judge in determining whether it is admissible or not." Mr. Thayer, in the introduction to his "Cases on Evidence," says: "No precise or universal test of relevancy is furnished by the law. The question must be determined in each case according to the teachings of reason and judicial experience. * * * Probability is an element which addresses itself to the reason, and is frequently invoked in matters of human conduct and experience for determining the existence or nonexistence of a fact. In civil cases a jury is authorized to determine an issue of fact as its probability or improbability may appear to them from the evidence before them. Hence any evidence tending to show either of those conditions is relevant to the issue to be determined by them. If the evidence offered conduce in any reasonable degree to establish the probability or improbability of the fact in controversy, it should go to the jury."

In that case the Supreme Court denied a petition for rehearing, and has since quoted the case with approval in Bone v. Hayes, 154 Cal. 767, 99 Pac. 172. The reasoning of that case in our mind is conclusive as to the admissibility of the evidence in this. Not only this, but the court, at defendant's request, instructed the jury that defendant was on trial only for the crime charged in the indictment; that, even if the evidence should show that the defendant had been guilty of other crimes, still they should not convict unless convinced of defendant's guilt from the evidence of the precise offense charged to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt.

6. There was no error in the admission of the complaint which had been filed in the case of Langdon v. Gallagher et al., in the superior court, for the limited purpose for which it was admitted. During the cross-examination of Wilson counsel for defendant called his attention to an affidavit which the witness had made in said case, and introduced the affidavit in evidence for the evident purpose of impeaching the witness by showing that in the affidavit he had sworn that he had never committed any felony, or been guilty of any crime of any kind against the people of the state. The complaint referred to was in the action brought to enjoin defendant from taking possession of the office of district attorney, and to test the validity of the order made by Gallagher, as acting mayor of San Francisco, removing Langdon and appointing defendant district attorney instead. The complaint was admitted in evidence in response to the cross-examination, and as a part of the transaction referred to in the affidavit. The court, at the request of the district attorney, limited the purposes of the complaint to simply being used as a part of the same transaction, giving meaning to the affidavit which the defendant had introduced. Counsel for the defendant objected to the court making any order limiting the purposes for which the complaint was admitted, but the limitation was made notwithstanding that objection. The defendant's attorney in offering the complaint stated that he offered it for the limited purpose of characterizing and giving meaning to and showing the proper relation to the complaint of the affidavit which was offered in evidence by the defendant during such cross-examination, and for no other purpose. An examination of the affidavit shows that it was entitled the same as the complaint, and that it contained denials of most of the averments of the complaint. Among other things the affidavit stated: "That this affiant has never committed a felony of any kind or character, has never been a party thereto, and there is not and can be no evidence presented of or concerning any felony committed by the undersigned or threatened by the undersigned. That it is not true that said fact was known to this affiant, either at the time mentioned in the complaint or ever or at all; that it is not true that the undersigned have, prior to the commencement or formation of the grand jury mentioned in the complaint, or ever or at all, or at any time or at any place, committed any felony, either in the city and county of San Francisco or any other place, and it is not true that the undersigned has been guilty of crime against the people of the state of California, or the people of the city and county of San Francisco, at any time or at all."

We must presume the jury to have been men of ordinary intelligence, and that they understood and acted upon the evidence for the limited purpose for which it was admitted and for no other purpose. In fact, the affidavit, in order to be understood, must be taken and read in connection with the complaint. The court also instructed the jury that evidence admitted for a limited purpose was to be considered by the jury for such purpose and none other.

7. It is claimed that the court erred in refusing to grant defendant's motion made on November 15th to discharge the jury and impanel another jury, which motion was based upon the ground that the jury had become biased by the shooting of Assistant District Attorney Heney during the progress of the trial, and by the circumstances in connection therewith. During the trial on November 13th Heney, the assistant district attorney, was shot in the courtroom and badly wounded by one Haas, on account of an alleged or imaginary grievance which Haas held against Heney. The shooting caused great excitement, but at the time it occurred most of the jurors were in a hallway adjoining the courtroom, and did not witness it, although they must have heard the shot and the loud noises and commotion caused by the shooting. The jurors had just started to enter the courtroom, two of them having passed the door when the shooting occurred. The deputy sheriff immediately pressed the jurors back into the jury room and closed the door. Defendant was afterwards, but not in the presence of the jury, placed in custody, and was guarded by five policemen in his trips to and from the courtroom. Public meetings were held, and the defendant denounced, and even insinuations were made by leading citizens against the courts. As the shooting took place during the trial, the public seemed to blame the defendant for such shooting. It does not appear that the jurors knew of these public meetings, or of the threats against defendant. The record and affidavits on the motion and the counter affidavits take up about 700 folios of the record. It is sufficient to say that in our opinion the court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion. There was no showing that any fact had reached any juror of sufficient importance to disqualify him. After the shooting on the following day, the trial judge stated to the attorneys that in all probability the jury knew something concerning the transaction, and suggested that the attorneys agree on a statement of the facts to be given to the jury. The jurors had not been present and were not present when the motion of defendant was made. Counsel declined to agree upon a statement, or at least did not agree upon such statement, and upon the following day when court convened the judge addressed the jury, telling them that Mr. Heney had been shot by Haas, that his wound was not serious, and that there was every indication that he would recover. The court further said: "Now that transaction, as far as the court and the jury, the defendant at the bar, the people of the state of California, the counsel, and all others interested or involved in this trial are concerned, is to stand as though it had not occurred. No person is to be charged with any responsibility for that transaction. It may be stated also to you that the assailant afterwards took his own life while he was confined in the county jail upon his arrest in connection with that transaction; and neither matter, I repeat, should find any place in your minds. It should not in any manner form anything in the nature of bias or prejudice concerning any one. This court would despair of having the law administered upon the charge at bar if the jurors did not in every manner comply with the admonition of the court to exclude that transaction from your minds." And in its instructions to the jury the court charged them that they were not to be influenced by any event which had occurred of which they had obtained knowledge since they were sworn to try the case. There was nothing to show in the remotest degree that the defendant was in any way connected with the shooting of Heney. There was nothing to show that any juror had become biased or prejudiced against defendant by reason of such shooting. The jurors were not at large, but were at all times kept in the charge of the sheriff.

It is insisted that the court should have allowed counsel to examine the several jurors under oath in order to ascertain if they had been biased or prejudiced by the shooting of Heney. In our opinion the court properly denied such permission. In a case of great importance, where weeks have been spent, and hundreds of jurors examined in the endeavor to get a fair and impartial jury, to allow either party to call a halt in the proceedings for the purpose of re-examining the jurors as to bias or prejudice that may have been caused by events which had occurred after the jurors were sworn, and with the sole purpose of endeavoring to find evidence of such bias or prejudice, would be a dangerous proceeding. If it could be granted to one side, it could be to the other. It would turn the trial into a farce. It would put it in the power of one juror near the close of a long trial to deliberately disqualify himself, and compel the trial to be commenced over again. In many cases it would result in defeating the very object contemplated by a jury trial.

The same reasoning applies to the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial as it was based upon substantially the same grounds. Considerable stress is placed upon the affidavit of defendant, used on his motion for a new trial, to the effect that he had endeavored to get the affidavits of each of the 12 jurors, naming them, but that they each had refused to give such affidavit. The affidavit of defendant then proceeds to state as follows: "Affiant will further show by the testimony of said persons that one or more of them, within a short time following the said shooting, and before the conclusion of the trial of affiant, stated to Hon. William

P. Lawlor that he, or they, were prejudiced against defendant on account of said shooting, and could not fairly and impartially try said cause, and requested of said Hon. William P. Lawlor that he or they be discharged from further duty as jurors herein; that said Hon. William P. Lawlor declined and refused to discharge said persons so applying to him, and directed them to continue to act as jurors in said cause." In a second affidavit the defendant sets forth expressions used by Juror Bond as to his bias and prejudice against defendant while the case was being tried and after the shooting of Heney. He also sets forth that Juror Murphy after the shooting went to the judge, and informed said judge that he did not think that he could fairly and impartially try the case, and requested the judge to discharge him from further duty, that his request was refused, and that the judge told said juror to keep his feelings to himself, and that he would in due time be properly instructed as to his duties as a juror. These statements in the second affidavit do not purport to have been made on information and belief, but they could have been based on nothing else. It does not appear how defendant knew the things he stated in his affidavits. The affidavits were therefore but hearsay, and were not sufficient to impeach the verdict of the jury. People v. Findley, 132 Cal. 301, 64 Pac. 472. Nor could the juror Murphy of his own volition and during the progress of the trial disqualify himself by going to the judge, and thus compel the trial to begin anew. He had qualified as a juror, and taken an oath to try the case according to the evidence, and, if he afterwards stated that he could not do so, his statement would be of little value.

8. The court in its instructions to the jury read section 1323 of the Penal Code, and it is claimed that error was committed in so doing within the rule laid down in People v. Emmons, 110 Pac. 151. The Emmons Case lends countenance to the defendant's contention, but the remarks there made as to reading section 1323 of the Penal Code must be construed in relation to the facts of that case and the circumstances under which the section was read. There the district attorney claimed that he was taken by surprise because the defendant had not taken the stand as a witness as he had done in a former trial, and asked permission to reopen the case in order to introduce material statements made by defendant on the former trial. The court permitted the case to be reopened, and admitted the statements or testimony given on the former trial. The defendant requested the court to give an instruction to the effect that the fact that defendant had not taken the stand and had not testified raised no presumption against him, and that the jury were not at liberty to draw any unfavorable inference against him for the reason that he had not taken the stand or offered himself as a witness. The court refused to give the instruction, and in lieu thereof read the section. It was the action of the court both in refusing the requested instruction and in reading the section (1323) instead that was held to constitute error. It was there said, and properly said, that, where a defendant had not taken the stand as a witness, there could be no occasion for reading the section as it contained only an abstract proposition of law, but the court did not hold that merely reading the section would constitute error if the court had elsewhere fully instructed the jury as to the right of defendant to refrain from testifying as to the fact that no inference could be indulged in against him on account of such failure to testify. In this case the court fully instructed the jury: "It is your duty as jurors throughout your consideration and your determination of this case to carefully and conscientiously abstain from indulging any and every inference or presumption, or consideration, in the least unfavorable to defendant, founded upon or arising from his not testifying in this case. There is absolutely nothing in that circumstance for you to consider in arriving at a verdict. The law requires of you, and it is your duty, to give no consideration at all and to attribute no significance whatever to the fact that defendant had not testified in this case. Under no circumstances should you permit it to influence your minds, and you must not do so."

And, again, "The defendant, Abraham Ruef, enters upon his trial with the presumption that he is an innocent man, and he is not bound or required to prove himself to be innocent. * * * And you should act upon the presumption of innocence and lack of intent during your entire consideration of the evidence, and until that shall have been overcome by evidence of his guilt so strong, so ample, so conclusive, as to convince your minds and the mind of each of you to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant is guilty of the crime with which he is charged." We do not believe that the defendant could under the circumstances have been injured by the mere reading of the section in the abstract where the rule in the concrete was so fully and fairly stated elsewhere. In the Emmons Case it was said: "The instruction as requested contained a correct statement of the law pertinent to the issue, and under the circumstances it was very material to the defendant that it should have been given. The court in effect, instead of telling the jury that the failure of the defendant to testify should not create a prejudice or unfavorable inference in the minds of the jury, told them that the defendant could not be compelled to be a witness against himself, but, if he offer himself as a witness, he may be cross-examined by the counsel for the people as to all matters about which he has testified in chief."

We are referred to People v. Ryan, 120 App. Div. 275, 105 N. Y. Supp. 160. In that case the reversal was for the reason that the evidence was not sufficient to warrant a conviction. The instruction given was not excepted to, and the court, after discussing it, merely said that, if it had been excepted to, it would have constituted legal error. The section of the Procedure of New York (section 393) merely provides: "The defendant in all cases may testify in his own behalf, but his neglect or refusal to testify does not create any presumption against him." The court in that case, however, did more than merely read the section. It stated that: "Where a defendant takes the stand in his own behalf, he is and can be subjected to all the forms of cross-examination as could any other witness in the case." Not only this, but it does not appear in that case that any further or more explicit instruction was given. The court in instructing the jury read almost literally some 30 odd sections of the Penal Code and the Code of Civil Procedure as to direct and indirect evidence, presumptions, inferences, the various kinds of evidence, the knowledge of the court, the facts as to which a witness may testify, conspiracy, impeachment of witnesses, that the masculine gender includes the feminine, of what things courts take judicial notice, that the court must decide questions of law and the jury questions of fact, and finally the provision of the Constitution that judges must not charge juries with respect to matters of fact. We have no hesitation in saying that such practice is not to be commended. It can serve no useful purpose, and the many propositions of abstract law can find no lodgement in the minds of laymen from the mere reading of the sections. In fact, the court might as well have read the first volume of Greenleaf on Evidence. Cases may arise in which to read an abstract proposition of law to the jury with a wrong application, and with no definite instruction on the same subject, would constitute error; and, in fact, the courts have so held in some cases under the peculiar facts of the case; but we know of no case where it has been so held if the court elsewhere specifically instructed the jury upon the point covered by the abstract proposition. In this case many of the instructions so read are complained of as constituting error. We have not the time nor the space to discuss them separately. The most plausible one on which to predicate error, for instance, is the fact that the court read to the jury the portions of section 1963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as follows: "The following presumptions and no other are deemed conclusive. * * * (5) That evidence willfully suppressed would be adverse if produced. (6) That higher evidence would be adverse from inferior being produced. * * *

And also that part of section 2061 as follows: " * * * (6) That evidence is to be estimated not only by its own intrinsic weight, but also according to the evidence which it is in the power of one side to produce and of the other to contradict; and therefore, (7) that if weaker and less satisfactory evidence is offered, when it appears that stronger and more satisfactory was within the power of the party, the evidence offered should be viewed with distrust." It will be seen that section 2061 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the jury are to be instructed "on all proper occasions" as provided in the various subdivisions of the section. The only question is as to whether or not this case presented a proper occasion for such instruction. It would have to appear clearly, not only that the occasion was not a proper one, but also that under the circumstances the instruction was misleading and injurious before we would be justified in holding it to be erroneous. It was claimed by defendant's counsel in his argument that the district attorney could and should have called as witnesses the ex-supervisors other than the three called. In fact, the defendant had asked the court to instruct the jury that if it was within the power of the prosecution to produce the other ex-supervisors, and that such ex-supervisors could have testified as to matters material to the case, "then I charge you that the law presumes that the testimony of such ex-supervisors not produced as witnesses herein, if offered, would have been adverse to the prosecution in this case. Section 2061, subds. 5, 6; section 1963, Code Civ. Proc."

The court refused to give the instruction as worded, evidently because it was argumentative and singled out certain witnesses, and was made to apply to the prosecution and not to the case generally; but in lieu of giving the instruction as requested the court read the portions of the section as herein stated. The defendant by his request, having invoked the principles of law stated in the sections, and cited the sections as authority, and asked the court to instruct in regard to them, cannot now complain because it was not a proper occasion for giving such instructions. The prosecution had offered evidence, and the defendant had offered none. The instruction therefore could only be applied to the prosecution. As the defendant had offered no evidence, there was no inferior evidence on his part to which the presumption that higher evidence would have been adverse if produced could apply. As he had offered no evidence, either inferior or otherwise, there was no evidence to be viewed with distrust except the evidence on behalf of the prosecution. As to the abstract proposition "that evidence willfully suppressed would be adverse if produced," there is nothing to show that defendant willfully suppressed any evidence unless it might be claimed that he could have taken the stand himself; but such fact was not the suppression of evidence within the meaning of the statute, but was only the exercise of a right given to the defendant under the law, the jury having been fully instructed as to such right. We cannot presume that the jury thus applied an abstract proposition in the face of the direct and positive instruction that no inference or presumption unfavorable to defendant can be indulged in by the jury by reason of the defendant not testifying, and that "there is absolutely nothing in that circumstance for you to consider in arriving at a verdict."

In People v. Cuff, 122 Cal. 589, 55 Pac. 407, the court gave an instruction based upon section 2061; but, instead of reading the section (as in the case at bar), commenced by saying, "The court instructs you," etc. The instruction was held to be erroneous, but the case was reversed upon other grounds in addition to the giving of the instruction, and there is nothing in the case to show that the jury were instructed elsewhere upon the right of the defendant to remain silent. People v. Charles, 9 Cal. App. 339, 99 Pac. 384, merely follows the case of People v. Cuff, and the court in that case said: "The effect of the entire charge of the court was to specifically direct the erroneous instruction toward the defendant's case." Where the occasion is proper for the giving of an instruction, it cannot be given in a better form than as laid down in the Code. In People v. Dobbins, 138 Cal. 698, 72 Pac. 341, the court said: "But nowhere has it been decided, nor indeed could it with reason be held, that it is error for the court to instruct in the language of our written law. This is substantially what the court here did, and so, while the instruction cannot be commended as a full and clear exposition of the meaning of the section of the Code, still it cannot be said that it was error for the court in giving the law to have conformed to the language of the Code, and to have omitted what that Code itself omits." It has been many times held that, if other instructions were given which qualify and explain an objectionable instruction, the judgment will not be reversed. People v. Morine, 61 Cal. 369; People v. Bruggy, 93 Cal. 484, 29 Pac. 26. In the latter case it was also said: "The practical administration of justice should not be defeated by a too rigid adherence to a close and technical analysis of the instructions of the court. The instructions are for the enlightenment of the jury as to the law of the case, and the jury never enters into such a character of analysis in construing them."

We therefore conclude that as the court specifically instructed the jury upon the material questions before them, the reading of the Code sections did no harm.

10. The court instructed the jury that "one who offers a bribe is not for that reason alone an accomplice of the one to whom it is offered; and one to whom a bribe is offered or who asks or agrees to receive a bribe is not, for that reason alone, an accomplice of one who offers a bribe," and the claim is made that the said instruction is erroneous. The court elsewhere instructed the jury, as contended by counsel, that both Gallagher and Wilson were accomplices, as appeared from their own testimony, and this instruction is not questioned. It was held in People v. Coffey,¹ that one who receives a bribe is not for that reason an accomplice of one who gives a bribe, and the reason there given need not be here repeated. It is insisted now—and was the theory of the defendant at the trial—that Furey had entered into a conspiracy with Gallagher, Wilson, the defendant, and other supervisors for the purpose of obtaining money by reason of the official action of said board of supervisors in all matters which might come before the board in which money could be obtained, as for franchises or permits, and that such combination continued up to the time the offer in this case was made to Furey. Defendant upon this theory of the case asked the court to instruct the jury to the effect that if they should find that defendant and the other supervisors, together with Furey, entered into such general plan and scheme to obtain money from all persons for permits and franchises, then Furey was an accomplice; and defendant also asked further and separate instructions by which the court was requested to instruct the jury that Furey was in fact an accomplice. The court properly refused such instructions. The word "accomplice" as used in the statute means an accomplice in the commission of the offense charged and which is under investigation. Here the offense charged was an offer by defendant to bribe Furey. There is no evidence that Furey entered into a combination or agreement with the defendant and other supervisors to offer a bribe to himself. If the crime of some party who had paid money under such combination or conspiracy had been the subject of investigation, or if the unlawful conspiracy had been the subject of the trial, then no doubt all parties to it would have been accomplices, but they would have been accomplices to a different crime than the one charged here. The witness Furey could not have been an accomplice in the offer to bribe himself. It might have been known to defendant that Furey was willing to accept bribes. In fact, Furey might by his conduct have invited bribes; but the offer to bribe in this particular case is the offense with which the defendant is charged and of which he was convicted. The court elsewhere fully and fairly instructed the jury in regard to the subject of accomplices, and left it to them to decide provided they should find the evidence to fit the instructions as given. They were instructed at the request of the defendant. "Any person who aids and abets another in the commission of any crime, or advises and encourages its commission, is an accomplice of such other person. Where two or more persons are concerned in the commission of a crime, whether they or either of them directly commit the act constituting the offense or aid and abet in its commission, or not being present they advise and encourage its commission, each one of them is an accomplice of the other. The word 'accomplice' includes all persons who have been concerned in the commission of an offense; and the grade or degree of the guilt of such person is not important. * * * And in this connection you are instructed that if you have a reasonable doubt upon the question of whether a witness is or is not, was or was not, an accomplice, you must resolve that doubt in favor of the defendant; and, if you have a reasonable doubt as to whether there is or is not other evidence which, in itself independent of and without the aid of the testimony of the accomplice or accomplices, tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense charged, you must resolve the doubt in favor of the defendant and acquit him." The witness Furey did not testify to any direct guilty participation of defendant as to the offer made to him. He testified that the offer was made by Gallagher, and did not pretend to know defendant in the transaction. He did not even testify that defendant ever mentioned the matter to him. It was only Gallagher and Wilson, who, by their testimony, connected the defendant with the offer. It was the testimony of these two that showed the commission of the offense by defendant. The law required other testimony tending to connect defendant with the commission of the offense. As we said in People v. Coffey, "At common law the jury had the right to convict upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice; and it is only by reason of the statute that it is not allowed here. The statute cannot be construed in a loose or popular sense, but must be interpreted and accepted as recognized by law writers and as it was evidently intended by the Legislature when it made the bribe taker and the bribe giver each guilty of a different crime."

We certainly do not deem it our duty in this case to hold that the court should have given instructions that would have had the effect of telling the jury that the witness Furey was an accomplice because of an agreement between himself and the defendant with other supervisors to get money from other third parties not named in this indictment.

11. It is claimed that the attorney for the people was guilty of such misconduct in his argument to the jury as to call for a reversal of the case. During such argument, he referred to the fact that the attorney for the United Railroads was not called as a witness; that the attorney was the party who handled the money; that, if the transaction was honest and fair, he should have been placed upon the stand by the defendant to explain it. The attorneys for the defendant assigned the remarks as misconduct, and excepted to them. Then some discussion arose; the district attorney claiming that such comment had been held not to be error in People v. Ye Foo, 4 Cal. App. 730, 89 Pac. 450. The district attorney remarked that he did not desire to make any claim that he was not entitled to make, whereupon counsel for defendant said: "If there is any damage done, you have done it. Go on with the argument." After the above remark the court made no ruling as to the matter, and the district attorney was allowed to proceed. It would seem that the defendant's attorney, by the remark, waived a ruling upon the question; but it is sufficient to say that it was expressly held in the Ye Foo Case that it was not error for the district attorney to refer to the fact that a codefendant had not been called as a witness. The reasons for the rule, and the authorities in support of it, are there fully given, and it is useless to here repeat them.

¹ Rehearing pending.

The attorney for the prosecution in the heat of his argument referred to the disappearance of Lathan, an important witness for the prosecution, evidently intending to infer that it was the United Railroads or the defendant who had had him decamp, and continuing the argument used these words: "Away with suborners of perjury. Away with bribers of witnesses. Thank God some of them are on their way to state prison now, and some of them are being tried today—" Here counsel for defendant said: "We desire now to take an exception to the remarks of counsel about the bribers of juries, and that some of them are on their way to state prison, as being entirely outside the record, unwarranted, unjustified, plainly prejudicial, and ask the court to so instruct the jury, and to command counsel to desist." In response to this the court said: "The jury will disregard any statement made by counsel which is in excess of the testimony." Further in his argument, claiming that the defendant was not sincere, the attorney for the people said: "I listened to the remarks of the gentleman who just has been entering his exception. I listened to his dulcet tones throughout this trial. I listened as I thought to the ring of insincerity last night, and memory came back to me as I recalled another voice with the same ring, with the same insincerity in it, and I recalled that we had in our midst once before a man that had the same method and that same way, Mr. George Dozier Collins, who no longer is among us, but Mr. George Collins Dozier has returned to be with us. And so let it be." Here counsel for the defendant said: "Now I take an exception to that remark, and ask the court to direct the counsel to desist as being unwarranted, unauthorized, insulting, and unnecessary misconduct upon the part of the district attorney." The court in reply said: "Counsel will refrain from personal allusions to counsel on the other side. You must refrain from anything that is not justified by something said by counsel during the trial of this case."

Again the counsel for the people said: "Again, they talk to you about the dreadful torture chamber, about the awful things that occurred on Fillmore street, and about the guards that surrounded this man, and how he was tortured. Why, don't you recall that at that time he was on trial, daily in court, attended by Attorney Ach and Shortridge and Murphy and Fairall—I don't know but others—every day in court—" Counsel for the defendant took exception to the remarks on the ground that there was no evidence that the defendant was ever on trial in any court, and claimed that the remarks were prejudicial misconduct on the part of the district attorney. After some discussion as to whether or not the record showed that defendant had been on trial, and had changed his plea, the court remarked: "The jury will be guided by what their recollection is upon the subject." There was some testimony in the record that the defendant was formerly in court upon a charge of extortion, and that he had changed his plea from "not guilty" to "guilty." The witness Sinsheimer related a conversation with the defendant after he had entered such plea as to his reasons for so doing, in which defendant stated to him, in substance, that on account of the circumstances a case might have been made out against him as to some of the charges, and on account of his aged father and mother he had concluded to enter a plea of "guilty." In fact, reference was made by defendant's attorney to such plea of "guilty" in the extortion case while examining jurors and at other times during the progress of the trial. The remarks of the district attorney were therefore based upon the record. Not only that, but it does not appear that the sentence of the attorney for the people was completed, so that the matter that he was going to recall to the attention of the jury was not placed before them.

The above are all the instances to which our attention has been called where the defendant excepted to the remarks of counsel. In our opinion the remarks, in so far as they might have been injurious, were cured by the rulings of the court, and there is nothing in the remarks of sufficient importance to call for a reversal of the case. In People v. Ye Foo, supra, it was held that remarks made during the argument of counsel to which objection was made, and no motion made to strike them out, were not errors upon which a case could be reversed. The court there said: "District attorneys in their zeal to obtain convictions often overstep the proper bounds, and by intimation, innuendo, or statement get before the jury matters not in evidence. When such course has been willfully pursued, or where something is stated or represented as a fact, and the statement is damaging and not borne out by the record, the Courts of Appeal have not hesitated to reverse the case and grant a new trial. But in the argument of a case, where counsel has become zealous in his cause, and upon his own view of the case works his mind up to believe certain things, he is apt to exaggerate and draw upon his imagination. We apprehend that this is well known to juries, and for this reason it would have to be a clear case of misconduct on the part of the district attorney to justify a reversal"—and many cases were cited in support of the ruling. The court in that case further said: "The court was not asked to strike out the objectionable remark, nor does it appear that the court ruled upon the exception. It is but fair to require defendant's counsel, in the case of objectionable remarks by the district attorney, to call the court's attention to them then and there, and invoke the aid of the court to prevent the remarks from injuring the defendant, before he will be allowed to urge the matter as error in this court. In such case this court will not hold the remark error upon which to reverse the case." See, further, the authorities cited in People v. Ye Foo, supra, and People v. Kramer, 117 Cal. 647, 49 Pac. 842.

The rule requiring that the remarks of the district attorney must be willful, not supported by the record, and must contain a statement of something as a fact, either by direct statement or innuendo, and, further, that they must have been objected to or the court's attention called to them, or else they will not be held error sufficient to reverse a case, is founded upon principles of justice and fair dealing. While such remarks when not justified might in some cases be prejudicial error and injurious to defendant, in other cases such remarks might prejudice the district attorney in the eyes of the jury. Each case must be judged by its own particular circumstances, and in our opinion, taking the remarks in this case, with the corrections and statements by the court, they could not have worked any injury to the defendant.

Finally, we have examined the other alleged errors, but find nothing which is of sufficient importance to justify a reversal of the case. The defendant presented 185 written instructions, and necessarily many of them were repetitions or given elsewhere, and the court was justified in refusing them. Taking the instructions that were given, we think the jury were fully and fairly advised in regard to the law appertaining to every phase of the case.

It is somewhat of a reflection upon the mode of administering the laws that the trial of a simple question as to whether or not the defendant offered a bribe to Furey, a supervisor, should take up the time of the court and of the jury for months, and create a record of such amazing proportions. There were only two or three witnesses as to the main fact. Most of the testimony was as to matters and things that have no bearing upon the case. It is evident that in such case where, through the machinery provided by law, a jury has finally passed upon the question of fact and found the defendant guilty, and the evidence is sufficient to support the verdict of the jury, it should not be set aside or disturbed for light or trivial reasons. This rule has always been adhered to by this court and by the Supreme Court of the state. The judgment and orders are affirmed.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. On this petition for a rehearing the defendant claims for the first time that the indictment does not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense, for the reason that it fails to allege that the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco had jurisdiction to enact the ordinance granting a franchise to the United Railroads to operate an overhead trolley system.

The proposition contended for is that the defendant, after having offered a bribe to a member of the board of supervisors for the purpose of corruptly influencing the official action of said member, and after having succeeded in procuring the action of the board in his favor and as he desired, can now be allowed in a court of justice to question collaterally the power of the board to do the very thing which he offered to pay its members to do.

If we considered the contention as serious, it is sufficient to say that we will not now grant a rehearing to consider a question which was not even raised in the 10 volumes of briefs on file at the time we rendered our decision.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

14 Cal. App. 572

REGAN v. SUPERIOR COURT OF MARIN COUNTY. (Civ. 883.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Nov. 22, 1910.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 159*)—APPEAL—REQUISITES — UNDERTAKING — FILING—TIME.

The filing of an undertaking is an integral part of an appeal to the superior court from a justice's judgment, and must be filed within 30 days after rendition of such judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 553; Dec. Dig. § 159.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 159*)—APPEAL —UNDERTAKING ON APPEAL—FILING—TIME —NOTICE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 978a, provides that the undertaking on appeal from a justice's judgment must be filed within five days after the filing of the notice of appeal, and that notice of the filing of the undertaking must be given to the respondent. Held, that such section only added a further condition to the perfecting of such an appeal, and that all the steps necessary to that end, including the filing of the bond, must be taken and completed within the 30 days prescribed by section 974.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 550, 558, 559; Dec. Dig. § 159.*]

Petition by Henry Regan against the Superior Court of Marin County for a writ of review. Granted.

George H. Harlan, for petitioner. Wal J. Tuska, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an application for a writ of review to annul the action of the superior court of Marin county in holding that, under section 978a of the Code of Civil Procedure, an undertaking on appeal from a justice's court, filed after the lapse of 30 days from the rendition of the judgment, was in time to vest the superior court with jurisdiction of the appeal.

The facts of the case are as follows: An action was pending in the recorder's court of the town of Mill Valley in said county, wherein the Mill Valley Rochdale Company, a corporation, was plaintiff, and Henry Regan, the petitioner here, was defendant. On July 8, 1910, judgment for the defendant was rendered by the recorder. On August 3, 1910, the plaintiff therein served a notice on the defendant that it appealed to the superior court, which notice was filed August 5th. The undertaking on appeal, however, was not filed until August 10th, which was more than 30 days after the rendition of the judgment. Thereafter, in the superior court, the defendant moved to dismiss the appeal for want of jurisdiction. This motion was denied, and the court immediately proceeded to try the cause, and, after hearing, rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff, whereupon this proceeding was instituted.

The petitioner contends that the filing of an undertaking is an integral part of an appeal to the superior court, and that it must be filed within 30 days after the rendition of judgment in the inferior court. Undoubtedly this is the law unless it was changed by the enactment of section 978a of the Code of Civil Procedure in the year 1909. Coker v. Supt. Ct., 58 Cal. 177; McCracken v. Superior Ct., 86 Cal. 74, 24 Pac. 845; McKeen v. Naughton, 88 Cal. 462, 26 Pac. 354. In those cases it was held that, in order to effectuate an appeal from a justice's court, it is necessary to file a notice of appeal with the justice, to serve a copy of such notice upon the adverse party, and also to file a written undertaking, and that all of these things must be done within 30 days after the rendition of the judgment. Section 978a reads: "The undertaking on appeal must be filed within five days after the filing of the notice of appeal, and notice of the filing of the undertaking must be given to the respondent."

It is the contention of the respondent that, the undertaking having been filed within five days after the filing of the notice of appeal, it is in time, even though filed more than 30 days after the rendition of the judgment. We cannot agree with this contention. It is our opinion that the only effect of section 978a is to add a further condition to the perfecting of the appeal, and that all the steps necessary to that end, including the filing of the bond, must be taken now, as formerly, within the 30 days mentioned in section 974 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Prior to the enactment of the section under consideration, the order in which the various steps were taken, namely, the filing of the notice of appeal, the service of the same, and the filing of the bond, was immaterial, provided they were all taken within 30 days. Coker v. Superior Court, supra. Hence an appellant could serve and file his notice of appeal on the day that judgment was rendered, and, as no notice of the filing of the undertaking was required, he could file it at any time up to the thirtieth day, and during all this time the respondent would have to watch the justice's records to protect his right to except to the sufficiency of the sureties. When this new section is considered in the light of the decisions just referred to, and of the abuse that grew up under the law as interpreted by them, it is obvious, we think, that the Legislature intended no extension of the rights of the appellant, but sought to protect the rights of the respondent by correcting an abuse that had heretofore existed. Section 974, Code Civ. Proc., reads now as it did when the cases above cited were decided, and so does that part of section 978 upon which those cases in part were based. According to those sections, as interpreted by the cases cited, an appeal is initiated by the notice of appeal, and it is in force 30 days after the rendition of the judgment, at which time it becomes ineffectual for any purpose unless a proper undertaking is filed. See, also, Kelsey v. Campbell, 38 Barb. 238; Raymond v. Raymond, 76 N. Y. 106; Bonnell v. Van Cise, 8 S. D. 592, 67 N. W. 685. And we think no intention of changing the law as thus interpreted by the Supreme Court of this state is disclosed by section 978a.

It is true that under our construction of this section, if the appellant waits until the thirtieth day before filing his notice of appeal, he will not be entitled to five days within which to file his bond. But any other construction of the section would be in conflict with sections 974 and 978, and we think wholly unwarranted. The construction we have placed upon section 978a leaves undisturbed the law with reference to the time within which appeals from justices' courts must be taken and perfected, and at the same time prevents the mischief aimed at by the Legislature. The provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure and the California cases cited in this opinion speak of appeals from justices' courts, and make no mention of a recorder's court; but under the provisions of the municipal corporation bill, as amended March 15, 1907 (Stats. 1907, p. 272), appeals from a recorder's court may be taken in like manner and with like effect as appeals from justices' courts.

It follows that the superior court had no jurisdiction to proceed and try the cause, and its action must be annulled, and it is so ordered.

We concur: HALL, J.; COOPER, J.

14 Cal. App. 651

BROWN v. NORTHERN CALIFORNIA POWER CO. (Civ. 738.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Nov. 23, 1910.)

1. ELECTRICITY (§ 19*)—FIRES—CAUSE—EVIDENCE.

In an action against an electric power company to recover damages for the burning of property, evidence held to sustain findings that, though the fire was caused by contact of a telephone line with defendant's power line, it was not caused by the placing of the power line in close proximity to the telephone line, or by reason of defendant's removing and displacing the fixtures of the telephone company, or tampering therewith.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

2. ELECTRICITY (§ 19*)—POWER LINE—CONSTRUCTION—NEGLIGENCE PER SE.

The fact that defendant power company maintained its line carrying 20,000 volts of electricity within three feet of a telephone line, carrying a much lower voltage, did not constitute negligence per se, but was a circumstance from which, when considered with other pertinent circumstances, negligence might be inferred.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 979*)—REVIEW—MATTERS OF DISCRETION—DENIAL OF NEW TRIAL.

Denial of a motion for a new trial for insufficiency of evidence will not be disturbed if there is evidence to support the verdict, and it does not appear that the discretion of the court was abused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3871-3873; Dec. Dig. § 979.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Action by Thomas Brown against the Northern California Power Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Charles L. Donohoe and Frank Freeman, for appellant. Reid & Dozier, for respondent.

HART, J. This is an action for damages for the destruction of certain property by fire, caused, so the complaint alleges, by the negligent acts of the defendant. The property alleged to have been thus destroyed consisted of a building situated in the town of Orland, Glenn county, and the contents thereof. Said building was the point of terminus of a private telephone line, extending from the town of Germantown, in said Glenn county, to the said town of Orland, along the county road between those two points. The structure, which it is alleged was destroyed by fire through the negligent acts of defendant, appears to have been occupied at the time of the fire by several different parties as business offices. The complaint sets forth several different and distinct causes of action, alleging damage, by the fire, to the property of a corresponding number of individuals. The first cause of action stated is in favor of the plaintiff in his individual right and the remaining counts allege damage to the property of the others, who, it is alleged, assigned their rights of action or claims for damages to plaintiff. The total amount sued for was $2,729.65. The cause was tried by the court; trial by jury having been waived by both sides. The findings and judgment are in favor of the defendant. This appeal is by the plaintiff from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The only point made by appellant is that the findings, in so far as they are against the claim that the fire was occasioned by the negligent acts and conduct of the defendant, are unjustified and unsustained by the evidence. The brief of respondent contains the written opinion of the learned trial judge, stating the issues, briefly referring to the evidence, applying the law to the facts as he found them, and setting forth the reasons which led him to the conclusion crystallized into the judgment herein. We approve and here adopt that part of said opinion which reads as follows:

"The cause of action as stated by the plaintiff in the complaint may be summarized as follows:

"(1) On the 7th day of December, 1902, and for several years prior thereto, there existed and was in operation a private telephone line, extending from the town of Germantown to the town of Orland. The termination of the telephone line in the town of Orland was in the office of the plaintiff, in a building owned by one J. G. Bender.

"(2) That prior to the 7th day of December, 1902, and while said telephone line was in existence, between Germantown and Orland, the defendant erected an electric power line for the purpose of conducting electricity from Shasta county to the town of Wilbrows in Glenn county.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

"(3) That defendant erected its power line along the same county road, along which the telephone line was then built between Germantown and Orland. That the portion of the said power line of defendant, between Orland and Germantown, was erected by the defendant in close proximity to the said telephone line. That in the erection of the said power line the defendant removed, displaced, weakened, destroyed, and otherwise tampered with the posts and wires of the telephone line, without the consent and against the wish of the owner thereof.

"(4) That by reason of the defendant placing said power line in close proximity to said telephone line, and by reason of the defendant removing, weakening, destroying, displacing, and otherwise tampering with the posts and wires of the telephone line, the said telephone line was left in such a condition by defendant that on the 7th day of December, 1902, said telephone line was blown over and came in contact with said power line of defendant between Germantown and Orland. That, owing to the larger current of electricity contained in said power line than in the telephone line, the current of electricity transmitted to said telephone line from said power line caused the office of plaintiff to take fire, and the said office and the contents thereof were wholly destroyed.

"(5) That said fire was entirely due to the negligence and wrongful act of the defendant in placing its power line in close proximity to said telephone line and in weakening, removing, displacing, destroying, and tampering with said telephone line.

"The above is the plaintiff's case, as made by the pleadings, and his right to recover must be limited to the charges of negligence made in and by the complaint. No recovery can be had on acts of negligence or upon negligent conduct not alleged, as a defendant in such an action is entitled to know by the pleadings just what he is called on to meet.

"I have carefully gone over all the evidence and the briefs presented by counsel for the respective parties, and will now endeavor to state my conclusions on the case as made by the pleadings and the evidence. I have no doubt whatever that the fire which destroyed plaintiff's property was caused by the telephone wire coming in contact with the wire of the power line, receiving therefrom a large current of electricity, and transmitting it to the building in Orland occupied by the plaintiff. It is also clear from the evidence that the wire of the telephone line came in contact with the wire of the power company by reason of the fact that one of the posts of the telephone line was blown over during a storm, carrying the telephone wire against the wire of the power company. Does the evidence show that the contact of the two wires was the result of some one, or all of the negligent acts of the defendant, alleged in the complaint? The burden is upon the plaintiff to show that the contact of the two wires was caused by some negligent act or acts of the defendant, alleged in the complaint.

"The first claim made by the plaintiff is that it was negligence for the defendant to put its posts within three feet of the posts of the telephone line. The evidence shows that the defendant did so place its posts. Is it negligence for a power company to place its posts within three feet of a telephone company's line? There is no law declaring it to be negligence, and the evidence in the case does not make it appear to be a negligent act. There is some evidence in the case that after the power line was built the telephone line did not work as well as it did before, owing to the fact that there was an induced current of electricity from the power line to the telephone line. But this is immaterial to the discussion here, because it is not claimed that the fire was caused from an induced current of electricity.

"The question here is, Was it negligence to place these two lines so close together, when considered from the standpoint of liability to come in contact? Should a reasonably prudent man have anticipated that the two lines being well and strongly built were liable to come in contact, because placed so close together? No evidence has been introduced to show that this is so, and I shall hold that it was not negligence for the defendant to put its power line three feet from the telephone posts. The other acts alleged as negligence against the defendant are that in the erection of its power line it removed, displaced, weakened, destroyed, and otherwise tampered with the posts and wires of the telephone line without the consent and against the will of the owner thereof. It is not a question whether the defendant had the consent of the owner of the telephone line to move and tamper with his wires. That question might be important in an action between the respective owners; but the question here is: Did the defendant, after tampering with the telephone line, leave the power line in a good and safe condition, considering its relationship to surrounding objects, including the telephone poles and wires, or did it leave it, when viewed in relation to all its surroundings, in an unsafe and negligent condition? The evidence shows that the defendant, in constructing its power line did in some places interfere with the telephone line by removing some posts, causing others to lean towards the east, breaking some in two, and resetting a part, and by moving wires in some places, and I think it appears by a preponderance of the evidence, sufficiently to justify the court in finding, that the defendant did tamper with and to some extent change the position of the posts of the telephone line at or near the point where the post blew over and the two wires came in contact.

"The witness Eggerstedt testifies that at the time the power line was being built he saw men working in his field, and afterwards he noticed that all the posts for the whole distance of his line were leaning to the east. The witness Brown testified that the posts along there (the Eggerstedt place) were leaning to the east after the power line went through. These witnesses did not know the names of the men who did the work or for whom they were working, but as no one else was building a power line there but the defendant, and as the posts were evidently leaned because they were in the way of the power line, and as no one else had any motive for moving them, the court is justified in holding that the defendant changed their positions. Conceding, then, that the defendant did tamper with, remove, and change the position of the telephone posts near to or at the Eggerstedt place, still there is no evidence that it did not leave them as strong and as securely set in the ground as they were before; no evidence that, when left by the defendant, they had not been well and safely and firmly set in the ground, in a good, careful and workmanlike manner. There is evidence, as stated, that after the power line had been built poles were leaning towards the east, but this is no evidence that they were not properly and firmly set in the ground nor that the defendant had not exercised good care. A pole standing in a slanting position may be as firmly and safely set as one standing perpendicular.

"It was incumbent upon the plaintiff to allege and prove that the defendant when it built its power line did not build it in a good, careful, workmanlike manner, and in a manner to make it safe as regards the persons and property of the public; that it did not use due diligence to make it safe, when its position and proximity to the telephone line was considered; that in moving and tampering with the telephone line it did not set and adjust the telephone poles it interfered with in a safe, good, and workmanlike manner, but reset them in a careless manner and left them in an unsafe condition, or that, having properly set them, it, by a neglect to inspect and repair them, suffered them to get into an unsafe and weakened condition. These things in my judgment the plaintiff has not made to appear. By proving that the defendant changed the telephone line and tampered with it, the plaintiff has not proved that the line was left in an unsafe or weakened condition. Nor is this a case where from the fact that a pole blew over in December we have a right to find that it was left in a weakened and unsafe condition in the preceding spring (or whenever the power line was built).

"For these reasons, I am constrained to hold that the plaintiff has not proved that the fire was caused by the defendant's negligence, in the particulars alleged in the complaint."

We have examined the record here with great care, and we have thus been convinced that the findings of the learned trial judge are beyond disturbance by this court. The court found that the fire which destroyed the building and its contents was caused by the contact of the telephone line with the defendant's line, "but that said fire was not caused by reason of the placing of said power line in close proximity to said telephone line, or by reason of the said defendant removing and displacing the posts of the said telephone line, or by reason of the said defendant removing, weakening, destroying, displacing, or otherwise tampering with the posts of said telephone line, or by reason of the condition in which said telephone line was left by the defendant, or by reason of any negligent act of the said defendant; that the said fire was not due to any negligence or any wrongful acts of defendant in placing its power line in close proximity to the telephone line, or by any acts of the defendant."

There is, so far as we are able to determine the question from the bare record, no direct evidence disclosing negligence on the part of the defendant, unless it may correctly be held that the mere fact that the defendant moved the poles of the telephone line into a slanting position from its line in order, it would seem, to avoid or at least minimize the chance for contact between the two wires, and the further fact that defendant's wire was installed and maintained in rather close proximity to the telephone line, in and of themselves constituted negligence. The court having, as seen, found that the contact between the wires was the cause of the fire, and having further found that the evidence disclosed no negligence in the moving and "tampering with" the telephone poles, with which finding we observe no reason for interference, the question here is narrowed down to the single proposition whether the act of placing the power line at a distance of a little less than three feet from the telephone line constituted, as appellant contends, negligence per se. In other words, does the mere undisputed fact that the defendant constructed and maintained its line, which was of 20,000 volt power—a much higher voltage than that of the telephone line—within a distance of three feet from the telephone line, warrant the presumption of negligence on the part of the defendant? No such presumption of law arises upon the proof of that fact. It is obviously true that, had these two lines been erected and maintained at a distance from each other of several feet beyond the length of the longest poles of either line, there would and could then have been no contact between the two wires through the falling of the pole or poles of one or the other, but we have been shown no reason for holding that, as a matter of law, there can be any more danger or probability of a telephone or power pole falling merely because situated within three feet of another line of wire transmitting electricity than there would be if the two lines were located five hundred yards or a mile apart, nor, if a pole does fall, that it will fall in the direction of or across or on the other line.

Of course, it will not be denied that the fact that a line of wire for transmitting electricity is located in such close proximity to another line of wire performing like service as were those concerned here would, where the pole of one has fallen on or across the other, the contact of the two wires causing damage, as here, constitute a circumstance which should be considered in the determination of the question whether the falling of the pole was due to the culpable fault or negligence of one or the other of the owners of the two lines, and it might, in a greater or less degree, according to circumstances, tend to prove negligence in the one or the other—that is, it is a circumstance from which, when considered with other pertinent circumstances, negligence might be inferred. But this would not be a presumption of law, but only an inference of one fact from another, and, of course, it is for the jury, or, as here, the judge trying the facts, to say how far such circumstance goes toward proving negligence, or whether, with other circumstances, the charge of negligence is sufficiently established. In other words, whether there is danger of damage resulting from the maintenance of a wire of the high voltage of the wire of defendant within a distance of three feet from an ordinary telephone line must depend, as is shown by the testimony of the experts introduced as witnesses, upon the proposition whether, from any cause, the wires come in contact with each other, and even then, so Wheeler, the defendant's expert, declared, under certain circumstances there would be no danger of resultant damage except at and in the immediate neighborhood of the point of contact. This witness testified: "If 20,000 volts started at the point of contact, where Dr. Tooley said (Dr. Tooley had testified that early on the morning of December 7, 1902, he saw bright flashes of light emitting from the wires at the point of contact between the towns of Germantown and Orland, and about ten miles from the latter place), on a 14 wire, 10 miles from the building, not over 300 or 400 volts would reach the building, as almost the entire original voltage would be lost. Three or four hundred volts would be highly dangerous, due to its kicking effect, but it couldn't set fire. Before it would set fire, the wire itself would be burned in two."

While the court found, as we have seen, that the fire was caused by the collision between the two wires, contrary to the theory advanced in the latter part of the quoted part of Wheeler's testimony, yet his testimony nevertheless supports the position we take here that, while it is very plain that contact between two wires would necessarily be a more probable event where, as here, they are maintained very near to each other than it would be were the wires maintained a considerable distance apart, in the former case, as well as in the latter, when such contact occurs, the question must necessarily arise as to the cause of such contact—whether it be due to an "irresistible, superhuman cause," or has been occasioned by negligence imputable to either one or the other of the owners of the two lines. Manifestly this question could only be determined upon evidence explaining how or in what manner the wires came together, and where, as here, it is charged that the damage flowing from such contact is due to the negligence of the owner of one of the lines, the burden of proving such negligence by a preponderance of the evidence is as the learned trial judge has said upon the accusing party. The court below has found that this burden has not been sustained by the party upon whom the law has placed it, and, as already indicated by the views which we have expressed with respect to the record before us, this court is compelled to accept that finding. In other words, we are not able to declare as a matter of law that the evidence as disclosed by the record is such as to have entitled the plaintiff to a verdict.

As stated in the opinion filed herein by the trial judge, there is no evidence that defendant, after moving or, as the complaint alleges, "tampering with" the telephone poles, left said poles in an unsafe condition, or did not reset them as firmly in the ground as they were before they were thus disturbed. It does appear from the evidence, as is stated in Judge Ellison's opinion, that the fire occurred several months after the telephone poles had been removed and placed in different positions, and that at the time the contact between the two wires occurred a heavy wind storm was prevailing, and that it was then that one of the posts of the telephone line fell over, causing a contact between the two wires.

That it is the settled rule that whether a motion for a new trial based upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict or findings shall be granted or refused rests in the sound discretion of the trial court is a proposition no one will dispute, and which is, in fact, conceded by counsel for the appellant as a matter of course, and, where the motion is denied and there is evidence which justifies the verdict or supports the findings, then it is clear that it cannot be said by a court of review that such discretion has been abused or improperly exercised.

For the reasons stated in the foregoing, the order is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

15 Cal. App. 28

PEOPLE v. GEE GONG. (Cr. 262.)†

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Dec. 13, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 10, 1911.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 34*)—APPENDING NAMES OF WITNESSES—INTERPRETERS—"WITNESS."

One acting as an interpreter before the grand jury is not a "witness examined before" it within Pen. Code, § 995, requiring the setting aside of an indictment "when the names of the witnesses examined before the grand jury," are not appended at the foot of the indictment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Dec. Dig. § 34.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 7511-7513.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1088*)—APPEAL—REVIEW—RECORD.

Instructions claimed by defendant to have been offered by him and to have been refused cannot be considered, though the transcript contains instructions under the head "Defendant's proposed instructions," there being no indorsement on any of them, or any certificate or bill of exceptions, showing or tending to show whether it was given or refused, and there being in the transcript the certified charge given by the court, showing that both parties waived written instructions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1088.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 823*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CURING ERROR.

Any error in giving as an instruction a section of the Penal Code, which read by itself might mislead the jury, is cured by elsewhere fully instructing the jury so that it appears that they could not as reasonable men have been misled.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1992-1995; Dec. Dig. § 823.*]

4. HOMICIDE (§ 169*) — EVIDENCE — RELEVANCY.

The state on a prosecution for murder, having claimed that deceased was a laundryman, and been allowed to introduce testimony that the package containing a white coat and apron marked "Wee," found on the ground at the scene of the homicide, had been given to deceased to deliver to its owner, and that he was on such peaceful mission when attacked, defendant, who testified that the parcel was his own property, the articles therein having been given him by his uncle, "Wee," at a certain time and place, and that he had taken it with him while seeking employment, from which peaceful mission he was returning when he accidentally met deceased, in his encounter with whom he acted in self-defense—was entitled to show, as bearing on the truth of his assertion as to the ownership of the property, that other coats and aprons of the same texture and similarly marked were given him by his uncle at the same time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 169.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

Gee Gong was prosecuted for murder, and, from a judgment of conviction and an order denying a motion for new trial, he appeals. Reversed.

James Hanley and J. E. Alexander, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, C. M. Fickert, Dist. Atty., and Maxwell McNutt, Asst. Dist. Atty., for the People.

COOPER, P. J. The defendant was charged by the indictment with the crime of murder, for which crime he was tried, and found guilty of murder in the second degree. He prosecutes this appeal from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

We have carefully examined the evidence, and find it sufficient to sustain the verdict. A motion was made to set aside the indictment upon the ground that the name of David Jones, who was sworn to act as an interpreter, was not appended at the foot of the indictment. The Penal Code (section 995) provides that an indictment must be set aside "when the names of the witnesses examined before the grand jury, or whose depositions have been read before them, are not inserted at the foot of the indictment or indorsed thereon." It is not claimed that Jones was a witness who was examined before the grand jury as to any fact, or that his testimony was taken before the grand jury. It is true that he was sworn to act as an interpreter, but this was in the nature of an officer or specialist selected and appointed to translate the questions from English into Chinese and the answers from Chinese into English; but the words "witnesses examined before the grand jury" show that a person sworn as an interpreter is not a witness in the sense in which the word is used in the statute. The purpose of the law is to furnish the people and the defendant with the names of the witnesses upon whose testimony the indictment is based. People v. Northey, 77 Cal. 629, 19 Pac. 865, 20 Pac. 129; People v. Quinn, 127 Cal. 542, 59 Pac. 987. The indictment is based upon the testimony of the witnesses examined before the grand jury, and the interpreter merely aids in getting the testimony in such language that the grand jury can understand it. Such interpreter may be present in the jury room, and, in fact, the grand jury have a right to require the attendance of an interpreter (Pen. Code, § 925); and, while he is in one sense a witness, he is not a "witness examined before the grand jury."

Appellant complains of the alleged refusal of the court to give his offered instructions numbered 13, 20, 25, and 35. Respondent contends that there is nothing in the record to show that the instructions were either given or refused, and we must so hold. The transcript contains 40 separate typewritten instructions under the head "Defendant's proposed instructions," but there is no indorsement on any of them showing whether the instruction was given or refused, and there is nothing in the way of a certificate or bill of exceptions in any way showing or tending to show such fact. In the reporter's transcript the charge given by the court is certified, and it shows that both parties waived written instructions. We therefore cannot consider the question of the instructions which defendant claims he offered, and which he claims were also refused.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

†For opinion on rehearing, see 114 Pac. 81.

It is claimed that the court erred in giving the following instructions to the jury: "Upon a trial for murder, the commission of the homicide by the defendant being admitted or proved, the burden of proving circumstances of mitigation, or which justify or excuse it, devolves upon him, unless the proof on the part of the prosecution tends to show that the crime committed amounts to manslaughter, or that the defendant was justifiable or excusable." This instruction is literally a copy of section 1105 of the Penal Code, and evidently was read to the jury from the section, or copied in the instructions given by the court. It is claimed that giving the section of the Penal Code was error, for the reason that by it the jury were led to understand that the burden of proof was cast upon the defendant to show self-defense. While the reading of the section of the Code has been criticised, it has been held that if the court elsewhere fully instructed the jury as to the right of the defendant to the benefit of every reasonable doubt, and to have every fact proven beyond a reasonable doubt, the error in giving the instruction is cured. In other words, where the reading of a section of itself might mislead the jury, if the court elsewhere fully and sufficiently instructs the jury so that it appears that they could not as reasonable men have been misled by the instruction, the instruction will be held not to constitute error. People v. Ruef (filed Nov. 23, 1910) 114 Pac. 54; People v. Anderson, 105 Cal. 32, 38 Pac. 513; People v. Hawes, 98 Cal. 649, 33 Pac. 791.

The court instructed the jury: "Evidence of flight is received, not as a part of the things done in connection with the criminal act itself, but as indicative of a guilty mind; and, if you believe from the evidence in this case that a crime was committed in manner and form as charged in the indictment, and that immediately after its commission the defendant Gee Gong took flight, it is a circumstance to be weighed by you as tending in some degree to prove a consciousness of guilt. It is not sufficient of itself to establish the guilt of the defendant, but the weight to which that circumstance is entitled is a matter for you to determine in connection with all the other facts and circumstances called out in the case as presented." The part of the instruction given by the court, "Evidence of flight is received, not as a part of the things done in connection with the criminal act itself, but as indicative of a guilty mind," was error. It was equivalent to telling the jury that flight indicates a guilty mind, which is by no means true. It may indicate a guilty mind, but that is for the jury to find or infer from all the facts and circumstances in connection with the flight. Flight is not of itself evidence of guilt, nor does it raise a presumption of guilt. It is at most only a fact to be considered by the jury in connection with all the other facts and circumstances in the case from which it may draw an inference as to the guilt of the defendant. It has sometimes been said that it is a circumstance tending in some degree to prove a consciousness of guilt; but that is quite different from telling the jury that such evidence is received "as indicative of a guilty mind." There are many cases where the circumstances show that the flight is perfectly consistent with innocence, but it is always received upon the theory that the jury will give it such weight as it deserves, depending upon the particular circumstances of each case. Ryan v. People, 79 N. Y. 593; Alberti v. U. S., 162 U. S. 499, 16 Sup. Ct. 864, 40 L. Ed. 1051. It is a circumstance to be considered by the jury, who might regard it as sufficient to show a consciousness of guilt. People v. Ashmead, 118 Cal. 509, 50 Pac. 681. The question of fact as to whether or not the defendant fled is for the jury. People v. Choy Ah Sing, 84 Cal. 276, 24 Pac. 379. It has been held error for the court to instruct the jury that flight raises a presumption of guilt. People v. Wong Ah Ngow, 54 Cal. 153, 35 Am. Rep. 69. We see no reason why the court should have instructed the jury that evidence of flight is received as indicative of a guilty mind. It was clearly a charge upon a question of fact.

It was claimed by the prosecution that the deceased was a laundryman, and that at the time of the homicide he was carrying for delivery a small parcel containing, among other things, a white coat and apron, which parcel was found on the street near where the body lay. The prosecution was allowed to introduce evidence, under defendant's objection, that the deceased was given the small parcel of laundry to be given to a customer of the laundry where deceased was employed. The witness Yee Quan Woo, after repeated objections by defendant's counsel, was allowed to testify that he instructed the deceased to take the parcel of laundry marked "Wee" to the owner. The articles were shown to the witness, and he identified them as being the coat and apron that he had given to the deceased to be delivered to a customer of the laundry on the day of the homicide. The defendant testified in his own behalf that the parcel containing the coat and apron was his property, and that he had taken them with him upon the morning of the homicide on an unsuccessful mission to seek employment as a cook, and was returning peaceably with them in his possession when the trouble arose and the deceased met his death. In other words, while the prosecution had been allowed to prove the possession of the parcel by deceased for the purpose of showing that he was on a peaceful mission, doing his usual work, when he was unlawfully attacked and shot to death, the defendant desired, in aid of his contention that he did act in self-defense, to prove that he had been on a peaceful mission in search of work, with the parcel containing his coat and apron, and that the meeting with deceased was not premeditated, but that it occurred while defendant was returning from a peaceful mission. The defendant testified that he was returning with the coat and apron; that they were his property given to him by his uncle "Gee Wee" while he was working with his uncle at the Berkshire Hotel on Sutter and Jones streets in San Francisco; and that the coat and apron were marked "Wee." He was then asked, "Did your uncle give you any other aprons at or near the time he gave you this apron?" To this question the prosecution objected on the ground it was irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent, and self-serving. The attorney for the defendant stated to the court that he claimed the right to show the ownership of these aprons, and further said: "We wish to show that at the time this apron was received not alone this apron, but other aprons, were received, and not alone marked in the way this is, but similar marks on the other aprons of the same texture and upon the same cloth; and we wish to show the other aprons as it was shown here by the prosecution that certain things marked 'Wee' went certain ways. We wish to show the 'Wee' mark here was the uncle's mark, and we will show those aprons which he received at the same time, and show that this is the property, and also show how he obtained possession of it." After some further discussion and objection by the prosecution the court remarked: "It seems to me that the whole matter is collateral anyhow, and can't throw any light upon the occurrence itself." Finally the attorney for the defendant again asked a question as follows: "On the 14th day of November, 1909, did you have belonging to you any aprons similar to these aprons and marked 'Wee' the same as this apron which has been given to you by your uncle?" This question was objected to, and the court remarked: "That is the same question. I will sustain the objection to that." The court erred in refusing to allow the offered evidence. It was a material question upon the investigation being held before the jury as to whether or not the defendant had told the truth as to the ownership of the articles. He had stated the name of his uncle, and the place where his uncle gave him the coat and apron, and the mark "Wee" being the name of his uncle. He desired, and his counsel so stated, to prove that other coats and other aprons of the same texture and similar marks, were given to him at the same time, so as to show that the coat and apron in the package were a part of the articles given to him by his uncle. Upon the plainest principles of justice the evidence should have been allowed. Defendant was being tried for a crime that involved his liberty and perhaps his life. In regard to all questions addressed to the discretion of the court which would tend to throw light upon any material circumstance, the discretion of the court should have been exercised in favor of the admission of the testimony. If such testimony would logically tend to show justification or mitigation of the alleged crime, the court should have admitted it. Whether the defendant could have proven the matters which he offered to prove or not is not for us to say, but he should have been given the opportunity. Suppose he could have shown that his uncle had ordered a half dozen coats and a half dozen aprons made from a peculiar cloth, with the date of making and the maker's name on each garment, and further that each garment had a particular mark "Wee" placed upon it, and then presented such garments to the defendant, and suppose the defendant brought into court the particular five coats and aprons of similar texture and marks: would not such testimony tend—and strongly tend—to show the fact that the coat and apron in this package were his property? What reason was there for excluding the offered evidence? It certainly could not have taken very much time, and it bore directly on the question of the ownership of the package.

In Moody v. Peirano, 4 Cal. App. 411, 88 Pac. 380, where the question was as to whether or not the defendant had warranted certain seed wheat as "White Australian," it was held that evidence of similar warranties made by defendant to other purchasers about the same time was admissible. The court held that the offered evidence tended to illustrate and throw light on the transaction in controversy. If such be the correct rule in a civil case, how much more important in a criminal case where the liberty or life of the prisoner is involved. The evidence was just as material as though the question were the ownership of a pair of shoes, and the defendant had offered to prove that the shoes were a pair from several pairs that had been ordered and made of special leather and of a special design. In fact, there could have been no object in excluding the offered evidence except to keep from the jury the full facts in connection with the matter. As we have said before in many cases, the ends of justice would be better subserved, and convictions would be obtained in as many cases, if district attorneys and trial judges in case of a doubt as to the relevancy of testimony offered on behalf of defendant should admit it, giving the benefit of the doubt to the defendant. Not only would as many convictions be secured but a far greater number of cases would be affirmed in this court, and the court would not be compelled to hold that prejudicial error was committed in the exclusion of such testimony.

The judgment and order for these reasons must be reversed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

15 Cal. App. 28

PEOPLE v. GEE GONG. (Cr. 1,657.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 11, 1911.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 763, 764*)—INSTRUCTIONS—FLIGHT AS EVIDENCE OF GUILTY MIND.

An instruction, "Evidence of flight is received, not as part of the things done in connection with the criminal act itself, but as indicative of a guilty mind," and if the jury believe a crime was committed, and immediately thereafter defendant took flight, it is a circumstance to be weighed as tending in some degree to prove a consciousness of guilt, that it is not sufficient of itself to establish guilt of defendant, but its weight is for them to determine in connection with all the other facts in evidence, is not objectionable as equivalent to telling the jury that flight indicates a guilty mind, and as a charge on a question of fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. §§ 763, 764.*]

In Bank. On rehearing. Denied.

For opinion, see 114 Pac. 78.

PER CURIAM. The petition for rehearing is denied. We deem it proper to say, however, that we do not approve of the criticism by the District Court of Appeal of the instruction referred to in its opinion.

14 Cal. App. 733

CURRAN v. HUBBARD. (Civ. 850.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 2, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court, Jan. 31, 1911.)

1. BROKERS (§ 43*)—COMPENSATION—CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT—"GET AN OFFER."

A memorandum signed by an owner and delivered to a broker, which states description and price of land and asks him to "get an offer," satisfies the requirements of Civ. Code, § 1624, as a written authority to sell or exchange land on commission.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 44; Dec. Dig. § 43;* Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. § 131.]

2. BROKERS (§ 9*)—DURATION OF EMPLOYMENT—"GET AN OFFER."

An employment to "get an offer" for land is one to make a sale or exchange in a reasonable time, and not merely to procure a single offer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 10; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1071*)—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where the court found that plaintiff, a real estate broker employed by defendant, introduced one with whom defendant made an exchange of lands after rejecting an offer, the further finding that plaintiff procured a second offer was immaterial, and hence, if unsupported by the evidence, the error was harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4234-4239; Dec. Dig. § 1071.*]

4. BROKERS (§ 88*)—ACTION FOR COMMISSIONS—FINDINGS.

A finding that plaintiff, a real estate broker claiming commissions, was employed under a memorandum signed by defendant, sufficiently negatives the defense that the action was barred by Civ. Code, § 1624, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, requiring such contracts of employment to be in writing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 130; Dec. Dig. § 88.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1140*)—DISPOSITION OF CAUSE—AFFIRMANCE.

Where the excessive part of a judgment is ascertainable, it will be affirmed provided the excess is remitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4462-4478; Dec. Dig. § 1140.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Action by C. W. Curran against O. H. Hubbard. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed on conditions.

Rehearing denied. See 114 Pac. 83.

Charles H. Mattingly, for appellant. Lucius M. Fall, Webster Davis, and T. E. Parke, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action by plaintiff, a real estate broker, to recover a commission for services rendered to defendant in effecting an exchange of land. Plaintiff's authority to act in the matter consisted of a memorandum in writing subscribed by defendant and delivered to plaintiff, a copy of which, as set forth in the complaint, is as follows: "Ontario, December 6-08. My orange grove is lot 645, Ontario Colony. My price is $12,000. Get me an offer. O. H. Hubbard, 3526 S. Figueroa St." The court found that plaintiff was a real estate broker, and that in December, 1908, defendant employed him as such agent and broker to find an offer for sale or exchange of the property in question, which said employment was evidenced by the memorandum in writing as alleged and set forth in the complaint; that plaintiff, acting on the authority of such memorandum, went to some expense in showing said property to one John Haasis, whom he introduced to defendant about January 16, 1909, and induced him to make an offer of property which he (Haasis) valued at $12,000 in exchange for defendant's property; that defendant declined to accept this offer; but that thereafter, in February following, Haasis made to defendant an offer of other real estate in exchange for said lot 645, Ontario Colony, which offer defendant accepted and exchanged said lot for the property of said John Haasis. As conclusions of law, the court found that plaintiff should have judgment against defendant for the sum of $325, with interest and costs. Judgment went for plaintiff in accordance with the conclusions of law; whereupon defendant, as provided by section 663, Code of Civil Procedure, made a motion to have the judgment vacated and set aside, and in lieu thereof that a judgment be entered upon the findings in favor of defendant. This motion was denied, and defendant appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion.

The claim of appellant that the court erred in overruling his demurrer, and also in denying his motion to vacate and set aside the judgment, is based chiefly upon the contention that the memorandum in writing set forth in the complaint, and which the court found to have been made and signed by defendant, is insufficient, under the provisions of section 1624, Civil Code, to constitute an employment of plaintiff to make the exchange. Appellant further insists that, if such memorandum be construed as conferring any authority upon plaintiff, it should be limited merely to the getting of one single offer to purchase or exchange, and that, as the court found that defendant employed plaintiff as a real estate agent and broker to "find an offer for sale or exchange," and further found that the first offer made by Haasis was declined by defendant, the employment, without notice of revocation, terminated, and hence plaintiff was not entitled to recover for his services.

We cannot assent to either proposition. The memorandum should be considered as a whole, and thus considered it clearly appears therefrom that defendant described his property, stated the price upon the basis of which he would sell or exchange, and, by the words "get me an offer," used in the memorandum delivered to plaintiff, intended to and did authorize and employ him to find some one to whom a sale or satisfactory exchange could be made. Any other interpretation would be meaningless. In the case of Kennedy v. Merickel, 8 Cal. App. 378, 97 Pac. 81, this court said: "It is not requisite that it (the memorandum) shall be an instrument by the terms of which the agent is empowered to so bind the principal as to support an action for specific performance. It is sufficient if it shows that the broker is authorized by the principal to find a purchaser who is ready, willing, and able to exchange, or one with whom an exchange is actually made. As said in Cody v. Dempsey, 86 App. Div. (N. Y.) 335, 83 N. Y. Supp. 899, there is no definite requirement, except that the authority to act in the matter shall be evidenced by a writing. All the statute requires is written authority." To the same effect, see Lindley v. Fay, 119 Cal. 239, 51 Pac. 333; Toomy v. Dunphy, 86 Cal. 639, 25 Pac. 130. The memorandum was a sufficient compliance with the statute, and showed that plaintiff was employed by defendant to make a sale or satisfactory exchange of defendant's property, and not merely to procure a single offer of purchase or exchange. The words "employed plaintiff to find an offer," as used in the finding, are susceptible of no other interpretation than that plaintiff was employed to find a satisfactory offer—one which defendant was willing to or did accept.

It clearly appears that it was through and by means of plaintiff's efforts that the attention of Haasis was called to the fact that defendant desired to sell or exchange his orange grove; that he brought the parties together and initiated the negotiations which finally resulted in defendant exchanging his property for that offered by Haasis, and which, in the absence of anything to the contrary, he is presumed to have valued at the price fixed upon his own property. "It is sufficient if it (the memorandum) shows that the broker is authorized by the principal to find a purchaser who is ready, able, and willing to exchange," or "one with whom an exchange is actually made." Clark v. Allen, 125 Cal. 276, 57 Pac. 985; Merriman v. Wickersham, 141 Cal. 570, 75 Pac. 180; Kennedy v. Merickel, supra.

In the absence of anything in the memorandum limiting the period within which plaintiff should make the sale or exchange, he had a reasonable time so to do. Niles v. Hancock, 140 Cal. 161, 73 Pac. 840. It does not appear that there was any revocation of his authority. While the contract was in full force, he found a person who was ready, able, and willing to exchange, introduced him to defendant, and defendant made the exchange. The fact that the defendant rejected the first offer made by Haasis did not thereby free him from obligation to compensate plaintiff for the rendition of services in promoting such exchange.

Appellant attacks the finding of the court to the effect that plaintiff interviewed defendant and Haasis several times, induced Haasis to make a second offer, and showed the property to Haasis a second time; his claim being that such finding is not justified by the evidence. Under our view, the finding is wholly immaterial, and hence, if unsupported as claimed, the error is harmless (Risdon v. Steyner, 9 Cal. App. 344, 99 Pac. 377), for the reason that plaintiff's right to recover did not depend upon the facts embodied in such finding.

As a separate defense, defendant alleged that said action was barred by the provisions of section 1624, Civil Code, and section 1973, Code of Civil Procedure. He now complains because the court failed to make findings upon such alleged issues. The finding that defendant did employ plaintiff by and under a memorandum in writing subscribed by defendant and delivered to plaintiff sufficiently negatives this allegation, if it be deemed material.

It was stipulated at the trial that if the proof established the fact that plaintiff was by defendant employed to sell or exchange the property, and did effect a sale or exchange, that the commission to which plaintiff would be entitled was $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. upon the amount of the consideration for such exchange. The court embodied this stipulation in a finding, but erroneously stated that the sum so agreed upon was 5 per cent. on the first \$1,000 and $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the balance. This resulted in the rendition of a judgment against the defendant in the sum of \$325, with interest from February 25, 1909, when it should have been for the sum of \$300 with such interest. Inasmuch, however, as that portion of the judgment predicated upon this erroneous finding is clearly ascertainable, and the proceedings as disclosed by the record are correct in other particulars, plaintiff should not be required to try the case again, provided such excess be remitted. Clapp v. Vatcher, 9 Cal. App. 462, 99 Pac. 549; Salstrom v. Orleans, etc., Min. Co., 153 Cal. 551, 96 Pac. 292.

It is therefore ordered that if plaintiff, within 30 days from the filing hereof, file with the clerk of this court his written consent that the judgment of the superior court be modified by deducting $25 therefrom, leaving the judgment to stand for $300, and interest and costs as therein provided, said judgment shall be modified accordingly and the judgment and order denying defendant's motion affirmed. Otherwise, and in case plaintiff fails to file such consent in writing, the judgment and order shall be reversed. In any event, it is ordered that appellant recover his costs on this appeal.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

14 Cal. App. 733

CURRAN v. HUBBARD. (L. A. 2,853.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1911.)

On petition for rehearing. Petition denied. For former opinion, see 114 Pac. 81.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. (dissenting). I think that the finding which the appellant challenges upon the ground that it is unsupported by the evidence, and which the District Court of Appeal treats as immaterial, was material and essential to the right of recovery.

15 Cal. App. 178

VANCE v. SUPREME LODGE OF FRATERNAL BROTHERHOOD. (Civ. 896.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Jan. 9, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court March 10, 1911.)

1. ACCOUNT STATED (§ 4*)—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Statements rendered monthly by a fraternal order to its organizer, showing the amount credited to him on the books of the order, are, when received and accepted by him as correct, accounts stated, and their correctness may only be questioned on the ground of fraud or mistake.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Account Stated, Cent. Dig. §§ 14, 15; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

2. ACCOUNT STATED (§ 1*)—DEFINITION.

An account stated is an agreed balance of accounts, and implies an admission that the account is correct and that the balance is due, and it establishes prima facie the accuracy of the items without other proof, and is a new contract on which an action lies.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Account Stated, Cent. Dig. §§ 1-9; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 93-98; vol. 8, p. 7561.]

3. ACCOUNT STATED (§ 11*)—ACTS CONSTITUTING—MISREPRESENTATIONS.

The misrepresentation by a debtor of the amount due, where no relation of trust exists requiring a disclosure of the facts, is not ordinarily a fraud on the creditor which entitles him to a re-examination into the correctness of the account, which, by his acquiescence, has become stated, and in such a case a concealment or misrepresentation is not fraud justifying the reopening of the account.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Account Stated, Cent. Dig. § 63; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

4. ACCOUNT STATED (§ 11*)—MISREPRESENTATIONS—OPENING.

Where any relation of confidence and trust exists between the parties to an account stated, demanding that the information communicated by one to the other respecting the subject-matter of their dealings shall be full and complete, any concealment or misrepresentation amounts to a fraud sufficient to entitle the party injured to an action to open the account.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Account Stated, Cent. Dig. § 63; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

5. ACCOUNT STATED (§ 11*)—CONFIDENTIAL RELATION—OPENING ACCOUNT.

A contract employing one to organize lodges of a fraternal insurance order and to secure members thereof for a specified per cent. of the premiums paid by the members, to be paid monthly by the Supreme Secretary when received by him, etc., creates the relation of principal and agent, and the employé, as agent, must inform the order correctly as to the business contracted under the contract, and the order must correctly inform him of the money collected from members procured by the employé, and where the employé relies on representations made by the order he may attack the representations evidenced by statements of the money collected, though the agent received such statements as correct, and though he might have examined the books of the order.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Account Stated, Cent. Dig. § 63; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

6. FRAUD (§ 22*)—RELIANCE ON REPRESENTATIONS—DUTY TO INVESTIGATE.

Where no duty is imposed by law on one to make inquiry, and where under the circumstances a prudent man would not be put on inquiry, the mere fact that means of knowledge are open to such person, and he has not availed himself of them, does not debar him from relief when thereafter making actual discovery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 19-23; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

7. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 104*)—FRAUD—EFFECT.

Where there is a fraudulent concealment of a cause of action existing in favor of one, limitations do not begin to run until he discovers the existence of the cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 511-513; Dec. Dig. § 104.*]

8. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 100*)—FRAUD—EFFECT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 4, providing that an action for fraud does not accrue until the discovery by the aggrieved party of the fraud, etc., the right of action of an agent of a fraternal order employed to organize lodges and secure members for a specified part of assessments paid by the members, resulting from misrepresentations made by the order of the moneys collected from members procured by him, accrues on his discovery of the misrepresentations, and an action brought within three years thereof is not barred.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 480-493; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

9. ACCOUNT STATED (§ 11*)—OPENING—ESTOPPEL.

Where there was a dispute between an agent of a fraternal insurance order and the order as to his right to a percentage on assessments paid by members procured by him, the fact that the agent after an alleged statement of accounts received remittances for services subsequently rendered did not estop him from insisting on an opening of the account; the subsequent payments not being treated by either party as an expression of final settlement between them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Account Stated, Cent. Dig. §§ 61, 62; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank F. Oster, Judge.

Action by C. R. Vance against the Supreme Lodge of the Fraternal Brotherhood. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

C. A. Post, R. W. Kemp, and Davis, Kemp & Post, for appellants. Frank James and Smith & Smith, for respondent.

JAMES, J. An appeal is taken from a judgment entered in favor of plaintiff for the principal sum of $1,770, and from an order denying a motion made by defendant for a new trial.

Defendant is a fraternal insurance organization. In July, 1900, it employed plaintiff as a general organizer of the order. Among other duties, plaintiff under his contract was required to organize and institute lodges, secure members therefor, and instruct the officers thereof. The contract of employment was in writing and contained a clause providing for the compensation to be paid plaintiff as follows: "7. My compensation to be certificate registration and charter fees of all members secured by me or persons working under me and 50% first twenty-four (24) assessments paid by said members; to be paid monthly by Supreme Secretary, when received by him." Plaintiff entered upon the employment under the terms of the agreement and continued therein until July, 1905. During the period of his service a statement was sent him each month from the office of the Supreme Secretary showing what moneys were due him at the several dates which the statements bore. On these statements, under a heading of "Suspended, died, or for whom commission is all paid," a list of names of persons who had been brought into the order through plaintiff's efforts would be appended. Under his contract plaintiff was entitled to have apportioned to him one-half of all assessments collected from members whom he had persuaded to join the order for the first 24 months of their membership. If such a member died or was suspended, no further credit was given to plaintiff on account of assessments, for in that case payment of assessments would cease upon the death or suspension of the member. So when plaintiff examined the monthly statements sent to him from the Supreme Secretary's office he would be informed that certain members had either been suspended, died, or that the full amount of commissions to which he was entitled on their account had been paid. The statements, however, would not apprise him as to what the exact case was; that is, whether the members named therein had been suspended, or whether they had died, or whether they belonged to the class on account of whom he had been paid his full commissions. Accompanying each of the monthly statements was a check for the balance shown to be due plaintiff. These checks were regularly accepted and cashed by the plaintiff. After June, 1902, defendant in rendering statements made allowances on account of commissions due on but 12 assessments collected from members procured by plaintiff, instead of 24 assessments, regardless of whether or not the member had continued in the order. The statements did not disclose this change in any other way than that there would appear under the heading mentioned the names of members whenever the 12 assessments had been collected and one-half the amount thereof credited to plaintiff's account. In April, 1906, plaintiff for the first time discovered that the statements rendered to him after June, 1902, were incorrect, and that a considerable sum of money by way of commissions on assessments which his contract provided should be paid to him had not been paid. After negotiating for a number of months with the defendant in the endeavor to secure an adjustment of the dispute, he brought this action in February, 1908. In his complaint he set out the history of his employment with defendant and the manner of making settlements. He further alleged the facts respecting the furnishing to him of incorrect statements and of his failure to discover the same until April, 1906. Defendant in its answer alleged and sought to prove that the reason why no credits were given plaintiff after June, 1902, on account of more than 12 assessments collected from the members, was because the contract of employment between defendant and plaintiff was modified at that time, and that under such modified contract plaintiff was only entitled to credit for one-half of 12 assessments, instead of one-half of 24 assessments. The court found against the defendant on this issue, and that finding having been made on conflicting testimony its correctness cannot be here questioned.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The statements rendered by defendant to plaintiff each month, showing the amount credited to him on the books of defendant, when received and accepted as correct, constituted accounts stated between the parties, the correctness of which could afterwards be questioned only upon a sufficient showing of fraud or mistake. "An account stated is defined by Bouvier to be 'an agreed balance of accounts; an account which has been examined and accepted by the parties.' It implies an admission that the account is correct, and that the balance struck is due and owing from one party to the other. And its effect is to establish prima facie the accuracy of the items without other proof, and to constitute a new contract on which an action will lie. Auzerais v. Naglee, 74 Cal. 60, 15 Pac. 371, Judge Story says: 'If there has been any mistake, or omission, or accident, or fraud, or undue advantage, by which the account stated is in truth vitiated, and the balance is incorrectly fixed, a court of equity will not suffer it to be conclusive upon the parties, but will allow it to be opened and re-examined.' 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 523; 1 Wait's Actions and Defenses, 195." Green v. Thornton, 96 Cal. 72, 30 Pac. 965.

The misrepresentation by a debtor to a creditor of the amount due, where no relation of trust or confidence exists requiring a full disclosure of facts to be made, is not ordinarily considered as a fraud upon the creditor which entitles him to a re-examination into the correctness of the account which, by his acquiescence, has become stated. Where both parties are dealing at arm's length, no duty rests upon the debtor to disclose facts which the creditor may obtain knowledge of by the exercise of due diligence. A concealment, or even misrepresentation, will not in such a case amount to a fraud which will entitle the creditor to have an account stated re-opened after settlement. It is very uniformly held, however, that, where any relation of confidence and trust exists between the parties which demands that the information communicated respecting the subject of their dealings be full and complete, any concealment or misrepresentation will amount to fraud sufficient to entitle the party injured thereby to an action. The contract between plaintiff and defendant created here the relation of principal and agent. Upon the agent, because of the existence of such relation, there was the duty of informing his principal fully and correctly regarding all matters concerned in the business then being transacted under his contract of agency. The course of business by which the money collected from members whom plaintiff had brought into the defendant order required that remittances should come from the subordinate lodges to which such members were attached to the office of the Supreme Secretary. The books in the secretary's office, if properly kept, would furnish at all times the best source of information as to what moneys had actually been collected on account of assessments, etc. Necessarily, plaintiff was obliged to rely upon the records kept by defendant for his information as to what commissions he was entitled to on account of assessments collected. He might, it is true, as the evidence shows, have examined the books himself, but he was not required so to do, because the defendant proposed by its action in that regard taken to, and it did pretend to, furnish him statements of what its books showed, and these statements plaintiff undoubtedly had the right to assume correctly represented the facts. The case presented is not one where the parties are to be considered as dealing at arm's length, but one where because of the existence of a confidential relation, neither party could, without incurring liability therefor, misrepresent to the other any condition which it was important for the other party to be advised of. Calmon v. Sarraille, 142 Cal. 642, 76 Pac. 486. Plaintiff here can properly be denominated as coming within the rule declared in Tarke v. Bingham, 123 Cal. 166, 55 Pac. 760, where it is said: "Where no duty is imposed by law upon a person to make inquiry, and where under the circumstances 'a prudent man' would not be put upon inquiry, the mere fact that means of knowledge are open to a plaintiff, and he has not availed himself of them, does not debar him from relief when thereafter he shall make actual discovery. The circumstances must be such that the inquiry becomes a duty, and the failure to make it a negligent omission." It might have been possible for plaintiff to have ascertained himself, from the different lodges to which the members whom he had introduced into the order belonged, just how many and which ones had remained in the order and continued to pay assessments, but he was under no obligation so to do. The defendant would no doubt have insisted that no commissions became payable at all until money collected on assessments had actually been returned to the home office. The contract of plaintiff, in fact, provided that his compensation was "to be paid monthly by Supreme Secretary, when received by him." The defendant, as before suggested, had the best means of information regarding these matters, and it made statements to the plaintiff which purported to set forth the truth. If they did not so state the facts, plaintiff would not be bound by the result of the error.

The plea of the statute of limitations was not well taken. Where there is a fraudulent concealment of a cause of action existing in favor of another, the statute is not set in motion until the party in whose favor such action has accrued discovers its existence. To quote from Cyc. vol. 25, pp. 1213, 1214; "The general statement of the rule as to the effect of a fraudulent concealment of a cause of action, where such rule is applicable, is that when a party against whom a cause of action exists in favor of another, by fraud or concealment prevents such other from obtaining knowledge thereof, the statute of limitations will commence to run only from the time the cause of action is discovered, or might have been discovered by the exercise of diligence." Here the plaintiff did not discover until April, 1906, that there had been concealed from him the knowledge of the collection of assessments for which no accounting was made to him for his proportion thereof. The only statute of limitations applicable, and which then commenced to run, is section 338, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides for a three-year limitation. Subdivision 4 of that section reads as follows: "(4) An action for relief on the ground of fraud or mistake. The cause of action in such case not to be deemed to have accrued until the discovery, by the aggrieved party, of the facts constituting the fraud or mistake." By the express provisions of this section three years time is allowed after the discovery of the fraud within which to commence the action. Plaintiff could not be charged with laches if he brought his action at any time within the three-year period. It appeared that, subsequent to the discovery of the alleged misrepresentation respecting the amount of money due to plaintiff, he accepted several more statements and signed check vouchers therefor in receipt of the money shown by them to be to his credit. It is claimed that by accepting these subsequent statements and receiving and receipting for the remittances accompanying the same, plaintiff estopped himself from questioning any of the matters in any of the accounts made up at or preceding the date of the receipt of such statements and checks. The evidence shows that it was not the intention of the parties to make these latter receipts binding as a settlement of the disputed accounts, for it appears that for a long period of time the question of the adjustment of plaintiff's claim against defendant had been the subject of consideration by the officers of the latter, and that after the expiration of a number of months a committee reported adversely to the allowance of the demand of plaintiff, and it was then finally rejected. The president of defendant testified that it was not his intention at the time the last statements and vouchers were sent to have them treated as an expression of final settlement between the defendant and plaintiff.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

15 Cal. App. 189

GERVAIS v. JOYCE et al. (Civ. 950.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Jan. 20, 1911.)APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 627*)—RECORD —TRAN-SCRIPT—TIME FOR FILING — DISMISSAL OF APPEAL FOR FAILURE TO FILE.

Where a transcript is not filed within the time prescribed by court rule 2, and is not on file at the time of notice to dismiss the appeal, and it appears that it was not filed on account of appellant's negligence and inadvertence, the appeal may be dismissed under court rule 5.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2744; Dec. Dig. § 627.*]

Action by Mrs. Alberta Gervais, executrix of the last will and testament of Lillian May Book, deceased, against T. F. Joyce and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Appeal dismissed.

Bernard Potter, for appellants. W. C. Batcheller, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Motion to dismiss appeal from the judgment and order denying a motion for a new trial. One of the grounds of the motion is that appellants failed to file the transcript within the time prescribed for so doing by rule 2 of this court. Rule 5 provides that a failure to file the transcript within the time so prescribed shall be ground for dismissing the appeal, unless the transcript shall be on file when notice of motion to dismiss is given, in which case such fact shall be sufficient answer to the motion.

The transcript was not filed within 40 days after the perfecting of the appeal, nor was it on file at the time when notice of the motion was given. It appears from an affidavit made by the attorney for appellants that the transcript was left with the attorney for respondent for examination before certifying to its correctness; that it was returned to his office within ample time for filing the same, but "affiant was unaware of the exact time that the same was signed, and through his inadvertence and neglect overlooked the time required within which to file same in the appellate court." Assuming that facts might exist which, if shown, would excuse the default, none are made to appear.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

We think respondent is entitled to have the appeal dismissed, and it is so ordered. Buckley v. Althorf, 86 Cal. 643, 25 Pac. 134; Tompkins v. Montgomery, 116 Cal. 122, 47 Pac. 1006.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

15 Cal. App. 186

Ex parte HATCH. (Cr. 311.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Jan. 11, 1911.)

1. BAIL (§ 44*)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Admission to bail pending an appeal from a conviction for felony is, under Pen. Code, § 1272, a matter of discretion, to be exercised in favor of accused only when circumstances of an extraordinary character intervene.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bail, Cent. Dig. § 145; *Dec. Dig. § 44.]

2. HABEAS CORPUS (§ 107*)—BAIL—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT.

The determination of the trial court on an application for bail pending an appeal from conviction of a felony will not be disturbed on habeas corpus, except for manifest abuse of discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. § 96; *Dec. Dig. § 107.]

3. HABEAS CORPUS (§ 107*)—BAIL—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT.

On habeas corpus to admit to bail after an order denying bail to accused pending an appeal from a conviction of a felony, on the ground that confinement in jail pending the appeal will result in danger to his health, copies of affidavits of physicians, which were received in evidence in support of the application, were made a part of the petition, but affidavits in opposition were not in the transcript nor made a part of the petition. Held, that the court must assume that such affidavits supported the conclusion of the trial court, and could not declare that the trial court abused its discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. § 96; *Dec. Dig. § 107.]

Petition by Frank L. Hatch, on behalf of Jackson Hatch, for a writ of habeas corpus to procure an order admitting Jackson Hatch to bail pending an appeal from a judgment of conviction. Denied.

See, also, 9 Cal. App. 333, 99 Pac. 398.

Frank Freeman and H. I. Stafford, for petitioner. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., A. M. Free, Dist. Atty., and James P. Sex, Deputy Dist. Atty., for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This is a petition by Frank L. Hatch, on behalf of Jackson Hatch, for a writ of habeas corpus. Petitioner invokes the writ for the purpose of procuring an order admitting said Jackson Hatch to bail pending an appeal to this court from a judgment of conviction and a sentence of imprisonment for felony embezzlement, made and entered in the superior court of the county of Santa Clara.

Admission to bail pending an appeal from a judgment of conviction and a sentence of imprisonment for a felony is not a matter of right. Pen. Code, § 1272. It is a matter resting in and controlled by a sound legal discretion, which should be exercised in favor of a convicted person only when circumstances of an extraordinary character have intervened. Ex parte Marks, 49 Cal. 681; Ex parte Smallman, 54 Cal. 35; Ex parte Brown, 68 Cal. 177, 8 Pac. 829; Ex parte Smith, 89 Cal. 79, 26 Pac. 638; Ex parte Turner, 112 Cal. 627, 45 Pac. 571. The determination of an application to be admitted to bail pending an appeal from a judgment of conviction should, primarily, be left to the judgment of the trial court wherein the conviction was had, and such court's determination of the matter "should not be disturbed or ignored except in an instance of manifest abuse." People v. Turner, 112 Cal. 627, 45 Pac. 571.

In this case application for admission to bail pending appeal was made to the trial court by the defendant, upon the ground that "confinement in the county jail pending the hearing and determination of his said appeal would result in great danger to his health and his physical and mental condition." It appears from the petition presented here that a full hearing of this application was had before the trial court upon the affidavits of several physicians in support of and against the application. Attached to and made a part of the petition presented here are copies of the affidavits read and received in evidence in support of said application. These affidavits show about such a case as was made and presented in Ex parte Turner, supra, where the petition for a writ of habeas corpus, based upon a refusal to admit to bail pending appeal, was denied. In addition to these affidavits petitioner has attached to, and made a part of his petition here, the reporter's transcript of the proceedings had in the lower court upon the application there made for admission to bail. It affirmatively appears from this transcript that, upon the hearing of that application, the affidavits of several physicians in opposition to the application were offered and received in evidence. The contents of these affidavits are not set forth in the transcript nor made a part of the petition presented here. It is but fair to assume, however, that they fully supported the conclusion of the trial court, and therefore we cannot say, from the petition presented here, that the court abused its discretion in denying the application. The petition is denied.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

13 Cal. App. 768

PEOPLE v. HEIVNER. (Cr. 134.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
July 15, 1910.)1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 110*)— SUFFICIENCY—LANGUAGE OF STATUTE—IN-CEST.

An information against defendant for incest, alleging that the defendant "did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously upon the person of one * * * a sister of" the defendant, substantially follows the language of the statute, and sufficiently informs the defendant that the person named is his sister.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 289-294; Dec. Dig. § 110.*]

2. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 133*)—
DEMURRER—DESIGNATION OF PERSON IN-JURED.

An allegation in an information for incest that is defective in its designation of the person injured can be attacked only by special demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 454-468; Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 519*)—EVIDENCE—CON-FESSION—VOLUNTARY CHARACTER.

A confession made by the accused to the sheriff and the district attorney, without the use of any artifice, falsehood, or deception to obtain it, and with nothing approaching inducement or coercion, except the sheriff's admonition "to tell the truth," is a voluntary confession, and admissible in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1163-1174; Dec. Dig. § 519.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

John G. Heivner was convicted of incest, and he appeals. Affirmed.

H. P. Andrews, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, for the People.

BURNETT, J. This appeal invites but brief consideration, as the questions presented involve only familiar and elementary principles.

There is no merit in the contention that the information is insufficient. It follows substantially the language of the statute, and it is not obnoxious to just criticism. No demurrer was filed, and the only suggestion of infirmity is that there is no positive allegation in the information that the prosecutrix was the sister of defendant. The averment is that "the said John G. Heivner * * * did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously upon the person of one Kate Curless, a sister of the said John G. Heivner," etc. It is clear that by this allegation the defendant was informed that Kate Curless is his sister, and it could not have been understood in any other way. Even if it were conceded that the allegation is defective, it could be attacked only by special demurrer.

Some claim is made that the confession received in evidence was not shown to be voluntary. But in this appellant is entirely mistaken. The sheriff and the district attorney both testified that no inducement was offered nor coercion used. They related all that occurred at the time, and from their testimony only an inference favorable to the ruling of the court can be drawn. The only thing suggesting an approach to coercion is found in the admonition of the sheriff, addressed to the defendant, to "tell the truth"; but this is not sufficient to avoid the confession. In State v. Staley, 14 Minn. 113 (Gil. 75), and cases therein cited, the rule is stated as follows: "The fact that the confession was made in answer to a question assuming the guilt of the person, or was obtained by artifice, falsehood, or deception, or preceded by a caution to the accused to tell the truth, if he said anything, does not render the confession inadmissible in evidence." It may be said here that there is no evidence that either the sheriff or the district attorney took any advantage of the defendant, or used any "artifice, falsehood, or deception" to obtain from him any statement; but their conduct seems to have been altogether decorous, and not violative of any right of appellant.

The court committed no error in giving or refusing instructions. Every principle of law applicable to the charge and evidence and necessary for the enlightenment of the jurors is found in the written directions of the trial judge to them, and there is nothing therein of which complaint can justly be made.

The positive testimony of the prosecutrix and the confession of defendant, together with some circumstantial evidence, afford ample support for the verdict, and we see no reason for interfering with the action of the jury.

The judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

13 Cal. App. 749

PEOPLE v. ARBERRY. (Cr. 251.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
July 11, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 8, 1910.)1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 122*)— CONFORMITY TO COMPLAINT.

Pen. Code, § 872, provides that, if it appears from the examination by the committing magistrate that a public offense has been committed, and there is sufficient cause to believe accused guilty, the magistrate must indorse on the complaint an order: "It appearing to me that the offense in the within complaint mentioned (or any offense, according to the fact, stating generally the nature thereof) has been committed," and that there being sufficient cause to believe the person charged guilty, he orders that the person charged be held to answer. Held, that the information need not define or describe the offense in the exact language of the complaint; it being sufficient if it charge generally the same offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 321-325; Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

2. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 15*)—TIME OF FILING INFORMATION—NEW INFORMATION.

Under Pen. Code, § 1008, providing that the sustaining of a demurrer to an information bars another prosecution for the same offense, unless the court directs a new information to be filed, the district attorney has a reasonable time within which to file a new information, directed to be filed by the court upon sustaining a demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 83-88; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1166½*) — APPEAL — HARMLESS ERROR.

Since, under Pen. Code, § 1008, the district attorney has a reasonable time within which to file a new information after a demurrer is sustained to an information, if an order extending the time within which to file a new information did not unreasonably extend the time, the fact that such order was made in absence of accused, or his counsel, would be immaterial; the original order directing the filing of a new information having been made in accused's presence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3120; Dec. Dig. § 1166½.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 636*)—PRESENCE OF ACCUSED—AMENDMENT OF INFORMATION.

Since the statute does not require that accused be present when the information is filed, he need not be present when an order is made, extending the time for filing a new information.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1470; Dec. Dig. § 636.*]

5. FALSE PRETENSES (§ 21*)—ATTEMPTS.

Accused falsely represented and pretended to M.'s aunt that M. had a serious disease of the heart, in that a valve of his heart was in a diseased condition, and that such disease endangered his life, and that he was apt to die therefrom at any time, and that it required immediate medical attention, and demanded a certain sum for such medical attention, and requested the aunt to pay it to him for the purpose of effecting a cure. Held, that accused was guilty of an attempt to obtain money by false pretenses.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Dec. Dig. § 21.*]

6. FALSE PRETENSES (§ 7*)—SUFFICIENCY OF PRETENSE—STATEMENT OF FACTS.

A voluntary statement by one claiming to be a physician, made to a country person ignorant of diseases, that her nephew was suffering from a valvular disease of the heart, in order to procure money from her for alleged treatment, was a statement of fact so as to constitute a false pretense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Cent. Dig. § 8; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

7. FALSE PRETENSES (§ 14*)—PROSECUTION—DEFENSES.

The fact that one to whom statements constituting false pretenses were made, in an attempt to procure money from her, did not have any money, so that it would have been impossible for accused to have obtained any, would not constitute a defense to a prosecution for attempting to obtain money by false pretenses; it being sufficient that the means used were apparently adopted to obtaining the money.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Cent. Dig. § 18; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

8. FALSE PRETENSES (§ 43*)—PROSECUTION—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution of accused for attempting to obtain money by false pretenses from a woman, by falsely representing that her nephew was suffering from heart disease, a letter which the evidence showed was written to the woman by accused under the name of "Dr. T. & Co.," after the nephew had obtained a sum from the woman and given it to accused, stating that the nephew had a serious complication and advising the woman to call at the offices of the medical company by which the letter purported to have been written, was admissible in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Cent. Dig. § 57; Dec. Dig. § 43.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 371*)—PROSECUTION—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—OTHER OFFENSES.

Accused, representing himself as the head of a medical company, told a young man who applied for advice that he was suffering from an abscess of the prostate gland, and the patient, at accused's suggestion, wrote to his aunt to procure the sum for which accused agreed to cure the disease, and a check was received from the aunt indorsed to accused, when he wrote a letter to the aunt on the letter head of the medical company, stating that her nephew was suffering from an abscess of the prostate gland, but was doing nicely "under our care," and on the next day accused wrote a letter to the aunt under the same letter head, stating that serious complications in the nephew's condition had been discovered, and advising her to call at the office of the medical company, and when she called accused stated that the nephew had a valvular disease of the heart which accused would cure for an additional sum. Held, in a prosecution for attempting to obtain money by false pretenses, by falsely representing that the nephew had valvular disease of the heart, that the letter written by accused to the aunt, stating that the nephew had an abscess of the prostate gland, was admissible in evidence to show accused's intent in making the representations as to the heart disease, not having been admitted to show another offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 830-832; Dec. Dig. § 371.*]

10. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS—CHARGES ALREADY GIVEN.

A requested instruction that, no matter how strong might be the probability of guilt, if it was nothing more than a probability, accused should be acquitted, was properly refused where the court charged that suspicion, however strong, would not justify a conviction, as the law did not permit a conviction upon suspicion, and also charged that mere probabilities were not sufficient to warrant a conviction; the charge requested being substantially covered by that given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

11. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUEST—INSTRUCTIONS ALREADY GIVEN.

A requested charge that it was not sufficient that the facts proved rendered guilt probable, but they must exclude beyond all reasonable doubt every other hypothesis than guilt, was substantially given by instructions that guilt must be proved beyond all reasonable doubt, and neither a mere preponderance nor any weight of preponderant evidence would be sufficient to authorize a conviction; and also that it was not sufficient that the circumstances proved account for and render probable accused's guilt, but they must exclude, beyond all reasonable doubt to a moral certainty, every other reasonable hypothesis than guilt, and the jury should acquit if they failed to so establish accused's guilt in a single particular.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

J. J. Arberry was convicted of attempting to obtain money by false pretenses, and he appeals from the judgment of conviction and order denying a new trial. Affirmed.

Carroll Cook, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, for the People.

COOPER, P. J. The defendant prosecutes this appeal from an order denying his motion for a new trial, and from a judgment convicting him of the crime of an attempt to obtain money by false pretenses. There is evidence which, if true (and we must so presume upon this appeal in view of the finding of the jury), shows the following facts: Ulysses Muscio, a young man about 21 years of age, resided at Edna in the county of San Luis Obispo. He had not been very well, and was troubled with pains in his back, and either needed or imagined that he needed the advice and aid of a physician. He had read in the San Francisco Examiner the advertisement of "Dr. Taylor & Co. at 721 Market street," which advertisement stated the ability and skill of the doctors in charge, and their undertaking specially to cure all diseases of men and youths. He came to San Francisco on July 18, 1909, and on the following day, with the advertisement in his hands, he went to "Dr. Taylor & Co., 721 Market street," and asked to see Dr. Taylor. The defendant appeared and stated to Muscio that he was Dr. Taylor, and at all times thereafter was addressed by Muscio as Dr. Taylor. Muscio was taken into a consultation room and examined by defendant, who by manipulation of the prostate gland obtained therefrom a milky fluid—an easy thing for a physician to do—which he showed to Muscio, and without any examination of it, microscopic or otherwise, informed him that it was pus from an abscess of the prostate gland, and demanded of Muscio $300 to cure him. Muscio having only $10 with him, defendant took that, and agreed that for $200 more he would cure him. At defendant's suggestion and dictation Muscio wrote to his aunt, Mary Tomasini, a letter as follows: "Dear aunt.—I am sick and won't be home until the latter part of the week, and I need $200. Please send it to me at once to this address." This letter was written on the letter head of "Dr. Taylor & Co." On July 22d a letter was received from the aunt, addressed to Muscio, care of "Dr. Taylor & Co.," which letter was opened by defendant and then handed back to Muscio. It contained a check for $200, which Muscio indorsed and handed to defendant, and which was paid.

Defendant then handed Muscio a receipt for $210, signed "Dr. Taylor & Co.," guaranteeing a cure of the alleged abscess of the prostate gland. On the same day a letter was mailed in San Francisco, on the letter head of "Dr. Taylor & Co.," addressed to the aunt, stating that in reply to her letter of July 22d Muscio was suffering from an abscess of the prostate gland, but that he was doing very nicely "under our care," and that he could return home in a few days. On the following day, and after the receipt of the $210, upon the same letter head, signed in typewriting and dated July 23d, there was deposited in the United States mail at San Francisco, and received by the aunt, Mrs. Tomasini, the following letter: "Since writing you yesterday in regard to your nephew Ulysses Muscio, we have discovered a serious complication, and as he is very nervous we deem it best not to say anything to him, at least until we have seen you, and would advise you to come to San Francisco at once and call at this office before seeing him, as we desire to have a personal interview with you as soon as possible. You need not be alarmed, however, as there is no immediate danger, but trust you will call as advised." After receiving this letter the aunt came to San Francisco, and was met by a relative of hers, and together they immediately went, accompanied by Muscio, to consult Dr. Spencer, who, after an examination, stated that Muscio did not have and had not had an abscess of the prostate gland. Thereafter the aunt, in company with her relative, went to the office of "Dr. Taylor & Co." and asked for Dr. Taylor, and in response thereto they were presented to defendant as being Dr. Taylor, who informed them that he was Dr. Taylor. They then went into a private office, and in answer to questions the defendant said that he had written the letter in regard to the serious complications he had discovered in Muscio's case. Defendant then stated to the aunt, in the presence and hearing of Crespi, that Muscio had a valvular disease of the heart, that he might drop dead at any moment, but that he, defendant, could cure him, that he would have to have the care of Muscio for a week or 10 days and inject serum, which he said was very expensive, but that at the end of that time Muscio could go home to his aunt and take medicines which he would prescribe for him. Defendant stated that it was worth $300 to cure Muscio of the valvular disease of the heart, but that he had been paid $200 for curing the abscess of the prostate gland, and that he would cure him of the valvular disease of the heart for the additional sum of $200. This sum was requested by the defendant from the aunt after his statement that Muscio had a valvular disease of the heart, and that he could cure him. The aunt and Crespi then left defendant's office under the pretense of getting the money, but never returned. Muscio was afterwards examined by Dr. Spencer, Dr. Lartigan, and Dr. Schmall; and they found not only that he had never had an abscess of the prostate gland, but that his heart was normal, and that he had no valvular trouble of that organ. The testimony of these physicians, which is not contradicted, is that a valvular disease of the heart can be determined with absolute certainty.

This brings us to the discussion of the errors complained of by defendant and which he claims are sufficient to justify a reversal of the case. The defendant claims that the court erred in denying his motion to dismiss the information, which was made upon the ground that prior to the filing thereof the defendant had not been legally committed by a magistrate for the offense charged in the information. It is stated in his brief that, by taking the complaint filed before the committing magistrate and the commitment and reading them together, "it will be seen that the new information filed does not charge the defendant with the same crime for which he was held to answer by the committing magistrate." It is not stated in the brief as to the respects wherein the crime charged in the information differs from the crime for which defendant was held to answer, and upon the examination we have been able to give we can find none. The complaint before the committing magistrate charged the defendant with the crime of attempting to obtain money by false and fraudulent pretenses, by falsely and willfully representing to Mary Tomasini that Muscio "had an affection and disease of the heart of a serious nature, to wit, that said Ulysses Muscio had valvular disease of the heart, and that a valve of the heart of said Ulysses Muscio was in a diseased condition, and did further pretend and represent to the said Mary Tomasini that the said affection or disease of the heart of said Ulysses Muscio did endanger the life of said Ulysses Muscio, and that because of the said affection and disease of the heart of said Ulysses Muscio he, said Ulysses Muscio, was apt to drop dead at any time, and that the said affection or disease of the heart of said Ulysses Muscio required immediate medical attention, and that said affection or disease of the heart he, the said John J. Arberry (whose real name is unknown to this complainant) could and would cure for the price or sum of two hundred dollars, and no less." At the conclusion of the testimony taken before the committing magistrate he made and indorsed on the complaint the following order, to wit: "I find that the offense as charged in the complaint, felony, to wit, attempt to obtain money by false pretenses, has been committed, and that there is sufficient cause to believe the defendant, John J. Arberry, guilty thereof, and order that he be held to answer for the charge before the honorable superior court of the city and county of San Francisco."

The amended information charged the defendant with a felony, to wit, attempt to obtain money by false pretenses, by the defendant falsely representing and pretending that Muscio "had an affection and disease of the heart of a serious nature, to wit, that said Ulysses Muscio had valvular disease of the heart, that a valve of the heart of said Ulysses Muscio was in a diseased condition, and did further pretend and represent to the said Mary Tomasini that the said affection or disease of the heart of said Ulysses Muscio was of such nature and character that said disease did endanger the life of said Ulysses Muscio, and further that because of the said nature and character of said disease and affection of the heart of said Ulysses Muscio, he, the said Ulysses Muscio, was apt to drop dead at any time, and further that the said affection or disease of the heart of said Ulysses Muscio was of such a nature that the same required immediate medical attention, and did then and there demand for such medical attention the price or sum of $200 in gold coin of the United States of America, and did then and there request the said Mary Tomasini to pay to him the said sum of $200 in gold coin of the United States of America, for the purpose of effecting a cure of said alleged affection or disease of the heart of said Ulysses Muscio."

The committing magistrate held the defendant for the crime of attempting to obtain money by false pretenses, and the information charges the defendant with the same crime. This is a sufficient compliance with the statute. In our opinion it was never contemplated that the information should contain a statement of the crime in the exact language, or word for word the same as stated in the complaint filed before the committing magistrate. The Code provides (Pen. Code, § 872) that, if it appears from the examination that a public offense has been committed, and there is sufficient cause to believe the defendant guilty thereof, he must make or indorse on the complaint an order to the effect: "It appearing to me that the offense in the within complaint mentioned (or any offense, according to the fact, stating generally the nature thereof) has been committed, and that there is sufficient cause to believe the within-named A. B. guilty thereof, I order that he be held to answer to the same." The order herein made stated generally the nature of the offense and sufficiently complied with the statute.

The demurrer of defendant was sustained to the first information. The Code (Pen. Code, § 1008) provides that when a demurrer is sustained to an indictment or information it is a bar to another prosecution for the same offense, "unless the court, being of the opinion that the objection on which the demurrer is allowed may be avoided in a new indictment or information, directs the cause to be submitted to another or the same grand jury, or directs a new information to be filed." The court upon sustaining the demurrer, being of the opinion that the objection on which the demurrer was allowed could be avoided, directed that a new information be filed. The order made by the court, as shown by the reporter's notes, did not specify any time within which the new information should be filed; but the clerk's minutes show that the district attorney was given 10 days from the date of the order in which to file such information. It is now contended that the new information was not filed within the 10 days, but within 15 days, and that the court made an order, in the absence of defendant and his counsel, allowing the district attorney the additional five days; that such order was void, and hence the court lost jurisdiction.

The section last quoted is silent as to the time in which the new information is to be filed; and it would seem that under the law the district attorney would have a reasonable time within which to file such new information. It is not contended that it was not filed within a reasonable time. The court directed the district attorney to file it. Such order was made in the presence of the defendant, and the additional time was not material, unless the court had made an order extending the time beyond reasonable limits. However, counsel has failed to call our attention to any testimony or record showing that defendant was not present when the order was made extending the time. The clerk's minutes show that the defendant was present, accompanied by his counsel, and there is nothing that we have been able to find in the reporter's notes to the contrary. Not only this, but there is nothing in the statute requiring a defendant to be present when an information or indictment is filed. If the filing of an indictment against a defendant is not a proceeding during his absence, it is difficult to see how the giving of an order extending time to file it is such proceeding.

Nor did the court err in overruling the demurrer to the amended information. It states facts sufficient to constitute a public offense. The statement that defendant was suffering from a valvular disease of the heart was a statement of a fact. It was not given as an opinion, but it was a statement voluntarily made by defendant to a person from the country, ignorant of medicine and diseases, and who had the right to rely upon a physician's honor and integrity. It is not pretended that the statement is true, and it was made just at the time and contemporaneous with the attempt to get an additional $200 from the aunt. It does not lie in the mouth of defendant to say that Mrs. Tomasini had no money, so that it would have been impossible for him to have accomplished the contemplated crime. He made the attempt to get the money. He made a false statement as to an ailment that had no existence; and not only this, but stated that he could cure it. From his statement it was worth $300 to cure an ailment that as a fact had no existence, and he agreed to cure such alleged ailment for $200. A person who has attempted to pick the pocket of another would not be allowed to defend himself by proving that there was nothing in the pocket which he attempted to pick. So a robber, who holds up and attempts to rob the United States mail, would not be allowed to call post office officials or others to prove that there was nothing of value in the mail, and hence that no robbery could have been committed. It is sufficient that the means was apparently adapted to the end in view, although circumstances independent of the will of defendant left the crime uncommitted. The profession of medicine is an honorable and useful one, and the skillful, careful, honest physician who devotes his time—often his days and nights—to the relief of suffering humanity is a blessing to the community in which he resides. But while this is true, there is probably no profession or calling which affords greater opportunities for the dishonest quack to thrive and become wealthy off the ignorance and stupidity of his patients. There is little danger of an honorable, upright physician being held to criminal account for a mistaken diagnosis; but where a dishonest physician has made a willfully false statement as to a mortal disease, solely with the view of obtaining money from the victim, the law should deal severely with such physician. We do not mean to even intimate by what has been said that the law will hold a physician liable criminally for a statement honestly but mistakenly made as to his professional judgment in regard to a disease. But the fact that one is a licensed physician will not be allowed as a cloak to shield him from all responsibility for statements willfully made, with the sordid view of obtaining the money of the unwary.

The letters sent to Mrs. Tomasini, signed in typewriting "Dr. Taylor & Co.," were properly admitted in evidence. The evidence sufficiently connected the defendant with them and with the demands and statements therein made.

The court did not commit error in allowing evidence as to the prior statement that Muscio had an abscess of the prostate gland, and the fact that the defendant received $200 to cure that. The transaction was with the same parties, from the same "Dr. Taylor & Co.," the defendant in each case representing himself to be Dr. Taylor, and each transaction was with the aunt of Muscio. It was admitted, not for the purpose of showing another and distinct crime, but to show the intent of the defendant in making the representations to the aunt that Muscio had valvular disease of the heart, and the question as to whether or not his statement was made with the intent of procuring money and in violation of the law.

The defendant complains of the refusal of the court to give the following instruction: "You are instructed that, no matter how strong may be the probability in favor of the hypothesis of guilt, if it is nothing more than a probability, the prosecution fails and the defendant must be acquitted." The court elsewhere gave the substance of the instruction. In fact, the very next instruction given at defendant's request was the following: "You are instructed that suspicion, no matter how strong it may be, cannot justify you in convicting the defendant of the crime charged. The law does not permit a conviction of a crime upon suspicion, be it ever so strong." And the court elsewhere instructed the jury that: "Mere probabilities are not sufficient to warrant a conviction."

Complaint is further made that the court refused to give an instruction asked by the defendant to the effect that it is not sufficient that the facts proved coincide with, account for, and render probable, the hypothesis of guilt, but they must exclude to a moral certainty and beyond all reasonable doubt every other hypothesis but the single one of guilt. The instruction requested related to a statement of the law in connection with circumstantial evidence; and if it was material in the case we are of the opinion that it was substantially given elsewhere. The court in other instructions stated to the jury: "The guilt of the accused must be proved and established beyond all reasonable doubt," and: "Neither a mere preponderance or any weight of preponderant evidence is sufficient for the purpose of conviction"; and finally: "It is not sufficient that the circumstances proved coincide with, account for, and therefore render probable, the hypothesis sought to be established by the prosecution; but they must exclude beyond all reasonable doubt to a normal certainty every other reasonable hypothesis but the single one of guilt. Should they fail to so establish defendant's guilt in a single particular, it is the duty of the jury to render a verdict of not guilty."

Other errors are claimed in regard to the giving or the refusal to give instructions, but to discuss them in detail would prolong this opinion to an unnecessary length. It is sufficient to say that we have examined the instructions given and the instruction refused, and we find no substantial error in the giving of any instruction or the refusal to give any. The court fairly and fully stated the substance of the law applicable to the evidence and the issue to be determined by the jury. We find no error in the record that would justify us in reversing a case that appears to have been fairly tried.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; HALL, J.

15 Cal. App. 195
PEOPLE v. T. WAH HING. (Cr. 132.)
(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Jan. 24, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 823*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CURE OF ERRORS.

Because an instruction has been given that is favorable to a defendant, the court may not make a set-off to it by one prejudicial to him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1992-1995; Dec. Dig. § 823.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 822*)—INSTRUCTIONS—ENTIRETY OF.

Instructions must be considered in their entirety, and it is not necessary that each instruction should be a complete statement of all the rules by which the jury are to be guided.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1990, 1991; Dec. Dig. § 822.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 789*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REASONABLE DOUBT.

The governing principle of instructions upon reasonable doubt is that at all times during the deliberations of the jury until they have arrived at their verdict the presumption of innocence is in favor of the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1846-1849, 1904-1922; Dec. Dig. § 789.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 789*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REASONABLE DOUBT.

Under Pen. Code, § 1096, providing that accused is presumed to be innocent until the contrary is proved, and, in case of a reasonable doubt, he is entitled to acquittal, an instruction that after the jury has been once convinced beyond a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt that conclusion must remain throughout their further deliberations, unless overcome by some view of the evidence or some process of reasoning which admits of no reasonable doubt of their first conclusion, is prejudicial, as the defendant is entitled to the presumption of innocence up to the final deliberations by the unprejudiced minds of the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 789.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 824*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REASONABLE DOUBT.

The court should give section 1093 of the Penal Code, providing that accused is presumed to be innocent, and is entitled to acquittal in case of a reasonable doubt, on its own motion, but it is not error to omit it when not asked for by the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1996-2004; Dec. Dig. § 824.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 823*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REASONABLE DOUBT—MORAL CERTAINTY.

Where the court instructed in the language of section 1826, Code Civ. Proc., that the law does not require such degree of proof as excludes the possibility of error, but moral certainty only is required, or that degree of proof which produces conviction in an unprejudiced mind, and there were other instructions requiring proof beyond a reasonable doubt, they must be read in connection with such other instructions, and the jury could not have been in doubt as to how to apply the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1992-1995; Dec. Dig. § 823.*]

7. ABORTION (§ 5*)—INDICTMENT—SUFFICIENCY.

Under the statute in regard to the crime of abortion, providing that whoever uses any instrument or other means with intent thereby to procure a miscarriage is punishable, etc., an indictment charging the use of instruments, describing them, upon the woman named, she being pregnant, with intent to procure her miscarriage, the same not being necessary to preserve her life, is sufficient, without stating how the instruments were used, as it will be presumed they were used upon her body.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Abortion, Cent. Dig. §§ 8-14; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

8. ABORTION (§ 9*)—WITNESSES (§ 330*)—EVIDENCE — CROSS-EXAMINATION — IMPEACHMENT.

In a prosecution for abortion, where the prosecuting witness testified that she had been married for about a month, and it appeared she had been pregnant about three months, a question on cross-examination as to who was the father of her child, or if any other than her husband was the father, was inadmissible, as the relevant issue was the pregnancy, and it was immaterial who was the father, and the question was inadmissible to degrade the witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Abortion, Cent. Dig. §§ 17-20; Dec. Dig. § 9;* Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1106-1108; Dec. Dig. § 330.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—PREJUDICIAL ERROR — WITNESS' STATEMENT — PROSECUTING ATTORNEY'S ARGUMENTS.

Where a witness testified on cross-examination over defendant's objection that he was approached by a third person, not in presence of defendant or with his knowledge, to give perjured testimony, and that he refused, and such third person said, "Never mind, we have the jury fixed," and the prosecuting attorney referred to it in his argument, and the defendant was found guilty, it was prejudicial error not to strike out the statement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3137-3143; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

10. ABORTION (§ 11*)—EVIDENCE—CORROBORATION.

Under Pen. Code, § 1108, providing that the defendant cannot be convicted upon the uncorroborated testimony of the woman upon whom the offense was committed, etc., in a prosecution for abortion, where the evidence of the mother and husband of the woman operated upon, pointed to a resort to some means which brought about a miscarriage, while slight corroboration, it was sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Abortion, Cent. Dig. § 22; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

11. ABORTION (§ 11*)—EVIDENCE—CORROBORATION.

Under Pen. Code, § 1108, providing that in a prosecution for abortion the defendant cannot be convicted on the uncorroborated testimony of the woman upon whom the offense was committed, it is not necessary that there should be a corroboration of the means alleged by which the abortion was produced. It is sufficient if there is corroboration as to the criminal intent, or as to the attempt to commit the crime by other means.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Abortion, Cent. Dig. § 22; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

12. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—APPEAL—PREJUDICIAL ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for abortion, where a doctor testified as to subsequent treatment of the woman operated on, and a card was placed in his hands to fix the date, and it also contained the name of the woman, and that an abortion was performed by a person bearing defendant's name, but the court did not understand from the attorneys that such statement was on it, and, when he did, he directed the jury to disregard it, it was not reversible error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3137-3143; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; J. W. Hughes, Judge.

T. Wah Hing was convicted of the crime of abortion, and he appeals. Reversed.

C. T. Jones, A. M. Seymour, and Archibald Yell, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Defendant was indicted for the crime of abortion under section 274 of the Penal Code. A demurrer for insufficiency of facts and for failure to conform to the requirements of sections 950, 951, and 952 of the Penal Code was overruled, and the defendant pleaded not guilty, and upon the trial the jury returned a verdict of guilty. Thereafter a motion was made by defendant in arrest of judgment, which being denied defendant moved for a new trial, which motion was denied. Defendant appeals from the orders denying his motions and from the judgment of conviction.

1. Appellant's first point is that the court erred in giving the following instruction: "If any one, or any number of you, after deliberating upon all the evidence in this case, shall be of the opinion that the defendant has not been proved to be guilty by the evidence adduced to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt, those entertaining that opinion should vote in favor of not guilty, and should so adhere to their opinion until convinced, beyond a reasonable doubt, that they are wrong. If, however, after a full and careful deliberation of all the evidence in the case, any one or more of you shall be of the opinion that the defendant has been proved to be guilty of the crime charged, to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt, those of you entertaining that opinion should vote in favor of guilty, and should adhere to your opinion until you are convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that you are wrong." The error assigned lies in the concluding clause of the instruction, the claim being that "each juror was told by the instruction that, if he believed the defendant had been proven guilty, he should so vote, but that he must not change his vote unless he was convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was innocent." Respondent makes answer in two ways: First, that the opening paragraph of the instruction being in appellant's favor, the converse and compensating paragraph at the conclusion cannot be complained of; second, that the instructions upon the doctrine of reasonable doubt, elsewhere given, cured whatever of error there was in the instruction and renders it harmless. It certainly cannot be seriously contended that, because an instruction has been given which is favorable to the defendant, the court may make a set-off to it by one prejudicial to him. The second answer is based upon the well-established rule that the instructions, as a body of directions to the jury, must be considered in their entirety, and that it is not necessary that each instruction should be a complete statement of all the rules by which the jury are to be guided. As was said in People v. Besold, 154 Cal. 369, 97 Pac. 874: "It is impossible to declare, in each instruction, the law governing every phase of the entire case. * * * To determine whether or not the law was properly declared for the guidance of the jury, we are to look, not to an isolated excerpt from the instructions, but to the charge as a whole." While this is true, it is also a rule that: "We must take the charge together and if, without straining any portion of the language, it harmonizes as a whole and fairly and correctly presents the law bearing on the issues tried, we will not disturb the judgment because a separate instruction does not contain all the conditions and limitations which are to be gathered from the entire text." People v. Doyell, 48 Cal. 85, 93; People v. Clark, 84 Cal. 573, 583, 24 Pac. 313.

The court gave the usual general instructions upon reasonable doubt. The governing principle of these general instructions upon that subject is that at all times during the deliberations of the jury and until they have arrived at a verdict the presumption of innocence operates in favor of the defendant. People v. McNamara, 94 Cal. 509, 514, 29 Pac. 953. It seems to us that the instruction complained of cannot be made to harmonize with the principle thus declared. Some one of the jury, before any final vote was taken or a verdict arrived at, and at a very early stage in the deliberations, may, "after full and careful deliberation of all the evidence in the case," have reached the opinion that the defendant had been proven guilty to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt, and yet, upon further discussion of the evidence, the presumption of innocence would, under the instruction, cease to operate, and this juror would be bound to adhere to his first opinion, unless convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that he was wrong. If a juror had once voted guilty, at that moment being convinced of defendant's guilt, he could not, if he followed this instruction, change his vote to not guilty, unless convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was innocent, and this regardless of any substantial doubt which might, after further deliberation, arise in his mind. The jury are told that, after once having been convinced beyond a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt, that conclusion must remain fixed and immovable throughout their further deliberations, unless that conclusion can be overcome by some view of the evidence or by some process of reasoning which admits of no reasonable doubt of the correctness of their first conclusion. Section 1096 of the Penal Code provides as follows: "A defendant in a criminal action is presumed to be innocent until the contrary is proved, and in case of a reasonable doubt, whether his guilt is satisfactorily shown, he is entitled to an acquittal." We can see no way by which practical effect can be given to this provision of the law, if, at any time short of the final deliberations and the final vote, a juror may discard the presumption of innocence and rely upon an instruction that he is not convinced beyond a reasonable doubt of defendant's innocence, or that he was wrong in his belief first formed of defendant's guilt. See People v. Maughs, 149 Cal. 253, 262, 86 Pac. 187. It is the duty of the court to give this section of the Penal Code, on its own motion, though it is not error to omit it when not asked for by the defendant (People v. Matthai, 135 Cal. 442, 445, 67 Pac. 694), and the jury were substantially so instructed. But such instruction implies, and the law is, as we have seen, that this presumption attends the defendant until a final verdict is reached. How, then, can we reconcile the instruction complained of with an instruction as to the presumption of innocence, or with an instruction that the defendant must be proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt? The court instructed the jury that they were "bound to accept the law as given by the court, and apply it to the facts of the case." It seems to us that, so long as the law clothes the defendant with the presumption of innocence, any substantial infraction of this right given him by statute should not be permitted. Presumption of innocence, under the law, can only be removed by evidence which produces conviction in an unprejudiced mind beyond reasonable doubt. That the instruction is prejudicial error we cannot doubt.

2. The court gave an instruction in the language of section 1826 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to the effect that the law does not require such degree of proof as excludes the possibility of error, but "moral certainty only is required, or that degree of proof which produces conviction in an unprejudiced mind." Defendant cites Treadwell v. Whittier, 80 Cal. 574, 22 Pac. 266, 5 L. R. A. 498, 13 Am. St. Rep. 175, and draws the conclusion, from a discussion of this section by Justices McFarland and Thornton, that it is error to give it in a criminal case; that the Legislature intended, by the expression last above quoted, "to express thereby that a mere preponderance of evidence is sufficient upon which to predicate a verdict. That is to say, the Legislature thereby attempted to state the difference generally between proof, strictly mathematical, and the degree of proof usually obtainable in judicial trials." In the case cited, Judge McFarland said: The Legislature "did not intend to use the words (moral certainty) in that relation as synonymous with proof beyond a reasonable doubt." See In re Pepper's Estate, 112 Pac. 62.

If it be conceded that the terms "moral certainty" are not the equivalent of and do not convey the thought embraced in the terms "beyond reasonable doubt," the instruction must be read in connection with the other instructions requiring the proof to be beyond all reasonable doubt; and, when so read, the jury could not have been in doubt how to apply the evidence. The situation here is quite different from that presented under the first instruction, where the general instructions cannot be made to aid or harmonize with the one complained of.

3. It is contended that the demurrer to the indictment should have been sustained. The charging portion of the indictment is as follows: " * * * Did then and there willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously use and employ upon one Mrs. Lottie Phillips, who was then and there a pregnant woman, certain instruments, to wit, a long tongue-shaped instrument made of a hard and nonflexible substance, the exact length of which instrument and the character or substance of which the same was made being unknown to this grand jury, and a long, thin instrument made of a hard and nonflexible substance about fifteen inches in length and shaped like a common round lead pencil, and the character and substance of which the same was made being unknown to this grand jury, with intent then and there and thereby to procure the miscarriage of the said Mrs. Lottie Phillips, the same not being then or there necessary to preserve the life of the said Mrs. Lottie Phillips, contrary, * * *" etc. The point of objection made is that, although the indictment is in the words of the statute, it is insufficient because the manner in which the instruments were used upon the body of the prosecuting witness is not set forth, and hence the indictment is fatally defective. Cochran v. People, 175 Ill. 28, 51 N. E. 845, is cited in support of the contention, and it must be admitted that under a statute not much different from ours the court held it to be necessary to allege the manner in which the instruments were used. In that case the indictment said "did * * * administer and use on one Stella Roberts * * * a certain instrument." The second count averred "did * * * use on and administer to one Stella Roberts," etc. The court said: "No attempt whatever is made in either count to state how or in what manner the instrument was used 'or administered.' Whether it was done 'by forcing, thrusting, and inserting said instrument into the private parts,' or in some other manner, is wholly left to inference." It was held that it was not sufficient to charge the offense in the language of the statute for the reason that the language used does not describe the act or acts constituting the offense. To the same effect Smartt v. State, 112 Tenn. 539, 80 S. W. 586, and Commonwealth v. Sinclair, 195 Mass. 100, 80 N. E. 799, are cited.

On the other hand, respondent cites the case of State v. Bly, 99 Minn. 74, 103 N. W. 834, where the charge was that defendant employed "in and on the body" of Hilda Rose, a pregnant woman, certain instruments and other means to the grand jury unknown, with intent, etc. The indictment was held sufficient. It is true that in the indictment before us the charge is that the instruments were used and employed "upon one Mrs. Lottie Phillips," and not upon her body, and it differs from the case last cited, in that it does not charge that the instruments were used on the prosecuting witness, nor does it state that the manner of use was unknown to the grand jury. Our statute provides that every person "who uses or employs any instrument or other means whatever, with intent thereby to procure the miscarriage," etc., is punishable, etc. The indictment would have been improved had it charged that the instruments were "used upon the body." Still, it seems to us that the omission of the words "the body of" raises no doubt as to what was meant, and what defendant might readily have understood to have been meant, by the language used. A miscarriage cannot well be produced except by some means applied to the body of the pregnant woman. In other respects it also seems to us that the indictment is sufficiently specific. It charges the employment of instruments, describing them, upon the woman named, she being then pregnant, with intent to procure her miscarriage, the same not being then necessary to preserve her life. We cannot see that, after a conviction under this indictment, the defendant would be in danger, through any indefiniteness in its averments, of a second conviction for the same offense, nor can we see that he was not sufficiently informed of the offense charged to enable him to prepare his defense.

4. The prosecuting witness had testified that she had been married for about a month, and it appeared that she had been pregnant for about three months. The defendant on cross-examination asked her who was the father of the child, and also to state whether or not any other man than her husband was the father of the child. The court sustained an objection to these questions, and we think rightly. The relevant issue in respect of her pregnancy was the fact of her being with child, and it was immaterial who was the father. If the questions were asked to degrade her, they would be equally inadmissible.

5. Witness O'Brien was called for the defense. He proved to be one of those witnesses, sometimes encountered, who make statements of important facts to counsel, and, when put upon the witness stand, conveniently fail to remember any of the facts so communicated. The court, under the circumstances, permitted counsel to cross-examine the witness and put questions with a view to his impeachment. Later, however, the court sustained an objection to his impeachment on the ground that the matter was collateral, and that defendant could not impeach his own witness. After the defendant had failed to elicit any of the expected testimony from the witness, the prosecution, on cross-examination, asked him if he knew the defendant, and he said he did and also that he knew one Philip O'Neil slightly. He was then asked if he, the witness, had visited the defendant's office, and testified that he had, and that no attempt was then made to induce him to commit perjury. The following then appears in the record:

"Q. Was there any inducement made after that time or any place by any person to have you commit the crime of perjury in this case? A. Yes. Q. When and where? A. On the courthouse steps. Q. By whom? A. Philip O'Neil. Q. What did he say to you? A. He asked me what it would be worth for me to testify as he wanted me. Q. And what did you say? A. I told him 'No,' that he didn't have that kind of a man. Q. What else was said? A. And he walked out and stood around there for a few minutes, and then he came out and he says, 'You can go to hell.' He says, 'We don't need your testimony.' Q. Go ahead. Tell it all, Mr. O'Brien. A. He said, 'We have got'—

"Mr. Seymour: We object to this as irrelevant, immaterial, incompetent, and not cross-examination.

"Mr. Wachhorst: It is certainly cross-examination and on the line of questions that were asked this witness on direct.

"The Court: The objection is overruled.

"Mr. Wachhorst: What was that last?

"A. He came out on the steps, and he says, 'You can go to hell.' He says, 'We don't need your testimony. We have got the jury fixed.'

"Mr. Seymour: Now, we move to strike out the answer upon the grounds stated in the objection to the question.

"The Court: Denied.

"Mr. Seymour: Exception."

There was no evidence at this or at any time that O'Neil was authorized to make this statement, and it was not made in defendant's presence nor with his knowledge. It appeared subsequently that O'Neil had done some work in the case for defendant, but no relation was shown such as would justify the inference that O'Neil's statement was at all sanctioned by the defendant. It seems to us that the matter brought out was not proper on cross-examination, was inadmissible, and was subject to an objection before the objection was made. The witness should not have been permitted to complete his damaging answer over defendant's objection, and it should have been stricken out of the record on defendant's motion. The significance of the testimony may be seen in the use made of it by the assistant district attorney in his argument to the jury. We think the testimony, as well as the use made of it on the argument to the jury, could not have failed to more or less influence their minds to defendant's prejudice.

Referring to this evidence, the assistant district attorney repeated it and, pointing to the witness then in court, who gave it, stated: "There is what confronts you, gentlemen of the jury, in considering this case. That is a thing that, as men of honor, as men of standing and reputation in this community, you should consider. It is a thing, sir, that you all resent, I believe, and you would not be a man, any one of you, if you did not resent it." How were the jury to resent the accusation that they had been "fixed" otherwise than by a verdict against the defendant, and, when appealed to by the prosecuting officer to resent the charge, how else were they to do than as demanded by him? If, in the opinion of the prosecuting officer and the court, evidence of this damaging character was not only relevant, but important, even though the statement came from a person having no license or authority from the defendant to make it, and though not made in his presence or hearing, is it not reasonable to conclude that the jury were similarly impressed?

6. When the prosecution rested, the defendant moved the court to advise the jury to acquit, upon the ground that there was no legal evidence sufficiently corroborating the testimony of Mrs. Phillips, upon whom the abortion is alleged to have been performed. The motion was denied, and the ruling is assigned as error. It is also claimed that at no time during the trial was there sufficient corroborating evidence. Section 1103 of the Penal Code provides that: "The defendant cannot be convicted upon the testimony of the woman upon whom or with whom the offense was committed, unless she is corroborated by other evidence."

Shortly after the alleged operation, Mrs. Phillips was treated by three physicians, one visiting her at her house, and two examining and treating her at the county hospital. These witnesses testified to there being present evidences of a miscarriage, but no one of them could testify how or by what means it was produced. Mrs. Phillips' mother went with her to some house on J street in Sacramento, between Seventh and Eighth, but which Mrs. Phillips testified was defendant's office, on the afternoon of the day of the alleged operation, but she did not know for what purpose her daughter went there, and did not then know of her pregnancy. Nor did she know the Chinaman she saw there. What took place between her daughter and this Chinaman she did not know; for it occurred in an adjoining room out of her hearing. She testified that in a few minutes she and her daughter went to some house on L street, which she could not locate, and was admitted by a woman and about 20 minutes thereafter the "Doctor," as she called him, came and he and her daughter went upstairs, the mother remaining on the first floor, and that in about 20 minutes her daughter came back and the two then left the house. She testified that she saw a Chinaman come into the hallway of the house, call her daughter, pass along the hall and upstairs, followed by her daughter, but she did not know him and could not say that he was the same person she saw at the J street house, and she was unable to say that she had ever seen the defendant at any time before the trial.

Witness Phillips, husband of the prosecuting witness, was sent by his wife to get some pills in the evening of the day she testified to having been operated upon. He went to defendant's office on J street. "Q. Did you have any conversation with him? A. He called me in his office. Q. Well, just say yes or no. A. Yes, sir. Q. What did he say to you? A. He wanted to know what I wanted. Q. What did you say? A. I told him my wife sent me here after pills. Q. And what did he say? A. He said, 'Oh, yes', he remembered. Q. Then what? Go on with the conversation, Mr. Phillips. A. Well, then he went to get the pills. * * * Q. Before you got the pills, Mr. Phillips—go on and tell us about that—when he left you, or just before you got the pills? A. We were in the office at that time. Q. Well, go on and tell just what occurred. A. Then we went into his laboratory, and he started talking to me, wanted to know if I had the money. Q. What did he say? A. And I told him that I had $5; that was all I had. Q. Then what did he say? A. He wanted to know when I could give him any more. I told him I could give him some next week. Q. Go ahead. A. So then he gave me the pills, and I gave him $5. Q. Then what did you do? A. I went home." He also testified that, after the pills were given to him, "he [the doctor] took a little book from the counter and wrote down in it. Q. Did you see what he put on the book? A. No, sir; I couldn't tell. Q. Was that all the conversation you had with him at that time? A. Yes, sir. Q. Where did you go? A. Went home. Q. How many pills did he give you? A. Two. Q. What time did you get home that night? A. About 7 o'clock." He testified that defendant told him to tell his wife to take the pills, but did not say how or when to take them, and that she took one of them; that he found his wife in bed. He then testified that during the night, some time after midnight, his wife passed "a clot of blood about one inch thick and two inches long," which he said was "a miscarriage." About 7 o'clock the next night she was taken to the hospital. Upon cross-examination it appeared that the witness did not tell the defendant his name, nor did he tell defendant that the woman he had operated on that day sent him.

Defendant relies upon People v. Joselyn, 39 Cal. 393. In the opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Crockett for the court it was held as essential to conviction, where the abortion is alleged to have been performed by the use of an instrument, that the use of an instrument "is the very gist of the offense; and, if every other fact testified to by her (the prosecuting witness) was true, the defendant was entitled to be acquitted, unless this also was true." Said the court: "On this vital point there is no corroboration whatever of the witness, Locke. It is proved that she was pregnant and had a miscarriage; but, aside from her testimony, there is no proof whatever that any attempt was made by any one to produce abortion, or that the miscarriage was the result of any such effort. It is not enough that the witness was corroborated in some particulars which involve no criminality in the defendant. She must also have been corroborated by circumstances, or otherwise, in at least some portion of her testimony which imputes to the defendant the commission of the crime alleged, to wit, the use of an instrument with intent to produce abortion. In this particular there was not the slightest corroboration of her testimony." Subsequently Judge Crockett rendered a "supplemental opinion of the court" in which Justice Wallace expressed no opinion. In this supplemental opinion it was said: "We do not intend to be understood as announcing that it is essential the witness should have been corroborated in respect to the particular method to which she testified as having been employed to produce an abortion, but it will be sufficient if she is corroborated by other testimony tending to show an attempt by the defendant to produce an abortion in any method. The crime consists in the attempt to produce abortion; and though the indictment in this case charges, and the witness testifies, that the defendant employed an instrument for that purpose, nevertheless, if it had been shown, for example, by other evidence, that the defendant had confessed to an attempt to produce the abortion, not by the use of instruments, but by administering a particular drug, this testimony would not only have been clearly competent, as tending to establish the criminal intent, but it would also have been a sufficient corroboration of the witness to bring the case within the requirements of the statute; for, although she would not have been corroborated in respect to the use of the instrument, she would have been corroborated as to the criminal intent, which is of the essence of the crime. The statute does not require that she should be corroborated in respect to every material fact, but only in respect to some of the material facts which constitute a necessary element of the crime alleged." Because the judgment of conviction was reversed, defendant seems to conclude that the supplemental opinion does not modify or weaken the force of the first opinion. As we interpret the decision, the case was reversed for the reason, as stated—"aside from her (prosecutrix's) testimony that there is no proof whatever that any attempt was made by any one to produce abortion, or that the miscarriage was the result of any such effort." It is quite clear to our minds that the court did materially modify its first opinion by the supplemental opinion, for it there holds that it is not necessary that there should be corroboration of the means alleged in the indictment by which the abortion was produced, but that it is sufficient if there is corroboration as to the criminal intent, or as to the attempt to commit the crime by any means. The court distinctly recedes from its first position that the use of an instrument with intent to perform an abortion "is the very gist of the offense; and, if every other fact testified to by her was true, the defendant was entitled to be acquitted, unless this also was true."

We think the modified view taken in the case is the correct view, and we also think the corroboration, though slight and largely circumstantial, was sufficient. Mrs. Phillips had testified that when she and her mother went to defendant's office he examined her in a room adjoining the room where her mother was; that he inquired whether she was a married woman, and, being told that she was, asked her why she wanted to get rid of her child, which she explained by stating the condition of her breasts, which, it appeared otherwise than by her own statement, had been "burnt off"; that he told her she would have to go to a certain house on L street, which she did, with her mother; and that he soon after came there and performed the operation with instruments which she described. She became ill that same evening and took to her bed, and sent her husband to defendant after some medicine; that he went and later returned with pills which she took. It appeared from her testimony and that of her husband that her sickness increased and culminated in a miscarriage about 1 o'clock of that night; that her illness was serious, and the doctor who was called the next day advised taking her to the county hospital, which was done that evening. At the hospital two physicians examined her, administered ether, and treated the affected parts in a way to arrest further injurious effects from what the physicians diagnosed as a miscarriage. The jury had the right to consider the circumstance that the operation was not performed at defendant's office, but that Mrs. Phillips and her mother went to a more secluded place, where they were admitted by a woman without question, and where the operation was performed. The jury also had the right to consider the readiness shown by defendant in understanding the purpose of Mr. Phillips' coming for pills, without asking him any questions. It had appeared that defendant was to have been paid $25 for his services. The fact of his asking if Phillips had the money, his paying $5 for two pills and promising more the next week, pointed to a tacit understanding of the two men as to what had taken place between defendant and Mrs.

Phillips. It may not have pointed to the use of instruments, but it did point to a resort to some means which had brought on the sickness and miscarriage of Mrs. Phillips. These circumstances, it is true, are but slight corroboration, but it was for the jury to determine their weight.

7. Witness Dr. Harris testified for the prosecution concerning the treatment given Mrs. Phillips at the county hospital. In the course of his examination a card was placed in his hands such as was their custom to use in recording certain facts relating to the admission of patients. Apparently the primary object in seeking to introduce this card was to fix the date of Mrs. Phillips' going to the hospital. Objection was made to it by defendant because the date appeared to have been changed and this change was not accounted for. Counsel for defendant examined the card and knew what it contained; so also did the district attorney. The court also examined it, but, as it stated, did not notice the objectionable entry made on it. The card was admitted over defendant's objection and showed the following: "Name: Mrs. W. Phillips. Date of entry: June 26th, 1908. Previous history: Abortion done by T. Wah Hing, June 25th, 1908."

"Mr. Seymour: Does your honor rule that is admissible in evidence?"

"The Court: No; I didn't know that was on there. I admit I had not read it."

"Mr. Yell: I move to strike out that portion of it."

"The Court: I think that is proper. That will be stricken out, gentlemen of the jury. Disregard it. It is hearsay evidence and not admissible. I did not know that was on the card. I had not examined it myself. I understood from the gentlemen that such statements were on the other side of the card."

"Mr. Jones: That is the very thing I objected to."

"The Court: Disregard it, gentlemen of the jury."

The court then read that portion of the card deemed admissible. The matter objected to was obviously inadmissible, and was obviously prejudicial to defendant. But it appears to have been read to the jury through inadvertence. All the attorneys present knew it was on the card. The district attorney ought himself to have avoided reading or having it read, and defendant's attorneys should have been alert in seeing that it was not read. If we were satisfied that the district attorney purposely got the entry before the jury we should be inclined to treat it as prejudicial error. The court doubtless, had its attention been called to it, would have given direction not to read that part of the card. We cannot, under the circumstances, however prejudicial the statement was, find in it cause for a reversal of the judgment.

There are some other assignments of error of more or less importance, but they relate to the admission of evidence which may not be again offered should there be a retrial of the case.

For the reasons already pointed out, the judgment and order are reversed.

BURNETT, J., concurs in the judgment.

HART, J. I concur in the judgment on the ground that the ruling of the court allowing in evidence the declaration of Philip O'Neil to the witness O'Brien was palpably erroneous and prejudicial to the defendant. It is very clear, as Justice CHIPMAN points out, that the declaration of O'Neil to the effect that the defendant had the jury "fixed," from which declaration the inevitable implication is that the jury had been corruptly influenced to find in favor of the defendant, regardless of the evidence, could not in any degree bind the defendant under any known rule of law, it not having been made in his presence or shown to have been made by his authority or with his knowledge or consent. Nothing could be more obvious than that the effect of such testimony was to greatly prejudice the rights of the accused, and that it was regarded as a fact of persuasive significance is evidenced by the stress laid upon it by the assistant district attorney in his address to the jury. The proposition may be safely laid down without the least apprehension of probable confutation that the average juror, having listened to testimony showing or tending to show that he had, while the case was still pending, entered into an agreement to return a certain verdict, would thus be influenced to decide the case in opposition to the result which it was charged he had agreed to bring about, whether the evidence justified such decision or not. In the case at bar the assistant district attorney vigorously insisted that the jury should resent the charge involved in O'Neil's alleged declaration, and, as the presiding justice clearly shows, there was no way by which such resentment could be manifested by the jury but by a verdict of guilty, for, manifestly, this was the only course that was open to the jury to demonstrate that they had not been "fixed." It is readily perceivable how jurors, under such circumstances, even if they honestly entertained a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused, might, as a protection to their own reputations, thus be led into voting against their honest convictions as to the guilt or innocence of the accused. Certainly the evidence complained of would quite naturally furnish a very strong motive for the return of a verdict of guilty, whether the evidence warranted such a verdict or not, and there is therefore no escape from the conclusion reached by the presiding justice that the ruling allowing said evidence was highly prejudicial.

But I cannot agree with the conclusion reached in the main opinion with respect to the instruction therein declared to be prejudicially erroneous. A careful analysis of said instruction and a consideration of it in connection with the entire charge of the court will in my opinion compel the conclusion that it could not have damaged the defendant in the slightest degree. In other words, I do not think that the instruction could have had the effect of influencing the jury against the defendant or of contravening any of his substantial rights, and I am therefore of the opinion that but for the error involved in the ruling of the court admitting O'Neil's alleged declaration with regard to the attitude of the jury toward the defendant the judgment and order could be consistently upheld.

The instruction complained of is set out in full in the main opinion, and the part thereof which it is claimed told the jury in effect that the defendant's innocence must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt reads as follows: "If, however, after a full and careful deliberation of all the evidence in the case, any one or more of you shall be of the opinion that the defendant has been proved to be guilty of the crime charged, to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt, those of you entertaining that opinion should vote in favor of guilty, and should adhere to your opinion until you are convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that you are wrong." (Italics mine.) Very clearly the italicized portion of the foregoing instruction should not have been given to the jury. If this language carried with it any meaning at all, it was plainly erroneous; but, in view of the verdict and considered in connection with the language immediately preceding it and with other instructions on the doctrine of reasonable doubt, the language criticised seems to me to be perfectly meaningless, and therefore as having conveyed nothing to the jury that could have militated against the substantial rights of the defendant. The proof required to justify the conviction of one charged with a crime must be such as to convince the jurors of his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, and, of course, it will not be questioned that, where one or more of the jurors are so convinced by the evidence, it is their duty to adhere to that conclusion. It is difficult to imagine a case where a juror has been convinced from a consideration of all the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused that such juror could have any occasion to change his mind or the conclusion at which he has arrived. When he has reached that state of mind as to the evidence, he has, so far as he is concerned as a component part of the jury, reached a verdict, and, where all the jurors have reached the same verdict, there is nothing remaining to be done but to return such verdict to the court. Obviously, when the jurors have properly reached a verdict of guilty in a criminal case, they are then not concerned about how they may change their minds and arrive at an opposite conclusion, for, having found in the record the quantum of proof essential to a conviction, there would be neither necessity nor authority for trying to undo what they had already found that they were justified by the evidence in doing.

The fallacy of the position that the effect of the instruction or the part thereof animadverted upon was to prejudice the rights of the defendant lies in the assumption that a juror who has been convinced by the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendant might not adhere to that conviction so long as other members of the jury have not reached the same state of mind with regard to the case. No such assumption is in my opinion allowable. It is, of course, the duty of the jury to deliberate upon their verdict—that is, to give the evidence full and fair consideration—and it is certainly no less the presumption that one juror, having reached the conclusion that the defendant is guilty under the evidence, has been thus persuaded only after proper deliberation upon his verdict than it is where all the jurors have arrived at a like conclusion. To assume that a juror is likely to be influenced by the attitude or arguments of his confrères is to assume that he has not been satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused, and in that case the erroneous instruction would not apply to him. If a juror wavers in reaching a verdict, it is quite apparent that he has some doubt as to what his verdict should be, and clearly he has not then arrived at that state of mind with reference to the case which would make the instruction applicable to him and he then would or could not be concerned about it. But, as stated, there is no rule or principle or reason authorizing the assumption that a juror, having been satisfied by the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused, will change his mind merely because his colleagues have been unable to come to the same conclusion, or because the other jurors may by argument or otherwise try to convince him that he is wrong. The presumption is, as stated, that he has formed his conclusion after due deliberation, and, having done so, it is not clear why it is not his duty to stick to such conclusion. And, having been satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt, it is not reasonable to suppose that he would in the least be influenced by any declaration of the court, whether it involved a correct or incorrect statement of the law, as to the conditions on which he might disrobe his mind of the conviction that the accused has been proved to be guilty by the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt. The jury were repeatedly told by the court that they were not authorized to find the defendant guilty unless the evidence so convinced them beyond a reasonable doubt. They were so told in the first part of the very instruction complained of here, and it must be assumed that they acted on that rule in reaching their verdict. Having thus arrived at a verdict, what possible effect could the criticised language of the instruction have on them one way or the other? The very moment they reached a verdict of guilty the language complained of became meaningless and absolutely without force. There was then no necessity for them to examine or consider or pay any attention to that part of the instruction. This would have been true if the criticised part of the instruction had been couched in proper language, for the verdict represented the crystallization of the final conclusion they had reached under the instructions that, to arrive at a verdict of guilty, they must necessarily be convinced thereof beyond a reasonable doubt.

Of course, if the instruction had said in so many words that the defendant must prove his innocence by evidence satisfying the jury beyond a reasonable doubt, a very much different question would obviously be submitted here. But the criticised language can only be made to have that effect by construction, and then, as I have tried to show, it was to take effect or apply only after the jury had by the evidence reached that state of mind with reference to the case which rendered it absolutely necessary for them to return their conclusion in the form of a verdict into court.

My conclusion is, as is manifest, that while, as stated, the instruction is to be condemned, it could not, in my judgment, have operated prejudicially against the defendant.

159 Cal. 441

McGREGOR v. BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF TOWN OF BURLINGAME et al.

SAME v. BUCK, Judge.

(S. F. 5,636.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 8, 1911.)

1. ELECTIONS (§ 275*) — CONTEST — JURISDICTION.

Under Municipal Corporation Act (St. 1883, c. 49) § 860, providing that the board of trustees of a town shall judge of all election returns, and determine contested elections of all city officers, the board has jurisdiction to hear and determine a contest where there is a tie vote, and no result has been declared by the election officers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 250-256; Dec. Dig. § 275.*]

2. STATUTES (§ 225¾*)—CONSTRUCTION—RE-ENACTMENT OF PRIOR STATUTE.

Where the phraseology of two enactments is essentially dissimilar, the rule that a statute embodying the terms of a prior statute must be read in the light of the interpretation given to such a prior statute does not apply.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 306; Dec. Dig. § 225¾.*]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 80*)—EXECUTIVE POWERS—ENCROACHMENT ON JUDICIARY.

Municipal Corporation Act (St. 1883, c. 49) § 860, providing that the board of trustees of towns shall judge of the qualification of its members and of all election returns, and determine contested elections of all city officers, does not conflict with the constitutional declaration that the judicial power shall be vested in certain courts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 145; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

4. ELECTIONS (§ 269*) — CONTEST — MODE OF PROCEDURE.

Since there is no statute prescribing any details of procedure to be followed by the trustees of a town in proceedings for contesting elections, that body may adopt any mode which preserves to the parties fundamental essentials of notice and hearing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 245, 246; Dec. Dig. § 269.*]

5. ELECTIONS (§ 275*) — CONTEST — POSTPONEMENT OF HEARING—LOSS OF JURISDICTION.

In an election contest, that the board of trustees of a town indefinitely postponed the hearing of the contest did not destroy the jurisdiction, where it appeared that the action was properly taken in deference to the ruling of the superior court, which had held that it had exclusive power to determine the controversy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 250-256; Dec. Dig. § 275.*]

6. ELECTIONS (§ 275*) — CONTEST — JURISDICTION—CONFLICTING JURISDICTIONS.

Municipal Corporation Act (St. 1883, c. 49) § 860, declares that the board of trustees shall judge of the qualifications of its members, and of all election returns, and determine election contests of all city officers. Code Civ. Proc. § 1124a, authorizes a contest in the superior court, where an election for an office of a county, city and county, city, or political subdivision of either has been declared by the canvassing body to have resulted in a tie. Held, that the jurisdiction of the trustees is not exclusive, so as to oust the jurisdiction of the district court once taken in such contest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 250-256; Dec. Dig. § 275.*]

7. PROHIBITION (§ 3*) — OTHER REMEDY—CONFLICT OF JURISDICTION.

That the jurisdiction of town trustees was first obtained in an election contest, did not call for the issuance of a writ of prohibition to prevent the district court from entertaining jurisdiction of the same contest; the jurisdiction being concurrent, the proper procedure is to apply to the district court to stay the proceeding on the ground of another action pending.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. §§ 4-19; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

Angellotti, J., dissenting in part.

In Bank. Application for a writ of mandate by C. J. McGregor against the Board of Trustees of the Town of Burlingame and others, to compel the board to hear and determine an election contest, and for a writ of prohibition by the same against George H. Buck, Judge of the Superior Court of San Mateo County, to restrain the said court from proceeding with the trial of said contest. Writ of mandate to the Board of Trustees issued, and alternative writ of prohibition to the Superior Court dismissed.

Mastick & Partridge, for petitioner. Ross & Ross, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. The first of the above-entitled matters is an application for a writ of mandate to compel the board of trustees of the town of Burlingame to hear and determine an alleged contest of an election. The second is an application for a writ of prohibition to restrain the superior court of San Mateo county from proceeding with the trial of a contest of the same election. Both proceedings were transferred to this court after judgment (denying the relief sought) in the District Court of Appeal for the First appellate district, to which court the applications had first been presented.

Burlingame is incorporated under the municipal corporation act as a town of the sixth class. At a municipal election held on April 11, 1910, in said town, for the election, among other officers, of five town trustees, the petitioner and one Sheehan were candidates for said office of town trustee. The election returns showed the receipt of an equal number of votes by McGregor and Sheehan, and the town trustees, canvassing the returns, declared the result to be a tie vote between said candidates. On April 18, 1910, McGregor filed with the town trustees his written and verified statement, contesting the election and alleging that votes had been illegally received and counted in favor of Sheehan, and that fewer legal votes had been cast for Sheehan than for the contestant. Thereupon the town trustees issued a citation to Sheehan, calling upon him to appear on the 2d day of May to answer the said contest. Subsequent to April 18th Sheehan filed with the county clerk of San Mateo county a contest likewise contesting said election, and the superior court caused a citation to be issued and served upon McGregor. On the return day McGregor appeared and objected to the jurisdiction of said court. The court held, however, that it had jurisdiction, and that the town trustees had none. The trustees, learning of this, declined to try the contest before them, and the present proceedings were instituted, as above stated, to compel the town trustees to hear the one contest and to restrain the superior court from hearing the other.

Under section 860 of the municipal corporation act (Stats. 1883, p. 269), "the board of trustees shall judge of the qualifications of its members and of all election returns and determine contested elections of all city officers." If the power to "determine contested elections" includes the authority to inquire and decide whether, notwithstanding a showing on the face of the returns of a tie vote, one or another of the candidates in fact received a plurality, this section clearly confers upon the board of trustees the jurisdiction to hear and determine the contest instituted by McGregor. It is argued by the respondents that the term "contested elections" means no more than a proceeding to question the correctness of a finding by the canvassing officer or board that one or another of the candidates was elected. Upon a tie vote, they say, there is no election, and hence nothing to contest.

That the casting of a plurality of the votes in favor of one candidate is essential to a choice or election of that candidate is true. Const. art. 20, § 13; Pol. Code, §§ 1066, 1067. But it does not follow that because no candidate is declared elected, there has been no election. If one or the other has received a plurality of the legal votes, he is in fact elected, and should be so declared. We think the grant, in general terms, of power to determine "contested elections" or "election contests" may well be interpreted to cover the case of an attack upon the correctness of a finding that there was a tie vote, as well as that of a return that one candidate, rather than the other, has been elected. This construction, which tends to prevent the nullification of the legally expressed will of the voters through the error or misconduct of the officers charged with the conduct of the election or the canvass of the returns, finds support in a number of decisions. Erdman v. Barrett, 89 Pa. 321; Nicholls v. Barrick, 27 Colo. 432, 62 Pac. 202; Bowler v. Eisenhood, 1 S. D. 577, 48 N. W. 136, 12 L. R. A. 705; People v. Robertson, 27 Mich. 116; Shepard v. Allen (Ill.) 17 N. E. 756; Imboden v. Cully, 94 Ky. 45, 21 S. W. 339; Webster v. Gilman, 91 Ill. 324. The object of the proceeding, as is said in Erdman v. Barrett, supra, "is to determine who has received the highest number of votes legally cast. The court is to investigate the election, to correct alleged errors when they are shown to exist, and to determine the true result."

Respondents place great reliance upon the consideration that the sections of the Code of Civil Procedure (1111 et seq.) providing for the contesting of certain elections in the superior court did not, prior to the enactment of section 1124a in 1907, authorize a contest where the declared result of the election was a tie. Lamb v. Webb, 151 Cal. 451, 91 Pac. 102, 646. This limitation of the scope of the proceeding in the superior court resulted from the restricted language employed in the Code sections. The only privilege given by section 1111 is to "contest the right of any person declared elected to an office. * * *" This language necessarily excludes the idea of a contest where no person has been declared elected. See Sweeny v. Adams, 141 Cal. 558, 75 Pac. 182. But this reasoning has no application to the broad and general grant of power to "determine contested elections." No good reason appears for holding that the Legislature, in enacting the municipal corporation act, used the phrase "contested elections" in the narrow sense which must be attributed to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. The phraseology of the two enactments being essentially dissimilar, there is no ground for applying the rule that a statute embodying the terms of a prior statute must be read in the light of the interpretation given to such prior statute.

This court has held in several instances that the Legislature may, by provisions similar to that of section 860 of the municipal corporation act, vest in a city council the power of judging of the election of the city officers. Such provisions do not conflict with the constitutional declaration that the judicial power shall be vested in certain courts. People v. Metzker, 47 Cal. 524; People v. Bingham, 82 Cal. 238, 22 Pac. 1039; Carter v. Superior Court, 138 Cal. 150, 70 Pac. 1067. It would follow, therefore, from the views hereinabove expressed, that the writ of mandate should issue, requiring the trustees of Burlingame to exercise their jurisdiction by proceeding to hear and determine the contest instituted by McGregor.

The answer which purports to have been filed on behalf of two of the respondents does not, we think, raise any issue affecting the duty of the board to proceed. The averments of the answer go to the sufficiency of the verification of the contestant's statement, and to the form of the notice or citation served on Sheehan. But, since there is no statute prescribing any details of procedure to be followed by the council, that body may adopt any mode which preserves to the parties the fundamental essentials of notice and hearing. 10 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 819. See Norwood v. Kenfield, 30 Cal. 393. The defects here relied upon were not such as should be held to deprive the board of the right to determine the questions raised by the statement of contest. The further fact alleged in the answer that, on May 2, 1910, the board indefinitely postponed the hearing of the contest did not destroy the jurisdiction. This action was properly taken in deference to the ruling of the superior court, which had held that it had exclusive power to determine the controversy. The board could not, if it would, deprive the contestant and the public of the right to have the contest decided in the manner provided by law. But, in fact, all that was done was to withhold action until the question of power should be finally determined.

There remains, however, the question whether the jurisdiction of the trustees is exclusive, so as to oust the superior court of the jurisdiction conferred upon it by section 1124a of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section, added to the Code in 1907, authorizes a contest in the superior court where an election for an office of a county, city and county, city, or political subdivision of either has been declared by the canvassing body to have resulted in a tie.

In Carter v. Superior Court, supra, we had occasion to consider the effect upon the jurisdiction of superior courts of provisions giving to city councils power to judge of the elections of officers. The court quoted and approved the views expressed by Judge Dillon in his work on Municipal Corporations (vol. 1, § 200) as follows: "The principle is that the jurisdiction of the court remains, unless it appears with unequivocal certainty that the Legislature intended to take it away." It is then stated that language, such as 'shall be the judges of the qualifications' or 'of the qualifications and election of its own members,' and of those of the other officers of the corporation, will not ordinarily have that effect, but will be construed to afford a cumulative or primary tribunal only, not an exclusive one. A provision that no court should take cognizance of election cases by quo warranto, etc., would doubtless be sufficient to divest the jurisdiction of the judicial tribunals. And so, in general, of a provision that the council should have the sole or final power of deciding elections. 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 202. See, also, §§ 203, 204, 205."

Applying these rules, it was held in the Carter Case that a provision in the Santa Rosa charter that the decision of the city council in election contests should be "final and conclusive" plainly manifested an intent to confer exclusive jurisdiction on the council. Section 860 of the municipal corporation act does not, however, contain any language of like import. It merely declares that the trustees "shall judge of all election returns and determine contested elections of all city officers." It does not appear "with unequivocal certainty," or with any degree of certainty, that the Legislature intended to divest the superior court of its jurisdiction to proceed under the sections of the Code of Civil Procedure. As was held by the District Court of Appeal for the Second appellate district in Dawson v. Superior Court, 110 Pac. 479, the jurisdiction conferred upon the city council by section 860 is not exclusive, but is concurrent with that of the superior court. Since the writ of prohibition lies only to arrest proceedings without or in excess of jurisdiction, it is clear that the relief sought against the superior court cannot be granted. That court has jurisdiction, concurrent with that of the city council, to entertain and determine the contest. We are not here called upon to consider the effect of conflicting adjudications that might be made by the two tribunals. It is claimed by the petitioner that, as the jurisdiction of the city council was first invoked, the judgment of that body would prevail. But if this be so, the point is not one that goes to the jurisdiction of the superior court. At most, that court would be bound, upon being informed by proper pleading and proof that a tribunal of concurrent jurisdiction had first taken cognizance of the controversy, to stay a trial and decision until the proceedings first instituted should be disposed of. The plea in such case would be analogous to that of "another action pending." A failure to recognize the effect of such plea would be mere error, to be corrected on appeal. State v. Withrow, 108 Mo. 1, 18 S. W. 41. If McGregor should hereafter abandon or dismiss his contest before the trustees, there would be nothing to prevent the determination of the contest in the superior court.

Clearly, then, that court cannot be said to be without jurisdiction to entertain the contest.

The writ of mandate to the board of trustees will issue as prayed.

The alternative writ of prohibition to the superior court is discharged, and the proceeding dismissed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

ANGELLOTTI, J. I concur in the judgment directing the issuance of a writ of mandate to the board of trustees, and dissent from the judgment denying a writ of prohibition against the superior court; my opinion being that the jurisdiction of the board of trustees of the town of Burlingame over the election contest between McGregor and Sheehan is, under our statute, exclusive.

159 Cal. 439

LUND v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (S. F. 5,506.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 8, 1911.)

CERTIORARI (§ 27*)—RIGHT TO REVIEW.

A writ of review to determine the jurisdiction of the probate judge of a superior court to fix the fee of an attorney who prosecuted a suit for an infant under guardianship, alleged to have been previously fixed by another judge of that court in the case in which the services were rendered, presents no question of law where it appears from the record that the last-mentioned judge did not fix the fee, but that the attorney relies on an agreement with the guardian ad litem, so that the writ must be discharged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Certiorari, Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

In Bank. Petition by P. R. Lund for certiorari against the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and J. V. Coffey, judge thereof. Writ discharged.

Jas. P. Sweeney, for petitioner. J. K. Johnson, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Writ of review was issued from this court under the following allegations set forth in a verified petition: Frank B. Del Carlo, a minor, through his guardian ad litem. Frank Del Carlo, duly and regularly appointed, brought an action in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco against the United Railroads of San Francisco, to recover damages for personal injuries. The action was assigned to the department presided over by the Honorable Frank J. Murasky. The guardian ad litem employed petitioner, an attorney at law, to prosecute the action on behalf of the minor. Leave to compromise the action was obtained from the superior court, and the action was compromised and settled for the sum of $1,300. The superior court in which the action was thus compromised and settled "allowed petitioner an attorney's fee in the sum of $650." Thereafter, in the probate department of the superior court, presided over by the Honorable J. V. Coffey, Frank Del Carlo was appointed guardian of the estate of the minor, and from the last-named court a citation was issued to petitioner to show cause why the judge in probate should not fix the compensation of petitioner for his services rendered in the litigation against the United Railroads above set forth. In response to this citation petitioner made answer and showing that his fee had been fixed by the Honorable Frank J. Murasky in the sum of $650, and for this reason objected to the jurisdiction of the court in probate to proceed with the hearing of the matter. Notwithstanding this, the court in probate made its order fixing petitioner's compensation in the sum of $250, and requiring him to pay over $50 of the $300 which he had collected and retained under the compromise.

It was under these allegations of fact that the order was issued to determine the question of the jurisdiction of the probate court to make its order fixing the fee of petitioner, when that fee had already been previously fixed by another department having jurisdiction of the litigation, in prosecution of which the services were rendered. Cole v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. 90, 49 Am. Rep. 78. But upon the presentation here of the record it is established that no such order was made by the Honorable F. J. Murasky, and that no order at all was made by him, fixing the fee of petitioner. Moreover, that petitioner before the probate court did not make the contention that such an order had been made by the Honorable F. J. Murasky, but, to the contrary, contended that he was entitled to a fee of $650 by virtue of a written agreement made with the guardian ad litem of the minor, by which he was to receive 50 per cent. of any recovery had from the United Railroads.

Under these facts no question of law is presented, and the writ is therefore discharged.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.

159 Cal. 425

In re PARSONS' ESTATE.
HYNES v. CASHMAN et al.
(S. F. 5,638.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 7, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 544*)—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE.

Where the record contains no bill of exceptions showing the evidence considered, the only question that can be considered is whether the record is sufficient to sustain the order.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2412-2426; Dec. Dig. § 544.*]

2. WILLS (§ 399*)—APPEAL—RECORD—CONFLICT IN EVIDENCE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1327, limits the time within which proceedings to revoke the probate of a will may be commenced to one year after the will has been admitted to probate. On appeal from an order dismissing a petition to revoke the probate of a will, the petition showed that it was filed May 7, 1909, and the order dismissing the petition recited that the will was admitted to probate by an order "duly given and made on the 4th day of May, 1908." The transcript of the record also set forth the order admitting the will to probate, the certificate of proof and facts found, and the certificates of the clerk showing the date of the filing thereof. The order admitting the will to probate declared that it was admitted on May 4, 1908, and the certificate of the judge attached to the will bears the same date; but the certificates of filing showed that both documents were filed on May 12, 1908. Held, that the evidence was sufficient to sustain an order of the court dismissing the petition for failure to file within one year after the will was admitted to probate, as the court on appeal must consider as conclusive the recital in the order appealed from as to the date admitting the will to probate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 868; Dec. Dig. § 399.*]

3. WILLS (§ 353*)—PROBATE PROCEEDINGS—ORDER ADMITTING WILL TO PROBATE—FILING.

The filing by the clerk of an order signed by the judge is not an essential or necessary part of the making of an order admitting a will to probate; the proper record of such admission being in the minutes of the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 809; Dec. Dig. § 353.*]

4. WILLS (§ 260*)—PROCEEDINGS TO REVOKE PROBATE—LIMITATIONS.

Where a proceeding to revoke the probate of a will is begun more than one year after the will was admitted to probate, it is properly dismissed under Code Civ. Proc. § 1327, limiting the time within which such contests may be commenced to one year after the will has been admitted to probate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 602; Dec. Dig. § 260.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

George Ayling filed a petition against W. E. Cashman, executor of the estate of Jemima Parsons, deceased, and others, to revoke the probate of the will of Jemima Parsons. The court dismissed the petition on motion of Cashman, and M. J. Hynes, administrator of the estate of George Ayling, deceased, appeals from the order of dismissal. Affirmed.

Cullinan & Hickey, John J. O'Toole, and Darwin C. De Golia, for appellant. J. W. Dorsey, W. E. Cashman, E. J. Talbott, Lewis F. Byington, Harris & Hess, Jordan, Rowe & Brann, John A. Percy, W. H. Barrows, G. W. Haight, and Naphtaly & Freidenrich, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The will of Jemima Parsons, deceased, was admitted to probate in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, by an order made by the court and signed by the judge thereof. W. E. Cashman was duly appointed executor of the estate, and letters testamentary thereon were issued to him on May 12, 1908. On May 7, 1909, George Ayling, claiming to be the cousin and sole heir of the decedent, filed a contest, or petition to revoke the probate of said will. Thereafter, Cashman, as executor, and another party, as a legatee under the will, moved the court to dismiss Ayling's petition on the ground that it was filed more than one year after the will was admitted to probate, and that, consequently, under section 1327, Code of Civil Procedure, such petition or proceeding to revoke the probate of the will could not be maintained. The court granted said motion and thereupon made an order dismissing said contest and petition. Ayling afterwards died, and M. J. Hynes, having been appointed special administrator of his estate, appeals from said order of dismissal.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The record contains no bill of exceptions showing the evidence taken and considered by the court upon the hearing of the motion. None was prepared or settled. The only question we can consider on this appeal, therefore, is whether or not the record, or what may be treated as the judgment roll, is sufficient to sustain the order. In re Ryer, 110 Cal. 559, 560, 42 Pac. 1082; Miller v. Lux, 100 Cal. 612, 35 Pac. 345, 639; Estate of Page, 57 Cal. 240; Estate of Isaacs, 30 Cal. 111.

If the contest or petition for revocation filed by Ayling is to be deemed the initiation of the proceeding, the only papers in the transcript which we could consider are Ayling's petition, the two papers called "motions," and the order of dismissal. The petition shows that it was filed on May 7, 1909, and the order recites, or finds, that the will was admitted to probate by an order "duly given and made on the 4th day of May, 1908." Section 1327, Code of Civil Procedure, limits the time within which such contests after probate or petition for revocation may be commenced to one year after the will has been admitted to probate. Estate of Sbarboro, 63 Cal. 7; Estate of Davis, 136 Cal. 594, 69 Pac. 412. As error must be made to appear and all legal intendments are in favor of the regularity and validity of the action of the court below, it is obvious that, if this is considered as the record, the order is regular and valid.

The transcript also sets forth the order admitting the will to probate and the certificate of proof and facts found, together with the certificates of the clerk showing the date of the filing thereof. The appellant contends that these papers must also be considered as a part of the record and that they show that the will was not admitted to probate until May 12, 1908, which was less than one year prior to the commencement of the contest.

The order admitting the will to probate is in the usual form, is signed by the judge, and declares that it was "done in open court this 4th day of May, 1908." The certificate of the judge attached to the will bears the same date. These certainly constitute ample evidence that the will was admitted to probate on that date. The certificates of filing show that both documents were filed on May 12, 1908. This does not prove that the order was not made on May 4th, or that it was not made until May 12th. The filing by the clerk of an order signed by the judge is not an essential or necessary part of the making of an order, or of the admission of a will to probate. It is well settled that such order need not be signed or filed. The proper record thereof is in the minutes of the court. If the entry in the minutes is considered a necessary part of the making of such order, the point would not aid the appellant, for the transcript does not show when it was entered. If the clerk has performed his duty, as we must presume he did in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, he entered the order in the minutes immediately after it was made. However this may be, upon this appeal and upon this record we must consider as conclusive the recital in the order appealed from, which has the effect of a finding that the proofs upon the hearing showed that the will was admitted to probate on May 4, 1908. The contest, being filed more than a year thereafter, was unauthorized, and the proceeding was properly dismissed.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

159 Cal. 429

SCUDDER v. PERCE. (L. A. 2,348.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 7, 1911.)

1. PARTNERSHIP (§ 311*) — DISSOLUTION — AGREEMENT — CONSTRUCTION — "EARNED AND COLLECTED."

A partnership agreement provided that on dissolution the partners shall make a just and final account; that the gains and increase, either in money or in fixtures and furniture, debts, or otherwise, shall be divided between the partners, share and share alike; and that after making the division the first party should pay to the second party $1,000; and that the second party shall transfer and assign to the first party all interest in the office, laboratory, furniture, and fixtures and in the good will of the business, and in all gains "of said business other than moneys earned and collected." Held, that it was the duty of the second party on the payment of the $1,000 to transfer to the first party all the property of the firm, except such moneys of the partnership as had actually been collected, and the exception did not include outstanding uncollected accounts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 718-725; Dec. Dig. § 311.*]

2. CONTRACTS (§ 156*) — CONSTRUCTION — GENERAL AND SPECIFIC PROVISIONS.

When general and specific provisions of a contract deal with the same subject-matter, the specific provisions, if inconsistent with the general ones, are to control.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes Cal. Rep. 114-117 P.—5

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 737; Dec. Dig. § 156.*]

3. CONTRACTS (§ 153*)—CONSTRUCTION—CONSTRUCTION AS A WHOLE.

All parts of a contract are to be given effect, if this may be done without doing violence to the manifest intention of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 734; Dec. Dig. § 153.*]

4. CONTRACTS (§ 152*)—CONSTRUCTION—ORDINARY MEANING.

The terms of a contract are to be construed according to the ordinary and usual acceptation of the language, unless an intent that they are to be construed otherwise plainly appears.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 732, 733, 738; Dec. Dig. § 152.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by H. Ford Scudder against L. A. Perce. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appealed to the Court of Appeals, which affirmed the judgment, and a hearing was ordered before the Supreme Court. Reversed, with directions.

Denio & Hart, for appellant. F. A. Knight, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. The appeal is from the judgment on the judgment roll. The question presented is the true construction of a partnership agreement.

The facts found by the court, so far as necessary to this consideration, are that defendant was a physician and surgeon with an established practice in the town of Long Beach. He entered into a partnership agreement with plaintiff, who also was a physician and surgeon, but without practice in Long Beach. By the terms of the agreement the partnership was to continue until a given date, when it became optional with either party to terminate the relationship. Plaintiff was to pay and did pay $1,000 down on account of the purchase price for his interest in the partnership, and was to continue to pay therefor at the rate of $50 a month until the full sum of $4,000 had been paid. The provision of the partnership agreement touching the termination of the contract is as follows: "That at the end or other sooner determination of their copartnership the said copartners, each to the other, shall and will make a true, just and final account of all things relating to their said business, and in all things truly adjust the same; that all and every of the stock and gains and increase thereof which shall appear to be remaining, either in money, goods, fixtures and furniture, debts or otherwise, shall be divided between them, share and share alike. It being distinctly understood that at the expiration of said one year, as aforesaid, in case either of the parties hereto decide to terminate and after making the division hereinbefore provided, that the party of the first part will pay to the party of the second part the sum of one thousand ($1,000) dollars; and the party of the second part shall thereupon transfer and assign to the party of the first part all his interest in and to all the office and laboratory furniture and fixtures and in the good will of said business, and in all gains of said business other than moneys earned and collected." The controversy between the parties arises over the meaning of the language here quoted and in particular over the meaning of the words italicised. Plaintiff sued, demanding the payment of the $1,000, and insisted that he was entitled under the contract to one-half of the moneys earned by the partnership and not collected; in other words, to one-half of the book accounts. Defendant answered, expressing his willingness to pay the $1,000, but contending that he was entitled upon this payment to all of the uncollected book accounts. The trial court construed the contract in accordance with plaintiff's contention. The Court of Appeals took the same view of it, and a hearing before this court was ordered.

It is to be remembered that this is not an action for the reformation of a written instrument. It is simply an action calling for a legal construction of the terms of a written instrument in the light of the circumstances surrounding its execution as found by the trial court. It is to be noted, also, that there is no question here involved of an ambiguity, latent or patent. By the terms of the contract it became the duty of the defendant upon its termination to pay to plaintiff the sum of $1,000, and upon that payment it became the duty of the plaintiff to make over to the defendant all his interest in the business and in its property, other than his interest in the moneys of the partnership which had been "earned and collected." There can be no possible doubt of the meaning of this language. It excepts from the operation of the transfer which plaintiff was to make only such moneys of the partnership as had actually been collected. As to those moneys, the agreement elsewhere provided for their equal division between the partners. Color and force for the construction adopted by the trial court is found in the language preceding, to the effect that an accounting should be had, and that "all and every of the stock and gains and increase thereof which shall appear to be remaining, either in money, goods, fixtures and furniture, debts or otherwise, shall be divided between them, share and share alike." And it is said that a provision for an accounting would be idle, and a provision that the debts (meaning debts due the partnership) should be divided equally between them would be meaningless, if it was contemplated that upon a tender by defendant of $1,000 all of the property, including these debts, was to be transferred to him. The difficulty with this argument is that it proves too much. If, upon the tender, the debts were not to be transferred, then neither were the goods, fixtures, and furniture, as to which it is also specifically provided in the first clause that they should be divided equally between the partners, and as to which in the last clause of the agreement it is also specifically provided that a transfer of them should be made to the defendant. Nor can it be said that an accounting under the construction contended for by appellant would be a vain thing, since that accounting might very properly go, upon the one hand, to the amount of moneys which had been actually collected, and of which plaintiff was entitled to one-half, and, upon the other hand, to the amount of moneys properly chargeable and not collected, which, upon the dissolution of the partnership, would go to the defendant, who retained the business and the books and continued in the practice, and to whom naturally the collection of the debts due from his patients would properly fall.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

But if it be conceded that up to this point the arguments for each construction of the contract are of equal weight, certain considerations yet to be adverted to give determinative force to the construction contended for by appellant. The first of these is the familiar rule that when general and specific provisions of a contract deal with the same subject-matter, the specific provisions, if inconsistent with the general provisions, are of controlling force. If, therefore, it be said that by the general provision accounts are to be taken and the properties of the partnership, including the book accounts, are to be divided between the partners equally, this must be considered as controlled by the specific provision that upon the payment of $1,000 all assets of the partnership, including the book accounts, shall become the property of the defendant. The second consideration is that all parts of a contract are to be given effect, if this may be done without doing violence to the manifest expressed intent of the parties, and that the terms of a contract are to be construed according to the ordinary and usual acceptance of the language, unless an intent that they should be construed otherwise plainly appears. Appellant's construction of the contract gives to the italicized language the meaning which it naturally and ordinarily bears. The respondent's construction, on the other hand, is a distinct change in the meaning of the contract and amounts to a judicial reformation of it, by which reformation it would be made to say that there should be excepted from the transfer all moneys earned and not collected, when the contract itself declares that there shall be excepted from the contract only the moneys earned and actually collected.

Since the sole error into which the trial court fell was in the construction of the terms of a written instrument, a new trial is unnecessary. The judgment is therefore reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment in accordance with the construction of the contract herein expressed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

(159 Cal. 434)

CLOUSE et al. v. CITY OF SAN DIEGO
et al. (L. A. 2,503.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 8, 1911.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 330*)—PROCEEDS OF BONDS—EXPENDITURE—IMPROVEMENTS—MANNER OF MAKING—"MUNICIPAL AFFAIR."

San Diego City Charter, art. 6, c. 2, § 13, provides that the common council shall determine the necessity for public improvements, and that where the ordinary revenues are insufficient, bonds may be issued, the proceedings for which shall be in accordance with the general laws relating to municipal bonded debts, but the charter is silent as to how money so raised shall be spent. Held that, in the silence of the charter, the expenditure of the money was not a "municipal affair" within Const. art. 11, § 6, providing that city charters shall be controlled by general laws, "except in municipal affairs," so that the general law followed as to the mode of issuing the bonds for the improvement, St. 1901, c. 32, § 9, was controlling, which forbids spending such funds, except on competitive bidding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 854-855; Dec. Dig. § 330.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, p. 4619; vol. 8, p. 7726.]

2. PLEADING (§ 8*)—NECESSITY OF PLEADING FACTS.

In an action by taxpayers to enjoin the making of public improvements for which city bonds had been sold otherwise than by contract, let by competition, an answer which charges that plaintiffs were contractors, acting in collusion, in order that some of them might obtain contracts for the proposed work and profit thereby, but which wholly fails to plead any facts showing collusion, is bad on demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 12-28; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 993*)—ACTIONS—INJUNCTION—RIGHT TO SUE.

The mere fact that a method of paying for municipal work which is contrary to the statute might be expensive and wasteful, and might preclude responsible contractors from securing it, gives a citizen of the municipality a sufficient standing to maintain an action for an injunction to prevent the illegal expenditure.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2158-2161; Dec. Dig. § 993.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

Action by J. E. Clouse and others against the City of San Diego and others, to restrain the expenditure of the proceeds of certain bonds. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. R. Andrews, for appellants. Haines & Haines, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment on the pleadings after defendant's refusal to amend its answer, to which a demurrer had been sustained.

The city of San Diego had sold bonds, and the proceeds of the sale were to be used for certain purposes, including the building, construction, and acquisition of designated roads and boulevards. After the sale of the bonds and before the commencement of this action, an ordinance was adopted, whereby the board of public works of the city of San Diego was authorized "to employ men and teams by the day and to purchase all necessary material for the construction of all of said boulevards, roads, and like, except the boulevards to be constructed in the Fourteen Hundred Acre Public Park." Respondents sued as taxpayers to restrain the board of works from the expenditure of the money derived from the sale of said bonds, except upon contracts awarded according to the provisions of section 9 of the act of 1901, which had been followed in voting for the authorization of the bonds. Stats. 1901, p. 30. Plaintiffs contended that the ordinance was void so far as it provided the manner of doing the work and purchasing material without previous advertisement and the letting of contracts, because it was inconsistent with the provisions of the said act of 1901.

After demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled, defendant answered, averring that the indebtedness for the work in question was authorized at a bond election held under the provisions of its own charter, and not under those of the act of 1901 above mentioned, although admitting that said indebtedness was incurred according to the manner prescribed in said general statute, asserting that the ordinance in question was adopted by due authority of law; and as a separate defense alleging on information and belief that plaintiffs were contractors, acting in collusion, to the end that some of them might obtain contracts to do the work in question and derive large profits therefrom. A general demurrer to this answer was sustained, and, defendant declining to amend, judgment went for plaintiffs, and the city of San Diego and its officers were perpetually enjoined from expending any of the sums which had been realized from the sale of bonds in the manner indicated by the municipal ordinance.

Appellants invoke section 13 of chapter 2, article 6, of the charter of San Diego in support of its assertion that the charter gives the city power to incur bonded indebtedness. The provision cited is as follows: "Whenever the common council shall determine that the public interest or necessity demands the acquisition, construction, or completion of any municipal buildings, bridges, sewers, water works, water rights, reservoir sites, rights of way for pipes, aqueducts, flumes or other conduits, or any other property or appliances suitable or proper for supplying said city or its inhabitants with water, or other municipal improvements, the cost of which will be too great to be paid out of the ordinary annual income and revenue of said city, the said common council may contract bonded indebtedness for said purposes, or any of them, and the proceedings taken for incurring such indebtedness shall be in accordance with the mode and manner prescribed by the provisions of the general laws of the state of California, relative to incurring bonded indebtedness by municipalities, in force at the time such proceedings are taken. Said common council may also contract bonded indebtedness for any other purpose authorized by this charter or the general law of the state of California; provided, that the proceedings taken therefor shall be in accordance with the provisions of the general law in force at the time such proceedings are taken."

The contention is made on behalf of appellants that this section is broad enough to confer authority to create the indebtedness; that, although the method of securing the money is that prescribed by general law, the power itself comes from the charter and relates to a "municipal affair," over which general statutes have no control (section 6, art. 11, Const.); and that the expenditure of the fund for the purposes of road making and the like being also a "municipal affair," the manner of securing and paying for material and labor to be used in such improvements is not subject to the direction of general statutes in cases where municipal ordinances have been made applicable.

Respondents admit that in a general sense street improvement is a "municipal affair," but they assert that in this case, where the charter is silent upon the subject of power to devote the ordinary revenues of the city to street improvements and leaves that matter to the Vrooman act, the expenditure of this money is not a "municipal affair" beyond the power of legislative regulation. In support of this position they quote the following language from Fragley v. Phelan, 126 Cal. 395, 58 Pac. 928: "If, however, the charter of a city, whether given to it by the Legislature prior to the Constitution of 1879, or framed by a board of freeholders, contains no provision in reference to subjects which might have been included therein, that city or its inhabitants is not thereby freed from legislative control. The Legislature is vested with the lawmaking power of the state, and the general laws passed by it have force in all parts of the state, unless, by virtue of some provision in the Constitution, such effect is limited, or the lawmaking power has been lodged elsewhere. A city cannot claim to be exempt from general laws relating to municipal affairs if there is no provision relating to such affairs in the charter under which it is acting, whether such charter is one framed by itself or was given to it by the Legislature."

Counsel for appellants maintain that as the charter does provide for the levy of taxes by the common council to carry on the different departments of the municipal government; gives the council authority to open, close, widen, lay out, and otherwise deal with public highways; and establishes a street fund from which shall be paid all expenses for street improvements not otherwise provided for in the charter—that there is ample authority for the construction of streets out of the ordinary revenue of the city without the help of section 26 of the Vrooman act (St. 1891, c. 147) or any other provision of general law. Whether we regard the authority to raise the fund as being derived from the charter which has adopted the method of the Vrooman act, or from that general statute itself, the fact remains that no scheme of expenditure has been provided in the charter for the payment of this money, and we are convinced that the statute of 1901 must be followed and the work must be done according to contract as therein commanded. While the charter does confer certain powers upon the common council in the matter of laying out and repairing streets and the like, no rules are made by charter for the payment of the money used in such improvement. It follows that the demurrer to the first defense set up in the answer was properly sustained. Matthews v. Town of Livermore, 156 Cal. 294, 104 Pac. 303.

We need not review in detail the second defense sought to be pleaded in the answer. Suffice it to say that it utterly fails to set up any facts showing collusion. The demurrer to it was properly sustained.

There remains only to consider appellants' contention that their demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained because of failure to disclose plaintiffs' right of action, in that the sort of injury which plaintiffs, as citizens, would suffer, is not therein described. We think it is sufficient answer to this contention that a method of paying for work in a manner not prescribed by law might be expensive and wasteful, and that contractors capable of giving the best service might be precluded from participating in the effort to secure contracts to do the work. This would give plaintiffs, as citizens, sufficient standing to maintain this action. Winn v. Shaw, 87 Cal. 636, 25 Pac. 968; Crampton v. Zabriskie, 101 U. S. 601, 25 L. Ed. 1070; Barry v. Goad, 89 Cal. 222, 26 Pac. 785; Bradford v. San Francisco, 112 Cal. 543, 44 Pac. 912.

It follows that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

(159 Cal. 459)

WEBSTER v. SOMER et al. (S. F. 5,320.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 10, 1911.
Rehearing Denied April 7, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 935*)—REVIEW—ORDER OPENING DEFAULT.

The Supreme Court favors a hearing on the merits in deciding appeals from orders setting aside default judgments.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 935.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 139*)—DEFAULT JUDGMENT—VACATING.

The trial court has necessarily much discretion in passing upon applications to vacate a default judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, on the ground of excusable neglect and inadvertence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 265-268; Dec. Dig. § 139.*]

3. JUDGMENT (§ 138*)—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—VACATING DEFAULT JUDGMENT.

Where a default was entered October 30th, and notice of a motion to set aside the default and for permission to file an answer on the ground of excusable neglect and inadvertence, to be made December 13th, was served on December 4th, and the evidence warranted the trial court in concluding that defendant had acted in good faith, and believed he had done all that was essential to a defense on the merits, and the setting aside of the default could not prejudice plaintiff except to require him to show that his claim to have title quieted based wholly on documentary evidence, was well founded, there was no abuse of discretion in setting aside the default.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 249-254; Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

4. TAXATION (§ 769*)—TAX DEED—CORRECTING DEED.

Since Pol. Code, § 3898, requires a tax deed to recite the facts necessary to authorize the sale and conveyance, if a tax deed did not recite that there was a written authorization from the State Controller to the tax collector to sell the property as required by section 3897 in order to authorize a sale, and the recital of publication of notice by the tax collector before selling was defective, the tax collector had authority to issue a corrected deed containing such recitals, though such a deed is not expressly authorized by statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1533-1536; Dec. Dig. § 769.*]

5. TAXATION (§ 734*)—TAX DEEDS—IRREGULARITIES.

Real estate was assessed to the owner at a certain sum "less mortgage $900." There was an outstanding mortgage by the owner for $700, and the mortgagee had assigned his mortgage to a society to secure a loan to him of $250. Held, that the irregularity in assuming that there was a mortgage to the society and assessing it avoided the tax deed based upon such assessment, Pol. Code, § 3623, providing that no mistake in the name of the owner or supposed owner of the realty shall render the assessment invalid, not curing such irregularity, since the mistake was not merely one as to the owner's name.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 734.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by George A. Webster against

George Somer and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. M. Anthony, for appellant. Jordan & Brann and Jordan, Rowe & Brann, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is an action to quiet plaintiff's title to a lot of land 75 by 150 feet on London street, in the city and county of San Francisco. Defendant had judgment that he was the absolute owner thereof, and enjoining plaintiff from claiming any interest therein. This is an appeal by plaintiff from such judgment.

It is contended that the trial court erred in granting defendant's motion to set aside his default for not answering after his demurrer to plaintiff's complaint had been overruled with leave to him to answer within 20 days. The demurrer was overruled September 27, 1907, and notice thereof served on defendant's attorneys on October 1, 1907. No answer having been filed, defendant's default was entered October 30, 1907. No judgment was ever entered on this default. On December 4, 1907, defendant served his notice of motion to be made December 13, 1907, for a setting aside of the default, and permission to file his answer on the ground of excusable neglect and inadvertence, with his affidavits in support thereof, and on December 5, 1907, served his verified answer. This motion was contested, and, having been heard and submitted on December 20, 1907, was granted on January 9, 1908, on condition of payment by defendant to plaintiff of $50. This amount was deposited by defendant with the clerk of the court for plaintiff, but has never been accepted by him.

We have carefully considered the facts relied on in support of the motion, and, under all the circumstances, do not feel that we would be warranted in holding that the trial court abused its discretion in granting the same. The motion to set aside the default was made within a reasonable time after the default and the granting of the motion involved no possible prejudice to plaintiff except the necessity of showing that his claim against defendant, a claim based wholly on documentary evidence, was well founded. There was sufficient in the evidence to warrant the trial court in concluding that defendant believed that he had done all that was necessary to insure a defense of the action on the merits, and that he was acting in good faith throughout. The disposition of this court in favor of a hearing on the merits is well known by reason of its decisions on appeal from such orders as the one under review. In the matter of applications for relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, much is necessarily left to the discretion of the trial court. While the situation here was such that we would probably not have felt justified in interfering had the trial court denied the motion, we cannot say that it abused its discretion in granting it. Merchants' Ad-Sign Co. v. Los Angeles, etc., Co., 128 Cal. 619, 61 Pac. 277.

Plaintiff's claim that he is the owner of the property involved is based solely on certain tax proceedings founded on an assessment for state and county taxes for the year 1896. In support of his claim, plaintiff offered in evidence a conveyance of the property to the state of California by Edward J. Smith, tax collector of the "county of San Francisco," dated July 7, 1902. This deed contained the recitals required by section 3785 of the Political Code, reciting an assessment of the property here involved for the year 1896 at $250 to "Fr. V. Sassinek No. 33 National Slavonic Society," the nonpayment of the tax thereon or any portion thereof, the amount for which it was sold to the state, being $2.43 for tax for county purposes, $1.07 tax for state purposes, and 94 cents accruing costs and charges, an aggregate of $4.41, the sale of said property on July 3, 1897, for said $4.44 delinquent taxes and charges to the state of California as required by section 3771 of the Political Code, a description of the property so sold (being the property here involved), the time when the right of redemption had expired, viz., July 5, 1902, and that no person had redeemed the property. The deed was duly acknowledged and recorded. Plaintiff followed up this deed with a deed from Edward J. Smith, tax collector of the city and county of San Francisco, to F. J. Ghiselli, plaintiff's grantor, purporting to convey said property to Ghiselli as the purchaser thereof for $230 from the state at a public sale had on March 11, 1905, under the provisions of section 3897 of the Political Code. Section 3898 of the Political Code requires such a deed to recite the facts necessary to authorize such a sale and conveyance, and the deed offered was defective, in that it failed to recite that there was a written authorization from the state controller to the tax collector to sell the property, as is required by section 3897 of the Political Code before any sale can be made. There was also a defect in the recital of publication of notice by the tax collector before making the sale. An objection to this deed was sustained. Plaintiff subsequently offered a new deed from the state of California by the tax collector of the city and county of San Francisco to said Ghiselli, based upon said public sale and fully complying with all the requirements of the law as to such deeds, and showing the facts which authorized such sale. An objection of defendant to the reception of this deed in evidence was sustained by the trial court, and error is here predicated on this ruling. The only claim made in support of this ruling is that there is no provision of statute authorizing the issuance of a new or correction deed. No such statute is essential. The law requires the tax collector to make a deed complying with its terms, and, until he had done so, he had not complied with its mandate, and could be compelled by mandamus to do so. Grimm v. O'Connell, 54 Cal. 523. What was said in Fox v. Townsend, 152 Cal. 51, 91 Pac. 1004, 1007, in relation to correction deeds by the tax collector to the state, is applicable here. The court said: "Certain correction deeds were made by the tax collector to the state, and it is urged that these deeds were without authority and void. The general principles governing such correction deeds are well settled. When a tax deed does not conform in its recitals to the facts the officer is authorized to execute a second and corrected deed, but he has no power to execute a second deed which shall misstate the facts respecting any proceedings prior to its execution. Such a deed would be void. The power and the duty of the public officer is not exhausted by the execution of an irregular or imperfect tax deed"—citing authorities. The objection made to the introduction of this deed was not well based. The only other evidence introduced by plaintiff was evidence showing that he had acquired Ghiselli's title.

Upon this evidence, including the correction deed, plaintiff was entitled to judgment that he was the owner of the land, unless the evidence introduced by him showed the invalidity of the deeds. See Klumpke v. Baker, 131 Cal. 80, 63 Pac. 137, 676. The deed to the state was primary evidence of a proper assessment, equalization, levy of tax, nonpayment of tax, a sale as prescribed by law, nonredemption of the property, and that the person who executed the deed was the proper officer (section 3786, Pol. Code), and, so far as the Legislature could make it, was conclusive evidence of the regularity of all other proceedings (section 3787, Pol. Code). Unless successfully impeached by the defendant, its effect was to convey to the state the absolute title to the property described therein. Section 3787, Pol. Code. The correction deed from the tax collector was prima facie evidence of all facts recited therein (section 3898, Pol. Code), and the facts so recited showed a vesting of the title of the state in plaintiff's grantor.

The facts relied upon by the defendants to overcome the effect of these deeds are practically conceded, and are substantially as follows: The land itself was assessed to George Somer for the year 1896, the real estate being assessed at $450 and the improvements thereon at $900, making a total of $1,350, with a deduction on account of mortgage of $900. The following is a copy of that part of the assessment roll stating these values: "Real estate $450. Imp. $900. Total $1350. Less mortgage $900." The tax on this assessment had been paid. Somer had given a mortgage on the property to one Krshak and his wife for $700, which had been duly recorded. Krshak had borrowed $250 from the Fr. V. Sasinek No. 33 National Slavonic Society, and to secure the debt had given to said society a contract which Krshak called a "mortgage upon a mortgage" covering the same property. It was, in effect, an assignment of the Somer mortgage as collateral security, and nothing more, though in form a mortgage on the lot. It was duly recorded as a mortgage. The mortgage of Somer to Krshak for $700 had apparently been regularly assessed for 1896 as a mortgage interest, and the tax paid thereon. The purported mortgage of the Slavonic Society was also assessed separately as a mortgage interest in the real property. The tax deed, as before stated, was based on the last-mentioned assessment. The case of the holder of the tax title is predicated upon the provision of section 3628 of the Political Code that "no mistake in the name of the owner or supposed owner of real property shall render the assessment thereof invalid." The argument is that the law in force at the time of these transactions provided that a mortgage on land constituted a taxable interest therein, to be taxed separately to the owner of the mortgage, the value of which was to be deducted from the total assessed value of the property, as was done in this instance; that the assessment of the property in three parcels, or parts—one to the owner of the land, one to the owner of the Krshak mortgage, and another to the owner of the Slavonic Society mortgage—was, in effect, an assessment of three parcels of property, and that the only defect therein was that the assessment of the interest represented by the society mortgage was a mistake since there was no such mortgage, in fact, that this interest really belonged to Somer, and that it was an assessment of property to the wrong person; in other words, a mistake in the name of the owner, which, under the provision above quoted, would be immaterial and would not affect the validity of the sale.

The theory of the provision of section 3628 is that the owner must be charged with knowledge of the property which he owns, that it is his duty to list the same for assessment and to see that he pays the taxes thereon, and that when endeavoring to ascertain the amount of his tax he must search until he finds his property—if not in his own name, then in such name as the assessor has listed it. If there was nothing more than a mistake in the name in which the property was assessed, the provision of section 3628 would clearly be applicable. But we have here more than a mistake in the name. There was a mistake in assuming—as this assessment did—that there was any such mortgage interest as that which was assessed to the Slavonic Society. The substantial objection to this assessment is not based solely upon the mistake in the name of the person to whom this interest was assessed. It is that the method of assessing the property was such as would naturally mislead the owner in his search for the particulars of his assessment. The entry opposite his property, where it is assessed to himself, did not inform him that there were two mortgages against it. The word "mortgage" is in the singular number, and it gave him notice only that there was somewhere another assessment against the mortgage interest of the value of $900. He had no knowledge, actual or constructive, of the society mortgage, so-called. As a mortgage it was absolutely void. He knew of the mortgage to Krshak, and that it was only $700. Having examined further and found that mortgage, his natural inference would be that there was no other. The finding of the Krshak mortgage, properly assessed, would satisfy the inquiry invited by the reference in his own assessment, and he had nothing to cause suspicion that there was another assessment charged upon a mortgage interest which did not exist. While it may have been his duty—and may still be his duty—to pay the remainder of the tax due from him upon the $200 valuation, which was represented by the assessment of the society mortgage, being the difference between the Krshak mortgage and the $900 mortgage deduction, it cannot be held that such a glaring and deceptive irregularity in the method of assessment is cured by the provision that a mistake in the name shall not invalidate it. Furthermore, so far as appears, the assessment of the society mortgage was for too large a sum. The Krshak mortgage was for $700, and, if it was assessed for its full amount, there was left but $200 of the assessed valuation to be represented by the society mortgage. The evidence is that this assessment was for $250, making an excess of $50 in the amount upon which the tax was computed. The tax for which the sale was made would therefore be excessive upon this theory of the case.

For these reasons, we think the court below correctly held that the tax deed was invalid.

The judgment is affirmed.

BEATTY, O. J., does not participate in the foregoing.

(159 Cal. 456)

PEOPLE v. TRESCHENKO. (Cr. 1,595.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 9, 1911.
Rehearing Denied April 7, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 589*)—CONTINUANCE—GROUNDS—FAILURE TO FILE TRANSCRIPT OF TESTIMONY AT PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION.

Where the reporter fails to file within the time prescribed by law a transcript of the testimony at the preliminary examination, the court may grant a continuance until the transcript is filed, and may compel the prompt filing thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 589.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1166*)—REFUSAL TO GRANT CONTINUANCE—HARMLESS ERROR.

Refusal to grant a continuance on the ground that the testimony at the preliminary examination has not been filed as required by law is not prejudicial to accused where a continuance is sought only to show by the transcript that he was not represented by counsel, which fact may be shown by other evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3110-3112; Dec. Dig. § 1166.*]

3. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 140*)—MOTION TO SET ASIDE INFORMATION—PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION.

A motion by accused to set aside the information on the ground that he has not been legally committed because he was not represented by counsel on his preliminary examination is properly denied, in the absence of evidence supporting it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Dec. Dig. § 140.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1038*)—APPEAL—OBJECTIONS BELOW—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction in the language of the Code defining murder and manslaughter and their degrees being good as far as it goes, where accused makes no request for further explanation, he may not complain on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2646; Dec. Dig. § 1038.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 977*)—JUDGMENT—TIME TO PRONOUNCE.

Under Pen. Code, §§ 1191, 1202, requiring the court to fix a time for judgment not less than two nor more than five days after verdict, and empowering the court to extend the time not more than 10 days longer to hear any motion for new trial, to warrant an extension, the motion need not be actually pending, but the court on the counsel of accused declaring that he desires to move for a new trial may extend the time for pronouncing the judgment beyond the 5 days and less than 15 days.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2482-2502; Dec. Dig. § 977.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Demetry Treschenko was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Philip C. Boardman, Emerson W. Read, Ernest B. D. Spagnoli, and Thos. Bartow (Spagnoli & Spagnoli, of counsel), for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., Chas. M. Fickert, Dist. Atty., and Jas. F. Brennan, Asst. Dist. Atty., for the People.

HENSHAW, J. The appellant was convicted of murder in the first degree and the death penalty was imposed. Upon this appeal he contends:

1. That the court erred in refusing to grant a continuance requested upon the ground that the evidence and testimony taken in the police court upon the preliminary examination had not been written up and filed in the office of the clerk of the superior court as required by law. The court, having denied this motion, directed the defendant to plead to the information. Defendant thereupon moved that the information be set aside upon the ground that he had not been legally committed for the reason that he had not been represented by counsel upon his preliminary examination in the police court, and that, through his ignorance of and unfamiliarity with the English language, he did not understand his right to be represented by counsel. Where nonperformance of an official duty is shown, such as the failure of the reporter to file a transcript of the testimony taken at the preliminary examination within the time prescribed by the law, the court might well have granted a continuance until this was done, and likewise have taken measures to see that it was promptly done. But it may not be said that the court's refusal to grant the motion amounted to error, unless it can be seen that the defendant was prejudiced in a substantial right, and this is not made to appear; for, upon the motion which followed to set aside the information on the ground that he was not represented by counsel, and to support which motion he desired the transcript of the proceedings upon the preliminary examination, such a transcript while evidence was not the only evidence available to defendant. If the grounds of his motion were true, he could at the time of its presentation have supported it by affidavit. As this record stands, there is no evidence whatsoever in support of the motion, and it was therefore properly denied.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

2. The court instructed the jury in the language of the Code as to the definition of murder and manslaughter, their kinds, and degrees. Complaint is made that these instructions confused and misled the jury. The court, however, adopted the language of the Code, and no instruction in elaboration or exposition of the principles of the code definitions was requested by defendant. The plain and explicit language of the code sections could not mislead a jury.

3. Defendant moved for a new trial; his motion being based on the following state of facts as disclosed by the record: After recordation of the verdict the court, addressing counsel, said:

"How with reference to the sentence, gentlemen?

"Mr. Boardman (for defendant): We will want time to move for a new trial and to have the record.

"Mr. Hanley (for the prosecution): The 25th?

"The Court: September 25th for judgment?

"Mr. Hanley: A week from to-morrow.

"The Court: A week from to-morrow?

"Mr. Boardman: That is satisfactory."

It is contended that the court in thus postponing the pronouncement of judgment for a period of more than five days after the verdict violated the provisions of section 1191 of the Penal Code, and that under the provisions of section 1202 of the same Code defendant was entitled to a new trial. In support of this position Rankin v. Superior Court, 157 Cal. 189, 106 Pac. 718, is relied on. Section 1191 contemplates that judgment shall be pronounced in not less than two nor more than five days after the verdict or plea, provided that the court may extend the time, not more than ten days longer for the purpose of hearing or determining any motion for a new trial or in arrest of judgment. In the case of Rankin v. Superior Court the verdict was returned upon September 10, 1909, and the 7th of January, 1910, was fixed by the court as the date for pronouncing judgment. This date was far beyond the time to which, under any power, the court could delay pronouncing judgment. In the case at bar the time which the court fixed—seven days after verdict, was within fifteen days—the maximum time allowed, excepting in cases of probation or insanity. It is not necessary for the exercise of the court's discretion in extending the time beyond the five days and less than the fifteen days that a motion for new trial should actually be pending and undetermined. It is sufficient, as in the case here presented, that a motion for a new trial was in contemplation, that the defendant's counsel declared that they desired to move for a new trial, and expressed themselves as satisfied with the date which the court fixed, which was within the maximum limit of fifteen days which the statute allows.

Consideration of no other questions being asked upon this appeal, for the reasons given, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.; SHAW, J.

159 Cal. 448

DOUELLE v. SHOO et al. (S. F. 5,755.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 8, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 458*)—SUPERSEDEAS PROCEEDINGS—UNDERTAKING.

In a suit for a partnership accounting, the court entered what was styled an "interlocutory decree" ordering an accounting, and the appointment of a referee for that purpose, and ordering that the sheriff restore plaintiff to the possession of the premises, and that defendants be enjoined from interfering with plaintiff in the exercise of his rights as managing partner, and that the making of further findings of fact and law and other matters to be determined be reserved until the coming in of the referee's report. Defendants appealed, and gave an undertaking staying the execution of the judgment in so far as it directed the delivery of real or personal property. Thereafter the superior court filed its decision adopting facts found by the referee finding the interests of the parties and entered a decree designated as a "final decree," whereby defendants were enjoined from interfering with plaintiff in his rights as partner, whereupon defendants filed a notice of appeal from such decree. Held, that defendants not having applied to have the amount of a bond fixed under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 943, 945, to stay execution on the final decree, were not entitled to a writ of supersedeas to protect their possession pending the appeal, a contention that the first decree was in fact a final judgment or final as to the injunction, and that the giving of a bond to stay execution on it prevented the court from carrying the same into effect by means of further decree or otherwise, being without merit, the first decree having merely been an injunction pendente lite provided for by Code Civ. Proc. § 525.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 458.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 217*)—"FINAL JUDGMENT."

A judgment is final when it terminates the litigation between the parties on the merits of the case, and leaves nothing to be done but to enforce, by execution, what has been determined.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 394; Dec. Dig. § 217.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2774-2798; vol. 8, p. 7663.]

3. JUDGMENT (§ 203*)—"FINAL JUDGMENT."

There can be but one final judgment in a cause.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 361; Dec. Dig. § 203.*]

In Bank. Action by John Doudell against John J. Shoo and others. From a decree in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal. Application for writ of supersedeas against I. R. D. Chittenden, as Sheriff of Fresno County. Application denied.

See, also, 109 Pac. 615.

A. L. Frick, Carter & Carter, and Carl F. Wood, for appellants. C. K. Bonestell, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The action was commenced in the superior court of Fresno county. The complaint alleged that a partnership agreement had been entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant John J. Shoo; that under said agreement the plaintiff was to have the sole management of the business, which was that of a billiard and pool hall, together with a saloon and cigar store; that on February 8, 1910, the defendant excluded the plaintiff from the premises occupied by the firm and from all participation in the affairs of the copartnership. It was further alleged in the complaint that large profits made in the business were unaccounted for, that certain real property belonging to the partnership had been transferred to the defendants other than John J. Shoo, and prayer was made that the defendants be enjoined from interfering with plaintiff in the management of the business and the partnership property, that a receiver be appointed to carry on the business pending the action, and that an accounting be had between the parties. An answer was filed denying that any partnership agreement had ever been entered into, and denying that the plaintiff ever had any interest as partner, or otherwise, in the business or property referred to in the complaint.

On the 6th of June, 1910, the court, after a hearing, filed a document entitled "Findings of Fact, Conclusion of Law, Interlocutory Decree." This paper, after reciting a trial, finds that since July, 1909, the plaintiff and the defendant John J. Shoo have been conducting as partners a saloon and cigar business and a billiard hall on the premises described in the complaint; that the real and personal property described in the complaint is partnership property of said partners; that in February, 1910, the defendant John J. Shoo wholly excluded plaintiff from the partnership property and business, and has ever since refused to account to him concerning the partnership affairs. It is found that profits have been derived from the business; that a portion of said profits has been expended by the partners; that payments have been made on account of the unpaid purchase price of the real property; that the partners have received unequal shares of the profits of said business; that there are outstanding debts, among which is a debt due the defendant Herrick, who holds the legal title to the real property of the partnership as security for his loan.

There is but one conclusion of law, which is "that an accounting is necessary between plaintiff and the defendant John J. Shoo, covering all the property and business of the partnership found to exist between them from the commencement thereof." The decree entered upon these findings and this conclusion of law was styled by the court an "interlocutory decree." It ordered that a full and complete accounting be taken of all the partnership dealings between the plaintiff and John J. Shoo, and that D. M. Speed be appointed referee for that purpose. The referee was directed to report an itemized statement of the facts to the court, stating separately the amounts contributed by each of the partners to the partnership business, the receipts from the business, rents received from the real property, amounts expended for repairing buildings, for fixtures, furniture, etc., for merchandise and stock in trade, for salaries, for interest; also the amounts received by each of the partners from said business for his personal account, the amount of partnership assets in the business or under the control of the defendant John J. Shoo, and the debts of the copartnership. It was further ordered that the sheriff restore the plaintiff to the possession of the premises, and that the defendants be enjoined from interfering with the plaintiff in the exercise of his rights and duties as managing partner of the partnership. The decree concludes with these words: "It is further ordered that the making of further findings of fact and law and other matters to be determined herein be reserved until the coming in and settlement of the referee's report." The defendants served and filed a notice of appeal from this judgment and applied to the court below for an order fixing the amount of an undertaking on said appeal to stay the execution of said judgment in so far as it directed the delivery of real or personal property. The court declined to make such order, and on July 5, 1910, this court issued its peremptory writ of mandate requiring the superior court of Fresno county to fix the amount of such undertaking. Thereafter such amount was so fixed at $75,000, an undertaking was filed by the appellants, and the court below ordered the execution of the judgment stayed, and ordered the sheriff of Fresno county to restore the defendants to the same possession of the property as they had had prior to the entry of the judgment.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

On September 15, 1910, the superior court filed its decision reciting the making of the prior findings and of the order appointing a referee to take an account, reciting that the referee had made his report, that the court had examined said report, and that the same was based upon competent evidence. The decision adopts the facts found by the referee, finds anew the making of the partnership agreement and the conducting of the business by Doudell and Shoo as partners, and then goes on to make elaborate findings showing the amounts paid by the respective partners, the purchase of property for the partnership, the indebtedness incurred by defendant Shoo and the security given for such indebtedness, the receipts of the partnership business, the expenditures in conducting the business, and the amounts received by each of the partners. As conclusions of law the court finds that the plaintiff and the defendant John J. Shoo have equal interests in the real and personal property described in the complaint; that the defendant Herrick holds the legal title to said property as security for the repayment to him of certain moneys advanced; that the defendant John J. Shoo has a lien upon the real estate for a certain amount found to be due him; that the plaintiff is entitled to recover costs from the defendant John J. Shoo; and that the defendants should be enjoined from interfering with plaintiff in the exercise of his rights in managing the partnership. A decree designated as a "Final Decree" was made carrying into effect these conclusions of law. Thereupon the defendants served and filed a notice of appeal from this decree and filed an undertaking on appeal in the sum of $300.

The present petition is presented by the defendants and appellants, and alleges that upon the entry of the final decree the sheriff of the county of Fresno, acting under and by virtue of said decree, removed the petitioners from the possession of the property described in said interlocutory decree and said final decree, and delivered the possession thereof to the plaintiff, who has ever since had, and now has, the possession of the same. They ask for a writ of superseas to protect their possession pending the appeal. Upon the hearing of this application the plaintiff appeared and denied that he had been put in possession by the sheriff, or under the order of the court, averring that he had without the interposition of the court, or any officer thereof, claimed possession under the decree, and that such possession had been surrendered to him. It will not be necessary to determine the issue of fact so presented, as we are satisfied, upon the showing made by the petitioners, that they are not entitled to the relief sought. No undertaking to stay execution was given upon the last appeal; i. e., that from the decree entered in September, 1910. That decree, like the interlocutory decree, undertook to enjoin the defendants from interfering with the plaintiff in the exercise of his rights and duties as managing partner. Its effect was to direct a delivery of the possession of real and personal property (see Clute v. Superior Court, 155 Cal. 15, 99 Pac. 362, 132 Am. St. Rep. 54), and its enforcement could not be stayed without the giving of a bond in an amount to be fixed by the judge of the court below (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 943, 945). The appellants have not applied to have the amount of such bond fixed.

The petitioners seek to avoid the conclusion that they have not acquired the right to have proceedings stayed by the claim that the so-called interlocutory decree of June 6, 1910, was in fact a final judgment, and that the giving of a bond to stay execution on that judgment prevented the court below from carrying the same into effect, whether by means of further decree or otherwise. Under the ordinary definition of final decree the judgment entered on June 6, 1910, was not final. A judgment is final "when it terminates the litigation between the parties on the merits of the case and leaves nothing to be done but to enforce by execution what has been determined." Klever v. Seawall, 65 Fed. 373, 12 C. C. A. 653; The Express Co.'s Case, 108 U. S. 24, 2 Sup. Ct. 6, 27 L. Ed. 638; Griffin v. Orman, 9 Fla. 22, 46, 47. See, also, In re Smith, 98 Cal. 636, 640, 33 Pac. 744. The first decree entered in this cause was certainly not intended by the court to be an ultimate adjudication of the merits as between the parties. It was based upon findings which determined none of the questions at issue except the fact of partnership and the existence of mutual and undetermined claims and demands, and upon a conclusion of law which declared no more than that an accounting was necessary. The decree, declared by the court itself to be an "interlocutory decree," appointed a referee to state an account, the settlement of which was essential to the fixing of the relative rights of the parties in the partnership property. Under all the authorities, such a decree is not final. White v. Conway, 66 Cal. 383, 5 Pac. 672, distinguishing Clark v. Dunnam, 46 Cal. 208, relied on by the petitioners; note to Williams v. Field, 2 Wis. 421, 60 Am. Dec. 426, 435; Gray v. Palmer, 9 Cal. 616; Rhodes v. Williams, 12 Nev. 20; Cocke's Adm'r v. Gilpin, 1 Rob. [Va.] 20.

But if the judgment of June 6, 1910, viewed as a whole, cannot be regarded as final, the petitioners argue that it was nevertheless final with respect to the matter here complained of—i. e., the order of injunction—that this injunction was merely repeated by the decree of September, 1910, and remained in force by virtue of the original judgment of June 6th, notwithstanding the entry of a subsequent decree disposing of other issues. If the first decree was a final adjudication of the rights of the parties with respect to any matter contained in it, it might well be claimed that the appeal from that order, together with the giving of the bond required by the order of the trial court, would stay the power of the court to take any further proceedings with reference to the matter covered by the judgment appealed from while the appeal remained undisposed of. Code Civ. Proc. § 946; Vosburg v. Vosburg, 137 Cal. 493, 70 Pac. 473. But we are satisfied that the judgment of June 6, 1910, is not to be construed as a final determination of the rights of the parties with respect to any of the matters embraced therein. In the first place, our system of procedure contemplates that there shall be but one final judgment in a cause (Thompson v. White, 63 Cal. 505; Thompson v. White, 76 Cal. 381, 18 Pac. 399; Stockton Works v. Ins. Co., 98 Cal. 557, 577, 33 Pac. 633; Nolan v. Smith, 137 Cal. 360, 70 Pac. 166), and, in the absence of a clear showing, it is not to be presumed that the court would attempt to dispose of a case piecemeal by successive final judgments, each covering a part of the matters in controversy.

In view of the nature of the findings and of the decree entered on June 6, 1910, we think the injunction, which was a part of that decree, should be interpreted as intended to be no more than an injunction pendente lite, and that its operative force therefore ended with the entry of the final decree. By the judgment of June 6, 1910, the court did not undertake to determine the rights of the parties. It did not decide that the partnership found to exist between the parties should or should not be dissolved. It went no further than to determine that there was a partnership of which plaintiff was managing partner, that plaintiff had been excluded therefrom, and that an accounting was necessary in order to fix the relative property rights of the parties. As an incident to the ordering of this accounting, it undertook to enjoin the defendants from interfering with the plaintiff in his conduct of the business as managing partner. But the determination of the further questions remaining at issue between the parties was expressly reserved for subsequent adjudication. While the injunction was not in terms limited to the pendency of the action, it seems clear that its purpose was merely to hold matters in what the court found to be the existing condition until the rights of the parties should be finally adjudicated. Upon the entry of a final decree, the court might have decided that the partnership should be dissolved and the property sold. Had it done so, there would be little question that the injunction theretofore granted would have ceased to be effective. The injunction gained no additional force from the circumstance that the court, upon a final hearing, left the partnership in existence, and reordered an injunction. If this be so, the prohibitive relief granted by the interlocutory decree of June 6, 1910, was simply the injunction pendente lite provided for in section 525 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was a provisional remedy, intended to cover the interval which should elapse before the entry of the final decree. Upon such entry the "provisional remedy was merged in the perpetual injunction thereby granted to the plaintiff, and ceased to have any operative effect." Sheward v. Citizens' Water Co., 90 Cal. 635, 638, 27 Pac. 439, 440; Lambert v. Haskell, 80 Cal. 611, 22 Pac. 327.

Under these views, the appeal from the decree of June 6, 1910, did not affect the power of the court to subsequently make a final decree disposing completely of all of the issues involved in the case. The order for the temporary injunction was appealable by the terms of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In so far as it was mandatory in character, its enforcement could be stayed pending such appeal. Clute v. Superior Court, supra, and cases cited. But the appeal did not operate to deprive the court of power to proceed to a final hearing of the case. If the final decree had resulted in a judgment in favor of the defendants, the temporary injunction would have fallen to the ground. The same effect must follow where an injunction is granted anew by the final decree, and this for the reason, as stated above, that the injunction of June 6th was intended to be operative only until the final hearing, and its effect has accordingly ceased by the expiration of the time during which it was designed to have life.

The application for a writ of supersedeas is denied.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

15 Cal. App. 260

PEOPLE v. PANG SUI LIN et al. (Cr. 139.)
(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Feb. 1, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 730*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—CONDUCT OF DISTRICT ATTORNEY—PREJUDICIAL EFFECT.

In a joint prosecution of several Chinamen for robbery, the district attorney asked one of them whether he did not steal the woman he was living with, which was objected to, and the question was twice reiterated, and finally answered in the negative over objection, when the district attorney asked, "Now, haven't you mortgaged or pledged this woman?" when an objection was made and the trial judge stated, and repeated, that the question was wholly improper, and he did not want a discussion as to its admissibility. The district attorney also asked such defendant whether he was the same person who violated an injunction and mashed a cabin, to which the court sustained an objection, telling the jury to pay no attention to such question and draw no inferences from it, because it was improper. The district attorney asked another defendant on cross-examination whether he and another defendant were not what was known among Chinamen as "hatchet men," when the court stated that the question was not proper on cross-examination. Held that, notwithstanding the court's action, the jury might have believed that the defendants were of bad character and likely to commit the crime charged, and it could not be said that all of defendants were not prejudiced by such questions, especially as the evidence was sharply conflicting.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1693; Dec. Dig. § 730.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 700*)—TRIAL—CONDUCT OF DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

A district attorney should be as solicitous to obtain a fair trial for accused as to obtain a conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1658; Dec. Dig. § 700.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 919*)—APPEAL—REVIEW—MATTERS REVIEWABLE—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

Alleged misconduct of the district attorney in asking improper questions cannot be reviewed on a motion for a new trial, but only upon appeal from the judgment of conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2197-2201; Dec. Dig. § 919.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1181*)—APPEAL—DISPOSITION.

Since alleged misconduct by the district attorney in asking questions can only be reviewed on appeal from the judgment of conviction, the order denying a new trial will be affirmed and the judgment reversed upon finding that such misconduct is reversible error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1181.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Pang Sui Lin and others were convicted of robbery, and they appeal from the judgment of conviction and an order denying a motion for a new trial. Order affirmed and judgment reversed.

J. C. Webster, for appellants. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, for the People.

BURNETT, J. The defendants, who are of the Mongolian race, were convicted of robbing another Chinaman, and they appeal from the judgment and the order denying their motion for a new trial.

Several assignments of error are made, but, save one, we deem them without substantial merit. During the cross-examination of one of the defendants the following proceedings, as shown by the transcript, took place: "The district attorney asked the following question: Is it not a fact that you stole from a merchant in Virginia City the woman you are living with now? Mr. Webster: We object. Witness: I never been in Virginia City in my life. Mr. Holland: Is it not a fact that you took the woman away from her husband, a Chinese merchant, the woman you are living with now? A. I never been in Virginia City in my life. Q. It might not have been in Virginia City. A. I did not. Mr. Webster: This is entirely improper, your Honor. Mr. Holland: I will ask the question. Mr. Webster: I object on the ground the question is improper. The Court: He has already answered it. That is enough. Mr. Holland: Now, haven't you mortgaged or pledged this woman— Mr. Webster (interrupting): I object to any further examination on that line. The Court: Counsel has asked him if he didn't mortgage this woman. The question is highly improper, and the objection is sustained. I don't want any discussion about the admissibility. Mr. Holland: I asked him if he had always led a proper kind of life. I think I have a right to ask the question. The Court: I don't think you have a right to ask this kind of a question, and I want no discussion about it. Again, the district attorney in cross-examination of the same defendant asked the following question: Are you the Charley Jones, who, in conjunction with Jim Lee, violated an injunction issued out of this court and mashed a cabin down on the Shawmut mine and broke into a cabin and violated an injunction of— Mr. Webster: I object as not proper cross-examination. The Court: I will sustain the objection. Let me state, gentlemen of the jury, you will pay no attention to any such question asked. draw no inference from that at all. It is not a proper question to ask the witness, and you are instructed now, gentlemen, to pay no attention to it. The objection is sustained. Again, on cross-examination of the defendant, Leong Ah Din, the district attorney asked him the following question: Q. Is it not a fact that you and Charley Jones are what is known among Chinamen as 'hatchet men'? Which question was objected to by defendants' counsel on the grounds that it was improper, not proper cross-examination, incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. The Court: It is not cross-examination, gentlemen. The court is limited in the cross-examination to the examination in chief; it is not cross-examination."

In reference to the foregoing we deem it proper to make the following observations: The learned trial judge readily perceived that the questions were improper and promptly sustained objections thereto. He went further, and endeavored to fortify the minds of the jury against any unfavorable impression that might be created by what is assigned as the misconduct of the district attorney. It is nevertheless true that this officer is the representative of the people in a very important capacity, is generally of consequence in the community, and it is a reasonable and almost necessary inference that some at least of the jurors would conclude that the district attorney would not ask such questions unless he could prove what was implied in such questions if he had been allowed to do so. The result of this impression would be the opinion that the defendant is a man of bad character, and likely to commit the crime charged against him. It is apparent that this circumstance may have weighed decisively against the defendants here, and we cannot say that otherwise they would have been convicted in the face of the directly conflicting evidence. The effect upon the minds of the jury would be the same whether the district attorney was acting in good faith or with a purpose of prejudicing the defendants. Of course, in the trial of criminal cases, questions will frequently arise about which lawyers and judges may fairly differ in opinion, and in those cases defendants cannot complain of the mere asking of questions to which an objection may be sustained, but there are certain elementary rules of evidence so clearly established and fundamental rights of persons charged with crime so generally recognized that any infraction or invasion of them cannot be justified or excused on the ground of ignorance or good faith even. It is a trite saying, but its repetition seems not uncalled for, that a fair trial for the defendant should invite and receive from the district attorney the same solicitous consideration as the conviction of the guilty. If the district attorney should be more anxious to win a victory in the lower court than to accord to the defendant the rights that he is entitled to under the Constitution, he must not be surprised if his success comes to naught in the higher forum. The case is brought within the principle announced in People v. Wells, 100 Cal. 459, 34 Pac. 1078; People v. Valliere, 127 Cal. 65, 59 Pac. 295; People v. Derbert, 138 Cal. 467, 71 Pac. 564; People v. Derwae, 155 Cal. 592, 102 Pac. 266.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

As the defendants were jointly charged with the crime and tried together, it is probable that they were all prejudiced alike by the said incidents. The ground herein considered cannot be regarded on the motion for a new trial, but can be reviewed only on an appeal from the judgment. People v. Amer, 151 Cal. 303, 90 Pac. 698. The effect of the reversal of the judgment is obviously the same as of the order denying the motion for a new trial, but under the decisions as we view the matter the order denying said motion should be affirmed and the judgment reversed and it is so ordered.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

15 Cal. App. 273

PEOPLE v. KERR. (Cr. 293.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Feb. 2, 1911.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 176*)—ASSAULT TO MURDER—EVIDENCE—SERIOUSNESS OF INJURY.

In a trial for assault with intent to murder, the seriousness of the injury inflicted can be shown.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 379; Dec. Dig. § 176.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 419, 420*)—CONCLUSIONS.

Testimony as to a conclusion drawn by witness' brother is inadmissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 973-983; Dec. Dig. §§ 419, 420.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1170½*)—HARMLESS ERROR—EXAMINING WITNESSES.

Error in permitting a witness to be asked concerning a conclusion drawn by his brother was harmless where he answered, "I think I have mentioned it."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3129-3135; Dec. Dig. § 1170½.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1171*)—HARMLESS ERROR—MISCONDUCT OF PROSECUTOR.

It was not prejudicial error, in a trial for assault with intent to murder, for the prosecutor to state that, on misinformation that the victim had been killed, a complaint for murder had been prepared, but afterwards dismissed, where the statement was made in support of an objection to evidence offered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1171.*]

5. FINES (§ 11*)—SENTENCE—VALIDITY.

Where judgment imposed imprisonment and a fine, the part of the judgment imposing imprisonment in default of payment of the fine is void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fines, Cent. Dig. §§ 12, 13; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 991*)—PARTLY VOID JUDGMENT—EFFECT.

Partial invalidity of a judgment of conviction in imposing imprisonment in default of payment of a fine does not require reversal of the entire judgment; it being proper to strike the void part.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2528; Dec. Dig. § 991.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; R. H. Latimer, Judge.

C. I. Kerr was convicted of assault with a deadly weapon, and he appeals from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial. Modified and affirmed.

M. R. Jones and J. E. Rodgers, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, for the People.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from a judgment and order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. Defendant was charged with the crime of assault with intent to commit murder. The assault is charged to have been committed with a deadly weapon, and upon his trial the jury found the defendant guilty of assault with a deadly weapon.

The evidence showed that defendant became engaged in a quarrel with one Soberes-ka, and shot him twice with a pistol. One shot passed through the breastbone, the chest cavity a little above the heart, and lodged in the muscles of the back about three inches from the surface. The other passed completely through the thigh, cutting both a vein and an artery. The physician who attended the wounded man fully described both wounds, and at the conclusion of his examination concerning the chest wound was permitted by the court, over the objection of the defendant, to answer a question calling for his opinion as to the seriousness of such wound. It is not claimed that the physician was not qualified to speak as an expert, but that the question of the seriousness of the wound had nothing to do with the guilt or innocence of the defendant. In view of the facts testified to and clearly proven, it probably was quite unnecessary to take the opinion of the physician, but the seriousness of the injury actually produced is a pertinent fact to be considered in any case where a defendant is charged with assault with intent to murder.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The court overruled an objection made by defendant to a question by the district attorney on cross-examination of a witness as follows: "Isn't it a fact that you and your brother came to the conclusion it was necessary for you to remember that particular part of the conversation which you claim you had with Mr. Fahey on that occasion?" The objection to this question should have been sustained in the form at least in which it was put, as it called for the opinion of the witness as to the conclusion of his brother, but the answer to the question was not responsive and was entirely harmless. It was: "I think I have mentioned it." No motion to strike out the answer was made, and the question ruled on was not in fact answered at all. It would be a farce to order a new trial for such a trifle.

A complaint was filed charging defendant with murder. While the person who swore to this complaint was being examined on cross-examination by defendant's counsel regarding this complaint, the district attorney lodged an objection to a question, and in doing so made a statement to the effect that the first information brought to the county seat was that the assaulted man had been killed by defendant, and that he, the district attorney, had first prepared a complaint for murder, and subsequently dismissed it, and prepared a new one charging him with assault to commit murder, and procured the witness to swear to it. The court overruled the objection of the district attorney, and very properly told the jury that the statement of the district attorney was not evidence, and at once instructed the jury not to consider it. The statements made by the district attorney were in explanation of his own conduct as well as that of the witness in relation to the filing of a complaint for murder in the first instance and the delay in dismissing it. While it should not have been made, it apparently was made in good faith in support of the objection to the question. Certainly it is not such a case of willful or injurious misconduct as to require a new trial, in view of the prompt action of the court, both in striking out the statement of the district attorney and instructing the jury as to its duty, and in requiring the witness to answer the question put by defendant's attorney. No other rulings are complained of on appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial.

The court, however, besides imposing imprisonment for 15 months, imposed a fine, with additional imprisonment in default of payment of the fine. The part of the judgment imposing imprisonment in default of payment of the fine is void. People v. Brown, 113 Cal. 35, 45 Pac. 181, and cases there cited. This court is not required, however, to reverse the entire judgment, but the proper course is to require the void portion of the judgment to be stricken out. People v. Hamberg, 84 Cal. 468, 24 Pac. 298.

The order denying the motion for a new trial is affirmed. The court below is instructed to modify the judgment by striking out the part thereof as follows: "And that in default of payment of said fine that he be imprisoned in the county jail of the county of Contra Costa one day for each $2 of said fine not paid. Said imprisonment to commence at the expiration of the term of imprisonment of fifteen months herein imposed."

In all other respects the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

15 Cal. App. 220

PEOPLE v. JENSEN. (Cr. 140.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Jan. 27, 1911.)

SEDUCTION (§ 45*)—PROMISE OF MARRIAGE—EVIDENCE.

Testimony of prosecutrix on the direct and redirect that she yielded to defendant on his unconditional promise to marry her warrants a conviction under Pen. Code, § 268, of "seduction under promise of marriage," though on her cross-examination she appeared to say that she did so on the condition or promise only that he would marry her if she became pregnant thereby; it not being clear that her cross-examination was a contradiction of her direct testimony, or involved an intention to go farther than to say that, in addition to the unconditional promise of marriage, defendant assured prosecutrix that, should she become pregnant, he would protect her, and it being for the jury to determine whether the probative value of her direct testimony was impeached or destroyed by her cross-examination.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Seduction, Cent. Dig. §§ 80-82; Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; Clifton H. Connick, Judge.

Peter M. Jensen was convicted of crime, and, from the order denying a motion for new trial, appeals. Affirmed.

Puter & Quinn, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Att. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, for the People.

HART, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of "seduction under promise of marriage," and prosecutes this appeal from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The only point urged against the validity of the order appealed from is that the evidence does not disclose that the defendant committed the crime denounced by section 268 of the Penal Code, under which the information upon which he was tried and convicted is founded. Said section reads as follows: "Every person who, under promise of marriage, seduces and has sexual intercourse with an unmarried female of previous chaste character, is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for not more than five years, or by a fine of not more than five thousand dollars, or by both such fine and imprisonment." By the terms of the succeeding section a prosecution of an offender under section 268 may be barred by the intermarriage of the parties prior to the finding of an indictment or the filing of an information charging such offense.

The contention is that the testimony of the prosecutrix discloses that the defendant promised to marry the plaintiff, if she would consent to and have sexual relations with him, only in the event that she became pregnant as a result of such relations, and that, if this be true, the promise so proved is not the promise essential to constitute the crime denounced by section 268 of the Penal Code. In support of this proposition, the case of State v. Adams, 25 Or. 172, 35 Pac. 36, 22 L. R. A. 840, 42 Am. St. Rep. 790, is cited. There it is held that seduction accomplished under a promise that the seducer will marry the female only in case she becomes enceinte as a result of their immoral relations is not a crime within the meaning of a statute similar to ours in language and terms. The reasoning upon which the conclusion in that case is reached appears to be impregnable. But we think there is a wide difference, as to the facts, between that case and the one at bar. In the Oregon case, so far as we are advised by the opinion therein, there was no evidence disclosing or tending to show any promise of marriage by the accused except the one conditioned on the prosecutrix becoming pregnant by him. In the case at bar, as we shall presently perceive by a brief examination of the testimony, there is evidence that the defendant promised to marry the prosecutrix if the latter would consent to and have sexual intercourse with him, and that upon such promise she did have such relations with him.

Appellant builds his contention around the testimony of the prosecutrix brought out on cross-examination. On direct examination she testified that some time previously to the time at which she first became immorally intimate with the defendant the latter and she became engaged to be married; that subsequently, for some reason, said engagement was broken; that during the period of said engagement the defendant did not have sexual relations with her; that thereafter she resumed keeping company with the defendant, and it was then that he began coaxing her to yield to his lust and submit to his embraces. She testified that she did not submit to his entreaties in this regard until he had promised her that, if she would do so, he would marry her, and that, finally relying upon said promise, she consented to and did have sexual connection with him. Repeatedly, she declared, on her direct examination that her immoral relations with the defendant were upon an unconditional promise upon his part to marry her. It is true that, on one occasion, she did say to the district attorney that the defendant declared that he would "take care of her" in the event that she became pregnant, but this statement is not necessarily inconsistent with her testimony previously given on direct examination that the seduction was brought about under an unconditional promise of marriage. But, by an adroit cross-examination of the prosecutrix, she was made to say or to appear to say several times that she consented to and had sexual intercourse with the defendant upon the condition or promise only that he would marry her in the event that she became pregnant by reason of their relations. On redirect examination, however, she reiterated her oft-repeated statement that the promise of marriage was without qualification or condition, declaring that such promise was made by defendant prior to any discussion of the question of possible pregnancy by reason of their relations.

It is not at all unreasonable to assume that the jury in considering her testimony concluded that she regarded the questions put by defendant's counsel as possessing neither more nor less significance than those propounded by the district attorney on her direct examination, or, in other words, that she did not mean to say, in testifying on her cross-examination, that the defendant did not in the first instance make an unqualified promise of marriage which solely influenced her in consenting to and having sexual relations with him.

The learned trial judge, in his charge, instructed the jury in accord with the theory of the defense—i. e., that, if the evidence disclosed that the promise of marriage was based upon the contingency of the prosecutrix's pregnancy by reason of their relations, the accused would be entitled to an acquittal. Thus recognizing the rule of law contended for by the appellant, the court nevertheless denied his motion for a new trial from which circumstance it is, of course, plainly apparent that the judge, having equal opportunity with the jury of hearing and seeing the prosecutrix testify, did not form the conviction that her cross-examination should be interpreted as developing a contradiction of her direct testimony or as involving an intention on her part to go further than to say that, in addition to the unconditional promise of marriage, the defendant assured her that should she become pregnant he would by executing such promise of marriage protect her against the humiliation and disgrace of bearing a child unacknowledged in a legal manner by the father of the child. At any rate, it was entirely with the jury to reconcile and adjust to their own satisfaction the discrepancies, if any, which might have been made to appear by cross-examination in the testimony of the prosecutrix. It was, in other words, for the jury to determine whether the probative value of the direct testimony of the prosecutrix was impeached or destroyed by her cross-examination, and the verdict is, of course, indubitable evidence that it was not. The direct testimony of the prosecutrix, as we must view it, warranted the verdict, if the jury believed it, as evidently they did.

We can perceive no ground on which any interference with the verdict could reasonably be founded, and the order appealed from is therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

15 Cal. App. 253

WOOD v. JAMES. (Civ. 811.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Jan. 31, 1911. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court March 31, 1911.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 455*)—ACTION ON CLAIM—PLEADINGS—VARIANCE BETWEEN CLAIM AS PRESENTED AND ALLEGED.

In an action against an administrator on a claim which as presented to the administrator was for services as nurse to decedent, and as alleged in the complaint was for services as nurse to decedent, "including the cooking, housekeeping, laundering and caring for" decedent, where defendant admitted that plaintiff's services as nurse were of the value claimed by her for all her services rendered, which fact was so found by the court, any variance between the claim filed and the complaint was not prejudicial to defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 455.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 221*)—ALLOWANCE OF CLAIMS—SERVICES RENDERED TO DECEDENT—PERSONS IN FAMILY RELATION—EXPRESS PROMISE BY DECEDENT TO PAY—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to support a finding that a decedent expressly contracted to pay her daughter for services rendered her by such daughter as a nurse.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 901-903½, 1858-1876; Dec. Dig. § 221.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; A. J. Buckles, Judge.

Action by Annie E. Wood against Henry W. James, administrator of Mary J. James. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. E. and L. E. Johnston, for appellant. Harvey & Goodman, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiff sues to recover on a rejected claim against the estate of deceased. The claim presented to the administrator reads as follows: "Estate of Mary J. James, deceased, to Annie E. Wood, Dr. November 26th, 1909. For services as nurse for Mary J. James, 204 days, from January 30th, 1909, to August 21, 1909, at $2.50 per day $510.00." Duly verified. Indorsed: "The within claim rejected this 15th day of February, 1910. H. W. James, Administrator." The charging paragraph of the complaint is as follows: "That within two years last past, to wit, from January 30, 1909, to August 21, 1909, at and in Solano county, Cal., plaintiff rendered services as nurse to Mary J. James at her request and for her use and benefit, performing at such time and times in said capacity as nurse all the duties of a nurse, including the cooking, housekeeping, laundering, and caring for the said Mary J. James during her last illness, which services were, and are, reasonably worth the sum of $2.50 per day." Defendant answered the complaint, without demurring thereto, and made specific denials of all its averments, except that defendant admitted the presentation of the claim as shown by plaintiff's Exhibit A, but denied "that said claim was for the same services as alleged in the complaint herein." The court made the following finding: "That within two years last past, to wit, from January 30, 1909, to August 21, 1909, at and in Solano county, Cal., plaintiff rendered services as nurse to Mary J. James, at her request and for her use and benefit, performing at such time and times all the duties of a nurse, which services were, and are, reasonably worth the sum of $2.50 per day; that said Mary J. James during her lifetime promised to pay for said services; that nothing had been paid for or on account of said services; that the claim attached to said complaint and made a part thereof is the claim presented by plaintiff to defendant and is for the same services as sued for in the complaint of plaintiff herein." Judgment passed accordingly, from which defendant appeals on bill of exceptions.

The evidence is brief. It was admitted by plaintiff that she was the daughter of deceased. Defendant admitted "that $2.50 per day was a reasonable value for the services of a nurse to decedent and was a reasonable compensation to plaintiff for her services to her mother—if she was entitled to any compensation at all.” Defendant made this admission, “reserving at all times his objection to any testimony being given or received to support the allegations of plaintiff’s complaint.” Defendant further admitted that plaintiff had cared for her mother during the period claimed, to the date of her mother’s death.

Mrs. Rose McLaughlin was the only witness sworn. She testified that she was a neighbor of Mrs. James in her lifetime, “and, when she received a stroke of paralysis, she went to see her. Mrs. James said she wanted a doctor and a nurse, and they were sent for and came. Mrs. Wood (plaintiff) lived in St. Helena, Napa county, Cal., and the doctor notified her and she came to her mother’s house soon after her mother was taken sick, and cared for her till her mother’s death.” Plaintiff then offered to prove certain conversations, statements, and declarations made to witness by Mrs. James during her illness, “for the purpose of proving an express contract and agreement on the part of decedent, Mrs. James, to pay plaintiff, her daughter, for taking care of her during her illness.” Defendant objected to the evidence on the ground of irrelevancy and immateriality for the reason that it was not within the issues made by the pleadings; that plaintiff had not sued upon an express contract, nor based her claim as presented against the estate upon an express contract, and should not be permitted to prove such a contract; that the claim sued on was not the same claim presented to the estate. The court overruled the objection and defendant duly excepted. The witness testified: “During the time plaintiff was taking care of her mother, during her mother’s illness, I do not remember the exact date, but it was some time after Mrs. Wood came to take care of her mother, Mrs. James said to me, referring to Mrs. Wood: ‘Tell Annie to stay and I will pay her.’ Another time she said: ‘Don’t let Annie go. She shall be paid.’ I communicated the statements to Mrs. Wood, but not in her mother’s presence, and she said: ‘I will stay with mother; I haven’t intended to leave her.’” The record then states: “The above is all of the testimony given or offered on behalf of the plaintiff, proving, or tending to prove, an express agreement by Mrs. James to pay her daughter for her said services.”

Defendant moved for a nonsuit on the ground: (1) That there was a fatal variance between the claim presented and the claim sued on. (2) That there was a like variance between the allegations of the complaint and the proof adduced in its support. (3) The proof was insufficient to justify a finding of an express contract.

Respondent concedes the point made by appellant that the law does not raise an implied contract to compensate a daughter for services rendered her mother, and she also concedes that it was necessary to prove an express contract to pay her for her services. She contends that, if an express contract to pay is shown, she may show the reasonable value of the services without showing an express contract as to the value of the services. The claim presented was “for services as nurse” and the complaint claims for services as nurse, “including the cooking, housekeeping, laundering and caring for the said Mary J. James.” The court found that plaintiff had “rendered services as a nurse, * * * performing at such time and times all the duties of a nurse,” and that Mrs. James “during her lifetime promised to pay for said services.” Defendant “admitted that $2.50 per day was a reasonable value for the services of a nurse to decedent, and was a reasonable compensation to plaintiff for her services to her mother.” It seems to us that there is no variance between the claim presented, and the claim alleged in the complaint and found by the court, except as such variance may arise from the averment in the complaint—“including the cooking, housekeeping, laundering, and caring for” Mrs. James. It does not appear whether the pleader intended by this averment to make these additional services a necessary part of the nurse’s duties for which the compensation is claimed. The term “nurse” as commonly understood would not include “cooking,” “housekeeping,” or “laundering.” There was no demurrer to the complaint for uncertainty or indefiniteness, and it seems to us that the complaint may reasonably be said to mean that plaintiff performed services as nurse, and, in addition thereto, performed these other services, but that her claim was for nursing. And this view is supported by the admission of defendant that plaintiff’s “services as a nurse” were of the value of $2.50 per day as claimed by plaintiff. Defendant having admitted that plaintiff’s “services as nurse” were of the value of $2.50 per day and the court having so found, he has no cause for complaint on any ground of variance between the claim filed and the complaint.

The sole question, as we view the case, is: Does the evidence support the finding of an express contract to pay for the services rendered? Plaintiff resided in an adjoining county, and left her home to attend her mother in her sickness. There is no evidence that she went to her mother’s bedside under any promise or expectation of compensation for services she might render. This, however, does not change the fact, if it was the fact, that her mother subsequently agreed to compensate her for her services. Her mother must have had some apprehension that her daughter might not remain to the end and so sent word to her to remain and she would pay her. Her message was: “Tell Annie to stay, and I will pay her." She then at another time told the witness, Mrs. McLaughlin: "Don't let Annie go. She shall be paid." Plaintiff replied: "I will stay with mother." She said: "I haven't intended to leave her." But this is not inconsistent with her willingness to receive pay for her services or with her remaining under a promise to be paid by her mother. Defendant suggests that there is no evidence that plaintiff's mother ever spoke to plaintiff about compensating her, nor could there be, for the law closed the lips of plaintiff and did not permit her to testify to such fact. Code Civ. Proc. § 1880.

Defendant cites cases to show that mere general expressions, such as used by Mrs. James, are not sufficient to show an express contract. The intention of the promisor is not always to be determined from the language used. Where, as in some of the cases cited, a son or daughter, living with the parent, makes claim for similar services, the circumstances may be such as to justify the court in holding the evidence insufficient to establish an express contract even though some expressions of gratitude and of an intention to pay for such services are shown. "Whenever compensation is claimed in any case by either parent or child against the other for services rendered, or the like, the question whether the claim should be allowed must be determined from the particular circumstances of the case. There can be no fixed rule governing alike all cases." 21 Ency. of Law, p. 1062. As a general rule, a child who is living with its parent is not entitled to compensation for services rendered to the parent, even though an adult, but the parent may contract to pay the child for its services. 29 Cyc. 1630. Where, however, "the relation was not such as imposed any special obligation on the claimant of support of, care for, or tenderness towards the decedent, a claim for compensation will be more favorably regarded, and in a suitable case upheld, especially where decedent and claimant did not live together." 18 Cyc. 414. Mrs. Wood, the daughter, as we have seen, recided in another county from that of the decedent's residence. She left her own home to minister to her mother, whose malady was paralysis of uncertain duration. The daughter was told to remain and she would be paid, and she did remain until her mother's death. The suspicion with which the courts sometimes look at claims of children against estates of deceased persons for personal services is more especially indulged where they live under the same roof, and there are mutual dependent relations. Here no such suspicion can arise, and, if there were circumstances influencing the mind of the learned trial court of which we have no knowledge, we must presume that they were such as supported the fairness of the contract and repelled any ground for suspicion of its not having been made in good faith. No ground is shown why we should disturb the view of the evidence taken by the trial court.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

15 Cal. App. 276

KULLMAN, SALZ & CO. et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR COUNTY OF SOLANO et al. (Civ. 814.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 2, 1911.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 318*)—HEARSAY EVIDENCE—STATEMENTS IN PLEADINGS.

Statements in a pleading, affidavit, or deposition made on information and belief are mere hearsay testimony, incompetent to prove a fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1193-1200; Dec. Dig. § 318.*]

2. WITNESSES (§ 16*)—PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS.

Where, on the showing made, the court is without authority to compel a witness to produce for examination by the court a record, it is immaterial whether or not the witness responded to a subpoena duces tecum for the record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 19-27; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

3. WITNESSES (§ 16*)—PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS.

An omnibus order of a subpoena duces tecum for private books and papers is, in the absence of a clear showing that they contain evidence material to the inquiry, absolutely void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 19-27; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

4. PROHIBITION (§ 26*)—ISSUES—ADMISSIONS BY ANSWER.

Where the answer to a petition for a writ of prohibition to restrain the execution of a judgment admits that the petition contains a correct statement of the proceedings culminating in the judgment, there is no issue of fact, and the court will consider the answer filed as an admission of the averments of the petition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Dec. Dig. § 26.*]

5. EVIDENCE (§ 368*)—PRODUCTION OF PRIVATE PAPERS—POWER OF COURT.

Where, in a suit for divorce against an alleged stockholder in a corporation, the testimony showed without dispute that defendant had sold his stock before the commencement of the action, and had no interest in the corporation except as an employé thereof, the court was without authority to compel the production of the books of the corporation disclosing its profits during a specified period, because the books were immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1540-1558; Dec. Dig. § 368.*]

6. SEARCHES AND SEIZURES (§ 7*)—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS—POWER OF COURT.

Under Const. art. 1, § 19, guaranteeing the people against unreasonable seizures and searches, a person cannot be forced to surrender his private books to another, who does not claim to own or have any interest in them, except on convincing proof that such books contain evidence materially affecting the rights in litigation of the person demanding them, and the power of the court to compel the production of private papers can be exercised only where a person has books containing evidence material to the issue before the court, and where the precise book containing the evidence is designated or so described that it may be identified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Searches and Seizures, Cent. Dig. § 5; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; A. J. Buckles, Judge.

Application for writ of prohibition by Kullman, Salz & Co. and another against the Superior Court in and for the County of Solano and the judge thereof, to restrain respondents from executing a judgment. Writ issued.

A. E. Shaw, for petitioners. D. McLeod, for respondents.

HART, J. This is an application for a writ of prohibition to restrain the respondents from causing to be executed a judgment for contempt of court rendered by said respondents against the petitioner Ansley K. Salz. The contention is, of course, that the action of the court in adjudging said petitioner guilty of contempt is in excess of the jurisdiction of respondents.

The petitioner Kullman, Salz & Co. is a corporation, duly organized and existing under the laws of this state, and engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling leather and the products of leather, its tannery being located at Benicia, in the said county of Solano. The petitioner Ansley K. Salz is the secretary of said corporation, Kullman, Salz & Co.

The petition discloses that the proceedings culminating in the order adjudging said petitioner guilty of contempt of court arose under the following circumstances: On the 5th day of October, 1910, one Jean McGregor Kullman instituted an action for divorce against her husband, Jacob Kullman, in the superior court of the county of Solano. The complaint in said action, in support of plaintiff's claim for an allowance for her own support and maintenance and for the support, maintenance, and education of their minor child, aged about seven years, the only living issue of their marriage, alleged that Jacob Kullman was a man of large and ample means; that he not only received a salary of about $300 per month as an employé of the petitioner Kullman, Salz & Co., but that he owned stock in said corporation of the value of about $250,000; that he "is also the owner of certain real estate of large value, situated in or near the city of Benicia, county of Solano," and, furthermore, owner of other property the character and value of which it is not necessary here to enumerate or specify. It is further alleged in said complaint that the defendants (in said action) Amalia Kullman and Herbert Kullman, mother and brother, respectively, of said Jacob Kullman, and the petitioner herein Kullman, Salz & Co. (also made defendants in the action for divorce), "have entered into a combination and conspiracy and have colluded and conspired together with the object and purpose of taking away from said defendant Jacob Kullman, and of concealing and covering up, all his property, so that the plaintiff will not be able to obtain for herself and her minor child substantial support and maintenance." In furtherance of the object of said conspiracy, it is alleged in said complaint, the mother of Jacob, on the 16th day of September, 1910, brought an action in the superior court of Solano county against said Jacob upon three promissory notes, aggregating in amount the sum of $24,000; that an attachment was issued in said action and levied on certain property of said Jacob; that said Jacob made no appearance in said action, but allowed judgment to be taken against him therein by default; that the shares of stock of said Jacob in the corporation petitioner herein were at approximately the same time transferred to some other person or persons upon a pretended sale thereof, and that all said transactions were not bona fide, but consummated only for the purpose of preventing plaintiff in said action for divorce from securing a just and suitable allowance for herself and the minor child of the parties. Upon the filing of the complaint in said action for divorce the court made an order commanding the defendants to appear before the court on the 15th day of October, 1910, to show cause why an order should not be made appointing a receiver of and for all the property of the said Jacob Kullman, including the stock which it was alleged that he was still the owner of in the corporation petitioner, and restraining in the meantime any sale or disposition of any of said property. An order was also made at the same time requiring the defendants to appear in court on the same day that the former order was to be heard to show cause why a temporary injunction, restraining the defendants from selling, transferring, or in any manner disposing of or dealing with the property belonging to Jacob Kullman and referred to in said complaint, should not be granted.

It is alleged in the petition herein that on the 18th day of November, 1910, the petitioner Kullman, Salz & Co. filed its amended answer to the said action of Jean McGregor Kullman for a divorce, and in said answer "alleged that it had on the 10th day of September, 1910, and long prior to the commencement of said action so pending in Solano county, and before the service of said or any restraining order and upon the presentation of certificates duly indorsed and showing the sale, at public auction, of all interest of said Jacob Kullman therein, canceled certificate 209 for 1,900 shares of the capital stock of said corporation, and had issued in place thereof its certificate No. 210 to one Amalia Kullman for said 1,900 shares of its capital stock," etc. Further answering said complaint, said corporation alleged that Jacob Kullman, at the time of the commencement of the suit for divorce by his wife, "did not own, nor has he at any time since owned, any stock of this defendant corporation standing upon the books of the same in his name," and denied the existence or prosecution of any conspiracy or collusion "with said other defendants in said action, or any of them, or with any person whomsoever," as charged in said complaint. An order having been made commanding the defendant Jacob Kullman to appear before the respondents on the 19th day of November, 1910, to show cause why he should not pay the plaintiff alimony pendente lite and certain moneys for costs and counsel fees in said action, a subpoena duces tecum was on the 18th day of November, 1910, served on the petitioner Ansley K. Salz, requiring him to appear before the respondents on said 19th day of November, and further commanding him to "bring with him all books of account of Kullman, Salz & Co., a corporation, and the Benicia Waterworks, a corporation (Jacob Kullman was the secretary of the last-named corporation), including all stock books and inventories, all cash books, all ledgers, all journals, all trial balances during the years 1909 and 1910, all books, documents, and papers, showing bills receivable and bills payable by said corporations, and the value of the shares of stock of said corporations and the value of the interest of the defendant Jacob Kullman in said corporations."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

On the 19th day of November, 1910, the hearing on the order directed to Jacob Kullman to show cause why he should not pay to the plaintiff in said action alimony pendente lite, etc., came up for hearing before the respondents, and it was in this proceeding that the petitioner Ansley K. Salz, having been sworn as a witness and refused to produce a certain book called for by counsel for the plaintiff in the divorce suit, was, for such refusal, adjudged guilty by the respondents of contempt of court, to interdict the execution of which judgment is the purpose of the present proceeding. All the testimony taken on that hearing is before this court, having been made a part of the petition herein. This testimony is all one way, no material fact to which it relates being controverted. It is true that plaintiff's verified complaint contains averments, "on information and belief," that the several transactions resulting in the transfer by defendant of his property and the sale of his stock in the corporation petitioner to his mother were fraudulent and so consummated in view of contemplated divorce proceedings for the purpose of defeating plaintiff's claim and right to alimony. But obviously statements in a pleading or an affidavit or deposition upon "information and belief" are no more to be accepted as evidence in a trial of an issue of fact than if they were orally made. They can amount to no more than mere hearsay testimony, incompetent for the proof of a fact, and therefore cannot serve as the basis for a finding or raise a conflict. Therefore, as stated, the testimony taken at the hearing shows without dispute that the stock which had been owned by Jacob Kullman in the corporation petitioner was some weeks prior to the date of the commencement of the action for divorce sold, at public auction, to the mother of Jacob, said stock having been previously pledged to Mrs. Kullman, for the purpose of securing the payment of certain promissory notes executed to her by Jacob. The certificate of said stock in the name of Jacob was, as we have seen from the allegations of the petition, canceled by the corporation, and in lieu thereof a certificate of the same stock issued to his mother. At the hearing the petition alleges the petitioner Ansley K. Salz was sworn as a witness and questioned concerning the alleged ownership of certain stock in the corporation petitioner by Jacob Kullman. Among other questions Salz was asked whether as secretary of the corporation Kullman, Salz & Co. he had the custody of or under his control any book "which shows upon its face the profits earned by Kullman, Salz & Co. during the last few years, say, five years," and, upon replying that he had "such records," was asked to produce the same. At this point an objection was interposed by the attorney for the corporation to the production by the witness of any book or record disclosing the profits of the concern during the period mentioned on the ground that any information with regard to the profits earned by said corporation during that or any period of time would not be relevant or material to any issue before the court; it having been indisputably shown that Jacob Kullman no longer owned any stock in said corporation. The court overruled the objection and ordered the witness to produce the record called for, but the witness by and on the advice of the attorney for the corporation, refused to produce the book or record containing the information specifically asked for by the question and the demand of counsel for plaintiff, and the court thereupon adjudged the witness for such refusal to be in contempt of court.

The foregoing, so far as we are advised by the record before us, represents a brief but correct statement of the entire record on which the respondents adjudged the petitioner, Salz, in contempt of court.

It is alleged in the petition that Salz was ordered "by the judge of said court to produce said books, and all thereof, and all papers and documents belonging to said corporation, and to permit the same to be examined in open court and to be made a part of the records of said court." It is true that the court ordered, by its subpoena duces tecum, all the books, records, etc., referred to in the petition to be brought into court, but this order was made prior to the reception or hearing of any evidence, there then being nothing before the court but the dubious evidence furnished by the allegations of plaintiff's complaint, on information and belief, as to the materiality of said books, records, etc. The only order which we have been able to find in the record requiring the petitioner to produce and subject to examination and inspection by the court any book or record is the one to which we have adverted as compelling the production of the book or record disclosing the profits earned in past years by the corporation, and which the petitioner Salz refused to obey, and, as we are of opinion that the court, under the showing made, was without authority to compel the witness to produce for examination by the court said book or record, it is manifestly not material to the inquiry here whether or not the witness responded to the subpoena duces tecum by bringing into court all the books, papers, documents, etc., mentioned in the petition as having been thus called for. It may be stated that it does not appear that he did bring into court all the books and documents required by the subpoena, and it may be added that such an omnibus order for private books and papers, in the absence of a clear showing that they contained evidence material to the inquiry, would have been absolutely void.

However, a demurrer was interposed to the petition by the respondents and at the same time an answer to said petition was presented for filing and to be filed only in the event that the demurrer was overruled. It was stipulated between counsel that, in case of the overruling of the demurrer and the filing of the answer or return to the writ, the petitioners might be permitted to interpose a traverse to said answer or return. But, although the answer denies, upon information and belief, all the averments of the petition, it nevertheless admits that the petition contains a correct statement of the proceedings, including the testimony taken on the hearing in which the judgment for contempt against Salz was rendered. The answer declares, in this regard: "Said respondents in this behalf allege that the facts brought forth on said hearing are set forth in the transcript of testimony taken at said hearing, a copy of which is annexed to and made a part of the petition on file herein." It will thus be observed that under our view of the case as to the point submitted here for decision there is, in fact, nothing in the answer which could tender an issue of fact material or necessary to the determination of the controversy here. In other words, the admission of the answer that the petition contains a correct statement of the proceedings culminating in the order or judgment, enforcement of which is here sought to be restrained, leaves no question of fact, vital to the decision on this writ, to be traversed by petitioner or to be considered and determined by this court. We therefore deem it not only the more expeditious course but proper to consider the answer as filed for the purpose of disclosing the admission referred to the consequence of which is manifestly that the important averments of the petition stand before this court admitted both by the answer and demurrer, the latter further admitting for the purposes of this decision the truth of said averments.

The sole question, then, which is submitted for solution here, is: Did the respondents, under the circumstances as disclosed by the petition, exceed their jurisdiction by their order or judgment adjudging Ansley K. Salz guilty of a contumacious violation of their order requiring him to produce in court, to be used as evidence, a book or record disclosing the profits of the corporation petitioner for the five years or for any time prior to the time at which such information was thus asked for? It seems to us that there can be but one answer to this question. It must be kept in mind that counsel for the plaintiff called for the production of no book or record that would show or tend to show that Jacob Kullman still owned stock or had any other interest in Kullman, Salz & Co. It may here be remarked that if such book or record had been shown to exist and to be in the possession or custody of the witness as the secretary of the corporation, or that there existed and was in the custody of the corporation a book or record showing or tending to show that the charge of fraud in the transfer and disposition of Jacob's stock in said corporation was true, and the same had been sufficiently identified and had been ordered by the court to be produced as evidence in this inquiry, we doubt not that a refusal to produce such book or record under the indicated circumstances would have laid the foundation for an unimpeachable judgment or order adjudging the witness in contempt of court. But the book or record called for and specifically designated by counsel for plaintiff, the refusal to produce which brought upon Salz the judgment for contempt, was the book or record which would disclose the profits only of a corporation in which the testimony without conflict shows that Jacob Kullman then held no stock or had no interest of whatsoever nature other than that of a mere employé. There was introduced before the court, as seen, no evidence whatsoever from which the court would have been justified in finding that Jacob Kullman owned any stock or had any interest, except as an employé, in the corporation, and the proposition certainly will not be disputed that, before the court could acquire any authority to order the production of books disclosing the profits earned by the concern or any other of its affairs, there must have been previously produced some evidence of which said order could properly be predicated—that is, evidence warranting a finding that the defendant in the divorce action owned stock or was otherwise so interested in the corporation as to entitle him to share in the profits thereof. As we have shown and before declared, there is absolutely no such evidence in the record. It follows, therefore, that, no showing having been made that the book or record specifically called for by counsel for plaintiff and ordered to be produced by the court contained any evidence material to the issue on trial before the court, the order requiring the production of the same was beyond the jurisdiction of respondents, and consequently void.

The right of the people to be secure against unreasonable or unnecessary seizure of their private papers and documents is justly regarded as a highly sacred one—so much so, in fact, that the people themselves have taken the pains in express written terms to guarantee and safeguard its perfect enjoyment. Const. art. 1, § 19. In no case, therefore, should a person be forced to surrender his private books and papers to another who does not claim to own or have any interest in them except upon convincing proof that such books or papers contain evidence which materially affects the rights in litigation of the person demanding them. As was so clearly and forcefully said by the late learned Justice McFarland, in the case of Ex parte Clarke, 126 Cal. 238, 58 Pac. 546, 46 L. R. A. 835, 77 Am. St. Rep. 176: "To compel a person to deliver his books and papers to another who does not claim any ownership in them is to violate the sanctity of most important private rights, and is not to be tolerated except when warranted by some law clearly not inconsistent with the constitutional provision." The petition alleges that in the business in which the corporation petitioner is engaged there is extensive competition, and that the exposure to the public of the books or records disclosing its profits would result in great and irreparable damage to the corporation and its stockholders. It is readily perceivable how such a result might follow the disclosure of the profits and specific sources thereof earned by a concern operated on an extensive scale in lively rivalry with other concerns engaged in like business. Such a book or record might expose its methods of business—methods which, legitimately pursued, and being of its own invention, have contributed largely to the successful and profitable prosecution of its business. In Ex parte Clarke, supra, the court further says: "The privacy of private books and papers is not only of inestimable value to the owner on account of various personal and sentimental reasons, but is of the greatest value also from mere business considerations. The exposure of a man's method of business would frequently be highly injurious to him, and, although really solvent, might produce such embarrassments as would ruin him. His right, therefore, to the sole possession and knowledge of his private books and papers, is not to be violated, except where the power to do so clearly appears."

We do not, of course, intend to be understood as saying that there is no power in the court to compel the production of private books and papers, or that such power is inconsistent with the constitutional provision, for "when a witness is in court, no matter how brought there, and discloses the fact that he has a paper, document, or book which would be evidence in favor of the party desiring it, he may, in a proper case, be rightfully ordered to produce it." Ex parte Clarke, supra. But what we do intend to say is that such power can be exercised by the court only where the facts clearly and without question warrant it, and that such facts must be produced, manifestly, only through the instrumentality of competent and not hearsay evidence. Nor is it enough, as is said by the court in Morrison v. Sturges, 26 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 179, "that the party believes or is advised that the paper contains material evidence. Facts must be shown to support it." There are, in other words, two essential facts which must be made to appear by clear and unequivocal proof as a condition precedent to the right of a court to require a person to deliver up for examination by a court his private books and papers, viz.: (1) That such person has a book or paper or document containing evidence material to the issue before the court. (2) That the precise book or paper or document containing such evidence be designated or so described as that it may be identified. The last-mentioned requisite is in point of importance equal with or, if there be any difference, paramount to the first, for, however much proof may be adduced of the materiality of the evidence, the constitutional right of people to be protected against the unlawful seizure of their private documents forecloses authority in the courts to order a general or indiscriminate ransacking of one's private books, papers, and documents as the means for locating the desired evidence.

Our conclusion is, as must be apparent from the views expressed in the foregoing, that the order or judgment adjudging the petitioner Ansley K. Salz guilty of contempt of the order of the court was coram non jure, and is therefore nonenforceable.

Let a peremptory writ issue.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

15 Cal. App. 244

In re TILTON'S ESTATE AND GUARDIANSHIP. (Civ. 780.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Jan. 31, 1911, Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court March 31, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 931*)—PRESUMPTION.

The evidence not being brought up on the appeal, it must be presumed to have supported the findings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3762-3771; Dec. Dig. § 931.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1037*)—HARMLESS ERROR—REMOVAL OF GUARDIAN.

That the citation on an order of the court on a petition to have letters of guardianship revoked and a new guardian appointed did not contain "a brief statement of the nature of the proceeding," as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1707, cannot be complained of on appeal; the guardian having appeared and fully answered, so that the citation served its purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4032; Dec. Dig. § 1037.*]

3. INSANE PERSONS (§ 38*)—GUARDIANS—PETITION TO REMOVE—SHOWING AS TO PETITIONER.

The averment in the petition to remove the guardian of an insane person, and to appoint another, that petitioner was 20 years a friend of the deceased husband of the insane person, and has interested himself in behalf of said insane person, as her friend, since a certain date, is sufficient to qualify petitioner to appear as her friend.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insane Persons, Cent. Dig. §§ 57, 58, 60; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

4. INSANE PERSONS (§ 38*)—GUARDIANS—REMOVAL AND APPOINTMENT OF SUCCESSOR—CITATION—SERVICE.

In the absence of requirement therefor in the statute, the citation on petition to remove the guardian of an insane person, and to appoint another, need not be served on the next of kin.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insane Persons, Cent. Dig. §§ 57-60; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

5. INSANE PERSONS (§ 38*)—GUARDIANS—PETITION TO REMOVE.

The petition to remove a guardian of an insane person and to appoint another is not subject to the tests of a complaint in an action, but, if enough is stated to inform the court that it should interfere for the protection of the insane person, it is sufficient, and devolves on the court the duty to inform itself and take proper action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insane Persons, Cent. Dig. §§ 57-60; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

6. INSANE PERSONS (§ 38*)—GUARDIANS—REMOVAL AND APPOINTMENT OF SUCCESSOR—CITATION.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1763, relative to the original appointment of a guardian for an insane person, provides for the giving notice to such person of the hearing. Section 1801 provides that the guardian may be removed on notice to the guardian, and that on his removal the guardian may appoint another in his place; and, in this connection, says nothing as to notice to the incompetent. Held, that a citation to the insane person was unnecessary to authorize the court, on removing a guardian, to appoint another.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insane Persons, Cent. Dig. §§ 57-60; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1039*)—HARMLESS ERROR.

That there is a finding as to a matter as to which there is no specific averment in the petition for removal of the guardian of an insane person is immaterial, where, disregarding it, sufficient remains to support the order of removal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4075-4088; Dec. Dig. § 1039.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 931*)—PRESUMPTION.

Though the court after removing the guardian of an insane person appointed one requested by the insane person, it will be presumed that it was otherwise satisfied that the appointee was a proper person.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3762-3771; Dec. Dig. § 931.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

In the matter of the estate and guardianship of Chloe F. Tilton, an incompetent, Louis Hammersmith petitioned for removal of Ida A. Killey, the guardian, and the appointment of a successor. From an order in accordance with the petition, said Killey appeals. Affirmed.

Joseph Slye (Chas. W. Kitts, of counsel), for appellant. Vogelsang & Brown, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an appeal from an order revoking letters of guardianship issued to appellant, Ida A. Killey, of the person and estate of Chloe F. Tilton, an incompetent, and appointing petitioner, Louis Hammersmith, such guardian.

The petition was filed on January 17, 1910, and on that day the court fixed the hearing for January 31, 1910, on which day the guardian of said incompetent appeared and answered and embodied therein as part thereof what purports to be her first account as such guardian. At the same time her attorney filed a motion that "the order or citation * * * to show cause why her letters of guardianship in said matter should not be revoked, be quashed and the petition * * * be stricken from the files and said matter dismissed on the ground that under the alleged facts * * * the court had no jurisdiction to make said order nor issue said citation," and that, admitting all the averments of the petition to be true, the court had no authority to revoke the guardian's letters. The evidence is not brought up, and we must therefore presume that it supported the findings of the court. There was no demurrer to the petition on the ground of any indefiniteness or uncertainty in the petition or on any other ground, and it may be doubted whether the sufficiency of its averments to support the order can properly be raised by a motion to quash the citation. However, as the motion is based on alleged want of jurisdiction and as the question of jurisdiction may be raised at any stage of the proceedings, we will not deny appellant's right to have the order reviewed and the question of jurisdiction determined.

It appears from the petition: That petitioner has been a friend of Charles Tilton, deceased, husband of said Chloe Tilton, for more than 20 years, "and has interested himself in behalf of said Chloe Tilton, as her friend, since December 12, 1909." That on April 12, 1905, Ida A. Killey, a resident of the city and county of San Francisco, was appointed by said court the guardian of the person and estate of said Chloe Tilton and ever since has been and now is such guardian. That ever since April 15, 1904, the said Chloe Tilton has been and still is an inmate of the State Hospital for the Insane at Napa. That said incompetent has property, of the value of about $30,000, consisting of real and personal property situated in this state. That all the proceedings in the matter of said guardianship were destroyed by fire on or about April 18, 1906, and said guardian has never taken any steps to restore the same or any part thereof, and there is neither an inventory of said estate, nor any account of receipts and disbursements on file herein. On information and belief, it is alleged that said guardian has never filed an inventory in said estate, and has never presented to the court any account therein since her appointment as guardian. That petitioner has been informed by the medical superintendent of said hospital "that the said Chloe Tilton is sufficiently restored to health so that she is able to leave said hospital at any time, provided that she be placed under the care of a nurse." That petitioner has personally visited said incompetent at said hospital, "and is convinced from observation, conversation, and reliable inquiry made that she should leave said hospital and take up her private abode attended by a nurse, and that it would be for her best interest and welfare to do so. That the condition of her health is such as to permit her removal from said Napa State Hospital and to continue under the care of a nurse." It is further averred that said guardian is also administratrix of the estate of Charles Tilton, the deceased husband of said incompetent, and was duly appointed as such administratrix in April, 1905, and that said incompetent is sole heir to the estate of said deceased; that all the records and proceedings in said last-mentioned estate were destroyed by fire about April 18, 1906, and said administratrix has never taken any steps to restore the same, or any part thereof; that the interests of said Ida A. Killey as such administratrix are adverse to the interests of said incompetent; that the said incompetent, by a proper guardian, should at once bring proceedings in this court against said administratrix to compel an accounting in the matter of the estate of said Charles Tilton, deceased, and to take other steps for the benefit of said estate, and also to obtain a family allowance and distribution on behalf of said incompetent. Whether or not an inventory was ever filed by the guardian does not appear, and none accompanied the account filed with the answer. The court made no finding on that fact, but otherwise the court found the facts as alleged in the petition to be true. It also found that "more than one year ago Dr. Elmer E. Stone, then and now superintendent of said hospital, notified said Ida A. Killey that it was for the best interests and welfare of said Chloe F. Tilton to be forthwith taken away from said hospital, and its other inmates, to abide elsewhere with a nurse; that at said time and ever since the financial condition of her estate enabled her to be supported and maintained in an abode outside of said hospital and in care of a nurse; that said Ida A. Killey has in no way ever attempted to remove said Chloe F. Tilton from said hospital to abide elsewhere in care of a nurse, or otherwise, and has never taken any action to apply any part of her estate, or any proceeds derived therefrom, toward her maintenance and support outside of said hospital." It is also found that the guardian has mismanaged certain designated real property of her ward, and has continuously up to the time of her answer to said citation failed to present or file in court any account or report of her said guardianship, although often notified so to do.

The court also made the following findings:

"(9) That the said Chloe F. Tilton was examined as a witness in her own behalf in this proceeding and questioned at great length by the court for the purpose of ascertaining the condition of her mind and her desires as to the revocation of the said letters of guardianship issued to said Ida A. Killey; that the court found and finds her memory, far above the average, her thoughts rational, and her mind perfectly clear and sound in reference to the nature of this proceeding in every respect; that said Chloe F. Tilton in such examination expressly stated that she desired the immediate revocation of said letters and the removal of said Ida A. Killey as such guardian.

"(10) That said Ida A. Killey mismanaged the estate of said Chloe F. Tilton and persisted in a continued failure to perform her duties, both as such guardian of her person and of her estate.

"(11) That said Chloe F. Tilton in her said examination in this proceeding in open court expressly requested that Louis Hammersmith, of the city and county of San Francisco, be appointed guardian of her person and estate upon the removal of said Ida A. Killey as such guardian; that said request and nomination for the said appointment of said Louis Hammersmith was and is a rational act on the part of said Chloe F. Tilton and she well understood the purport and meaning thereof in all respects."

Appellant, in her brief, states that she relies on the following points: That the motion to quash the citation and dismiss the petition should have been granted, because: (1) The citation is not sufficient; (2) the court was without jurisdiction to remove the guardian or appoint a new guardian; (3) the findings are broader than the petition; (4) the incompetent, after commitment and appointment of a guardian is without civil capacity to nominate a guardian and an appointment based thereon is void.

1. The prayer of the petition was that the guardian show cause why her letters of guardianship should not be revoked and a new guardian appointed. The order for citation to issue is in the record, but not the citation itself. It appears, however, that the citation was issued and served "pursuant to the above order." The point now made is that "the citation herein issued does not contain a brief statement of the nature of the proceeding so as to inform one answering." Section 1707 of the Code of Civil Procedure, provides what a citation is to contain, among other requirements: "(2) A brief statement of the nature of the proceeding." The order stated that it issued "on reading and filing the petition of Louis Hammersmith, on behalf of Chloe Tilton, for the revocation of the letters of guardianship of Ida A. Killey, in the matter of said guardianship," and it ordered said "Ida A. Killey to show cause why such letters of guardianship should not be revoked." The guardian came in and answered fully. She seems to have had no difficulty in answering the petition because of any insufficient statement in the citation, and as it served its purpose appellant has now no cause for complaint.

2. Want of jurisdiction to remove the guardian is based upon the alleged insufficiency of the petition. It is claimed that the petition "contains no allegation that it is brought on behalf of the insane person by the petitioner as her friend, next of kin, or kin," and does not set forth the names of the kin in order that the citation may be issued to them. Civil Code, § 253, states the causes for which a guardian may be removed: "(1) For abuse of his trust; (2) for continued failure to perform his duties; * * * (5) for having an interest adverse to the faithful performance of his duties. * * *" Section 1801, Code of Civil Procedure, provides: "When a guardian, appointed either by the testator or a court, becomes * * * incapable of discharging his trust or unsuitable therefor, or has wasted or mismanaged the estate, or failed for thirty days to render an account or make a return, the superior court may, upon such notice to the guardian as the court may require, remove him * * * the court may appoint another in the place of the guardian who resigned or was removed." Section 1763, Code of Civil Procedure, provides as follows: "When it is represented to the superior court, or a judge thereof, upon the verified petition of any relative or friend, that any person is insane, or from any cause mentally incompetent to manage his property, such court or judge must cause a notice to be given to the supposed insane or incompetent person of the time and place of hearing the case, not less than five days before the time so appointed, and such person, if able to attend, must be produced on the hearing." Section 1764, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that, if after a full hearing it appears that such person is incapable of taking care of himself and of managing his property, the court must appoint a guardian of his person and estate. The averment as to the friendly relation of petitioner to Mrs. Tilton and her husband was, we think, sufficient to qualify petitioner to appear as her friend. The court, no doubt, inquired fully into that alleged relation. The statute does not require service of the citation on the next of kin. It was served upon Mrs. Killey, and she appeared personally in court. Some of the averments are conclusions or opinions of the petitioner, and others were stated on information and belief, still others did not in themselves, unaided, constitute ground for the removal of the guardian. Viewed as a pleading in an ordinary action at law, it was perhaps open to special demurrer on the ground of uncertainty or want of facts to support averments of mere conclusions. But in proceedings of the character here a petition is not subjected to the tests given to complaints in actions at law. If there is sufficient stated to inform the court that it should interfere for the protection of persons dependent upon it for protection, it is sufficient, and the duty is then devolved upon the court to inform itself and take such action as may seem to be necessary and proper. Enough was stated in the petition to authorize the court to inquire whether the guardian had abused her trust; or was guilty of continued failure to perform her duties; or had an interest adverse to the faithful performance of her duties; or was unsuitable to act; or had mismanaged or wasted the estate. How far the evidence went to establish dereliction of duty in any or all of these particulars we do not know, as the evidence is not before us, and, as already stated, we must presume that there was sufficient evidence to support the findings, which latter, in our opinion, fully support the order complained of.

3. It is claimed that the court was without jurisdiction to appoint a new guardian because the citation was "addressed solely and alone to the guardian, Ida A. Killey, and was only to show cause why her letters should not be revoked." The argument is that section 1763, Code of Civil Procedure, provides for notice to insane or incompetent persons for the appointment of a guardian, and it is urged that the same formality is required to appoint a new guardian upon the removal of one already appointed. Section 1763 has reference to the original appointment. It is section 1801 of the same Code which gives the authority to the court to remove a guardian. The section provides that the guardian may be removed, "upon such notice to the guardian as the court may require"; and, upon his removal, "the court may appoint another in the place of the guardian who has resigned or was removed." Nothing is said in this connection about a notice to the incompetent person. In the case of Hallett v. Patrick, 49 Cal. 590, a petition was filed praying for the appointment of a guardian of one Wright, an insane person. Notice was served upon Wright and the appointment was made as prayed for. The appointee failing to file his bond, the court, without further notice to Wright, made another appointment. Said the court: "His appointment was not a step in a new and original proceeding commenced by him, but in the former proceeding commenced by Enos" (the first appointee). It was held that the court did not lose its jurisdiction to appoint a guardian because the person first selected failed to qualify. "Wright had his day in court, was notified of the proceeding, and was bound to take notice that Enos failed to qualify, and that the court would appoint another in his stead. Having had one notice of the first step in the proceeding, Wright was bound to take notice of every subsequent step until a guardian was appointed and qualified, or the application otherwise definitely disposed of." The only question not covered by this decision is whether, where an appointment having been made and the appointee has qualified, the court may make a new appointment on removal of the first appointee, without taking the steps required in making an original appointment; that is, serve notice on the incompetent. Appellant invokes by analogy the case of a removed administrator or executor. We can see why notice might be required in such case, for the right to administer an estate of a deceased person is given by statute to different persons in a certain order of priority. No such right exists in a case such as we have here. As in the case cited, the court acquired jurisdiction in the original proceeding and it continued after the removal of the guardian. The questions first determined were incompetency and the necessity for a guardian. While this condition continued, the court had jurisdiction to do whatever subsequently arose to make the further action of the court necessary, and this without further notice to the incompetent. Besides, it appears that the incompetent was, by order of the court, present at the hearing, and, so far as she was capable of giving consent, it was given to the appointment of petitioner.

4. The findings are not broader than the averments of the petition in any objectionable sense. The findings complained of, with one exception, assuming as we must that the evidence was sufficient to support them, might well be based upon the averments of the petition. The court found that the guardian had neglected her duty in respect of a certain dwelling as to which there was no specific averment. This finding may be disregarded and sufficient remain to support the order.

As to the point that she was incapable of giving consent and hence the order based upon such consent is void, it is sufficient to say that the appointment of the new guardian was not made as her nominee and upon her request alone. Presumptively the court was otherwise satisfied that petitioner was a proper person to be appointed. Whether findings are required at all admits of some question. Code Civ. Proc. § 1704; In re Violet Lundberg, 143 Cal. 402, 411, 77 Pac. 156. We think the court was justified in interrogating the incompetent and ascertaining as far as it could her mental condition, and was also justified in complying with her wishes if he found her mentally capable of aiding his judgment. The course taken by the court was not unusual. Appellant cites McGee v. Hayes, 127 Cal. 336, 59 Pac. 767, 78 Am. St. Rep. 57, where it was held that upon an application for appointment of a guardian of an incompetent person service of notice on the incompetent is essential to jurisdiction. That was the case of an original application and first appointment where the personal presence of the incompetent was held by the trial court to be sufficient and the Supreme Court decided that the court was without jurisdiction. If we are correct in the view previously expressed under point 3, the case cited does not apply here. The authority of the court to appoint a new guardian did not come alone from the provisions of section 1763, Code Civ. Proc., but from a necessity arising after an appointment had been made under that section.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

15 Cal. App. 224

In re WEBER'S ESTATE

In re SPRANGER. (Civ. 777.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Jan. 27, 1911.)

1. WILLS (§ 52*)—PRESUMPTIONS—SANITY.

Soundness of mind is presumed, and the burden is upon contestant seeking to overthrow a codicil to a will on the ground of testator's mental incapacity to show such incapacity by satisfactory evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 101-110; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

2. WILLS (§ 55*)—EXECUTION—TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to support a finding that testator was of sound and disposing mind when he executed a codicil to his will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 137-161; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

3. WILLS (§ 45*)—TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY—PHYSICAL INFIRMITY.

One may be very feeble, aged, and infirm and suffering from disease, and yet be capable of disposing of his property by will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 92; Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

4. WILLS (§ 159*)—EXECUTION—"UNDUE INFLUENCE."

Undue influence that will destroy a will must be such as in effect destroyed testator's free agency and substituted for his own another person's will, and directly affected the testamentary acts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 387; Dec. Dig. § 159.*]

5. WILLS (§ 166*)—"UNDUE INFLUENCE"—EVIDENCE.

Though circumstantial evidence of undue influence inducing a will is sufficient, it must do more than merely raise a suspicion or show mere opportunity to exercise the influence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 432; Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 7166-7172; vol. 8, pp. 7823, 7824.]

6. WILLS (§ 166*)—EXECUTION—UNDUE INFLUENCE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to support a finding that there was neither conspiracy of testator's son and testator's executor nor undue influence exercised by either of them in connection with the execution of a codicil to the will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 421-437; Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

7. WILLS (§ 302*)—EXECUTION OF CODICIL—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to support a finding that at the execution of a codicil testator acknowledged his signature to the attesting witnesses that such witnesses signed their names at the end of the codicil at testator's request, and that the codicil was published and acknowledged by testator as his codicil.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 697, 700, 708; Dec. Dig. § 302.*]

8. WILLS (§ 322*)—PROCEEDINGS FOR PROBATE—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

In a proceeding for revocation of probate of a codicil, the exclusion of a question asked a witness who had testified that testator's son called more frequently upon testator than when witness was first employed in testator's household as to whether he ever heard any loud talking going on in the room between testator and such son was not error, where it was not suggested that such loud talking had any relation to any issue in the case, or that it was to be followed up or explained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 762-765; Dec. Dig. § 322.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Petition of Augusta C. H. W. Spranger for revocation of probate of a codicil to the will of Adolph C. Weber. From a decree dismissing the petition and an order denying a new trial, contestant appeals. Affirmed.

J. C. McKinstry and John A. Wright, for appellant. F. H. Dam, for respondent Bender. Craig & Craig, for respondent Jordan, Jr. Goodfellow & Eells, for respondent Weber.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an appeal from a decree of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco dismissing a petition for the revocation of the probate of a codicil to the last will of deceased and from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

Adolph C. Weber made his will August 29, 1905, and the codicil attacked was made April 5, 1906. He died at San Francisco in the German Hospital on April 27, 1906. Both the will and the codicil were admitted to probate June 19, 1906. Deceased left surviving him a son, Adolph, and a married daughter, Mrs. Spranger, the latter being the contestant and appellant. At the time of her father's death she was in Europe. She returned to San Francisco on June 19, 1906, the day on which the will and codicil were admitted to probate, of which, however, she does not appear then to have had knowledge. On June 18, 1907, she filed her contest of the codicil on these grounds: (1) That at the time of its execution her father was not of sound and disposing mind; (2) Because of the undue influence of the testator's son, Adolph, and one Maximilian Bender in procuring the codicil to be executed. (3) That the codicil was not executed, attested, or published as required by law.

Among the provisions of the will was the following: "I have heretofore made gifts and advances to my children Adolph H. Weber and Augusta Spranger. It is my intention that neither of my said children be charged with any gifts or advances that heretofore have been made to them or that shall hereafter before my death be made to them, or to either of them." No question arises as to the mental and physical capacity of the testator to make the will at the time of its execution, and it is not now attacked. The codicil is as follows: "I hereby add the following to my last will and testament: I hereby declare that the following gifts and grants made by me to my children, hereinafter named, were made as and are hereby charged to be advancements by me to them of a part of their respective shares." A certain gift of money by him to his son is then specifically mentioned, and also certain real property conveyed to the son. Next is specified certain pieces of real estate conveyed by him to his daughter. The codicil concludes as follows: "Inasmuch as the said advancements made by me to my said daughter greatly exceed in value said advancements made by me to my said son, I hereby give and bequeath to my said son, Adolph H. Weber, the equivalent in value in cash or negotiable securities or both, as he may select, of the excess in value of the said advancements made by me to my said daughter over the said advancements made by me to my said son. [Signed] Adolph C. Weber." The certificate signed by the witnesses conforms to the requirements of the Code and is signed by Erasmus Ad. Dahlstrom and Mrs. Elizabeth Steiner, both residing at 1422 Sutter street, the home of deceased. They were servants in his household.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The will was prepared by Mr. Alexander D. Keyes from instructions given him directly by Mr. Weber. Mr. Keyes was attorney for the Humboldt Savings Bank, of which Mr. Weber had been the president for many years and of which Mr. Keyes had at times served as co-director. One of the witnesses to the will, Dahlstrom, was a witness to the codicil. The codicil was prepared by Mr. Francis H. Dam, one of the attorneys for respondent, from instructions received from Mr. Weber's son, and when prepared was sent to Max F. Bender, named in the will as one of the executors, who attended to its execution. The son, so far as appears, took no part in securing its execution, and did not appear as a witness at the hearing of the contest of the codicil.

The court made findings in favor of respondents, and, as they meet the specific averments of the petition to revoke the codicil, they will serve the double purpose of showing what was alleged in the petition as grounds for the contest, and the findings of the court and conclusions thereon, dismissing the petition. These findings are as follows:

"(3) That said codicil was executed by said Adolph C. Weber, deceased, on the 5th day of April, 1906, and bears the date of April 5, 1906. That at the time of the making and signing of said codicil the said Adolph C. Weber, deceased, was of sound and disposing mind. That on the date last aforesaid said deceased was not of unsound mind or mentally incompetent or unable to make or then execute the said codicil, or make or execute any codicil whatever.

"(4) That said Adolph C. Weber, deceased, left a will executed and dated August 29, 1905, and that said will was admitted to probate by an order of this court, duly given and made, on the 19th day of June, 1906. That said codicil was admitted to probate by an order of this court duly given and made on the 19th day of June, 1906. That at the time said will was made said Adolph C. Weber was of the age of 79 years. That at the time the said will was made the said Adolph C. Weber was not then suffering or did not continue to suffer thereafter until the date of his death, or did not suffer thereafter at any time prior to the making of said codicil, from disease or diseases which produced in him great physical or any mental weakness. That at the time said will was made said Adolph C. Weber was not physically or mentally weak or feeble. That physical or mental weakness on the part of Adolph C. Weber did not steadily or rapidly increase from the making of said will until the time of his death. That Adolph H. Weber did not learn of the contents of said will shortly after the execution thereof or long or at any time prior to the making of said codicil. That Adolph H. Weber did not conspire or collude with Maximilian Bender to induce said Adolph C. Weber to change said will by the execution of said codicil. That it was not the will or intention of said Adolph C. Weber continuously from the date of the execution of the said will to the date of his death or at the time of making the said codicil, or thereafter, to dispose of his property as provided in said will. That said codicil did and does express the wishes and will of said testator, and did not or does not express the wishes or will of said Adolph H. Weber. That the said Adolph H. Weber did not with the assistance of said Maximilian Bender, or otherwise, or at all, overcome the wishes of said testator, or constrain him to do that which he would not otherwise have done, by the exercise of undue or any influence on the part of Maximilian Bender, or by the exercise of duress on the part of Adolph H. Weber, or otherwise, or at all. That said Bender was an intimate acquaintance of the said Adolph C. Weber for many years prior to his death. That said Bender did not pretend to be a friend of said testator or to advise him in his affairs impartially or disinterestedly, because of any pretended friendship, but said Bender was in fact a friend of said testator, and did advise him in his affairs impartially and disinterestedly. That said Bender did not designedly, or otherwise, or at all, seek to influence said testator by conspiring or colluding with the said Adolph H. Weber in order to procure for said Weber a larger or any interest in said testator's estate, or at all. That said Bender did not, as a pretended friend of said testator, wait upon him or perform various or any services for a year or more, or at any time prior to the death of said testator. That said testator was not at any time after the execution of said will of August 29, 1905, or up to the time of his death, by reason of any infirmities, or otherwise, or at all, easily or at all influenced or susceptible to the influence or will of said Bender, or unable to oppose his wishes or will to the wishes or will of said Bender. That Adolph H. Weber did not notify the said Bender of the terms or conditions of said will shortly after August 29, 1905, or for weeks, or at any time prior to the date of said codicil. That at the time of the making of said codicil the said Bender did not know and was not aware of the terms or conditions of said will, except that the said Bender had been appointed an executor thereof. That said Bender did not continuously, or at any time after the making of said will, actively, or at all, urge upon said testator that he modify said will by the execution of said codicil, or otherwise, or at all. That the said Adolph H. Weber did not at any time before the making of said codicil in an angry or threatening manner, or otherwise, or at all, demand or insist of said testator that he execute said codicil or threaten to apply for letters of guardianship on the ground of the alleged incompetency of said testator, unless he execute said codicil, or at all. That the said testator was not induced, contrary to his wishes or intention, to execute said codicil as a result of any duress or menacing conduct by said Adolph H. Weber, or any undue or any influence of said Bender, or otherwise. That said codicil was and is executed, attested and published as required by law. That the signature of said testator was acknowledged by him to the attesting witnesses to said codicil, and each of them, to be made by said testator. That the attesting witnesses to said codicil did sign their respective names at the end of said codicil at the request of said testator. That the said codicil was published and acknowledged by said testator as his codicil, and that the said codicil is a codicil of said testator."

The record is somewhat voluminous, and upon vital facts the evidence is conflicting. We shall not undertake to analyze all the testimony or enter upon any extended discussion of its legal effect, for we are satisfied that, under rules of procedure by which we are governed, there is but one conclusion open to us—namely—that there is evidence sufficient to support the findings.

1. The first question presented by appellant concerns the mental capacity of deceased when he executed the codicil. Appellant attempts to sustain her contention by casting doubt upon the soundness of mind of deceased when he executed the will. We attach no importance to that question for the witness, Keyes, upon whose testimony appellant relies, said that, while he had "some slight hesitation on the subject," he testified: "My conclusion was that he was a man of sound mind." He added: "But very much weakened." Suffice it to say that the findings of the court on the probate of the will are not called in question and the soundness of the testator's mind when the will was executed cannot now be disputed. At a later stage of his testimony Mr. Keyes gave strong emphasis to the fact that Mr. Weber was a very self-willed, strong-minded man. "He was a man who believed in what he called military discipline, in obedience and submission to authority, and he was a leader; a man of positive views. He would not tolerate interference with his plans. * * * He was a fair-minded man." He was asked if he noticed anything in his demeanor after the will was executed and replied: "I noticed he was growing weaker steadily; I think mentally, and particularly physically. Q. What signs of mental weakness, if any, did you observe in him? A. Inability to grasp ideas quickly and loss of memory." On cross-examination by counsel for respondent he said he had signed the petition for the probate of the will and codicil.

Witness Max F. Bender was made an executor of the will. His relations with the testator were quite intimate and friendly, and in many respects may be said to have been confidential. During the last year or two of his life Mr. Weber had retired from active business and was confined to his house by illness, not of such nature, however, as would necessarily at once impair his mental faculties. Bender was a frequent visitor at the home of deceased. He testified that he read the letters aloud to Mr. Weber which came to him from his daughter then in Europe "and discussed the same with him"; that Mr. Weber delivered stocks and bonds into Bender's possession to hold in trust for deceased; that he "frequently wrote letters for Mr. Weber." In many other ways it was shown that Mr. Bender was in a position to know Mr. Weber's mental condition and whether he was of sound and disposing mind, as his visits at his home continued up to April 17, 1906. He testified: "I have known Adolph C. Weber since the year 1874. My relations with Mr. Weber were always friendly. During the first year of my acquaintance with him I saw him a great deal as he was a next door neighbor of a family named Schmidt. I married a daughter of Mr. Schmidt. During the last two years of his lifetime I saw Mr. Weber from two to three times a week. I conversed with him quite frequently. I knew the members of Mr. Weber's family in San Francisco and he knew the members of mine. I have an opinion as to the soundness or unsoundness of mind of Adolph C. Weber on the 5th day of April, 1906. It is my opinion that on that day he was of perfectly sound mind."

Erasmus Ad. Dahlstrom was the witness to the codicil on whose testimony it was admitted to probate. In his affidavit he stated: "The said instrument was signed and sealed by the said Adolph C. Weber at his residence in the city and county of San Francisco on the said 5th day of April, A. D. 1906, the day it bears date, in the presence of myself and of said Elizabeth Steiner, and the said Adolph C. Weber thereupon published the said instrument as, and declared to us the same to be, a codicil to his last will and testament and requested us in attestation thereof to sign the same as witnesses. The said Elizabeth Steiner and I then and there in the presence of the said Adolph C. Weber and in the presence of each other, subscribed our names as witnesses to the said instrument. At the time of executing the said instrument, to wit, the 5th day of April, 1906, the said Adolph C. Weber was over the age of 18 years, to wit, of the age of 80 years or thereabouts, and was of sound and disposing mind, and not acting under duress, menace, fraud, or undue influence."

Attorney Jubal Early Craig conducted the proceedings for the executors at the probate of the codicil. He testified: "I asked Mr. Dahlstrom his name and residence. He replied that his name was Erasmus Ad. Dahlstrom. I asked Mr. Dahlstrom if he was acquainted with the testator in his lifetime. He said he was. By the testator I mean Adolph C. Weber. I asked him if he was present at the execution of the document purporting to be a codicil to the last will and testament of Adolph C. Weber. He said that he was. I asked him if he knew the other witness whose name was subscribed to that document, as a subscribing witness, Mrs. Elizabeth Steiner. He answered 'Yes.' I asked him if the instrument purporting to be the codicil of the last will of Adolph C. Weber was executed by, was signed by, Adolph C. Weber and declared by him to the two witnesses to be his codicil to the last will and testament. He answered 'Yes.' I asked him if Adolph C. Weber requested him and the other witness, Elizabeth Steiner, to sign this document as subscribing witnesses, and he answered 'Yes.' I asked him if he then signed it in the presence of the testator as a subscribing witness and in the presence of the other subscribing witness, and he answered 'Yes.' I asked him if the other subscribing witness signed in the presence of the testator and in his presence, and he answered 'Yes.' I asked him if the testator, Adolph C. Weber, was of sound mind at the time, and he answered 'Yes.' Those are substantially the questions and answers. Q. Did you ask him as to whether he was of disposing memory? A. I asked him in the words that are here; sound mind, sound and disposing mind, and whether he was acting under duress, menace, fraud, and undue influence. He said Mr. Weber was of sound mind, and that he was not acting under menace, duress, fraud, or undue influence. I framed two questions. The first as to sound and disposing mind. He answered 'Yes.' To the second he answered 'No.' After I completed my examination of the witness, Judge Coffey asked Mr. Dahlstrom some questions with reference to the execution of the codicil and also with reference to the execution of the will. Whether Judge Coffey covered the same ground as I did I do not know. I know he covered part of the same ground."

Dahlstrom was called as a witness for contestant upon the point relating to the publication of the codicil, presently to be noticed. He was also asked some questions as to whether any change had taken place in Mr. Weber's health since the will was executed, and answered that he was "gradually weaker day by day"; that he read the morning paper and the witness generally read to him the Post in the evening—"up to the time of the earthquake" (of April 18, 1906); after that he was "upset too much to read." He also testified that "his memory was getting weaker." Witness "waited on him personally," helped him up and down stairs. It appeared that Mr. Weber suffered from rheumatism and diabetes; that he kept close watch on what was transpiring in the house; that he enjoyed hearing witness read the newspapers; was interested in what was going on in the world; witness had known him for 16 years; that he was a strong-minded, self-willed man, ran things in his house his own way; "he was an exceptionally determined and strong-minded man"; that he did not want to be removed from the house, which occurred while the city was burning. This is substantially his testimony on the question of testator's soundness of mind.

Mrs. Steiner, the other witness to the codicil, was not called at the probate, but was a witness at the contest of the codicil. She testified to nothing bearing upon the testator's soundness of mind further than to speak incidentally of his growing weaker towards the close of his life.

Mr. Charles E. Hatch, an attorney at law, was called by contestant and testified that he had known Mr. Weber for many years and knew him in the month of February, 1906, and was in the habit of visiting him socially; that in his opinion Mr. Weber was not competent to make a will at that time; that his "opinion was based upon his physical condition and the remarks he would make showing that he did not have that capacity—he was not the Weber of old. * * * We did not talk about business in our conversation. I could see from his conversation that he was not capable of transacting business, because certain things he was interested in socially he would seem to forget all about."

Frederick Koch testified for contestant that he had known Mr. Weber many years, had attended to real estate business for the Humboldt Savings Bank; that he visited Mr. Weber in January, February, and March, 1906. When asked his opinion as to Mr. Weber's mental condition, he answered: "I don't think he was of sound mind like he used to be." His reasons for this opinion were called for and he answered: "Well, sometimes we talked about certain matters and he stopped all at once and started something else. Then it was something else, and finally he got back to the question about the same talk that we were talking on before."

We have given in substance all the testimony upon the point now being considered. It seems quite clear that there was a progressive decline in Mr. Weber's physical condition, and that there was gradual impairment of his mental faculties, but it does not appear from the reasons given by witnesses, as to the extent of this impairment, that, when he executed the codicil, he did not have such strength of mind as to fully understand what he was doing. The testimony of Mr. Keyes and of the servants in the house, Dahlstrom and Steiner, is very guarded and inconclusive. Soundness of mind is to be presumed, and to show the contrary by satisfactory evidence was a burden cast upon contestant, which we do not think was sustained. Besides, there was evidence tending to show testamentary capacity and sufficient to produce a conflict upon the issue, which we must leave where the trial court left it. The proposition involved in the codicil was not complicated, but simple, and consisted merely in directing that the gifts already made to his children, being of unequal value, should be equalized in the final division of the property.

There is no necessary and compelling force in established physical infirmity which carries with it the inference of mental incapacity. A person may be very feeble, may be aged and infirm and suffering from disease, and yet be capable of disposing of his property. Estate of Motz, 136 Cal. 562, 69 Pac. 294; Estate of Morey, 147 Cal. 503, 82 Pac. 57. The mind may triumph over wasting disease, may rise superior to the decrepitude of old age. These are but evidences which may or may not exist but they are not incompatible with entire soundness of mind or of testamentary capacity.

2. It is next contended that the codicil did not express the wishes of the testator, but the wishes of his son, and that it was secured by the undue influence of the son and Max Bender, who, it is alleged, conspired to procure a larger interest in the estate for the son than was provided in the will. The support put forward to sustain this contention is largely, if not wholly, circumstantial. The chief of the circumstances relied upon are that the directions by the testator for the preparation of the codicil were given to Mr. Bender; that he communicated the desire of Mr. Weber to his son; that his son went to Mr. Dam, instead of Mr. Keyes who had drawn the will; that Mr. Dam made no inquiry as to Mr. Weber's mental condition, did not see the will or know its contents, but followed the son's direction, prepared the codicil and mailed it to Mr. Bender; that later Bender telephoned him that the codicil was mislaid and requested him to send a copy, which he did; that the codicil was subsequently executed with the guidance of Mr. Bender and under circumstances confirmatory of the alleged conspiracy between him and Mr. Weber's son, and that in the transaction Mr. Weber had no independent advice.

It appeared that the testator had made several wills previously to the one here; that the thought was in his mind that he might want to add a codicil; he talked with Mr. Keyes about it and Mr. Keyes gave him instructions showing how simple a thing it was; that in fact the will, by leaving the advancements to the two children unchanged, gave the daughter a greater share of the property of their father than the son was to receive; that Mr. Weber talked these matters over with Mr. Bender, and finally gave him instructions to have the codicil prepared; that it was prepared as shown above and read to Mr. Weber and examined and kept by him; that some time later he brought the subject up again with Mr. Bender, and on inquiry the paper could not be found: that Mr. Bender sent to Mr. Dam for a copy which was received and shown Mr. Weber, who expressed satisfaction with it and declared his intention to then sign it; that the house servants, Dahlstrom and Steiner, were called to witness the codicil. Mr. Bender knew that a will had been made and also who were named as executors, but knew nothing of its provisions except as might be inferred from what Mr. Weber told him concerning the proposed codicil—that he wanted to equalize the estate so that each of his children should get his or her proper share, giving specific directions in respect of the advancements mentioned in the will. There is no evidence that the son knew what was provided in the will further than these directions as to the codicil disclosed. He was not called as a witness in the contest. Much stress is laid on the fact that Mr. Dam, instead of Mr. Keyes, was employed to prepare the codicil and upon the fact that the son was not called as a witness by the respondent to explain his part in causing the codicil to be executed, and also on the fact that Mr. Dam drew the document without seeing the will or talking with the one who executed it. We see no evidence of a conspiracy because Mr. Keyes was not chosen to prepare the codicil. Mr. Dam was a reputable attorney, the service was not an unusual one or in the least complicated or requiring directions first hand, and he testified that nothing transpired in the hour he spent with Mr. Weber's son to arouse any suspicion that any unfairness or advantage over anyone was being taken, that he assumed that Mr. Weber knew what he wanted, and had given directions to Mr. Bender as reported to him by the son. Nor can we say, as is urged, that the trial court erred in not further probing into the matter, and especially in not requiring the son to make explanation. The contestant made no such showing as demanded explanation on his part. He had nothing to do with procuring his father's signature to the codicil either before or at the time it was placed there. If the court was satisfied, as it must have been, with Mr. Bender's account of all the circumstances attending it, we see no reason why we should not be. The facts must go further than to raise a suspicion of undue influence. As was said in Estate of McDevitt, 95 Cal. 17, 33, 34, 30 Pac. 101, 106: "Evidence must be produced that pressure was brought to bear directly upon the testamentary act; but this evidence need not be direct. Circumstantial evidence is sufficient. It must, however, do more than raise a suspicion." Mere opportunity to exercise undue influence is not sufficient. Estate of Black, 132 Cal. 395, 64 Pac. 695. "The kind of undue influence that will destroy the instrument must be such as in effect destroy the testator's free agency, and substituted for his own another person's will." Estate of Motz, 136 Cal. 563, 69 Pac. 295. We think the court was fully warranted in finding that there was neither conspiracy on the part of the son and Mr. Bender, nor undue influence exercised by them, or either of them, to cause the execution of the codicil.

3. Was the codicil duly executed and published? At its probate one of the witnesses, Dahlstrom, testified, as we have seen, that the testator subscribed the instrument, declared it to be a codicil to his will, and requested the attesting witness to sign the same as witness. It is true that at this present hearing Dahlstrom's memory did not enable him to confirm his former testimony—in short, he retracted the statements made at the probate, and testified that Mr. Weber did not ask him to sign the paper, did not say what it was, nor did Mr. Bender. The other witness testified that nothing was said by the testator; that she was requested by Mr. Bender to come to Mr. Weber's room and sign a paper; that Mr. Weber said nothing and Mr. Bender said nothing "only to sign"; that she knew nothing at all about what she was signing. Mr. Bender testified that he called these two persons at Mr. Weber's request to witness the codicil. He testified: "When they came in Mr. Weber said: 'I am going to sign this codicil in your presence, the codicil to my will, and I want you to act as witnesses.' He said that to Mr. Dahlstrom and Mrs. Steiner. Both Mr. Dahlstrom and Mrs. Steiner were within his hearing at the time, at most perhaps not more than three or four feet away. * * * After having spoken, Mr. Weber got off the side of his bed—he was sitting on his bed—took the chair, and after I had put in the date, the 5th of April, into the document, he took the pen and signed his name." He testified that at the request of Mr. Weber Dahlstrom then signed and afterwards Mrs. Steiner did the same. They then left the room.

There was some evidence showing disappointment on the part of these two persons upon learning that no provision was made for them, and that they had shown some interest in Mrs. Spranger's success in her contest. But, apart from this, it seems to us that there is nothing in the evidence or in any or all of the circumstances connected with the preparation and final execution of the codicil which would justify us in holding that the trial court erred in accepting Mr. Bender's testimony and rejecting that of the two subscribing witnesses.

4. One error only is assigned as occurring in the course of the trial. Mrs. Steiner was called by the contestant on redirect examination. She testified that young Weber called more frequently than when the witness was first employed. "Q. Did you ever hear any loud talking going on in the room between them? Mr. Dam: I object as immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent, and not redirect examination. The Court: Sustained. * * * Mr. Wright: We ask your honor to allow us an exception." It was not suggested that this loud talking had any relation to any issue in the case, or that it was to be followed up in any way or explained. The ruling was not error.

Cal.Rep. 114-117 P.—7

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

time it takes effect, and has no application to causes in which judgments have been entered prior thereto, is especially applicable where the jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the appeal in the appellate court is constitutional and does not depend on statutory enactment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2563; Dec. Dig. § 1005.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 183*) — JEOPARDY — WAIVER.

Where accused after his trial had begun consented to the discharge of the jury without a verdict in order that he might withdraw his plea of not guilty and demur to the indictment, he thereby waived his right to claim that he had been once in jeopardy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 335; Dec. Dig. § 183.*]

4. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 61*)—BANK OFFICERS — OFFENSES — STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

Pen. Code, § 558, provides that every officer, agent, or clerk of any corporation, or of any persons proposing to organize a corporation, or to increase its capital stock who knowingly exhibits any false, forged, or altered book, paper, voucher, security, or other instrument of evidence, to any public officer or board authorized by law to examine the organization of such corporation, or to investigate its affairs, or to be allowed an increase of its capital stock, with intent to deceive such officer or board in respect thereto, is punishable by imprisonment, etc. Held, that such section was not limited to one proposing to organize a corporation, or to increase the capital stock of any corporation, but extended to and covered the case of an officer of a bank charged with exhibiting a false report of the bank's affairs to the bank commissioners with intent to deceive them with respect thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. § 121; Dec. Dig. § 61.*]

5. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 62*)—BANK OFFICERS—OFFENSES—FALSE REPORTS.

St. 1903, c. 266, required the officers of a bank whenever so required by the bank commissioners to make a written verified report showing the bank's actual financial condition at the close of any past day specified by the commissioners by stating, among other things, the total amount actually paid "in money" by stockholders for capital stock; and Pen. Code, § 558, declares that every officer of a corporation who knowingly exhibits a false statement to any officer or board authorized to examine the corporation with intent to deceive shall be punishable, etc. Held, that an indictment of a bank officer alleging that he exhibited to the bank commissioners a report which was false, in that it showed that the amount of capital of the bank actually paid "in coin" amounted to $102,245, when in truth the amount of capital of the bank theretofore paid "in coin" did not amount to more than $50,000, and that it was necessary and material for the bank commissioners to know from such report what amount of the capital stock of the bank had been paid "in coin," was not fatally defective in that the report stated the amount paid in coin instead of the amount paid "in money," since a statement that a certain amount had been paid "in coin" was in effect a statement that at least that amount had been paid in money.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 122-124; Dec. Dig. § 62.*]

6. CORPORATIONS (§ 324*)—OFFICERS—OFFENSES—FALSE STATEMENT—MATERIALITY.

In an indictment of an officer of a corporation for making an alleged false statement

15 Cal. App. 320

PEOPLE v. NASH. (Cr. 234.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Feb. 8, 1911. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court April 7, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1070½,* New, vol. 11, Key No. Series)—APPEAL—TIME—STATUTES. Pen. Code, §§ 1239, 1240, providing that appeals may be taken by oral announcement in open court when the order or judgment is rendered, applies only to orders and judgments rendered after the amendment took effect.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1005*)—RIGHT OF APPEAL—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

The rule that unless it is evident from the terms of a statute which gives, takes away, or modifies the remedy by appeal, that it was intended to have a retroactive effect, it applies only to cases pending and undetermined at the

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r indexes to officials authorized to investigate the corporation's affairs, in violation of Pen. Code, § 558, an indictment containing a general averment that the false statement was material was sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1441; Dec. Dig. § 324.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

W. B. Nash was indicted for knowingly exhibiting to the Bank Commissioner a false paper and instrument of evidence, to wit, a report of the bank with intent to deceive the Bank Commissioner in respect to its affairs. From an order sustaining a demurrer to the indictment, the People appeal. Reversed, with directions.

Attorney General Webb, W. H. Langdon, and Louis Ferrari, for the People. Campbell, Metson, Drew, Oatman & Mackenzie and Carroll Cook, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal by the people from a judgment for defendant entered upon demurrer to an indictment charging him with a felony. Respondent in his brief raises the point that this court has no jurisdiction of the appeal because not taken in accordance with the law in force at the time it was taken. Upon being arraigned, the defendant filed a demurrer to the indictment, which was by the court overruled. The defendant entered a plea of "not guilty," and the cause came on for trial. A jury was impaneled and some testimony taken, when, after certain objections made by defendant to the introduction of certain testimony had been sustained by the court, the court, upon motion of counsel for defendant, in which the district attorney joined, and with the consent of defendant given personally in open court, discharged the jury from further consideration of the cause. It further appears from the bill of exceptions that this course was taken in order that defendant might be allowed to withdraw his plea of "not guilty" and file a supplemental demurrer. Not only did the defendant in person and through his attorney consent to the discharge of the jury, but also in person and by his attorney waived any claim of jeopardy by reason of the jury having been impaneled. After the discharge of the jury defendant, with the permission of the court, withdrew his plea of "not guilty" and filed a demurrer, and the court thereupon, on the 10th day of June, 1909, gave its judgment sustaining the said demurrer. On the 8th day of July, 1909, the district attorney served, and on the 9th day of July, 1909, filed, a written notice of appeal from the judgment on demurrer. This notice was filed within the time allowed by the statute as it existed when the judgment was rendered (sections 1239 and 1240, Pen. Code, prior to amendment of 1909 [St. 1909, c. 711]). At the time the judgment was rendered, an appeal, either by the people or the defendant, might be taken by filing and serving a notice thereof, if from an order within 60 days from its rendition, and if from a judgment within 90 days from its rendition. Intermediate the rendition of the judgment and the filing of the notice of appeal in this case, to wit, on the 21st day of June, 1909, there went into effect an amendment to the Penal Code, approved on the 22d day of April, 1909 (sections 1239 and 1240), providing for appeals, either by the people or the defendant, by oral announcement thereof, in open court, at the time of the rendition of the judgment or order appealed from.

[1] It is claimed by the defendant that by the taking effect of the amendment, on June 21, 1909, providing that an appeal may be taken by oral announcement, in open court, at the rendition of the order or judgment, the right to appeal, at least by the people, from any judgment or order theretofore rendered, by the written notice, was at once cut off and ended, unless such appeal had been taken before the taking effect of the amendment. We think, however, the amendment to sections 1239 and 1240, Pen. Code of 1909 should not be construed as having any such effect. The provision in said amendment that appeals may be taken either by the defendant or the people by oral announcement in open court at the time the order or judgment is rendered, plainly was intended as a rule governing the method of taking appeals from orders and judgments thereafter rendered. To give it the effect of cutting off and ending the then existing right would be to give the statute a retroactive effect, which should not be done except where such is the plain intent of the law.

[2] "Unless it is evident from the terms of a statute, which gives, takes away, or modifies the remedy by appeal, that it was intended to have a retroactive effect, it applies only to cases pending and undetermined at the time it goes into effect, and has no application to causes in which judgments have been entered prior to that time." 2 Cyc. 524. Especially should this rule apply where, as in this case, the jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the appeal, in the appellate court, is constitutional, and does not depend upon statutory enactment.

The rule that statutes that modify the remedy by appeal should not be held to apply to judgments rendered before the taking effect of the statute was followed in Pignaz v. Burnett, 119 Cal. 158, 51 Pac. 48, and which case, we think, must be held to be determinative of the point now under discussion. In that case, after the entry of the judgment appealed from the law was amended so as to allow but six months after judgment for taking an appeal, instead of one year, the time allowed at the time of entry of judgment. The amendment took effect, as in the case at bar, 60 days after its passage. During all of this time the appellant might have taken his appeal without doubt. He did not take his appeal, however, until after the amendment to the law had gone into effect, which was nine months after the entry of judgment. The appeal was taken however within one year from the entry of judgment, which was in accord with the terms of the statute as it existed at the time of the entry of judgment, but not in accord with the terms of the statute as it existed at the time of taking the appeal. Upon a motion to dismiss the appeal it was held that the amended statute should be limited in its operation to judgments entered after it went into effect, and that it should not be given the effect of cutting off any right of appeal that existed when it went into effect.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

We are unable to see any difference in principle between the case above cited and the case at bar. True in the case at bar the appeal is by the people, and it is urged by appellant that we should hold that the right of the people to appeal was cut off, though we might not feel justified in holding the right of the defendant to be cut off under similar circumstances. We are unable to discover any merit in this suggestion. The language of the statute concerning the time and method of appeals by defendant and by the people is the same, and must be given the same effect. Unless we are prepared to hold that, upon the taking effect of the amendment to section 1239 on June 21, 1909, a defendant against whom judgment was rendered on June 20, 1909, when the law gave him 90 days to appeal therefrom, lost such right to appeal entirely, unless he had taken such appeal upon the day of the judgment (which we are not prepared to do), we must hold that the amendment to sections 1239 and 1240 had no effect upon the time for taking appeals from judgments and orders rendered at any time before the taking effect of such amendment. We think the right of appeal, both of defendant and the people, from orders and judgments rendered prior to the taking effect of the amendment of 1909 relative to appeals, was not affected by such amendment.

[3] Defendant further urges that we should dismiss the appeal because, as he has been once in jeopardy upon the charge made in the information, he cannot again be placed upon trial therefor, and in support thereof cites People v. Stoll, 143 Cal. 689, 77 Pac. 818. But in the case at bar the record shows that defendant, both personally and by his attorney, consented to the discharge of the jury without verdict, and waived the claim of once in jeopardy. The consent by defendant to discharge of jury without verdict is a bar to his plea of "once in jeopardy." This has been assumed to be the correct rule in all the California cases upon the subject (People v. Webb, 38 Cal. 467; People v. Horn, 40 Cal. 17, 11 Pac. 470; People v. Roberts, 114 Cal. 67, 45 Pac. 1016; People v. Terrill, 132 Cal. 497, 64 Pac. 894; People v. Stoll, 143 Cal. 698, 77 Pac. 818—opinion of Justice Angellotti), and has been expressly so decided in other jurisdictions (Com. v. Sholes, 13 Allen [Mass.] 554; People v. Gardiner, 62 Mich. 307, 29 N. W. 19; People v. White, 68 Mich. 648, 37 N. W. 34; Arcla v. State, 28 Tex. App. 198, 12 S. W. 599).

The objection to the jurisdiction of the court to entertain the appeal is without merit, and we must examine into the correctness of the ruling of the court in sustaining defendant's demurrer to the information.

The demurrer is a general one, and also contains the statement "that said indictment does not substantially conform to sections 950, 951, and 952 of the Penal Code of the state of California." The only point sufficiently raised by the demurrer is as to whether or not the indictment states facts sufficient to constitute a crime (People v. Bradbury, 155 Cal. 808, 103 Pac. 215), and this is the point discussed in the briefs.

[4] The indictment is drawn under section 558 of the Penal Code, which is as follows: "Every officer, agent, or clerk of any corporation, or of any persons proposing to organize a corporation, or to increase the capital stock of any corporation, who knowingly exhibits any false, forged or altered book, paper, voucher, security or other instrument of evidence, to any public officer or board authorized by law to examine the organization of such corporation, or to investigate its affairs, or to be allowed an increase of its capital, with intent to deceive such officer or board in respect thereto, is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison not less than three nor more than ten years."

The gravamen of the charge in the indictment against defendant is that he, as an officer of a banking corporation, to wit, the Market Street Bank, knowingly exhibited to the bank commissioners a false paper and instrument of evidence, to wit, a report of said bank, with intent to deceive said bank commissioners in respect to the affairs of said bank. It is not attempted to state that defendant was proposing to organize the said corporation or to increase its capital stock, or that said report was made in relation to any proposed organization of such corporation, or the increase of its capital stock. The contention of defendant is that the only purpose of the statute is to punish for frauds in procuring the organization of corporations or increasing the capital stock of corporations; and that no person can be guilty of a violation of the section under which the indictment is drawn "except persons who are proposing to organize a corporation, or to increase the capital stock of any corporation." In support of defendant's construction of the meaning of the language of the section, he points to the fact that the section is preceded by a note or head line as follows: "Frauds in procuring organization of corporation, or increasing its capital." While such matters may be looked to in order to ascertain the meaning of a statute, where the operative language of the act is of uncertain meaning, such headlines are of no value where the language of the act is plain and unambiguous in its meaning.

While the section in question is in several respects awkwardly worded, it plainly covers the case of an officer of a banking corporation who exhibits a false report of the affairs of the bank to the bank commissioners, with intent to deceive such commissioners with respect to the affairs of the bank. So far as this indictment is concerned, the section may be read as though written thus: "Every officer, agent or clerk of any corporation * * * who knowingly exhibits any false * * * book, paper, * * * or other instrument of evidence to any public officer * * * or board authorized by law * * * to investigate its affairs, * * * with intent to deceive such officer or board in respect thereto, is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison not less than three nor more than ten years." This is the language of the section that covers the case made by the indictment, and plainly this language is not limited to one "proposing to organize a corporation, or to increase the capital stock of any corporation." By no fair reading of the entire section can its meaning be so limited.

[5] The only other point urged by defendant in support of his demurrer and of the ruling of the court thereon relates to the materiality of the matter contained in the report exhibited by defendant to the bank commissioners and alleged to have been false. The bank commissioners' act (Stat. 1903, p. 365), in force when the offense is charged to have been committed, required the officers of a bank, whenever so required by the bank commissioners, to make a written report to said commissioners, verified by the oath of its president and secretary or cashier, showing its actual financial condition at the close of any past day specified by the commissioners, by stating among other things: "Third. The total amount actually paid, in money, by stockholders for capital stock. * * *"

The indictment alleges in apt language that the report exhibited by defendant to the bank commissioners was false in this, that it showed that the amount of capital of said bank theretofore actually paid in coin, was, and amounted to the sum of $102,245; whereas, in truth and in fact the amount of capital of said bank theretofore paid in coin did not amount to any greater sum than the sum of $50,000. It was further alleged in apt language that it became and was necessary and material for the bank commissioners to know from said report what amount of capital stock of said bank had been theretofore paid in coin.

It was contended by defendant that, inasmuch as the statute requires the report to the bank commissioners to state the total amount actually paid in money for capital stock, it was utterly immaterial how much was paid in coin. That "the only material question was how much was paid in money." It is thus conceded, as it must be, that the question as to what amount was paid in money, was a material matter to be shown in the report. While all money is not coin, a statement that a certain amount has been paid in coin is in effect a statement that at least that amount has been paid in money. Such a statement, if true, shows and proves that at least the amount stated has been paid in money, for the word "coin" in such a statement means money of a particular kind. If it is false, and misstates the amount paid in coin, it is misleading and deceiving as to the amount paid in money. The crime denounced by the section under which this indictment was framed is akin to the crime of perjury. In perjury any fact which tends to prove or to disprove the ultimate fact in issue is material, and any testimony concerning such probative fact would be material to the issue to be determined. [6] In perjury a general averment that the false testimony was material is sufficient (People v. Rodley, 131 Cal. 240, 63 Pac. 351; People v. Ennis, 137 Cal. 263, 70 Pac. 84), unless it affirmatively appears from other averments that it was immaterial (People v. Brilliant, 58 Cal. 214). The same rule, we think, is applicable to an indictment under section 558 of the Penal Code. The indictment under examination fully complies with this rule.

No other reason is suggested why the demurrer should have been sustained.

For the reasons above set forth, this appeal is properly before this court, and the court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the indictment.

The order and judgment are therefore reversed, with directions to the trial court to overrule and disallow the demurrer.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

15 Cal. App. 329

In re DALY'S ESTATE.

DALY v. WEDEMEYER. (Civ. 776.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 9, 1911. On Petition for Rehearing, March 10, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 7, 1911.)

1. TRIAL (§ 165*) — NONSUIT — MOTION — DETERMINATION.

A motion for a nonsuit presents a question of law for the court, it being equivalent to a demurrer to the evidence or an objection that, admitting all the proved material facts to be true, they do not in legal effect operate in favor of plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 373, 374; Dec. Dig. § 165.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 165*)—NONSUIT—EFFECT OF MOTION.

The evidence on a motion for a nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's case must be accorded its full probative force, even if erroneously admitted, and must be taken most strongly against defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 373, 374; Dec. Dig. § 165.*]

3. WILLS (§ 326*)—CONTEST—TRIAL.

In determining whether, on a motion for a nonsuit at the close of contestant's case in a proceeding to contest a will, the evidence produced by the contestant is sufficient to require the submission of the case to the jury, the same rules apply as in civil cases, and every favorable inference fairly deducible, and every favorable presumption fairly arising from the evidence produced must be considered as facts proved in favor of the contestant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 326.*]

4. WILLS (§ 326*)—CONTEST—TRIAL.

Where, on a motion for a nonsuit at the close of contestant's case in a will contest, the evidence is fairly susceptible of two constructions, the court must take the view most favorable to contestant, and, if contradictory evidence has been given, it must be disregarded. If there is any substantial evidence tending to prove in favor of contestant the facts necessary to make out his case, he is entitled to a submission of the case to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 326.*]

5. WILLS (§ 324*)—UNDUE INFLUENCE—EVIDENCE.

On a will contest, the question of undue influence held one for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 324.*]

On Petition for Rehearing.

6. WILLS (§ 326*)—CONTEST—NONSUIT.

On a motion for a nonsuit on a will contest, no question of conflicting evidence can arise, for the facts which appear to have been proved by the evidence must be assumed to be true, and if, so viewing the evidence, there appear sufficient facts to make out a prima facie case in favor of contestant, the court has no right to take the case from the jury, even if there is an abundance of evidence tending to sustain the will or disprove the facts established in favor of contestant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 326.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thomas C. Denny, Judge.

Proceedings by Matilda Daly to revoke the probate of the will of James Daly, deceased, against Elizabeth Wedemeyer. From a judgment of nonsuit, contestant appeals. Reversed, and rehearing denied.

S. K. Dougherty, for appellant. T. J. Geary and F. A. Meyer, for respondent.

HART, J. The contestant instituted proceedings for the revocation of the probate of the last will and testament of her son, James Daly, deceased, and, on the close of her case, the court, on the motion of the respondent, granted a judgment of nonsuit. This appeal is from said judgment.

The will purports to give, bequeath, and devise all the testator's estate "of every kind and character and wherever situated to my friend, Mrs. Elizabeth Wedemeyer, absolutely and forever." Said Elizabeth Wedemeyer is named by the testator as executrix of said will to act as such "without being required to give any bonds whatever." The testament also authorizes the executrix "to sell, at either public or private sale, any or all of my estate without any order of court so to do and without any notice of sale." The grounds upon which the revocation of the order admitting said will to probate is urged are: (1) That said will was not properly or duly executed—that is, that the execution of the instrument was unattended by certain essential formalities; (2) that the execution of said will was procured solely by and through undue influence exercised by the beneficiary thereunder upon the testator at the time of the execution of the testament.

As stated, upon the close of the contestant's case a motion by the respondent for a nonsuit was granted by the court, and the important question involved here is whether the court was justified in thus taking the case from the jury.

[1] "A motion for a nonsuit presents a question of law for determination by the court. The motion is tantamount to a demurrer to the evidence, or an objection that, admitting all the proved material facts to be true, said facts do not in legal effect operate in favor of plaintiff, or, in other words, do not entitle him to the relief asked for by him." Bush v. Wood, 8 Cal. App. 650, 97 Pac. 710, and cases therein cited. [2] And the evidence, on a motion for a nonsuit on the close of plaintiff's case, must be accorded the benefit of its full probative force, and this is true whether the evidence has been erroneously admitted or not. It is also true that on such motion the evidence must be taken most strongly against the defendant (Goldstone v. Merchants' Ice Co., 123 Cal. 625, 56 Pac. 776), and, if the plaintiff has introduced proof sufficient to make out a prima facie case under the allegations of his complaint, the motion, if made on the close of his case, should be denied. Janin v. London, etc., Bank, 92 Cal. 14, 27 Pac. 1100, 14 L. R. A. 320, 27 Am. St. Rep. 82; Nonrefillable Bottle Co. v. Robertson, 8 Cal. App. 103, 96 Pac. 324; Archibald's Estate v. Matteson, 5 Cal. App. 441, 90 Pac. 723; Bush v. Wood, supra. In short, as is said in Bush v. Wood, supra: "It is clear that it makes no difference, where the motion for a nonsuit is made on the close of plaintiff's case, whether the court itself believes the testimony or not, for, as is obvious, the material facts which the evidence tends to prove must be assumed to be true for the purpose of the motion, just the same as the material facts alleged in a pleading must be so treated in the consideration of a demurrer to such pleading." In the case of the Estate of Arnold, 147 Cal. 583, 82 Pac. 252, speaking of a motion for a nonsuit upon the close of contestant's case, in a will contest, the Supreme Court says: [3] "In determining whether or not in a proceeding to contest a will, the evidence produced by the contestants is sufficient to require the submission of the case to the jury, the same rules apply as in civil cases. Every favorable inference fairly deducible, and every favorable presumption fairly arising, from the evidence produced must be considered as facts proved in favor of the contestants. [4] Where evidence is fairly susceptible of two constructions, or if either of several inferences may reasonably be made, the court must take the view most favorable to the contestants. (Italics ours.) All the evidence in favor of the contestants must be taken as true and if contradictory evidence has been given it must be disregarded. If there is any substantial evidence tending to prove in favor of contestants all the facts necessary to make out their case, they are entitled to have the case go to the jury for a verdict on the merits." See, also, Estate of Welch, 6 Cal. App. 45, 91 Pac. 336.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Viewed by the light of the foregoing rules, by which trial courts must be controlled in deciding a motion for a nonsuit on the close of plaintiff's case, the order allowing the motion for a nonsuit in the case at bar cannot for a moment be upheld, as we think an examination of the evidence produced by the contestant will clearly and unquestionably prove.

Of the two grounds upon which the probate of the will is sought to be revoked, the principal and most important is the charge that the alleged execution of the will was procured through the exercise of undue influence upon the testator by the respondent at the time of the execution of the instrument, to which proposition the evidence is mainly addressed.

The evidence discloses these facts: [5] The deceased, James Daly, was a native of Ireland, and at the time of his death, in the county of Sonoma, this state, on the 25th day of December, 1908, was of the age of about 53 years. He came to the United States when a young man, and for several years resided at Minneapolis, in the state of Minnesota. Residing in Ireland when first he came to the United States were his father, mother, sisters, and brothers. After having been in the United States for about six years, he returned to his old home in Ireland for the purpose of visiting with his mother; his father having died a short time previously. He remained in Ireland for three years, and then returned to the United States, finally locating on what is known as the Cotati Rancho, in Sonoma county, Cal. Here he purchased two small tracts of land and engaged in the business of raising chickens and selling eggs to the markets. According to his own opinion, as expressed to several of his neighbors (witnesses at the contest), he was suffering from catarrh of the stomach, but, whatever might have been his precise physical malady, he for more than a year prior to his death continued to grow so weak in body and mind as the result of his illness that it became plainly apparent to his near neighbors, who saw him every day or two, that he was unable to take care of himself, and that consequently it was absolutely necessary that he should be given attention and care by some person or persons who would be willing to thus minister to his necessities. A Mr. Tompkins, a neighbor, as well as other neighbors, frequently urged him to procure the services of some one to look after him in his illness, and he was often heard to say that he would like to have a sister living in Ireland to come to his home for that purpose.

On the 22d day of December, 1908, however, said Mr. Tompkins called at the home of deceased and found him in almost a helpless condition. On that occasion Tompkins said to Daly that he (Daly) must be taken to some place where he could receive proper medical and other treatment, and deceased replied that he had made up his mind to go to the home of Mrs. Wedemeyer, a neighbor (the respondent here), where he would remain until he recovered. Tompkins thereupon promised Daly that he would return the following day and take him (Daly) to Mrs. Wedemeyer's. On the last-mentioned day—the 23d day of December—Tompkins went to the home of Daly, and, placing him in a wagon, drove to Mrs. Wedemeyer's. On arrival there, the respondent said she was perfectly willing to take care of Daly, and Tompkins helped the deceased into the house. At this time Daly had grown so weak physically that he was scarcely able to stand on his feet. In fact, Mrs. Wedemeyer herself testified that, on being lifted from the wagon to the ground by Tompkins, Daly sank to the ground, not being able to stand on his feet. On the way to the home of Mrs. Wedemeyer, however, Tompkins spoke to Daly about his property affairs. The deceased said to Tompkins that he desired that the stock and poultry on his place should be given to Mrs. Wedemeyer as compensation for taking care of him in his illness, and that all other property left by him, in case of his death, he desired should be given to his "folks" in Ireland. Tompkins suggested that he ought to make a will, and Daly thereupon requested him to write one for him, proceeding at the same time to give the names and post office addresses in Ireland of his mother, sisters, and brothers to whom it was his wish that his estate should go. As the deceased was thus naming his relatives, Tompkins suggested that the matter of executing a will had better be postponed until they reached the home of Mrs. Wedemeyer, as he (Tompkins) could not remember all the names and addresses as Daly was then giving them. On reaching Mrs. Wedemeyer's home, Daly was placed on a lounge in the kitchen of that lady's house, and shortly thereafter Tompkins departed for home, intending to return on the next day and prepare a will for Daly in accordance with his wishes as to the testamentary disposition of his estate, as expressed by Daly on the way to Mrs. Wedemeyer's. On the afternoon of Wednesday, the 23d day of December (the same day, it will be borne in mind, on which Daly was brought to her house), Mrs. Wedemeyer went to Petaluma and interviewed Mr. Frank A. Meyer, an attorney at law and one of the counsel for respondent in this proceeding. She requested said attorney to call at her home the next day for the purpose of giving Daly legal advice with regard to the execution of a last will and testament. She testified that she called on Mr. Meyer for the purpose mentioned at the request of Daly himself. Early on the succeeding day—December 24th—Tompkins returned to Mrs. Wedemeyer's. The purpose of this visit was, as before suggested, to prepare a will for Daly. Tompkins found Daly still on the lounge in the kitchen. He testified that Daly kept his eyes closed all the time that he (Tompkins) was there that morning and that, concluding from appearances that Daly was unconscious at that time, he made no effort to talk to him about a will or the execution of one. Tompkins remained in the room for only a brief time, during which (he testified) Mrs. Wedemeyer gave him a glass of whisky, sweetened with honey, and also gave deceased what appeared to be the same kind of a beverage. Shortly after Tompkins had left, Mr. Meyer and a Henry Meyerholtz arrived at the residence of Mrs. Wedemeyer. What occurred there, if anything of importance, during the stay of these gentlemen, except the fact that the deceased is purported to have made a will, to which said Meyer and Meyerholtz are subscribing witnesses, giving all his property to Mrs. Wedemeyer, is not made to appear by the record. On the following day—Friday, the 25th day of December—Daly passed away. On the afternoon of the succeeding day—the 26th of December—his remains were interred. On that same day, immediately following the conclusion of the ceremonies attending the interment, Mrs. Wedemeyer repaired to the office of Mr. Frank A. Meyer, the attorney who witnessed the will and evidently drew it, and there and at that time signed a document that she called "the administrator papers," but which was, in fact, a petition for the probate of the will of Daly.

Several letters addressed to the deceased in his lifetime by his sisters and other relatives in Ireland were introduced and received in evidence. These letters were couched in terms of endearment and affection, thus indicating that the most amicable and agreeable relations existed between the deceased and his family residing in his native country. A number of witnesses testified that Daly had often expressed the intention of leaving his property, on his death, to his mother or other relatives. There is evidence that the deceased had very slight, if any, acquaintance with Mrs. Wedemeyer, one of the witnesses testifying that the deceased declared to her, a few weeks before his death, that he had no personal acquaintance with the respondent whatsoever. It appears that a Mr. Raymond, a neighbor of deceased, had informed Daly prior to his removal to the home of Mrs. Wedemeyer that the latter had expressed a willingness to take care of him. That Daly had grown and was, for some time prior to his removal to the home of Mrs. Wedemeyer, greatly enfeebled in body and mind, is an inference clearly supported by the evidence. Moreover, as seen, there is evidence justifying the inference that Daly, at the time of the purported execution of the will, was in a condition, both physically and mentally, in which he could have been induced, with little persuasion, to have done almost anything that he might have been requested to do, particularly by one who had been kind and attentive to him in the last few hours of his fatal illness. In other words, it is fairly deducible from the evidence that at the time he signed the alleged will he was incapable of exercising independent judgment in any ordinary business transaction. And, not the least significant, as tending at least to excite suspicion as to her good faith in the part she took in the transaction leading to the execution of the alleged will, is the testimony of Mrs. Wedemeyer herself. She declared that, although she signed the petition for the probate of the will, as executrix thereof, on the day of the funeral and immediately after the conclusion of that ceremony, she nevertheless was ignorant of the contents of the will and of the identity of the person or persons to whom the deceased had thus given his property until some time after the petition for probate had been filed, when, for the first time, she learned that she was the sole devisee through an item printed in one of the local newspapers published at Petaluma. It is hardly believable that a party who has been made the executrix of the last will of a deceased person would take the essential preliminary steps toward proving such will without an examination of the document to ascertain something of the duties, responsibilities, and burdens imposed upon her by the terms of the testament, and it appears to us that the natural effect of such testimony, considered in connection with the circumstance of the haste after the death of the alleged testator with which the document was started on its way to the probate court, would at least be to inspire great distrust in the honesty or good faith of the transaction by which the deceased was led to sign the purported will.

In short, it is very clear that the evidence produced by the contestant, and which appears in the record, fairly justifies the inference that Daly signed the alleged will, not as the result of his own volition, but solely through the influence which, by reason of his debilitated mentality, Mrs. Wedemeyer was able to exert upon him. There is certainly no ground for inferring from the evidence produced that Daly had any motive or reason for giving his property to a comparative stranger. There is, on the other hand, no apparent reason why he should have excluded his mother and brothers and sisters from his testamentary bounty. To the contrary, as seen, it would seem to be quite manifest, from the evidence, that up to the very time the deceased was taken to the home of Mrs. Wedemeyer his wish was that his relatives should receive his property at his death, and that his intention then was to so provide in his last will.

Without going into further detail as to the inferences that may fairly and reasonably be drawn from the evidence against the validity of the alleged will, it may be said generally that the evidence is pregnant with circumstances from which a jury would be justified in reaching the conclusion that the purported will was not, in truth, the will of the deceased, and that, while it is clear from the evidence that he intended that Mrs. Wedemeyer should be well compensated for her services in caring for him (deceased's statement to Tompkins that she should be given the stock and poultry on his ranch), it is equally clear that the revealed circumstances very strongly indicate that he intended that the residue of his estate should go to his relatives in Ireland.

Our conclusion is that the court should have allowed the case to have gone to the jury on its merits, and that its refusal to so submit it was clearly erroneous.

The judgment is therefore reversed and the cause remanded.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

Counsel for respondent herein, in their petition for a rehearing, among other things, say: "Consciously or unconsciously, by the decision of this court, rendered in the above-entitled cause, the rules established by the Supreme Court seem to be reversed and set aside, and a new rule, not supported by any authority except this opinion, declared in place thereof." They then cite and quote from the following cases to demonstrate how far wide of the mark our former opinion went in the enunciation of the rules governing the determination of a motion for nonsuit on the close of the case for plaintiff: In re McDevitt, 95 Cal. 33, 30 Pac. 101; In re

Langford, 108 Cal. 613, 41 Pac. 701; In re Kaufman, 117 Cal. 295, 49 Pac. 192, 59 Am. St. Rep. 179; Estate of Nelson, 132 Cal. 189, 64 Pac. 294. An examination of the foregoing cases will show that either "consciously or unconsciously," counsel have permitted themselves to be led into what appears to us to be an inexcusable misapprehension of the nature of the question presented by a motion for a nonsuit; for, obviously, the cases cited have no more application to the question decided in this case than the Code of Hammurabi would have to the solution of the much-mooted question whether Peary or Cook was the first to discover the long-lost North Pole. In each of those cases the case had been tried on the merits, a jury having passed upon the facts and the appeal was from the judgment entered upon the verdict or an order denying a new trial or from both, and, of course, the facts could not be reviewed, unless the evidence was of such a character as to present a question of law.

In the case at bar, the complaint of the appellant is based solely upon the ground (and the appeal here could present no other ground for its support) that the court committed an error of law in declaring that, as a matter of law, the facts produced by plaintiff were not of sufficient probative value in the proof of the issues tendered by the contest to justify the submission of the case to the jury. It is elementary, as we tried to show in the original opinion, that a motion for a nonsuit presents a question of law pure and simple. [6] No question of conflict of evidence can arise on such motion, for the facts which appear to have been proved by the evidence must be assumed to be true by the court in deciding the motion, and if, on so viewing the evidence, there appear sufficient facts to make out a prima facie case in favor of contestant, the court has absolutely no right to take the case from the jury, even if there is an abundance of evidence tending to sustain the will or disprove the facts established in behalf of contestant. Indeed, the authorities all say that evidence in conflict with testimony favorable to the contestant must be disregarded. We may remark that if, upon the evidence presented by this record, the case had gone to the jury, and a verdict had been returned favorable to the contestee, we are not prepared to say but that the evidence would be sufficient to support the verdict. And in that case only would the cases cited by counsel be in point. But, as stated, the sole question here is: Was the court justified in declaring, as a matter of law, assuming, as it was bound to do, that all the facts in favor of contestant were true, that a prima facie case was not made against the validity of the will? An examination of the record can justify no other answer than that given in the decision of the case.

We find it to be true, as counsel contend, that we were not precisely correct in saying in the former opinion that the deceased was often heard to say that he desired that his sister in Ireland come to his home and take care of him. What he did say was that, should he send for his sister, she would come, but that he "would rather be alone." But the inaccuracy is immaterial, since the only purpose of referring to that evidence was to disclose that he was on affectionate terms with his near relatives living in Ireland. Other testimony given on this point tends to show the fact of the friendly relations between himself and said relatives equally as strongly as the inaccurate version of the testimony as given in our opinion. Indeed, there is an abundance of evidence in the record, independent of that which counsel say we inaccurately quoted, showing that the relations between deceased and his relatives were of the most friendly character at all times.

Counsel further say in their petition: "The statement by the court in the opinion, also, that he (Daly) was but slightly acquainted with Mrs. Wedemeyer, is also contrary to the testimony. The only testimony relating to this question is that of Mrs. Sanders on page 107 of the transcript, and we submit that this does not sustain the court's conclusion, while Mrs. Wedemeyer's testimony proves that they had been acquainted for some time." (Italics ours.) The foregoing only furnishes another illustration of the many to be extracted from their petition of a "conscious" or "unconscious" failure on the part of counsel to distinguish between a review of a judgment on a nonsuit and a judgment on the merits. As we have shown to be elementary as a rule governing the determination of a motion for a nonsuit on the close of plaintiff's case, where there is some testimony in proof of a fact in favor of plaintiff or contestant, such testimony must be assumed by the court to tell the truth concerning such fact. The testimony of Mrs. Sanders was that the deceased had said to her, shortly before he was taken to Mrs. Wedemeyer's, that he had very slight acquaintance with the latter; and it is very manifest, under the rules applicable to motions for a nonsuit made on the conclusion of a contestant's or plaintiff's case, Mrs. Sander's testimony must be accepted on that point, and that of Mrs. Wedemeyer contradictory thereto disregarded.

We may here state that we did not undertake nor pretend to recite all the evidence, or even give the substance of all the evidence, in the opinion originally filed. The record discloses an abundance of circumstances, to which we did not specifically refer, from which the jury would have been justified in finding against the validity of the will. For instance, the witness Kelley, of whose testimony we made no specific mention in the opinion filed herein, said that he had known the deceased ever since he (deceased) located at Cotati; that the two men often exchanged visits and carried on conversations; that, said the witness, "I think he always was a man of rather weak mind, not strong. During the ten years I knew him, he had the habit of going back and restating his conversations." The fact that deceased was, when making the alleged will, surrounded by persons who were not his close personal acquaintances, is of no small significance in determining, from all the circumstances, whether he was acting on his own independent judgment at that particular time. In short, as the situation, as presented by the record, is well summed up by counsel for appellant, "In the case at bar are found the elements of weak mind, a will made upon a deathbed, surrounded by those having an influence or authority over him, want of independent advice," to which may be added the fact that he made the will at the home of the sole devisee.

We can see no possible ground upon which it may in justice or reason be held that the court did not err in its order granting the motion of the contestee for a nonsuit, and thus precluding a determination of the issues upon the merits of the case.

Rehearing is denied.

I concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.

I concur in the judgment: BURNETT, J.

15 Cal. App. 315
PEOPLE v. MONTGOMERY. (Cr. 141.)
(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Feb. 7, 1911.)

1. ASSAULT AND BATTERY (§ 56*)—"ASSAULT WITH DEADLY WEAPON"—UNLOADED GUN.

The pointing of an unloaded gun at another, accompanied by a threat to shoot him, without any attempt to use it otherwise, does not constitute an "assault with a deadly weapon."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Cent. Dig. §§ 80, 81; Dec. Dig. § 56.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, p. 540.]

2. ASSAULT AND BATTERY (§ 92*)—ASSAULT WITH WEAPON—LOADED WEAPON—EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for assault with a deadly weapon, evidence held to warrant a finding that the gun was loaded when defendant pointed it at prosecutor, and threatened him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Cent. Dig. §§ 137-139; Dec. Dig. § 92.*]

3. ASSAULT AND BATTERY (§ 56*)—ASSAULT WITH WEAPON—PROXIMITY OF ACCUSED.

In a prosecution for assault with a deadly weapon, the distance of accused from prosecutor at the time is immaterial, if it is sufficiently near to enable accused to carry out his unlawful intent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Cent. Dig. §§ 80, 81; Dec. Dig. § 56.*]

4. ASSAULT AND BATTERY (§ 96*)—ASSAULT WITH WEAPON—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

In a prosecution for assault with a deadly weapon, evidence as to the altercation between defendant and prosecutor before defendant went after the gun with which he was charged to have committed the subsequent assault, while admissible, was not a proper subject of an instruction as to the relative rights and duties of the parties in connection with the subsequent assault.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Cent. Dig. §§ 142-150; Dec. Dig. § 96.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*) — REQUEST TO CHARGE—REFUSAL.

It is not error to refuse a request to charge on a subject fully covered by the instructions given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; Geo. D. Murray, Judge.

Joseph Montgomery was convicted of assault with a deadly weapon, and he appeals. Affirmed.

J. A. Prentice and Henry L. Ford, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Defendant was informed against for the crime of assault with a deadly weapon, with intent to kill and murder one William F. Freehardt. The jury found the defendant guilty of an assault with a deadly weapon, and recommended the defendant to the mercy of the court. The court sentenced defendant to pay a fine of $600 and, in default of payment, to be confined in the county jail for the term of one day for each $2 of said fine, and until said fine is paid. He appeals from the judgment of conviction, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

It is urged, as the principal ground for a reversal, that there is no evidence that the gun with which the alleged assault was committed was loaded, that the evidence showed that it was not loaded, and that there is no evidence from which the jury could have inferred otherwise.

[1] It has been held by our Supreme Court that the pointing of an unloaded gun at the prosecuting witness, accompanied by a threat to shoot him, without any attempt to use it otherwise, is not an assault with a deadly weapon, and cannot sustain a conviction for an assault with a deadly weapon for want of a present ability to commit a violent injury on the person in the manner attempted. People v. Sylva, 143 Cal. 62, 76 Pac. 814. [2] It is not shown that defendant was, at the time of the alleged assault, near enough to the prosecuting witness, Freehardt, to injure him otherwise than by discharging the gun. The conviction must rest upon evidence from which the jury had the right to infer that the gun was loaded, and that defendant threatened, or that he so conducted himself as would justify the inference that he intended to discharge it at Freehardt, with the purpose of committing a bodily injury upon him. There was no direct evidence that the weapon was loaded. Defendant claims that there was evidence that it was not loaded. But this evidence was by no means conclusive, unless we are to accept the testimony of the defendant, which the jury discarded.

In common with a very large per cent. of the crimes with which the courts have to deal, this one may be traced to the saloon for its origin, and it is evident that the recommendation of the jury, as well as the lightness of the sentence, is to be attributed to the condition of intoxication to which defendant had brought himself by drink. Freehardt was working in a livery stable at Blue Lake, Humboldt county. About 8 or 9 o'clock of the night of December 11, 1909, one Elkhorn went with defendant to the stable where Freehardt was working "to get a rig" with which to take Elkhorn home; he was very much intoxicated, and Freehardt told him to go and lie down on the cot awhile, and he would take him home. Defendant then spoke up and said he would drive him home. Freehardt told defendant he had orders that defendant was not to have a team at any time, which seemed to offend defendant. Freehardt put Elkhorn on the cot, to which defendant objected, and there followed a somewhat serious altercation between the two men, in the course of which, it was testified, defendant endeavored to assault Freehardt with a knife, and defendant was considerably injured by the blows he received from Freehardt. He went to his home, a short distance away, got a rifle and, after sufficient time had elapsed for him to cool his anger, he returned to the stable and approached the place where Freehardt was harnessing a horse to take Elkhorn home. Freehardt testified: "I think I had the breast strap in my hand when I went in the stall, when I saw him (defendant) with the gun, coming around. Of course, I jumped around. Q. What did he do with the gun at that time? A. He leveled the gun down on me when he saw me; he said, 'I have got you now, you son of a bitch.'" Freehardt ran behind a post, halloed for help, and crossed into a room where there was a telephone and called up the proprietor of the stable, one Worthington. Defendant went out of the stable; Worthington came across the street towards the stable, and he testified that he found defendant crouched behind the public scales not far from the stable, with his gun across his arm, "stooping over and watching the barn." He told defendant he had no business there, and that he had better go home or "he would have the constable take charge of him." Defendant refused to move, and Worthington took hold of him and led him away. He testified: "And just as I got to the corner as you turn going to Merriam's, we were talking, and I told him if he did not stay away from there I would have him arrested, and he said, 'I will fix the whole bunch of you,' and I went on around the corner." It appeared that defendant found his way home and was in bed when arrested the same night, and the undisputed evidence was, that he was very much intoxicated. The foregoing are briefly the principal facts from which the jury were asked to draw and did draw the inference, as we must assume, that the gun was loaded. That defendant was enraged towards Freehardt when he left the barn and went after the gun; that he returned very soon thereafter and accosted Freehardt in a manner to indicate that the gun was loaded, for otherwise his declaration, made at some distance from Freehardt, "I have got you now," would have been meaningless; that he did not leave the premises when he heard Freehardt call for help over the telephone, but took a position near the barn, partially hidden by the scales, and where he could see the door and where he was when Worthington found him with the gun and looking toward the barn; that his anger had not yet cooled, as was indicated by his threat to Worthington that he would "fix the whole bunch"—all these facts and circumstances had a tendency to prove that the gun was loaded, and with it was for the jury to say whether the evidence showed this to their minds beyond a reasonable doubt. The gun was not taken by the officer who made the arrest, but was called for by its owner some days afterwards, and he testified that it was not then loaded. There is testimony by defendant's wife that the gun had rested undisturbed where defendant left it until called for by the owner. She testified that she did not know whether it was loaded, but she was not at their home when defendant returned for it. How much weight the jury attached to her testimony or to defendant's testimony we cannot know, and their right to reject it entirely is beyond dispute. We think there were facts and circumstances sufficient to justify the implied finding that the gun was loaded when defendant said to Freehardt, "I have got you now," and to further justify the verdict rendered.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

"An assault is an unlawful attempt, coupled with a present ability, to commit a violent injury on the person of another." Pen. Code, § 242. The jury having found that the gun was loaded, the pointing of it towards Freehardt, with the threat shown, constituted, under the circumstances, an assault with a deadly weapon. It was so held in People v. Wells, 145 Cal. 138, 78 Pac. 470. [3] In that case the pistol was quite close to the person threatened, but the distance of the assailant from his intended victim is immaterial, if he be near enough to effect his unlawful intent; in the present case the distance was about 20 feet. Instruction 8 was therefore a correct statement of the law.

[4] Defendant assigns error in giving instruction 10½, p. 16, of the record. This instruction is marked 9½. It deals with the law of self-defense and has reference to the altercation between defendant and Freehardt before defendant went after the gun. We do not see what relevancy the instruction had to the assault which occurred later, and for which defendant was being tried. The evidence in relation to it was material as bearing upon what followed, but no instruction as to the relative rights and duties of the parties in connection with it could affect the responsibility of defendant for his subsequent acts, which were entirely independent of and separated from the first affray. We do not see, however, that the instruction could have prejudiced defendant in any way. We think it did not.

[5] Defendant was denied the following instruction: "I instruct the jury that the pointing of a gun is not an unlawful act, and I charge that the defendant would have the right to take the gun with him on the street and in the Worthington stable, so long as in so doing he did not take it there for the purpose alleged in the information, and did not use it in such manner as to amount to a reckless disregard of human life." The jury were fully and correctly instructed on this point, and defendant was not prejudiced by being denied this instruction.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

15 Cal. App. 264
PEOPLE v. KIRBY. (Cr. 287.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Feb. 2, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 914*)—NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS.

Under Pen. Code, § 1181, authorizing new trials in enumerated cases, the denial of a motion to submit to the jury in advance of the trial the question of accused's present insanity is not ground for new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 914.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1028*)—RECORD—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE.

Where it is clear from the entire record that accused intended and attempted to avail himself of a statutory right, and his intent and attempt were not, and could not have been, misunderstood by the trial court, the court on appeal will not refuse a decision on the point involved solely on technical grounds.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1028.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 625*)—PRESENT INSANITY OF ACCUSED—PROCEEDINGS.

Under Pen. Code, §§ 1367, 1368, providing that a person while insane cannot be tried, and requiring the court, if a doubt arises as to the sanity of accused, to order the submission to the jury of the question of sanity, if the court entertains a doubt of the present presumed sanity of accused, it must with a jury specially impaneled for that purpose inquire into the present condition of accused to ascertain whether he comprehends the nature and object of the criminal prosecution pending against him, and is mentally competent to make a defense, but, in the absence of such a doubt, the court need not submit the question of accused's present insanity to a jury in advance of the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1392-1398; Dec. Dig. § 625.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 625*)—PRESENT INSANITY OF ACCUSED—PROCEEDINGS.

Where the trial court had ample opportunity to observe the mental condition of accused from time to time prior to the trial on the merits, after the present insanity of accused was suggested, the refusal to submit to the jury in advance of the trial the question of accused's sanity, as authorized by Pen. Code, § 1368, was not erroneous, though an affidavit alleged the insanity of accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1392-1398; Dec. Dig. § 625.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 969*)—MOTION IN ARREST OF JUDGMENT—GROUNDS.

Under Pen. Code, § 1185, authorizing a motion in arrest of judgment founded on specified grounds, the present insanity of accused is not ground for a motion in arrest of judgment, though under section 1367 an insane person cannot be punished.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 969.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 48*)—INSANITY—ISSUES.

The defense of insanity involves only the issue of accused's mental condition at the very time of the commission of the crime charged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 354*)—INSANITY—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Evidence of accused's insanity at the time of his trial is admissible to prove prior insanity relied on, but the present insanity of accused cannot be invoked as a complete defense or made the sole basis of an acquittal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 354.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 785*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CAUTIONARY INSTRUCTIONS.

A requested instruction that, if there is any reasonable doubt of the facts on which the opinion of experts is based, the jury should take the same into consideration in weighing the opinion of the experts, embodies no principle of law, and is properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 785.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 391*)—FAILURE OF ACCUSED TO TESTIFY—EFFECT.

That accused, who neglected to testify, acted on the advice of his counsel, is not a matter for the jury's consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 391.*]

10. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REFUSAL OF INSTRUCTIONS COVERED BY THE CHARGE GIVEN.

It is not error to refuse requested instructions sufficiently covered by the instructions given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

11. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1036*)—APPEAL AND ERROR—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE.

An objection to evidence of alienists that no foundation had been laid, not made on the trial, cannot be considered on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2639-2641; Dec. Dig. § 1036.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Wm. P. Lawlor, Judge.

Michael Kirby was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Robert Ferral, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., C. M. Fickert, Dist. Atty., and Fred L. Berry, Deputy Dist. Atty., for the People.

LENNON, P. J. The defendant was informed against in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco for the crime of murder, and found guilty of manslaughter. The killing was admitted, and the defense was insanity. This appeal is from the final judgment of conviction, and the order of the trial court denying the defendant's motion for a new trial.

Counsel for the defendant presents to this court three questions for consideration and determination, namely: (1) The refusal of the trial court to submit the question of the defendant's "present insanity" to a jury for determination prior to the trial of the case upon its merits; (2) the refusal of the trial court to suspend the pronouncing of judgment because of the alleged "present insanity" of the defendant; and (3) asserted error of the court in refusing and modifying certain instructions requested upon behalf of the defendant.

The defendant was arraigned on and pleaded "not guilty" to the information on March 3, 1910, and the trial of his case, after several intermediate callings and continuances, was commenced on June 29, 1910. On June 14, 1910, Robert Ferral, Esq., counsel for the defendant, suggested to the trial court the present insanity of the defendant, and thereupon sought and received permission to file with the court in support of the suggestion the affidavit of James M. Kirby, a son of the defendant. The record discloses that "thereupon the defendant interposed a motion in pursuance of chapter 10, title 6, part 2 of the Penal Code." Whereupon the court ordered "that the motion of the defendant herein made in pursuance of chapter 6, title 8, part 2 of the Penal Code, be and the same is hereby denied." No chapters, titles, and parts as designated by counsel and the trial court in respectively making and ruling on the motion in question are to be found in the Penal Code of the state of California. If the defendant be compelled to rest his first point upon the terms of this motion and its denial as presented by the record on appeal to this court, rather than upon the suggestion of present insanity and the affidavit offered and received in support thereof, it is obvious that the point immediately in question was never directly presented to nor definitely decided by the lower court, and therefore nothing remains to be done or decided in that behalf by this court. However, the defendant included in his motion for a new trial, and as one of the grounds thereof, the statement that "the court erred in denying defendant's motion and application to submit the question of the defendant's present insanity to a jury; said motion being made and based upon a sworn affidavit of his son."

While the subject-matter of the quoted statement is not one of the grounds of a motion for a new trial enumerated by section 1181 of the Penal Code, and therefore could not properly be considered on the original hearing or final review of such a motion, yet it serves to indicate that counsel for the defendant and the trial court moved and acted in the premises upon the assumption that the defendant, through his counsel, intended and attempted to move the court to submit the question of the defendant's present insanity to a jury in advance of the trial. When in a criminal case it is sufficiently clear from the entire record, as it is here, that a defendant intended and attempted to avail himself of a statutory right, and his intent and attempt were not and could not have been misunderstood by the trial court, we are not disposed to refuse a decision of the point involved solely upon technical grounds.

No procedure is provided in our Code for presentation to a trial court of any fact or facts which would be calculated to create a doubt in the mind of the court as to the sanity of a defendant in a criminal case. It is, however, the plain and humane mandate of the law (Pen. Code, § 1367) that no person shall be compelled to defend against a criminal charge while he is insane; and whenever and however up to and including the time of judgment a doubt of the present and presumed sanity of a defendant in a criminal case is created in the mind of the court having him in charge, it becomes the duty of that court, with the aid of a jury especially impaneled for that purpose, to inquire into the then mental condition of the defendant (Pen. Code, § 1368)—this for the purpose of ascertaining if the defendant rightly comprehends the nature and object of the proceedings pending against him, and is mentally competent to make a just and rational defense.

No oral or documentary evidence was presented to the court by the people in rebuttal of the facts alleged in the affidavit referred to. Counsel for the defendant earnestly urges that, in the absence of such rebuttal, the averments of the affidavit must be accepted as true; and, if true, were sufficient to create and must have created in the mind of the court a doubt of the defendant's present sanity. Doubtless the facts alleged in the affidavit would have been sufficient foundation for a commitment of the defendant to an asylum for the insane upon the theory that he was so far medically insane as to be dangerous to be at large. But "the insanity which demands that a person should be confined in an insane asylum is not the same insanity which bars the prosecution of that person for the commission of a felony." In re Buchanan, 129 Cal. 333, 61 Pac. 1120, 50 L. R. A. 378. We are not prepared to say as a matter of law that the affidavit relied upon was sufficient in any one or all of the facts alleged therein to necessarily create a doubt in the mind of the court as to whether or not the defendant was then legally insane in the sense and to the extent that he did not appreciate his situation, and was incompetent mentally to assist in making and presenting a just and rational defense. However that may be, there was, in addition and opposed to the facts stated in the affidavit, evidence before the court on the question of the defendant's sanity. At each of the numerous occasions revealed by the record when the case was called and continued for trial the defendant was personally present in court; and as a matter of course his conduct and appearance on these occasions were in evidence and must have claimed the observation and attention of the court. That counsel for the defendant understood that the trial court's action in the matter was based, in part at least, upon the court's personal observation and inspection of the defendant, is evidenced in counsel's address to the court suggesting the present insanity of the defendant, wherein it was said: "We might have some date this goes over to—might have that as to the present insanity. * * * That is, if your honor thought from the reading of the affidavit and what your honor has learned that there was sufficient reason to believe he is at present insane, or if you have a reasonable doubt as to that." It is fair to assume that the trial court had ample opportunity to, and did, as was its duty, observe and note the defendant's mental condition from time to time, and in particular on the date when his present insanity was suggested. The knowledge thus acquired may have contributed largely towards rebutting any possible inference of present legal insanity which might have been deduced from the facts stated in the affidavit.

Section 1368 of the Penal Code contemplates that the doubt referred to therein must arise in the mind of the court having a defendant in charge (People v. Hettick, 126 Cal. 425, 58 Pac. 918; Webber v. Commonwealth, 119 Pa. 223, 13 Atl. 427, 4 Am. St. Rep. 634); and, in the absence of such a doubt, the court is not required to submit the question of the defendant's present insanity to a jury in advance of the trial (People v. Geiger, 116 Cal. 440, 48 Pac. 389). The denial by the court of the motion in question was the equivalent of an express finding that no doubt of the defendant's then mental condition was present in the mind of the court. We are not prepared to say from all of the evidence presented to and before the trial court upon the hearing of the motion that the court abused the discretion vested in it by the provisions of section 1368 of the Penal Code. When the defendant was arraigned for judgment, his counsel interposed a motion in arrest of judgment based solely "on the ground that the defendant is now an insane person." The motion in arrest of judgment was "submitted on the matters already submitted on the motion for a new trial and on the evidence already before the court as taken during the trial." The matters referred to as having been submitted on the motion for a new trial were contained in the conflicting affidavits of counsel for the people and defendant, filed in support of their respective contentions as to the existing mental condition of the defendant. The motion in arrest of judgment was denied, and thereupon counsel for the defendant orally presented to the court a motion that "the defendant be examined * * * or tried on the question of his lunacy or sanity as provided by law." This motion was also denied. "An insane person cannot be * * * adjudged to punishment or punished for a public offense while he is insane" (Pen. Code, § 1367); but the present insanity of a defendant about to be arraigned for judgment upon a criminal conviction is not a ground for a motion in arrest of judgment (Pen. Code, § 1185), and therefore from a technical point of view the motion in arrest of judgment was properly denied. But aside from this, and treating all that occurred at this juncture in the proceedings as an objection to the pronouncing of judgment because of the present insanity of the defendant, the refusal of the court to suspend judgment in the face of the objection was a sufficient indication that the mind of the court was still free from any doubt as to the sanity of the defendant. The evidence submitted in support of the objection was not in our opinion of such a character as would necessarily cause the court to hesitate before pronouncing judgment.

Counsel for the defendant complains that the trial court's modification of defendant's requested instruction No. 52 withdrew from the jury the right to consider the defendant's alleged insanity at the time of the trial as a factor in determining his mental condition at the time of the killing. This instruction as originally presented and requested directed the jury to bring in a verdict of acquittal if the evidence warranted a finding that the defendant was insane at the time of the trial. The court's modification of this instruction required that a verdict of acquittal by reason of insanity should be predicated only upon the insanity of the defendant existing at the very time of the commission of the offense. The special defense of insanity interposed upon behalf of the defendant involved only the issue of the defendant's mental condition at the very time of the commission of the crime charged against him. People v. Coffman, 24 Cal. 230; People v. Lee Fook, 85 Cal. 300, 24 Pac. 654; People v. Schmitt, 106 Cal. 50, 39 Pac. 204; People v. McCarthy, 115 Cal. 263, 46 Pac. 1073. Evidence of the defendant's insanity at the time of the trial was admissible in his behalf for the limited purpose of proving or tending to prove prior insanity. People v. Farrell, 31 Cal. 581; People v. Lee Fook, supra; People v. Zeigler, 142 Cal. 338, 75 Pac. 1090. But in no event, nor in any view of the case, could the present insanity of the defendant in and of itself be invoked as a complete defense to the crime charged, or properly be made the sole basis of a verdict of acquittal. The court of its own motion instructed the jury to consider the mental condition of the defendant before and after the commission of the crime in order to ascertain what his mental condition was at the very time of its commission. The instruction as modified correctly stated the law, and when read and received in connection with the charge of the court as a whole, could not have been understood as withdrawing from the jury the right of considering the defendant's insanity at the time of the trial. People v. McCarthy, 115 Cal. 261, 46 Pac. 1073.

Two witnesses, both medical gentlemen, were called in rebuttal of the case presented upon behalf of the defendant. They, as experts, testified that in their respective opinions the defendant was sane at the time of the trial, and was sane at the time of the commission of the crime charged. The defendant's attorney now insists that the court erred in its refusal to charge the jury, as requested, that, "if there is any reasonable doubt of the facts upon which the opinion is based, the jury should take this into consideration in weighing the opinion of the experts." The equivalent of this instruction is to be found elsewhere in the charge of the court. Moreover, no principle of law was embodied in the subject-matter of the instruction. It would have merely "told the jury to do what they should have done without any instruction upon the subject." People v. Barthleman, 120 Cal. 7, 52 Pac. 112. It was, therefore, neither necessary nor proper to include it in the charge of the court. People v. Methever, 132 Cal. 326, 64 Pac. 481.

The court's modification of defendant's requested instruction numbered 55 did not destroy its effect. The instruction as modified correctly stated the law upon the subject of the defendant's neglect or refusal to offer himself as a witness in the case. That counsel had advised him not to take the witness stand was not a matter for the jury's consideration.

We have examined the several other assignments of error, predicated upon the court's modification or refusal of requested instructions, and are satisfied that in every instance of modification or refusal the subject-matter of the requested instruction was elsewhere fully and fairly covered by the charge of the court.

Counsel for the defendant devotes the closing pages of his brief to a cursory review of the evidence pertaining to the defendant's mental condition at the time of the commission of the offense. The finding of the jury, implied from the verdict, that the defendant was then sane is not specifically assailed. However, it appears to be counsel's purpose to urge upon this court a review of the evidence, and with that thought in mind we have carefully gone over the entire record. We are impressed with the strength and bona fides of the special defense interposed upon behalf of the defendant; but upon the whole case the evidence—fact, presumptive and opinion—is sufficiently conflicting to preclude this court from forming or expressing any opinion of its sufficiency.

The point incidentally made that no foundation was laid for the expert opinions of the defendant's mental condition at the time of the tragedy was not urged in the form of an objection at the trial of the case, and therefore it cannot be considered here.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

15 Cal. App. 239

McLAUCHLAN et al. v. BONYNGE et al.
(Civ. 833.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Jan. 30, 1911. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court March 30, 1911.)

1. TAXATION (§ 764*)—TAX DEEDS—DESCRIPTION OF LAND—SUFFICIENCY.

A description of the land in the assessment rolls and tax deed as being "in L. city, in L. county, in Clifton Tr., lots 6, 7, and 8," is insufficient to identify the property sold, and makes the tax deed prima facie invalid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1519-1522; Dec. Dig. § 764.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 764*)—TAX DEEDS—DESCRIPTION—IDENTITY OF PROPERTY.

The party relying upon an assessment and tax deed containing an insufficient description of the property may supplement such description by other proof, identifying the property as that described, as by reference in the deed to a map, which thereby becomes a part of the description.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1519-1522; Dec. Dig. § 764.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 788*)—TAX DEED—DESCRIPTION—SUFFICIENCY—PRESUMPTIONS.

It cannot be presumed in order to overcome the prima facie insufficiency of the description in a tax deed, describing the land as "in L. city, in L. county, in Clifton Tr., lots 6, 7 and 8," that the map of the Clifton tract referred to existed when the deed was executed and when the assessment was made thereafter, and that the lot was correctly shown thereon, such presumption not being available to divest title by proceedings in invitum, as the map itself is essential with proof that it was the only map of a tract known as the Clifton tract in L. city, and that the lots were correctly shown thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1559-1569; Dec. Dig. § 788.*]

4. TAXATION (§ 800*)—ACTION TO QUIET TITLE—CONDITION OF RECOVERY—TENDER OF TAXES.

Where, in an action under Code Civ. Proc. § 738, to quiet title, the pleadings did not show that defendant claimed the title was based upon a tax deed, plaintiff was not bound to tender any taxes for which the land was sold in order to recover.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1586; Dec. Dig. § 800.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1137*)—REMAND—GROUNDS FOR DENIAL.

In an action to quiet title, in which defendant, without pleading it, set up a tax title, the appellate court will not, on deciding to affirm the action of the trial court in awarding a new trial to plaintiff, decline to remand the cause on the ground that plaintiff did not tender any taxes on the first trial, since the trial court may impose such tender as a condition of any judgment setting aside the tax title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4446; Dec. Dig. § 1137.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by Fannie C. McLauchlan and husband against W. A. Bonyng, trustee, and others. From an order granting plaintiffs' motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Lynn Helm and E. S. Williams, for appellants. O. B. Carter, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Action to quiet title to real estate. The court found in favor of the validity of certain tax proceedings and tax deeds issued thereunder by virtue of which defendants asserted title to the property in controversy, and gave judgment for defendants. Thereafter the court made an order granting plaintiffs' motion for a new trial "because of the insufficiency of description in the tax deeds and assessments." Defendants appeal from this order.

[1] The description of the property as contained in both the assessment roll and deeds under which defendants claim title is as follows: "In Los Angeles city, in Los Angeles county, in Clifton Tr., lots 6, 7 and 8"—the same, however, being separately assessed. It has been repeatedly held that such an assessment is insufficient to identify the property, and hence, standing alone, it is prima facie invalid. Baird v. Monroe, 150 Cal. 560, 89 Pac. 352; Fox v. Townsend, 152 Cal. 51, 91 Pac. 1004, 1007; Houghton v. Kern Valley Bank, 157 Cal. 289, 107 Pac. 113. [2] Notwithstanding the fact that such description is, when considered alone, insufficient, the party relying upon the assessment containing such incomplete description "may supplement his case by showing that the description in the assessment is in fact sufficient to identify the property." Houghton v. Kern Valley Bank, and cases supra. "If reference is made to a map, the map thereby becomes a part of the description, and may be read in evidence to identify the land, by showing that it is delineated thereon according to the recital." Best v. Wohlford, 144 Cal. 733, 78 Pac. 293. Conceding the description to be prima facie insufficient, appellants insist that the evidence introduced was sufficient to overcome the prima facie showing of insufficiency, and did clearly identify the property as being the same as that claimed by plaintiffs and described in the complaint as situate in the city of Los Angeles, county of Los Angeles, state of California, and being lots 6, 7, and 8 of the Clifton tract, as per map thereof recorded in book 22, page 68, Miscellaneous Records, in the recorder's office of said county.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[3] No reference was made in the assessment to any map of the Clifton tract and no map thereof was offered in evidence. For the purpose however, of establishing their title to the property, plaintiffs introduced in evidence a deed executed in 1888, whereby the property was conveyed to them and wherein the property was described as set forth in the complaint. Likewise, for the purpose of showing their title, defendants introduced in evidence the deeds under which they deraigned their asserted title, in all of which other than in those made to and by the state, which in describing the property followed the description contained in the assessment roll made in 1894, the property was described as set forth in the complaint.

Appellants insist that, as the deed of 1888 plainly referred to a specified map of the Clifton tract, it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that such map existed in 1888, and that the lots in question were properly delineated thereon; and, as the contrary is not shown, it must also be presumed that such map was in existence at the time when the assessment was made, which fact, it is claimed, is corroborated in that some of the deeds whereby defendants deraigned title likewise described the property according to such map. In other words, defendants invoke the rule applicable in such cases to ordinary deeds of conveyance from one person to another. This rule has no application to cases where it is sought to divest a property owner of his title by proceedings in in vitum. Labs v. Cooper, 107 Cal. 656, 40 Pac. 1042; Chapman v. Zerberlein, 152 Cal. 216, 92 Pac. 188; Fox v. Townsend, supra. The description according to the specified map in the one case is prima facie good; in the other, it is prima facie insufficient to identify the property, unless accompanied by evidence which will enable the court to apply the description to some specific portion of land. In the case at bar, the property is described as certain lots of a larger tract, but, since no reference is made in the description to any map, such description standing alone is meaningless. In order to identify the property by such description, there should be evidence, not only of the existence of a map, but such map itself, with proof that it was the only map of any tract in the city of Los Angeles known as the Clifton tract existing at the time when the assessment was made, and showing that the lots in question were delineated thereon, should be presented to the court. As the validity of defendants' asserted title was based upon the tax proceedings, proof of the existence of a map raised no presumption in favor of its integrity or authenticity. From all that appears in the record, there may have been another map of a tract of land in the city known as the Clifton tract; or, if only one such map was shown to exist, it might under examination have disclosed duplicate numbered lots delineated thereon, or other ambiguities, rendering the description uncertain, and which ambiguities, while not, unless shown, affecting the prima facie sufficiency of description contained in the deeds, nevertheless would render it impossible, even with the aid of such map, to identify the property under the description contained in the assessment.

By making the order granting a new trial for the reasons therein given, the court determined that the evidence offered was not of a character to overcome the admitted prima facie insufficiency of the description contained in the assessment. We cannot say the court erred in the ruling.

A great part of appellants' argument is devoted to the contention that throughout the record it appears that plaintiffs, by admissions both express and implied, conceded the property described in the complaint to be identical with that referred to in the tax proceedings. We perceive no merit in such contention. Whether it was the same property was the only point in controversy, and the solution of the question depended upon the sufficiency of the description in the tax proceedings, which, as we have seen, was prima facie invalid. The record discloses no admissions or concessions on the part of plaintiffs, either express or implied, which could be deemed a waiver of the proof conceded to be necessary in order to apply the description to the lots described in the complaint.

[4] Appellants also insist that the making of the order was erroneous for the reason that plaintiffs did not tender or offer at any stage of the trial to pay the amount of taxes levied against the property and for the non-payment of which it was sold. The action was brought under the provisions of section 738, Code of Civil Procedure, to quiet the alleged title of plaintiffs against the adverse claim of defendants. While the pleadings contain much matter constituting mere surplusage, there is not the slightest reference, either in the complaint or answer to the fact, that defendants' asserted title was based upon a sale of the property for the nonpayment of any tax levied thereon; hence, under the pleadings, plaintiffs were not called upon as a condition of maintaining the action to tender any tax. [5] Assuming, as claimed by appellants, that plaintiffs should pay, or offer to pay, the tax before recovering a judgment herein, the answer is that plaintiffs have recovered no judgment, and we cannot assume in advance that the trial court will not, as a condition of recovery on the part of plaintiffs, if they should recover, impose such terms as the facts disclosed by the trial may warrant.

We find no error in the ruling of the court, and the order granting a new trial is therefore affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

15 Cal. App. 294

PEOPLE v. STEVENS. (Cr. 185.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 4, 1911. Rehearing Denied March 6, 1911; Denied by Supreme Court April 5, 1911.)

1. ASSAULT AND BATTERY (§ 92*)—PROSECUTION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—CHARACTER OF WEAPONS.

Evidence in a prosecution for assault with a deadly weapon held to sustain a finding that a deadly weapon was used.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Cent. Dig. §§ 137-139; Dec. Dig. § 92.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 823*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY OF INSTRUCTIONS.

In a prosecution for assault with a deadly weapon, the court charged that to convict the state must satisfy the jury beyond a reasonable doubt of the truth of every material allegation, as the law presumed accused to be innocent until he was proved guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, and then instructed as to offenses of a lesser grade than that charged in the information, stating, in connection therewith, that all persons concerned in committing a crime, whether they directly committed the act or aided and abetted therein, were principals, and if another assaulted prosecuting witness with a deadly weapon with intent, etc., or committed any of the lesser offenses named, and accused was present, and aided and abetted therein, he was guilty of the crime committed, and immediately thereafter charged that, if the jury were not satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that accused committed any of the offenses defined, they should acquit. Held, that the part of the charge as to accused's commission of the offense as aider and abettor was not erroneous for not requiring his guilt as such to be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, in view of the other parts of the charge requiring such quantum of proof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1992-1995; Dec. Dig. § 823.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 806*)—INSTRUCTIONS—SUFFICIENCY—REPETITION.

Each sentence of a charge need not contain all of the limitations contained in other parts thereof, and a material charge need not be repeated in other parts of the instructions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1973, 1991; Dec. Dig. § 806.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1137*)—APPEAL—ESTOPPEL TO.

Accused cannot complain on appeal of an instruction given at his request.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3007-3110; Dec. Dig. § 1137.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George R. Davis, Judge.

Charles F. Stevens was convicted of assault with a deadly weapon, and he appeals. Affirmed.

George Appell, Fred J. Spring, and George F. Snyder, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

ALLEN, P. J. This appeal is from a judgment following defendant's conviction of the crime of assault with a deadly weapon, and from an order denying a new trial.

There is evidence in the record tending to show that defendant, together with three companions, laid in wait for the prosecuting witness at a point where he daily alighted from the electric cars upon his return from work; that on or about the 19th of September, 1910, at about 6 o'clock p. m. of said day, the prosecuting witness arrived at the station near his home and had proceeded about three blocks therefrom on his way to his residence when an assault was made upon him by defendant and his associates, one of whom hit him over the right eye with something and knocked him into the middle of the street, and while there he was cut in four or five places. One of these wounds was a scalp wound about an inch and a half long, and another about two inches long, at right angles with each other; two cuts in the middle of the forehead, with some bruises behind the left ear and some injuries upon the left wrist, which last-named injuries were evidenced by two round marks, looking as though they had been sunk in with something. After this assault defendant and his companions separated and fled, and the prosecuting witness was taken to his home in a conveyance by friends. Subsequently, on the 24th of September, the defendant was arrested, and his trial and conviction followed.

Appellant presents three reasons why, in his opinion, the judgment of conviction and the order denying a new trial should be reversed; his first contention being that there is no evidence tending to show that the assault was committed by defendant, or that a deadly weapon was employed. That defendant was present and participated in the assault is pretty clearly established; that a deadly weapon was employed is established by the physician's testimony to the effect that one of the wounds seemed to be a clear cut clear to the bone, and another through to the skull; that they were of such character as might have been caused by the use of a sharp instrument and were so located that death might have ensued. In addition to this, at the time of the trial the wounds had not yet healed; the jury had before them the injured man and the nature and character of the wounds, and, considering all of the testimony, [1] we think sufficient was shown to warrant the jury in concluding that the assault was committed with a weapon as charged in the information. We therefore see nothing in appellant's first contention warranting a reversal.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[2] Appellant's second contention rests upon an alleged error of the trial court in giving the following instruction: "The law provides that all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether it be a felony or misdemeanor, and whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense or aid and abet in its commission, are guilty as principals in the crime so committed; and should you find from the evidence in this case that some other person, at the time and place mentioned in the information, did willfully, feloniously, and with malice aforethought assault the said Edward C. Hoffman with a deadly weapon, with intent then and there him, the said Hoffman, to kill and murder, or did commit any one of the aforesaid lesser offenses necessarily included in that which is charged; and that the defendant now on trial was present and aided and abetted in the commission of such assault—then under the law this defendant is himself guilty of the crime so committed;" the criticism of appellant being that in such portion of the charge there was omitted therefrom the statement that to establish the defendant's guilt as aider and abettor it must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt. It must be conceded that it is the duty of the trial court to instruct the jury that the burden is upon the prosecution of establishing every element of the crime of which defendant may be convicted beyond a reasonable doubt, but while the court did omit from this particular portion of the charge any statement with reference to the character of proof, yet in another portion of the instructions the court did charge the jury that: "In order to convict this defendant of the crime charged by the information, it is incumbent upon the prosecution to satisfy you beyond a reasonable doubt of the truth of every material allegation thereof. The law presumes him to be innocent of the crime charged until he is proved guilty, beyond a reasonable doubt, by competent evidence." Then following the court charged the jury as to the offenses of a lesser grade than that charged under which a conviction might be had, and in connection with this charged them: "If, after a full and careful consideration of all the evidence in this case, you are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed any one of the offenses defined in these instructions, then it will be your duty to acquit him;" this last charge being in connection with the one to which exception is urged and which immediately preceded it. [3] When a material charge is once given, it is not necessary to repeat it in a different form. People v. Jailles, 146 Cal. 307, 79 Pac. 965. "Each sentence of the charge is not required to contain all the conditions and limitations which are to be gathered from the entire text." People v. Neber, 125 Cal. 562, 58 Pac. 133. As said in the last-mentioned case: "It is incredible that the jury, as men of ordinary intelligence, did not understand that the same qualification accompanied the immediately succeeding references to the same circumstance, although the condition was not repeated."

[4] It is unnecessary to comment upon the third point presented, further than to say that it is an objection to an instruction given the jury at defendant's request, and while we do not regard the instruction as open to criticism, having been given at defendant's request, he cannot complain. People v. Emmons, 7 Cal. App. 685, 95 Pac. 1032.

We see no prejudicial error in the record, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

15 Cal. App. 298

HILBORN v. NYE, Controller. (Civ. 821.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Feb. 4, 1911. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court April 5, 1911.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 26*)—LEGISLATIVE POWER.

The power of the Legislature is unlimited, except by the Constitution, and one challenging the validity of an act must show, either that it is without the province of legislation or that the particular subject-matter thereof has been by the Constitution withdrawn from the Legislature.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 30; Dec. Dig. § 26.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 28*)—CONSTRUCTION—LEGISLATIVE INTENT.

While the court will not inquire into the motives of the Legislature in enacting legislation, it will take judicial notice of the existence of an evil which the Legislature in framing a constitutional amendment endeavored to correct.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 28.*]

3. STATES (§ 60*)—LEGISLATURE—OFFICERS—COMPENSATION.

Const. art. 4, §§ 23, 23a, as amended in 1908, authorizing the Legislature to provide for the expenses for officers, employes and attachés of the Legislature, not exceeding $500 per day for either House at any regular session, etc., prohibits either House, at any regular session, to provide for officers and employes at an expense in excess of $500 per day, and either House must make provision for post-session services out of the daily allowance, or such services cannot be paid for from the public treasury.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see States, Cent. Dig. § 63; Dec. Dig. § 60.*]

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 23*)—AMENDMENT—RETROACTIVE EFFECT.

Appropriations made by the Legislature for the payment of officers and clerks of the Legislature prior to Const. art. 4, §§ 23, 23a, as amended in 1908, but not expended until after the amendment, are available only to the extent authorized by the amendment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 20; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

Application for writ of mandate by Lewis A. Hilborn against A. B. Nye, as Controller of the State of California, to direct respondent to pay claims of officers and employes of the Legislature. Writ denied.

Kleinsorge & McKisick, for petitioner. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an application for a writ of mandate, directing respondent to pay certain claims of certain officers and employes of the Senate and Assembly of the state for their services in connection with the thirty-eighth session of the Legislature. The Attorney General interposed a demurrer to the petition on the ground of insufficient facts to entitle petitioner to the relief claimed.

It appears from the petition that the Legislature convened on January 1, 1909, and on or about that date petitioner was elected secretary of the Senate and J. W. Harper was elected history clerk; that they entered upon and continued in the performance of their duties as such officers until the close of the session, "and thereafter continued in the performance of certain duties enjoined upon them by law and by the order and direction of the Senate," as set forth in the petition. That the Assembly, at or about said date, elected Clio Lloyd to the office of chief clerk, who, by consent of the Assembly, appointed T. G. Walker as assistant clerk, both of whom thereupon entered upon their duties as such officers and continued in the discharge of the same until the close of the session, and thereafter continued in the performance of certain duties "enjoined upon them by law and direction of the Assembly" as in said petition set forth; that "in the manner provided by law, the Senate and Assembly, * * * by appropriate legislation, set apart and established certain funds known, respectively, as the Senate Contingent Fund and the Assembly Contingent Fund, and by law authorized the State Controller to draw his warrant upon said fund from time to time, and for such amounts and in favor of such persons as the Senate and Assembly might determine, and authorized and directed the Treasurer to pay the same; that at all times hereinafter mentioned there remained, and now remains, in the respective contingent funds of the Senate and Assembly of the state of California, set apart and established as aforesaid, sufficient money to pay each and all of the claims and demands against said respective contingent funds arising as hereinafter set forth."

It is then alleged that, on the 16th day of March, 1909, the Senate passed a certain resolution, which is set forth in the petition. In substance this resolution directs the secretary of the Senate to compile, after final adjournment, a full calendar of the legislative business of the thirty-eighth session, specifically pointing out what this calendar shall contain, and provides for the printing thereof, "such information being prepared, not only for the book, but as a guide for the thirty-ninth session of the Legislature;" the secretary is directed "to mail or express one copy of said calendar to each member of the Senate," and the resolution appropriates $750 to meet said expenses; "the same payable out of the contingent fund of the Senate."

By a similar resolution, passed on March 17, 1909, the Senate directed the State Printer to print 10,000 copies of Senate Bill No. 18, and to bind 2,000 copies of the same, and directs the secretary of the Senate to mail or express to each senator 30 bound copies and 50 printed copies, and directs the Controller to draw his warrant in favor of the secretary of the Senate for the sum of $900, "to pay said postage and expressage on same and be properly indorsed."

A third resolution was adopted by the Senate, on March 23, 1909, authorizing the secretary and assistant secretary, at the close of the session, to arrange all bills and papers belonging to the archives of the Senate and deliver them to the Secretary of State, and appropriate $50 therefor, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

A fourth resolution, passed by the Senate on March 23, 1909, instructs "J. W. Harper, history clerk, to complete the final history of the Senate," and appropriates $100 out of the contingent fund to pay him for said service. It is then alleged that the Assembly, on March 10, 1909, by resolution, directed 300 copies of each and all the chapters of the thirty-eighth session printed and delivered in sets to the chief clerk, within one week after all the bills receiving the Governor's approval shall have been signed by him, and directs the chief clerk to express said chapters to the members, charges prepaid, and appropriates out of the contingent fund $150 to pay the expense thereof.

A second resolution, passed by the Assembly, March 18, 1909, directing the chief clerk to compile and have printed, after final adjournment, a final calendar, similar to that provided for by the Senate, directs the chief clerk to mail or express to each member of the Assembly a copy of said calendar, and appropriates out of the contingent fund $750 for said purposes.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

A third resolution was passed by the Assembly, March 20, 1909, directing Thomas G. Walker, assistant to the chief clerk, to assist the chief clerk in preparing and having printed, after final adjournment, a calendar apparently little different from the resolution passed on March 18th, also directing that copies be mailed or expressed to members, charges prepaid, and appropriates $350 out of the contingent fund to pay for the same.

A fourth resolution was passed by the Assembly, March 24, 1909, directing "the chief clerk and the four assistants to the chief clerk," at the close of the session, to mark, label, and arrange all bills and papers belonging to the archives of the Assembly, and deliver the same to the Secretary of State, and appropriates out of the contingent fund for such services $50 for each of said officers. It is then averred that the said clerks, each of them, performed the services required of them as aforesaid, and demanded of the Controller that he draw his warrant for the sums each was entitled to in accordance with said resolutions, but the Controller refused and still refuses to do so.

It is admitted by the petitioner that the Senate and Assembly "had each of them expended an average daily sum of $500 for the compensation of officers, employes, and attachés of the said Senate and Assembly, respectively, for each day of the regular session of the Legislature then ending otherwise or in addition to the amounts specified to be paid" to said claimants by said resolutions; and admits that "during all said times" the said claimants were officers of the Senate and Assembly, respectively, as alleged.

It is further alleged that the work mentioned in said resolutions "was necessary and proper to be done, and that the same could not from its very nature be done during the continuance of said regular session of the Legislature, or until after the adjournment of the Legislature, or until the Governor of the state had performed his constitutional and statutory duties with respect to the various bills awaiting action at his hands upon the adjournment of the Legislature." It is then alleged that certain of said claimants had assigned their said claims to petitioner. The total amount of said several appropriations is the sum of $3,350.

At the general election held in November, 1908, two proposed amendments to section 23 of article 4 of the Constitution were ratified.

Section 23 reads as follows: "The members of the Legislature shall receive for their services the sum of one thousand dollars each for each regular session, to be paid at such times during the session as may be provided by law, and the sum of ten dollars each, for each day while in attendance at a special or extraordinary session, for a number of days not exceeding thirty; and mileage to be fixed by law, all paid out of the state treasury; such mileage shall not exceed ten cents per mile; and each member shall be allowed contingent expenses not exceeding twenty-five dollars per member for each regular biennial session. The Legislature may also provide for additional help; but in no case shall the total expenses for officers, employes and attachés exceed the sum of five hundred dollars per day for either House, at any regular or biennial session, nor the sum of two hundred dollars per day for either House, at any special or extraordinary session, nor shall the pay of any officer, employé or attaché be increased after he is elected or appointed."

At the same election another amendment to the same article was adopted as section 23a. It is identical in terms with the concluding paragraph of section 23.

Petitioner states the single question now presented as follows: "Is the amendment limited in its application to the actual duration of a regular or biennial session, or does the prohibition therein expressed continue beyond the time of adjournment, and forbid the Legislature, and the several Houses thereof, to order certain post-session work to be done, and to provide for the necessary expenses of such work, as well as the compensation of the persons performing it?"

It is claimed by the petitioner that section 31, art. 4, forbidding the Legislature to make any gift, and section 32 of the same article, prohibiting the grant of any extra compensation to any public officer, have no application; hence the argument was confined exclusively to the construction to be given section 23. Petitioner points out certain statutory duties devolved upon the secretary of the Senate and the clerk of the Assembly and their respective assistants, as found in sections 253, 254, 261, and 269 of the Political Code. He also calls attention to certain rules of the Senate and Assembly, prescribing the duties of the secretary of the former and clerk of the latter, respectively, but they do not seem to enlarge the scope of the duties prescribed by statute; and it may be conceded that the duties thus prescribed by statute, and the rules of the two Houses, are broad enough to embrace at least some, if not all, the directions given in said resolutions. [1] The power of the Legislature is omnipotent and unlimited, except as circumscribed by the Constitution. Kingsbury v. Nye, 9 Cal. App. 574, 99 Pac. 985; In re Madera Irr. Dist., 92 Cal. 307, 28 Pac. 272, 675, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 106. In the Madera Irr. Dist. Case the court said: "It is incumbent upon any one who will challenge an act of the Legislature as being invalid to show, either that such act is without its province of legislation, or that the particular subject-matter of that act has been by the Constitution, either by express provision or by necessary implication, withdrawn by the people from the consideration of the Legislature. The presumption which attends every act of the Legislature is that it is within its power; and he who would except from the power must point out the particular provision of the Constitution by which the exception is made, or demonstrate that it is palpably excluded from any consideration whatever by that body."

Respondent contends that the amendment of the Constitution referred to has withdrawn from the Legislature the power to expend, directly or indirectly by either House, for officers, employés and attachés, any sum of money whatever, in conducting the business of a regular or biennial session, in excess of $500 multiplied by the number of days of the session. For example, if the Legislature sits for 60 days and no longer, the extreme limit of its expenditures is the sum of $1,000 multiplied by 60, or $60,000.

Petitioner meets this contention in two ways: First, by giving a construction to the words "at any biennial session" which makes them equivalent to and intended to mean "during any biennial session"—that is to say, that the amendment means that either House of the Legislature shall not expend in excess of $500 per day during the period of its session, including the day of final adjournment, but may make any necessary provision for continuing the work of its officers and employés thereafter; and, second, that such officers and employés may be paid, in the present case, out of the appropriation made for the contingent fund of the Senate and Assembly, found in the appropriation act of March 22, 1907 (Stats. 1907, p. 859), for the support of the Legislature during the fifty-ninth and sixtieth years. Petitioner calls our attention to many cases, involving human affairs of great variety, where the courts have construed the word "at" to mean "during," in conformity to the rule that words are to be deemed to have been employed in their natural and ordinary sense. For example, an act required to be done "at the term of court" was held to mean "during the term." Lawver v. Langhans, 85 Ill. 138.

[2] While it is settled that the motives of the Legislature, in enacting legislation, will not be inquired into, yet it is also settled, and petitioner concedes, "that this court has undoubted power to take judicial cognizance of the existence of an evil which the Legislature, in framing the amendment under consideration, and the people in ratifying it, endeavored to correct." Petitioner then states: "This evil was the wasteful expenditure of large sums of the state's money at each session of the Legislature in the employment of persons whose services were not necessary to the transaction of the business of the Legislature, but whose importunities were too insistent to be denied." The evil was more extensive than petitioner has stated, for its influence reached beyond the final adjournment, as is evidenced by the resolutions involving a post-legislative expenditure of nearly $4-

000, much of which was obviously unnecessary; and it is needless to add that, if this sum was constitutionally authorized, there is no limit whatever to be placed upon post-session expenditures for like purposes. The construction contended for would stop the flow of money from the treasury through the spigot, but would still leave open the flow at the bung.

The purpose of one of the amendments, as declared in the title, was to limit "the expenses of employés of the Senate and Assembly," and, as declared in the other, to define the "limitation of the expense of the employés of the Senate and Assembly." And these proposed amendments were submitted to the people in response to a universal demand that the expenses of the Legislature, in whatever form incurred, should be definitely limited. The Legislature itself fixed the amount, and we must presume that it carefully considered and determined what amount would cover all legitimate expenses in any way connected with its duties, or the duties of its employés, arising out of its session. By the same amendment the pay of the legislators was fixed at a specified sum for each session, and no limit was placed upon the duration of the session.

[3] It seems to us that, when we consider the evil which it was the aim of the amendment to remedy, it means that either House may at any regular session provide for the employment of help, but in no case shall it provide for an expense for officers, employés, and attachés to exceed the sum of $500 per day for either House, nor the sum of $200 per day for either House for any special or extraordinary session. The limitation is of the power to exceed these sums or to authorize in any way any increase of these sums. We cannot accept petitioner's construction that the limitation of the power was confined to expenses incurred during the session, and left open to the Legislature an unrestrained and unlimited power to authorize the payment of post-session expenses independently of the $500 per day limit to each body. It is true that some work must be done by the officers of each of the bodies after final adjournment, and, clearly, they should be paid for such work. But the Legislature must provide for this necessity out of the $500 per day given each body to meet its expenses. It is not within the province of the court to point out how this may be done.

We do not attach importance to petitioner's second point. In the general appropriation act for 1907, there were the following items:

For pay of officers and clerks of the senate	$21,000 00
For pay of officers and clerks of the assembly.....	28,000 00
For contingent expenses of the senate	45,000 00
For contingent expenses of the assembly	52,000 00—$146,000

[4] These appropriations were made before the Constitution was amended, and were to meet the contingent expenses of the two Houses, under the then existing provision of the Constitution. But by the subsequent adoption of the amendment, before the money thus appropriated was expended, the amounts were available only to the extent authorized by the Constitution.

Turning to the general appropriation act of 1909 (Stats. 1909, p. 1106), it would appear that the Legislature had the amendment of the Constitution in mind, for the appropriation there reads as follows:

For pay of officers and clerks of the senate	$30,000 00
For pay of officers and clerks of the assembly.....	30,000 00
For contingent expenses of the senate	5,000 00
For contingent expenses of the assembly	7,000 00—$72,000

This act seems to provide for a 60-day session, and provision is made to pay the officers and clerks $60,000, or $500 per day for each House; the intention no doubt being to include the persons mentioned in the amendment of the Constitution, namely, "officers, employés and attachés." But should the Legislature consume this entire amount while in session, and adjourn finally after having expended the full $500 per day for each House for the entire session, there would be no authority of law to make an appropriation to pay for work done by "officers, employés or attachés" after final adjournment. There being no limitation as to duration of the session, further appropriations may be made to pay for the services of these persons during the session; but the point we wish to make clear is this: That there is no authority of law for paying "officers, employés or attachés" for services to be performed after final adjournment, except it be from unexpended money which had formed a part of the $1,000 per day provided for the two Houses while in session. Either the Senate or Assembly, or both, must make provision for these post-session services out of this $1,000 per day, or such services cannot be paid for from the public treasury.

The writ is denied.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

15 Cal. App. 307

HILL v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SACRAMENTO COUNTY et al. (Civ. 822.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 4, 1911.)

1. ELECTIONS (§ 270*)—CONTESTS—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

The court in construing statutes regulating election contests must consider that it is the policy of the law to have such contests determined as speedily as possible, so that the rightful claimant may enjoy as nearly as practicable the entire term for which he has been chosen.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. § 247; Dec. Dig. § 270.*]

2. ELECTIONS (§ 278*)—CONTESTS—STATUTORY PROCEEDINGS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1115, requiring an elector contesting an election to file a written statement within 30 days after the declaration of the result, except in cases where a contest is brought on specified grounds, when it must be filed within six months after the declaration of the result, and section 1118, as amended by Act March 18, 1907 (St. 1907, cc. 292, 341), providing that, on the filing of the statement, the county clerk must inform the superior court thereof, which shall set a day for the hearing of the contest, and, as amended by Act March 19, 1907, providing that within five days after the end of the time allowed for filing statements the county clerk must notify the superior court of all statements filed, and the court shall order a special session within a specified time to hear the notice, prescribe the time for the filing of statements of contests, and, where a statement of contest and notice to the court and the order of the court for a special session to hear the contest are made within 30 days after the declaration of the result of the election, the court acquires jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 258-262; Dec. Dig. § 278.*]

3. MANDAMUS (§ 31*)—FAILURE OF COURT TO TAKE JURISDICTION—REMEDIES.

Where the trial court acquired jurisdiction of an election contest and of the parties, but erroneously quashed the service of the citation, and refused to hear the contest on the ground that the notice to the court and the order fixing the special session to hear the contest and the issuance of the citation were premature, the court decided erroneously on a preliminary matter, and mandamus would lie to compel it to take jurisdiction and hear the contest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 74, 75; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

4. MANDAMUS (§ 31*)—FAILURE OF COURT TO TAKE JURISDICTION—REMEDIES.

Where there is no conflict as to the facts which confer jurisdiction of an inferior court and which make it the duty of such court to proceed with the trial of the cause, mandamus will issue commanding the inferior court to try the case, unless there is other adequate remedy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 74, 75; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

5. MANDAMUS (§ 4*)—ADEQUACY OF LEGAL REMEDY.

The remedy by appeal from an erroneous judgment of the court in an election contest resulting in a refusal to hear the contest is not adequate because not sufficiently speedy, and mandamus is the proper remedy to compel the court to proceed to hear the matter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 9-34; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Application for a writ of mandate by J. S. Hill against the Superior Court of the County of Sacramento and another, judge thereof, to compel the court to take jurisdiction of an election contest. Alternative writ made peremptory.

R. Platnauer, for petitioner. A. L. Shinn, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The undisputed facts are these: At the general election held on the

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

8th day of November, 1910, petitioner and one R. A. Merkeley were opposing candidates for the office of constable of Riverside township in the county of Sacramento. On the 16th day of November the board of supervisors of said county, after having canvassed the returns, by resolution duly passed and entered on its minutes declared said Merkeley elected to said office. On the 5th day of December following the petitioner filed in the office of the county clerk of said county a written statement of his contest of the right of said Merkeley to said office, the statement being verified and in proper form. On December 9th another contest was filed by one Michael F. Shelley involving a different office and these two were the only statements of contest presented. On December 12th the county clerk notified the superior court that said statements had been filed. On December 15th the court ordered a special session to be held on December 28, 1910, for the hearing of said contests and directing citations to issue. On December 15th said citations were issued by the clerk, and on December 19th they were served by the sheriff on the parties whose right to office was contested. At the time and place appointed for the holding of said special session the court quashed the service of said citation, and refused to hear the contest of petitioner, for the reason that the notice to the court by the clerk was given and the order of the court fixing the special session was made prematurely, and the citation was issued prior to the time fixed by the statute. Upon an application to this court, an alternative writ of mandate was issued, and it is now sought to have it made peremptory upon an answer admitting all the facts set out in the petition. While, technically speaking, the order of the court below simply directed the citation to be quashed, it amounted to a refusal to proceed with the trial of the contest on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction of the person of the contestee by reason of the premature order and service as aforesaid.

The position of respondent involves the construction of section 1118 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 1115 of said Code provides that an elector contesting the right of any person declared elected to an office must file with the county clerk a written statement verified by the contesting party, and said section directs what said statement must contain, and that it must be filed "within thirty days after the declaration of the result of the election by the body canvassing the returns thereof, except in cases where the contest is brought on any of the grounds mentioned in subdivision three of section one thousand one hundred and eleven, when it must be brought within six months after the declaration of the result of the election by the body canvassing the returns thereof." Section 1118 is as follows: "Within five days after the end of the time allowed for filing such statements the county clerk must notify the superior court of the county or city and county of all statements filed. The court shall thereupon order a special session to be held, on some day to be named by it, not less than ten nor more than twenty days from the date of such order, at which session the ballots shall be opened and a recount taken, in the presence of all the parties, of the votes cast for the various candidates in all contests where it appears from the statements filed that a recount is necessary for the proper determination of such contest or contests. The court shall continue in special session to hear and determine all other issues arising in such contested elections and within ten days after the submission thereof, the court shall file its findings of fact and conclusions of law and immediately thereafter judgment therein shall be entered."

The contention of respondent is that the county clerk has no authority to notify the superior court of any statement filed nor the superior court to make the order in reference to the special session until after the expiration of the time in which the statements of contest may be filed. According to this interpretation, these acts must be performed within the period of five days immediately succeeding the expiration of the time for filing the said statements. As contests upon the ground of the violation of certain provisions of the purity of election law may be instituted within six months after the declaration of the result of the election, it would follow that the clerk and the court should have waited until after the 16th day of May, 1911, and within five days thereafter, for said notification and order, whereas, the clerk notified the judge on December 12th—26 days, and the judge made the order on December 15th—29 days after the declaration of the result of the said election.

It is at once apparent that, if the law thus prevents the trial of an election contest until long after the term of the office in controversy has begun, it should be amended by the Legislature before another election takes place. "The investigation proposed is," as well stated in Minor v. Kidder, 43 Cal. 237, "one in which the public at large are deeply concerned. It necessarily involves a question of broader import than the mere individual claim of a designated person to enjoy the honors and emoluments of the particular office brought directly in contest. The inquiry must be as to whether or not the popular vote in the selection of officers to administer the public affairs has been in a given instance, or is about to be, defeated or thwarted by mistake happened or fraud concocted. It is therefore not an ordinary adversary proceeding, for, as against this high public interest concerned, there can be no recognized adversary." It is therefore important and undoubtedly is the policy of the law to have such contests determined as speedily as possible in order that the rightful claimant may enjoy as nearly as practicable the entire term for which he has been chosen. [1] This consideration should not be laid out of view in the effort to determine the meaning of the Legislature in the enactment of the provision involved herein. [2] Having regard to the occasion and purpose of the statute, it would seem to be reasonably clear that by the language in question it was intended to prescribe the limit of time beyond which the said notification and order should not be permitted. In other words, a statement of contest upon certain grounds must be filed within 30 days and upon other grounds within 6 months after the result of the election has been announced and the time for said notification and order is enlarged 5 days beyond the expiration of this period. This does not necessarily mean that six months and five days constitute the limit in all cases. The more just and reasonable view is that it depends upon the character of the contest, the time being limited to 35 days except in the particular instances referred to when the longer period is allowed. In most cases, it must be assumed, all contemplated contests will be filed within 30 days and this construction of the statute will satisfy the obvious purpose of the law to secure a speedy hearing of all contests and at the same time, if practicable.

The phrase involved in the discussion may not be altogether free from ambiguity and uncertainty, but, without regard to the considerations to which we have adverted, we have given it no strained nor unnatural construction. There seem to be two sections, numbered 1118, of the Code of Civil Procedure as amended in 1907 (St. 1907, cc. 292, 341). Reading them together, as far as necessary to illustrate the point before us, we have the following: "Upon the statement being filed, the county clerk must inform the superior court of the county thereof. * * * Within five days after the end of the time allowed for filing such statements, the county clerk must notify," etc. Substituting for "within" one of its familiar equivalents "not longer than," the direction simply amounts to this: "Upon the statement being filed the county clerk must inform the superior court of the county thereof but it must be not longer than five days after the end of the time allowed for filing such statements."

Or, if we assume that the first section 1118 has been superseded by the second, which was approved one day later, the result is unaffected. Manifestly no notification should be given of the filing until the statement has been actually filed. This latter date is necessarily implied as the initial point, and the later section 1118 simply undertakes to provide that the notification and the order shall not be "later than five days after the end of the time for filing such statement." The identical form of expression has been so construed by the Supreme Court, as pointed out by Chief Justice Beatty in his dissenting opinion in the case of Bell v. Staacke, 137 Cal. 311, 70 Pac. 172, where he says: "The object was to enlarge and protect the right, not to restrict it and involve it in doubt and uncertainty. Having regard, therefore, to the occasion and purpose of the amendment, it is clear that the words 'within one year after the rendition' meant nothing more than if the law had said 'Not later than one year after.' The word 'within' had reference solely to the end of the period prescribed, and not to its beginning. This is a perfectly legitimate sense of the expression, and is the precise sense that has been ascribed to it by the decisions of this court." The cases cited by him are Los Angeles County Bank v. Raynor, 61 Cal. 147, and Janes v. Bullard, 107 Cal. 132, 40 Pac. 108.

It is true that a different interpretation has been given the language providing for an appeal "within one year after the entry of judgment." It was held in an early case (McLaughlin v. Doherty, 54 Cal. 519) that the Legislature intended that the entry rather than the rendition of the judgment should be the initial point for the computation of the time. This conclusion was influenced somewhat by the consideration of prior legislation and of the decisions of the Supreme Court distinguishing between the "rendition" and the "entry" of judgment. The case has been followed since on the question of appeal, but is manifestly not of decisive significance here.

[3] As we view it, then, the trial judge, upon a preliminary matter, decided contrary to the law and the facts that the court had not acquired jurisdiction of the "contestee," and therefore was not authorized to proceed with the trial at the time appointed. Upon our understanding of the statutory provision, the court had and still has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties, and it was its plain duty to proceed to trial at the time appointed. It could not divest itself of this jurisdiction by an order purporting to quash the citation, nor is there a case presented here of jurisdiction to decide wrong as well as right beyond the reach of the writ of mandate. [4] Where there is no conflict as to the facts and in the judgment of the higher tribunal those facts confer jurisdiction and make it clearly the duty of the lower tribunal to proceed with the trial of the cause, if there is no other adequate remedy, the writ of mandate will issue commanding such action.

[5] Again, conceding, without deciding, that an appeal would lie, it should not be considered a speedy and adequate remedy in election contests in which the public are so largely interested and where the term of office may expire before a final determination of the trial in the appellate courts. The authorities are in line with these reflections, and from a few of the many cases bearing upon the question we make the following quotations:

In State v. Johnson, 103 Wis. 623, 79 N. W. 1090, 51 L. R. A. 33, it is said: "Where it clearly appears that discretion has been not merely abused, but not exercised at all or that the action taken by the inferior court is without semblance of legal cause, and no other adequate remedy exists, mandamus will lie to compel the specific action which should have been taken. Such cases are, however, more apparent than real exceptions to the rule, because, when only one course is open to the court upon the facts presented, the pursuance of that course becomes the plain and absolute duty of the court and the refusal becomes in effect a failure to perform a duty within its jurisdiction."

In Castello v. St. Louis Circuit Court, 28 Mo. 274, in speaking of the action of the court in determining that a conditional mandamus should be awarded, it is said: "This determination was based upon the principle that where an inferior judicial tribunal declines to hear a case upon what is termed a preliminary objection, and that objection is purely a matter of law, a mandamus will go if the inferior court has misconstrued the law. If the circuit court declined to go into the merits of the case because the party complaining had not given the notice required by the statute, that was a preliminary objection upon a point of law which this court can review upon a writ of mandamus; and, if the circuit court called for a notice which the statute did not require, the mandamus ought to be made peremptory."

Likewise in the Matter of Hohorst, 150 U. S. 653, 14 Sup. Ct. 221, 37 L. Ed. 1211, the Supreme Court, on a petition for a writ of mandate, directed the circuit court to set aside an order of dismissal and to take jurisdiction of the bill as against the defendant; the court declaring that the reasons stated were "conclusive in favor of issuing a writ of mandamus to the circuit court to set aside the order of dismissal, and to take jurisdiction of the bill as against the defendant corporation, even if the appearance in its behalf in the court had been only a special appearance for the purpose of moving to dismiss the bill for want of jurisdiction."

In Heinlen v. Cross, 63 Cal. 44, a writ of mandate was issued directing the judge of the superior court to proceed to hear and determine the issue raised by the return to an order to show cause why a certain party should be not be punished for contempt in disobeying an order of the court. At the time and place appointed for said hearing, the agent of the defendant had appeared and made a certain statement to the court, whereupon the court dismissed the proceedings and discharged the agent on the ground that the process of contempt was a proceeding in the action and that by the appeal all proceedings under the judgment had been stayed. The Supreme Court declared: "Had the action of the court below been in the exercise of a judicial discretion, of course mandamus would not lie to compel the court to proceed in the matter. But it is perfectly manifest that the action of the court in dismissing the proceeding was based on a supposed want of power occasioned by the appeal and the incidental stay of proceedings wrought by the execution of the undertaking on appeal." The court held that the injunction was not superseded by virtue of the appeal, and that it was the duty of the court to inquire into the facts, and this it was commanded to do. In Temple v. Superior Court, 70 Cal. 211, 11 Pac. 699, it is said: "The facts stated bring the case clearly within section 1210 of the Code of Civil Procedure and under such circumstances the court cannot, by holding without reason that it has no jurisdiction of the proceeding, divest itself of jurisdiction, and evade the duty of hearing and determining it."

The subject is considered more elaborately in Scott v. Shields, 8 Cal. App. 12, 96 Pac. 385, and a conclusion reached therein in harmony with petitioner's contention here. We think the learned trial judge misconstrued the provisions of the statute, and that he should have proceeded with the hearing of the contest. It is directed therefore that the alternative writ be made peremptory.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

15 Cal. App. 216

SOUTHERN PAC. R. CO. v. REIS ESTATE
CO. (Civ. 900.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Jan. 27, 1911. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court March 28, 1911.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 246*)—CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS—DISMISSAL AND ABANDON-MENT.

In condemnation proceedings, the plaintiff may abandon his claim to the property, and ask a dismissal within 30 days after entry of judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 647-657; Dec. Dig. § 246.*]

2. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 265*)—DISMISSAL AFTER JUDGMENT—COSTS.

The court, on motion of plaintiff after judgment in condemnation proceedings, "now orders said action to be dismissed on the terms and conditions hereinafter mentioned. Wherefore, by reason of the law and the premises, it is" adjudged that defendant recover costs and specified expenses of preparing for and defending the action, and an attorney's fee stated, and "that this action be and the same hereby is dismissed." Held, that the dismissal was absolute and effective immediately, and was not upon terms, so that the award of expenses and attorney's fees was in excess of the amount authorized, which is limited by statute to costs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 690-693; Dec. Dig. § 265.*]

3. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 246*)—DISMISSAL AFTER JUDGMENT—GROUNDS.

Where plaintiff in condemnation proceedings moved, after judgment, for dismissal, stating that it would abandon all claim to the property, a dismissal was properly granted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 647-657; Dec. Dig. § 246.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; E. P. Unangst, Judge.

Action by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company against Reis Estate Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Rehearing denied; Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

See 114 Pac. 810.

W. H. Spencer, for appellant. A. E. Campbell and Wm. Shipsey, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. The action was one instituted by plaintiff in the exercise of the right of eminent domain. The cause proceeded to a trial before a jury and a verdict fixing the amount of compensation and damages. Within 30 days thereafter, and before any further proceedings were had, plaintiff moved the court to dismiss said action upon the grounds "that the damages and values fixed by the jury were excessive, and a dismissal of the case was an abandonment by the plaintiff of its claim for the property." Defendant objected to such dismissal and moved for a judgment to be entered upon the verdict, but, in the event the same should be denied, asked that the dismissal be ordered upon terms and conditions which involved the payment of costs and defendant's reasonable expenses in preparing for and defending the action, including $29 for surveying and engineering work and maps thereof, and $1,000 attorney's fees, and that plaintiff be precluded from hereafter commencing another action to condemn the same strip of land here sought to be condemned, or any strip of land in that vicinity across the land of said defendant. These motions were heard and submitted. The court overruled defendant's objection to a dismissal, and "the court now orders said action to be dismissed on the terms and conditions hereinafter mentioned. Wherefore, by reason of the law and the premises, it is considered, adjudged, and decreed as follows: That defendant Reis Estate Company do have and recover from said plaintiff its costs and disbursements herein, taxed at $225; also its necessary and reasonable expenses in preparing for and defending this action, namely, $29 for surveying and engineering work and maps thereof, and $750 attorney's fees; that this action be and the same is hereby dismissed." Plaintiff appeals from that part of the judgment by which it was and is adjudged that defendant do have and recover from plaintiff its necessary and reasonable expenses in preparing for and defending this action, namely $29 for surveying and engineering work and maps, and $750 attorney's fees.

It is insisted by appellant that, having abandoned its claim to the property within 30 days succeeding the trial, it was entitled to have its action dismissed upon payment of the costs, and that the court was without authority to include in such judgment any penalty or amount in excess of such costs. Upon the other hand, it is respondent's contention that the dismissal was a conditional one, to be made and entered upon payment of the sums ordered by the court, and that such conditional dismissal was within the discretion of the court, and that no abuse of discretion appearing it must be assumed upon this appeal that the same was properly exercised. We think it unnecessary to determine the character of right with reference to dismissal which a plaintiff may possess in proceedings of this character after verdict and before final decree of condemnation. [1] That he is entitled to abandon the claim to the property and ask a dismissal before the expiration of 30 days from the entry of the judgment has been determined in Pool v. Butler, 141 Cal. 46, 74 Pac. 444. [2] Assuming, without deciding, that such right of dismissal is within the discretion of the court only, and that in its exercise the court may impose such terms as in its judgment may be proper, and when so imposed will not be disturbed, unless an abuse of discretion is made to appear, nevertheless, it appears from the judgment entered in this case that the same was not upon terms or conditions, but, upon the contrary, was an order of dismissal immediately effective, and in connection with which a judgment for the expenses incidental to the trial was rendered. We recognize a marked distinction between a conditional dismissal, the effect of which is to order a dismissal to be entered upon the performance of certain conditions, and a dismissal ordered as appears by this record. In the first instance, the dismissal is not effective until the conditions are performed; in this case the dismissal was ordered without the performance of the conditions and an effort made to render a judgment for an amount in excess of that which a court is authorized to order upon an absolute dismissal. There is no authority in the statute authorizing a court to render a judgment for attorney's fees in connection with an unconditional order dismissing a proceeding in condemnation, whatever may be its authority in regard to imposing payment thereof as a condition precedent to dismissal.

We are not in sympathy with respondent's contention that the record does not disclose an abandonment of the claim to the property, and such an abandonment as would preclude another action of the same character. [3] We are of opinion that the statement in open court, made by plaintiff in connection with its motion to dismiss, to the effect that if such motion was granted it would abandon all claim to the property, amounted to such an abandonment as would warrant the order of dismissal. In our opinion, therefore, when the court made its order of dismissal, so much of the judgment awarding damages in excess of costs was erroneous.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It is ordered, therefore, that the judgment of the court for $29 engineering fees and $750 attorney's fees be reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

15 Cal. App. 215

SOUTHERN PAC. R. CO. v. REIS ESTATE CO. (L. A. 2,583.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 29, 1911.)

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; E. P. Unangst, Judge.

On petition for rehearing. Petition denied. For former opinion, see 114 Pac. 809.

W. H. Spencer, for appellant. A. E. Campbell and Wm. Shipsey, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent from the order denying a rehearing of this cause. It is not decided, and I do not think it ought to be held that, where the whole controversy in a condemnation case is over the compensation to which the landowner is entitled, the plaintiff has the unqualified right to dismiss the proceeding upon payment of costs after he has subjected the defendant to heavy expenses in addition to court costs in the legitimate effort to prove the loss and damage that he will sustain in consequence of the condemnation sought. This was the main question in the case, but it is left undecided because, as the district court holds, conceding the power of the superior court to make the order of dismissal conditional, it has made it unconditional. I do not so construe the order. It was clearly intended to be conditional, and the form in which it was entered does not forbid that construction, or deprive it of that effect, if, as conceded for the purposes of the decision, it was in the power of the court to give it that effect.

(159 Cal. 401)

In re HANSON'S ESTATE.
HANSON et al. v. JORDAN et al.
(S. F. 5,211.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 20, 1911.
On Rehearing March 22, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 863*)—SCOPE OF REVIEW—DECREE IN FORMER PROCEEDINGS.

On appeal from a decree in proceedings to terminate a trust, appellant cannot raise the question of the validity of an order of court in a former and entirely independent proceeding based on a separate and distinct petition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3487; Dec. Dig. § 863.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 863*)—SCOPE OF REVIEW—APPEAL FROM PART OF JUDGMENT—CONCLUSIVENESS OF OTHER PORTION.

Where no appeal was taken from that portion of the decree adjudging that a trust terminated on a certain day, that portion of the decree was final and conclusive on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3450; Dec. Dig. § 863.*]

3. TRUSTS (§ 315*)—ACCOUNTING BY TRUSTEES—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Where trustees in their first account credited themselves with compensation for a certain period, which was allowed by the court and no appeal was taken, such allowance was conclusive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Dec. Dig. § 315.*]

4. TRUSTS (§ 60*)—DURATION.

Where a will provided that property should be held in trust for five years from the date of the entry of a decree of distribution of decedent's estate, the trust continued five years from the entry of the decree of distribution, though such decree was made several months before entry.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 82; Dec. Dig. § 60.*]

5. TRUSTS (§ 315*)—COMPENSATION OF TRUSTEES—PROVISIONS OF WILL.

Where a will provided that the property should be held by trustees for five years from the entry of a decree of distribution of decedent's estate, and that the trustees should receive compensation of $500 per month each, their right to such compensation was limited to 60 months, and for any further services by the trust being prolonged their compensation must rest upon an award of court on quantum meruit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 493; Dec. Dig. § 315.*]

6. TRUSTS (§ 227*)—EXPENSES OF TRUSTEE—ATTORNEY'S FEES—RESISTING TERMINATION OF TRUST.

Where a trust by its terms was not to terminate until a certain time and proceedings were brought before that time to terminate it, the trustees were entitled to an allowance of attorney's fees in resisting the proceedings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 324; Dec. Dig. § 227.*]

Lorigan, Angellotti, and Sloss, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Petition by William H. Hanson and another against William H. Jordan and another, as trustees under the last will of Charles Hanson, deceased, for a final account, and for termination of the trust and distribution. From that part of the decree making certain allowances to said trustees, petitioners appeal. Affirmed.

The opinion of Lorigan, J., in department, concurred in by Melvin and Henshaw, JJ., is as follows:

These are two appeals taken from an allowance of certain sums to William H. Jordan and S. G. Murphy, as trustees of a trust created by the last will of Charles Hanson, deceased, and of which they, together with the appellant H. C. Chesebrough, were the trustees.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Charles H. Hanson died in the city and county of San Francisco on March 31, 1898, leaving a will with an accompanying codicil. He appointed as his executors H. C. Chesebrough and S. G. Murphy, and by the terms of his will created a trust as to certain shares of the capital stock of the Tacoma Mill Company, and appointed said H. C. Chesebrough and S. G. Murphy, together with William H. Jordan, as the trustees of said trust. The will with the codicil was duly admitted to probate, and letters testamentary issued to the executors nominated in the will. The trust clause of the will declared:

"Ninth. I hereby give and bequeath to H. C. Chesebrough, of Oakland, Samuel G. Murphy and William H. Jordan, of San Francisco, all the interest which I may possess at the date of my death in and to the capital stock of the said Tacoma Mill Company, after the payment of all my just debts, funeral expenses and the foregoing legacies, the same to be held by them in trust for the period of five (5) years from and after the date of the entry of this decree of distribution of my estate, or until the death of my son, William H. Hanson, should he die prior to that time."

As to the beneficiaries of the trust, the trust clause provided that, should the testator's son, W. H. Hanson, be living at the expiration of said five years, the trust property should be delivered to him, and thereupon the trust should cease and terminate; that, in the event of his death prior to the expiration of said five years from the date of entry of the decree of distribution, the trustees should deliver all the trust property to the testator's wife, Charlotte Hanson, if then living, or, if she be dead, the said trust property should be delivered to H. C. Chesebrough, and thereupon the said trust should terminate. The trust clause also provided for the manner in which the trust property should be managed, and for the discharge of active duties on the part of the trustees relative to it. It is unnecessary to set forth these provisions in particular, as the conclusion we reach on this appeal makes a consideration of them unnecessary.

In the codicil to his will the testator provided, with respect to compensation to be paid to the trustees for their services as such trustees, as follows: "To H. C. Chesebrough, Samuel G. Murphy, and to William H. Jordan, the sum of six thousand ($6,000) dollars per annum during the full term of their trusteeship, and that said sum of money shall be so paid to each of said trustees in equal monthly installments."

On February 5, 1903, a decree of distribution of the estate was made, under which there was distributed to the trustees named in the will by virtue of the trust clause referred to, 3,749 shares of the Tacoma Mill Company stock; this constituting the trust fund to which the trust clause related. The decree of distribution was not, however, in fact entered until June 23, 1903—more than four months after it had been made, but immediately on the making of the decree of distribution the executors delivered the trust funds to the trustees.

Two accounts were filed by the trustees in the matter of the trust prior to June 25, 1908, in which they credited themselves with compensation as such trustees in the sum of $500 per month from February 5, 1903, to November 5, 1908, which included compensation from the date of the making of the decree of distribution to its entry. These accounts were settled and no appeals taken from the orders of settlement.

The widow of the deceased, Charlotte Hanson, named as one of the beneficiaries of the trust, died prior to the making of the decree of distribution and commencement of the trust term, and, on February 5, 1908, H. C. Chesebrough, another of the beneficiaries (also one of the trustees), relinquished to W. H. Hanson, the only other beneficiary, all his interest in the trust property, thus constituting W. H. Hanson the sole beneficiary of the trust fund.

It appears in a general recital in the decree, from particular portions of which these appeals are taken, that, subsequent to his relinquishment of his interest as beneficiary in favor of Hanson, and some time between February 5, 1908, and June 23d of that year, Chesebrough, as trustee, applied to the court to have the trust declared terminated, which application was denied. Thereafter, and on June 25, 1908, the appellant W. H. Hanson alone, as a sole beneficiary, filed a petition for an order in the matter of said trust, requiring the rendition of a final account of the said trustees; prayed also for a decree declaring the trust terminated as of February 5, 1908, and for a distribution of the trust property to him as the sole beneficiary under the trust.

The answer of the trustees W. H. Jordan and S. G. Murphy to this latter application practically set up the facts as heretofore stated, and alleged that the trust terminated under the terms of the will on June 23, 1908, and not on February 5, 1908, as claimed by the petitioner. In both answers a claim for compensation for trustees from February 5, 1908, to June 23, 1908, was made, and a further claim on the part of W. H. Jordan for the sum of $500 expended by him for attorney's fees in resisting the application previously made by their cotrustee, H. C. Chesebrough, to have the trust terminated.

The trustee H. C. Chesebrough in his answer joined with W. H. Hanson in his application to have it determined that the trust terminated on February 5, 1908, made no claim for fees after February 5, 1908, and rendered an account of receipts and disbursements, from which it appeared that there was in the hands of the trustees 3,749 shares of the capital stock of the Tacoma Mill Company and $31,954.23 in cash as the trust fund. The court on the hearing of the petition and answers settled the accounts of the trustees, allowed S. G. Murphy and W. H. Jordan fees as such trustees for the period between February 5, 1908, and June 23, 1908, of $2,299.88 each, on a basis of $500 per month or $6,000 per annum, and allowed trustee W. H. Jordan an additional sum of $500 for the services of his attorney, as prayed for in his answer, declared the trust terminated as of June 23, 1908, and that the beneficiary W. H. Hanson was entitled to all the trust property.

These appeals are from so much only of the order as allows fees to the trustees S. G. Murphy and W. H. Jordan between February 5, 1908, and June 23, 1908, and allowing an additional sum of $500 to W. H. Jordan for fees of his attorney, and are taken by both Chesebrough, as one of the trustees, and Hanson as the sole beneficiary.

The first contention of the appellants is that the court erred in denying the original application of Chesebrough as trustee for a decree terminating the trust, which proceeding is referred to in general terms in the present decree. They insist that after the death of Mrs. Charlotte Hanson and the relinquishment to W. H. Hanson of his interest in the trust property by the only other beneficiary, Chesebrough, it was the duty of the court on application therefor to terminate the trust. This proposition is argued at length by counsel for appellants, but we are at a loss to perceive how any such question can be presented or considered on this appeal. All we have in the record as to any proceeding brought for the termination of the trust anterior to the proceeding in which these appeals are taken is a general recital in the decree appealed from that a proceeding of that character was instituted and was unsuccessful. This recital is only made in connection with an allowance by the court to the trustee Jordan of fees to compensate his attorney in resisting that petition for the termination of the trust. If a prior petition for the termination of the trust was made (and the recital in the decree discloses that there was), it was a proceeding independent of the present proceeding, and when denied it was the duty of the petitioner to appeal directly from the order denying that application, if dissatisfied with it. He cannot raise the question of the validity of the order of the court denying his former petition in this proceeding, which is entirely independent of the former one, based on a separate and distinct petition and involving an entirely different decree.

Aside from this, however, the only question which could have been involved in the prior proceeding was whether the trust terminated on February 5, 1908, or June 23, 1908. But that was the precise question which in the subsequent petition by the appellant Hanson, joined in by Chesebrough and culminating in the present decree, was presented to the court for determination: the petitioner and Chesebrough claiming that the trust terminated on February 5, 1908, and the respondents Murphy and Jordan, as trustees, claiming that it terminated on June 23, 1908. On this question the trial court, in the decree from portions of which these appeals are taken, adjudged "that the said trust created by the last will and testament of Charles Hanson, deceased, terminated on the 23d day of June, 1908." No appeal is herein taken from this portion of the decree, and that being true the adjudication by the court that the trust terminated on June 23, 1908, is final and conclusive on that question.

The decree of the court as to when the trust terminated not being open to question, it would appear that the compensation of the trustees as allowed by the court, and the correctness of which appellants question, is in accordance with the express provisions of the trust and the will on the subject. The trust provides that the property shall be held "for the period of five years from and after the date of the entry of this decree of distribution of my estate," and the provision of the will with respect to the trust clause provides that the trustees shall receive as compensation for their services $6,000 per annum, payable in monthly installments during the full term of their trusteeship. As the trust did not terminate until June 23, 1908, it is quite obvious that the trustees were, by the express terms of the will, entitled to compensation up to that date, and that the allowance for the period of which appellants complain, from February 5, 1908, to June 23, 1908, was in strict compliance with the terms of the trust. This seems so plain as to make further discussion on the subject unnecessary.

Nor could the correctness of the determination of the court be affected by the fact that the trustees took the property and held it as such from the date of the making of the decree of distribution until the entry thereof; the latter date being the time when, by the language of the trust, the trust term created by the testator was to commence. It is not pretended that the delay in entering the decree of distribution was occasioned by any act of either the executors or the trustees. It was the duty of the trustees to accept the trust funds when the decree of distribution was made and the executors prepared to turn them over to them, and to hold them until the entry of the decree, from which date their active duties as trustees were to commence. They were entitled to compensation during that period, and it was proper for the court to make an allowance to them on the basis prescribed by the testator for their compensation during the five years after the entry of the decree. Anyhow, if there could be a question on this point, inquiry into it would be foreclosed by the order of the court made in the settlement of the first account of the trustees, in which they credit themselves with compensation for that period, which was allowed by the court, and from which order of allowance no appeal was taken.

With respect to the allowance by the court to the trustee Jordan of the sum of $500 as fees for his attorney in resisting the effort of appellant Chesebrough in the first proceeding to terminate the trust. As by the terms of the trust it was not to terminate until the expiration of five years from the date of entry of the decree of distribution, it was the duty of the trustee to resist any attempt to terminate it before that period. It is well settled by the authorities that in the discharge of such duty a trustee has a right to employ attorneys, and to have an allowance in a reasonable amount made by the court from the trust funds for their compensation. No claim is made that the allowance is unreasonable.

The portions of the order appealed from are affirmed.

Bourdette & Bacon, for appellants. Charles S. Wheeler and R. H. Lloyd, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. These are appeals taken from the order of court making certain allowances to William H. Jordan and S. G. Murphy, trustees under the will of Charles Hanson, deceased. The appellants are W. H. Hanson, the sole beneficiary of the trust, and the third trustee, H. C. Chesebrough.

By his will, duly admitted to probate, Charles Hanson nominated H. C. Chesebrough and S. G. Murphy executors. They qualified and acted. Their attorney was William H. Jordan. By the will the following trust was declared:

"Ninth: I hereby give and bequeath to H. C. Chesebrough of Oakland, Samuel G. Murphy and William H. Jordan of San Francisco, all the interest which I may possess at the date of my death in and to the capital stock of the said Tacoma Mill Company, after the payment of all my just debts, funeral expenses and the foregoing legacies, the same to be held by them in trust for the period of five (5) years from and after the date of the entry of this decree of distribution of my estate, or until the death of my son, William H. Hanson, should he die prior to that time."

Of the beneficiaries and purposes of the trust no more need be said than that it is conceded that the trust has been executed, and that appellant William H. Hanson is the sole beneficiary thereof, and is now entitled to the full ownership of the trust property, relieved from the trust. By codicil the compensation of the trustees was provided for in the following language: "To H. C. Chesebrough, Samuel G. Murphy, and to William H. Jordan, the sum of six thousand ($6,000) dollars per annum during the full term of their trusteeship, and that said sum of money shall be so paid to each of said trustees in equal monthly installments." It is to be noted that two of the trustees were the executors of the estate, and that the third trustee is the attorney for the executors. On the 5th day of February, 1903, a decree of distribution was made and given in the superior court, by which the executors were ordered to distribute to the trustees the property of the trust, which consisted wholly and solely of 3,749 shares, of the par value of $100 each, of the capital stock of the Tacoma Mill Company. Neither the executors nor Mr. Jordan, their attorney, nor the same persons as trustees, caused this decree to be entered until June 23, 1903, notwithstanding which the executors, upon the advice of their attorney, made over the trust property to themselves as trustees upon the 5th day of February, 1903, and proceeded to administer the trust. The decree was actually entered upon June 23, 1903. Upon the 8th day of February, 1904, the trustees filed their first annual account, and on the 23d day of February, 1904, the account was settled and allowed and has become final. In this account of February, 1904, the trustees credited themselves, as compensation for their services, with the sum of $500 each, monthly, beginning with February 5, 1903. Following this the trustees made no report or account to the court of their dealings with the trust until after the 5th day of February, 1908, when they presented their report and account for the preceding four years, including their claims for fees at the rate of $500 a month up to February 5, 1908. This account was allowed and settled and has become final. On the 25th day of June, 1908, William H. Hanson, the sole beneficiary of the trust, filed his petition for an order, citing the trustees to render their final account and show cause why the trust should not be terminated and the property distributed to him. The trustees responded, the trustee Chesebrough disclaiming all compensation from February 5, 1908, the other two trustees claiming compensation at the rate fixed by the will from February 5, 1908, till June 23, 1908; the latter date being five years after the decree of distribution was actually entered. The court found the trust to have been terminated on the 23d day of June, 1908, and allowed this compensation. The correctness of its ruling in this regard presents the main contention upon this appeal.

Under the trust Chesebrough had a contingent interest in its property, depending upon the death of William H. Hanson before the termination of the trust. He released and relinquished all this interest to William H. Hanson immediately after the 5th day of February, 1908, and petitioned the court to have the trust terminated. This was opposed by the other trustees, Jordan and Murphy, and an allowance of $500 is made to Jordan as necessary attorney's fees expended in so resisting Chesebrough's application.

Of the trustees, Mr. Murphy was a banker, who spent no small part of the time of the life of this trust in Europe; Mr. Jordan was an attorney at law; and Mr. Chesebrough was the manager of the Tacoma mill, the stock of which constituted the trust property. This property was delivered to and remained entirely in the custody and control of the trustee Chesebrough. He collected the dividends and made the disbursements. At the time of the settlement of the trust, the corpus of the trust consisted of this stock and certain moneys by way of accumulated dividends. One of the purposes of the trust was by the testator declared to be his desire that the stock should be preserved in its integrity, and the interests of the Tacoma Mill Company advanced, as a monument to his memory. What was practically done to this end it would seem was done by Mr. Chesebrough. These considerations are adverted to solely for the purpose of showing that the trust was not of such character as to impose any considerable labor upon the trustees, or to call for much or any care by way of its management. Shares of stock of a milling company were delivered to one of the trustees who was the manager of this company, who alone kept it, received the dividends, made the disbursements to the trustees of their monthly compensation, and placed the rest of the money in bank. Under these circumstances, it is quite apparent that the munificent compensation which the will bestowed on the trustees was in the nature of an honorarium. By the order of the court in probate, there has been allowed to them compensation at the rate of $500 a month from February 5, 1903, the date of the making of the decree of distribution, to June 23, 1908, five years after the decree of distribution was entered; that is to say, compensation has been awarded for full five years from the date of the entry of the decree, and for nearly five months additional, being the time between the date of the making of the decree and the date of its entry.

We conceive the important question in this consideration to be, not the duration of the trust, but the length of time for which the trustees were to receive the compensation fixed by the will. The will provides for a trust to endure for five full years from the entry of the decree of distribution, and it provides that the trustees should receive compensation at the rate of $500 per month for the full term of the trust. Clearly this means that in the view of the testator the full term of the trust was to be five years; no more, no less. If by accidents or contingencies, as by litigation, which might necessarily prolong the life of the trust, its duration was extended, there is nothing in the will to lead to the belief that the testator contemplated a fixed remuneration at the rate of $500 a month for any prolonged or indefinite period. Considering the services rendered, the remuneration was not unlike a bequest to each of $30,000, payable in monthly installments of $500. If this was indeed the testator's view, and it may well be said that it was his view, as compared with the other which would subject the trust estate to the enormous drain of $1,500 a month for an undetermined and indeterminable period—that is, so long as the trust might last—then it follows that under the will the trustees were entitled to a compensation of $500 a month for 60 months, and that under the will they were entitled to no more. Any other further or additional compensation beyond this must rest, not upon the provisions of the will, but upon the value of the services actually rendered, to be fixed by the court. We are the more confirmed in our view that this is the true construction by consideration of the facts actually presented. It was unquestionably the duty of the executors, who were themselves to be the trustees, and of the attorney for the executors, who was himself to be a trustee, to see that the decree of distribution was promptly entered. Their right in law to act as trustees would be founded upon this entered decree. Their right to compensation should in law have begun from their formal assumption of trusteeship after decree of distribution entered. They, and no one else, failed to have the decree entered, notwithstanding which they made over to themselves the trust property and proceeded with the execution of the trust. They base their claim for compensation, not from the time when, under the will, it was declared the trust should begin, but from the time when they caused it to begin. Under their contention, if by their remissness the decree of distribution had not been entered for 10 years after the date of its making, they would be entitled to compensation at the rate fixed by the will for 15 years. Such a construction would be a plain temptation to the trustees to defeat, to their own advantage, the manifest intent of the testator.

The fact that the court upon the filing of their first account in 1904 allowed them compensation fixed by the will for the time intervening between the actual commencement of the trust and June 23d, when by the will its commencement was contemplated, is in no way determinative of their right to future compensation. For if, as we have said, the will contemplated a compensation of $500 a month for five years, it was a matter of trifling significance when the trust was finally brought to a close whether they had received any or all of this sum by way of advancement. We hold, therefore, that, as concerns the life of the trust, the controlling consideration under the will was that it should exist for five years after the entry of the decree, though of course it might, by reason of litigation, have been still further prolonged. But we hold as to the compensation of the trustees that the controlling consideration was not the time after entry, but was the fixed period of five years; that when the trustees had received compensation for the full five years, compensation for any additional term to which the trust may have been prolonged should rest, not upon the terms of the trust, but upon an award of the court in quantum meruit.

The $500 attorney's fees made chargeable against the trust property for the successful opposition of the trustees Murphy and Jordan to the petition for the termination of the trust are allowed. That judgment having become final, the inquiry here is not open as to its soundness, and notwithstanding that it was an effort by one of the trustees, and not by the beneficiary, to terminate the trust, still the action of the resisting trustees must be held to have been the successful defense of the trust. Their legitimate and necessary disbursements in this regard are therefore chargeable against the trust property.

So much of the order and decree appealed from as allows the trustees compensation under the will after receiving the $30,000 for the five years as fixed by the will is hereby reversed, with directions to the trial court to allow the trustees compensation for the extended period of the life of the trust over five years in such sum as it shall find merited.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; MELVIN, J.; SHAW, J.

LORIGAN, J. I dissent and adhere to the views expressed in the opinion filed on the original submission of the cause.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

On Rehearing.

BEATTY, C. J., and HENSHAW, SHAW, and MELVIN, JJ. Counsel for respondents in his petition for a rehearing of this cause implicitly concedes that we have given a correct construction to the will of Charles Hanson, but thinks that, in our effort to do what we conceive to be substantial justice, we have violated the rule of res judicata—a rule the potency of which, as he says, is sufficient ex albo facere nigrum, ex nigro album, ex curvo rectum, ex recto curvum. This criticism is based upon a construction of the decree of distribution, which is at variance with our construction of the will. But we think this supposed incongruity is far from obvious.

If the testator in fixing the commencement of the five-year trust term at the date of the "entry" of the decree of distribution meant the time when the law made it the duty of the clerk to enter the decree in contradistinction to the time to which a careless, incompetent, or corrupt official might postpone the performance of that simple ministerial and imperative duty; if, in other words, his plain intention was that the commencement of the trust term should coincide with the close of the administration, when the exigencies of the case would require the active duties of his chosen trustees to begin—we see no reason why the language of the will which manifests this intent should receive a different construction when used in the decree of distribution. There is no leaning in favor of the view that a decree of distribution has misconstrued a will, or that it contains provisions which will frustrate the intentions of the testator. On the contrary, the presumption is quite the reverse. That the will not only may be construed as here indicated, but that any other construction would have imperiled one of the most important of its provisions is apparent. The right of the primary beneficiary of the trust, William H. Hanson, the only son of the testator, to take the corpus of the trust estate depended upon his surviving the trust term. If the beginning of the term, and consequently its end, could be postponed by the delinquency of the clerk for nearly five months, it could in the same way have been postponed for five years, and if the son had died within the extended period the corpus of the trust estate must have gone, not to his heirs or devisees, but to the heirs or devisees of the widow if she survived him, or to the heirs or devisees of Chesebrough if she did not. Just suppose, therefore, that William H. Hanson had died between the 5th day of February and the 23d day of June, 1908, leaving a widow and children, and the contest had been between his heirs and Chesebrough under the terms of the will and decree of distribution, would any court say that the testator when he used the expression "entry of this decree of distribution" had in mind the time when a careless, incompetent, or dishonest clerk might choose to enter it, rather than the time when it would be his duty to enter it? We scarcely think so. If this is a correct construction of the will, why should the decree of distribution receive a different construction? It uses the same language that is found in the will, and when it says "entry of this decree" why may we not construe those words as referring to the time when the decree would be entered if the law was obeyed, and why especially should we not give it that construction when both the court who made the decree and the trustees who obtained it, acted upon that construction; the trustees in claiming and receiving, and the court in awarding, the compensation of $1,500 per month from the date of the rendition of the decree? To answer this question as we have answered it we have only to presume that in framing the decree of distribution the court acted upon the assumption that the clerk would perform his duty, and in approving the accounts of the trustees it acted upon the equitable maxim that what ought to have been done was done.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

(159 Cal. 569)

HAESE v. HEITZEG et al. (Sac. 1,813.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 16, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1071*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—IMMATERIAL FINDINGS.

Erroneous findings, if immaterial, are not ground for reversal of a judgment on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4234-4239; Dec. Dig. § 1071.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 677*) — CONCLUSIVENESS—PERSONS CONCLUDED—PRIVITY.

In an action to quiet title, defendant claimed title under a sale of the land by an irrigation district for nonpayment of assessments, and it appeared that a previous action had been brought against the district and its board of directors to declare an assessment levied by the district void, and annul its organization, and to declare that the plaintiff sued on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated as taxpayers of the irrigation district, and a delinquent assessment list attached to the pleadings included the name of the defendant, who, however, was not shown to have had notice of or to have taken any part in the proceedings, in which judgment went against the district. Held, that defendant was not in "privity" with the parties to the former judgment against the district, and was not estopped in this action from relying on the sale by the district and its deed to him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1062, 1193; Dec. Dig. § 677.*]

3. JUDGMENT (§ 677*) — CONCLUSIVENESS—PERSONS CONCLUDED—PERSONS REPRESENTED BY PARTIES.

Where one plaintiff belonging to a class as creditors, taxpayers, etc., brings action in behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, the judgment rendered is binding on others of the class who accept the representation and connect themselves with the litigation by coming into the suit or seeking to share in the fruits of the judgment; but it can have no binding effect on those who do not participate in the proceedings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1193; Dec. Dig. § 677.*]

4. JUDGMENT (§ 289*) — ENTRY — JUDGMENT ROLL—DATE.

Where a judgment roll shows two judgments and the record is silent in reference to the reason therefor, the latter in point of time must be deemed the true and final judgment in the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 570; Dec. Dig. § 289.*]

5. STIPULATIONS (§ 18*) — EFFECT — MATTERS CONCLUDED — STIPULATION AS TO ISSUES AND EVIDENCE.

Defendant in an action to quiet title claimed under a sale and deed from an irrigation district, and the parties stipulated that since a certain date the irrigation district had been and was still acting in good faith and transacting the business and exercising the franchises of an irrigation district. Held, that the parties, having stipulated as to the fact of the existence of the district, could not contradict their admissions by means of a judgment, since the stipulation was binding upon the parties for purposes of the trial, and precluded any finding in opposition thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Stipulations, Cent. Dig. §§ 41-54; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

6. JUDGMENT (§ 713*) — CONCLUSIVENESS—PERSONS CONCLUDED.

In an action to quiet title, the defendant claimed under a sale from an irrigation district, and it appeared that the directors of the district pursuant to Irrigation Act (St. 1897, c. 189) § 68, had commenced action to obtain confirmation of proceedings of the district, and that a judgment of confirmation was entered in 1890, and that on a second hearing in 1898 judgment was entered declaring that the district was never validly organized, and that its proceedings for the issuance of bonds were void. Held, that defendant was not estopped from relying on his deed from the district by judgment that the issuance of bonds was void, since before the last judgment was rendered the bonds issued by the district might have come into the possession of bona fide holders, by whom they could be enforced.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 713.*]

7. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 230*) — IRRIGATION DISTRICT—BONDS.

Bonds issued by an irrigation district after a decree confirming its proceedings in the issuance of bonds may be held valid in the hands of bona fide holders and enforceable by levy of assessments to pay interest after a later judgment declaring the issuance of bonds to have been void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 230.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1071*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS—FINDING OF MATERIAL FACT—FINDING CONTRARY TO STIPULATION.

In an action to quiet title, where the parties stipulated that an irrigation district under deed from which defendant claimed had been at all times since 1889 "and now is acting in good faith, transacting business, performing the functions and duties and exercising the franchises of an irrigation district under the laws of California," a finding of the court "that it is not now a duly organized and existing irrigation district, and that during said time it has not been acting in good faith in transacting business as such irrigation district," is a finding of a material fact, and, since it is contrary to the stipulation of the parties, is a ground of reversal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1071.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action by Charles A. Haese, Jr., against H. C. Heitzeg and others. Judgment for the plaintiff, and from an order granting defendant Heitzeg a new trial plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Mr. Zartman, for appellant. C. L. Russell, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. After judgment in favor of the plaintiff the court below granted the motion of defendant Heitzeg for a new trial. From the order granting this motion the plaintiff now appeals.

The action was one to quiet title to a quarter section of land in Tulare county. The defendant Heitzeg (whom we shall designate herein as the defendant) answered, admitting that plaintiff had been the owner of the premises prior to June, 1900, but claiming that he, the defendant, had succeeded to such title by virtue of two sales (a) for nonpayment of state and county taxes; and (b) for nonpayment of an assessment levied against the land by the Tulare irrigation district.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The court found against both defenses. No serious question is raised regarding the correctness of the finding that the proceedings for the collection of the state and county taxes were irregular to such an extent as to invalidate the tax deeds under which Heitzeg claims. Upon the other defense the court found against the defendant's allegation that ever since the 2d day of September, 1889, the Tulare irrigation district has been, and now is, a duly organized and existing irrigation district, and that during said time it has been acting in good faith and transacting business as such irrigation district. There is a further finding to the effect that on the 23d day of November, 1898, in a matter entitled "In the Matter of Tulare Irrigation District," case No. 2,329, the superior court of Tulare county adjudged and decreed that said Tulare irrigation district never was, and is not now, duly or regularly organized, and that the same is not now a duly or regularly organized irrigation district. There is a finding that said irrigation district caused to be issued its bonds to the amount of $500,000 as alleged in the answer, but that said bonds were not issued in the manner or form prescribed by law, and that none of them became or constituted an outstanding indebtedness of said district. The property described in the complaint was assessed to plaintiff during the year 1902 by said Tulare irrigation district, but it is not true, finds the court, that said assessment was duly and properly levied according to law, or that said property was equalized by law. The nonpayment, sale, and the execution of a deed to defendant Heitzeg are found as alleged in the answer. The only other finding that need be noticed here is one that "defendant is estopped from claiming any title or interest in or to said premises by reason of judgments numbered 2,329 and 4,467 of the superior court of the said county of Tulare."

One of the grounds upon which the defendant moved for a new trial was that the evidence was insufficient to justify the finding that the Tulare irrigation district has not been since September, 1889, and that it is not now, a duly organized and existing irrigation district, and that during said time it has not been acting in good faith and transacting business as such irrigation district. The bill of exceptions shows that in the course of the trial the parties stipulated "that Tulare irrigation district at all times since the 2d day of September, 1889, has been, and now is, acting in good faith and transacting the business, performing the functions and duties, and exercising the franchises of an irrigation district under the laws of the state of California." That the italicized portion of the finding in question is contrary to this stipulation is, necessarily, conceded by the appellant. It is argued, however, that in view of other findings the one in question is immaterial. If this be so, the error in making the finding in question would not furnish ground for a reversal of the judgment on appeal (Windhaus v. Bootz, 92 Cal. 617, 28 Pac. 557; Tuohy v. Woods, 122 Cal. 665, 55 Pac. 683), and for like reasons would not justify the granting of a new trial.

The claim that the finding in question is immaterial is based on the further finding that the defendant is estopped by judgments of the superior court of Tulare county, numbered 2,329 and 4,467. We think that neither of these judgments was such as to estop the purchaser under proceedings for collection of delinquent assessments from relying on his deed. Judgment 4,467 was in an action brought by B. W. Jauchius against the Tulare irrigation district and its board of directors to obtain a decree that an assessment levied four years prior to the assessment which resulted in the sale to defendant be declared void, that the bonds of the district be declared not an outstanding indebtedness, and that the organization of the district be annulled. The collector was subsequently brought in as a party defendant. The complaint declares that the plaintiff sues "on behalf of himself and all others who are similarly situated as taxpayers of the above-named Tulare irrigation district," and an exhibit attached to his pleading consists of a delinquent assessment list of the district, including among the delinquent assessments one to H. C. Heitzeg, respondent herein, for seven lots. Judgment in the action went in favor of the plaintiff Jauchius, the judgment reciting an appearance on behalf of the plaintiff and no appearance for the defendants. It is claimed that this judgment operates as an estoppel against the defendant Heitzeg on the ground that he, as an owner and taxpayer in the district, was interested in the action and that it was brought on his behalf. But there is no showing that he had notice of the proceedings or that he appeared or joined in them in any way. Jauchius assumed to institute the action on behalf of himself and others similarly situated. This did not, however, require any one having a like interest to come in and join the plaintiff in the action. "Where one plaintiff belonging to a numerous class, as creditors, bondholders, beneficiaries, and the like, brings an action in behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, the judgment which may be rendered is binding on others of the class who accept the representation, and who connect themselves with the litigation, either by coming into the suit or seeking to share in the fruits of the judgment, or by acquiescing in it. But it can have no binding effect on those who do not participate in the proceeding, do not make proof of their claims, or otherwise join in it." 23 Cyc. 1246; Pomeroy's Remedies, § 400; Ex parte Howard, 9

Wall. 175, 19 L. Ed. 634; Holderman v. Hood, 70 Kan. 267, 78 Pac. 838. It follows, therefore, that there is nothing to take the case out of the general rule that a judgment in an action in personam binds only the parties and their privies. Heitzeg occupied no such relation to the action of Jauchius against the irrigation district that the judgment rendered in that case could affect him in any way.

The other judgment relied on as an estoppel (No. 2,329) was a proceeding instituted by the board of directors of the district pursuant to section 68 et seq. of the act for the organization of irrigation districts (St. 1897, p. 254) to obtain a confirmation of the proceedings for the formation of a district and the issuance of bonds. The action was commenced in 1890 and judgment confirming all the proceedings was entered in the same year. The record shows that eight years later several landowners in the district filed an answer denying the validity of the proceedings for the confirmation of the district and setting up certain irregularities in the proceedings for the issuance of the bonds. A second hearing seems to have been had and new findings and judgment filed and entered. The second judgment decrees that the Tulare irrigation district was never validly organized, and that its proceedings for the issuance of bonds are void. We may concede, as is contended by the appellant, that where a judgment roll shows two judgments, and the record is silent in reference to the reason therefor, "the later in point of time must be deemed the true and final judgment in the case." Galvin v. Palmer, 134 Cal. 426, 66 Pac. 572; Paige v. Roeding, 96 Cal. 389, 31 Pac. 264; Von Schmidt v. Von Schmidt, 104 Cal. 547, 38 Pac. 361. Even so, however, we think the judgment in question did not bind defendant as against the stipulated and admitted fact that the district had been, in good faith, exercising the powers and franchises of an irrigation district. The stipulation established for the purposes of the trial the fact that the irrigation district was during all the time material to this discussion a de facto corporation. As such its acts regularly performed were valid. Tulare Irr. Dist. v. Shepard, 185 U. S. 1, 22 Sup. Ct. 531, 46 L. Ed. 773. The parties, having admitted the fact of the existence of the corporation, could not be permitted to contradict their admission by means of a judgment or otherwise. The stipulation entered into was binding upon the parties for the purposes of the action, and it precluded any finding in opposition to the stipulated facts. Nor could the other element of the decree, namely, the declaration that the issue of bonds was void, in itself estop the defendant from relying upon his deed from the collector of the district. The proceedings for the issuance of the bonds were taken in 1890. The judgment in question was not rendered until 1898. In the interval the bonds may have passed into the hands of various bona fide holders. In the hands of such holders they would be valid and binding obligations of the district (Baxter v. Vineland Irr. Dist., 136 Cal. 185, 68 Pac. 601), and valid assessments might be levied to raise the annual interest on such bonds. The judgment in case No. 2,329 that the bonds were invalid is therefore not inconsistent with the fact that such bonds might be enforceable obligations in the hands of bona fide holders. The decree in the confirmation proceedings could not affect the rights of such holders. Tulare Irr. Dist. v. Shepard, supra. The decree does not purport to question the validity of the proceedings (subsequent to the issue of the bonds) for levy and collection of the assessment, and there is no evidence in the case to overcome the prima facie showing (see section 48 of the irrigation act) of the regularity of such proceedings which follows from the recitals in the certificate of sale and the deed of the collector.

It follows from what we have said that the finding which was attacked on the motion for new trial—i. e., the one that the district had never been acting and transacting business as an irrigation district—was a finding of a material fact, and that, inasmuch as such finding was contrary to the admission of the parties, the court below was warranted in granting the motion for a new trial.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

159 Cal. 516

PIERCE et al. v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES
et al. (L. A. 2,420.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 14, 1911.)

1. NEW TRIAL (§ 12*)—STAY OF PROCEEDINGS
—CONSTRUCTION OF ORDER.

An order of the superior court made after judgment for defendants, restraining all acts by them of the nature complained of until the further order of the court, must be construed as being operative only for such time as the court retained its jurisdiction to vacate or modify the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

2. NEW TRIAL (§ 12*)—STAY OF PROCEEDINGS
—PENDING MOTION.

In a suit by property owners to restrain a city from imposing a penalty for failure to pay assessments for public improvements, the superior court could, in its discretion, after finding for defendant and dissolving an injunction, grant an order in effect staying all acts by defendant to preserve the status quo pending the hearing of the motion for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence; the fact that the stay order was termed a "temporary restraining order" being immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

3. NEW TRIAL (§ 12*)—STAY OF PROCEEDINGS
—PENDING MOTION.

Code Civ. Proc. § 526, prohibiting an injunction to prevent the execution of a public

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes statute by officers of law for the public benefit, would not prevent the granting of the order staying further acts by defendant pending the determination of a motion for new trial; the question involved not being the validity of the statute or the right of the city board of works to act thereunder, but the sufficiency of the proceedings for assessing the property for improvements.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by H. A. Pierce and others against the City of Los Angeles and others. From an order made after judgment for defendants enjoining them from doing the acts complained of pending a motion for a new trial, and from an order refusing to dissolve such injunction, defendants appeal. Orders affirmed.

Leslie R. Hewitt, City Atty., and Emmet H. Wilson, Chief Deputy, for appellants. H. A. Pierce and Ingall W. Bull, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. An appeal is taken from an order of the superior court, made after judgment had been rendered in favor of the defendants. By said order defendants were enjoined from performing the acts complained of pending a motion for a new trial. There is also an appeal from the order refusing to dissolve this injunction. The one question presented is whether or not the superior court has power to preserve the status of the litigants in this way after judgment and until the motion for a new trial is determined.

The action was by certain property owners who prayed for an injunction restraining the city of Los Angeles and its board of public works from imposing any penalty for the failure of plaintiffs to pay certain assessments declared against their land for public improvements, or from doing any acts which would interfere with or constitute a cloud upon the title to the property in question. The findings and judgment were all in favor of the defendants and the restraining orders which had been in force during the pendency of the action up to the time of the rendering of judgment were dissolved. A few days later, and after the serving and filing of notice of motion for new trial, the court, upon the affidavit and motion of one of the plaintiffs, issued the injunction which became the basis of these appeals.

A question very similar to the one here involved has been recently decided and the leading authorities have been cited and reviewed in the opinion in the case of the City of Pasadena v. Superior Court, 157 Cal. 786, 109 Pac. 620. In that case was considered an order made concurrently with the rendition of judgment preserving the status of the parties litigant. In the case at bar several days elapsed between the rendition of judgment and the granting of the order. We must therefore consider the power of the superior court in the matter of the restraining order made after judgment. When this case was before the District Court of Appeal, that court properly construed the order in question as a preservation of the status of the matters in litigation pending the determination of the motion for new trial. As we agree with the reasoning and conclusions reached, we adopt a portion of the opinion of the district court of appeal prepared by Mr. Presiding Justice Allen:

"In support of the first proposition [i. e., that the court had lost jurisdiction to issue the injunctive order], this court is cited to Stoddard v. Superior Court, 108 Cal. 303, 41 Pac. 278, and Spears v. Mathews, 66 N. Y. 127, in each of which cases it is established that the court has no power, after judgment has been rendered against a plaintiff and pending an appeal therefrom, to grant an injunction in the same action.' In this case, however, no appeal is shown to be pending, simply an application for a new trial, which is one of the steps recognized under our practice as preliminary to an appeal for certain purposes. It may well be conceded that, after an appeal is perfected, the trial court is thereby divested of jurisdiction to make any further order affecting or modifying the judgment appealed from, or to make orders the effect of which would be to stay proceedings connected therewith. And it may also be conceded that a court, having once determined the issues in a case and rendered a judgment based upon findings clearly showing that no right to an injunction exists, and by an appropriate order has dissolved a previous restraining order, could not in the same action, in the face of such findings and judgment, grant thereafter an injunctive order the effect of which could only be to revive a restraining order once dissolved and found by the court to have been improperly issued. But none of these things of necessity determines that the action of the court in this instance was erroneous. The name given an order does not necessarily determine its character. The all-controlling factor in determining such character is its effect. While the order herein granted and from which the appeal is taken is termed a 'temporary restraining order,' in effect it is but an order preserving the status quo of the matters embraced in the litigation pending the hearing of the motion for a new trial. Our Supreme Court in construing section 197 of the practice act (St. 1851, c. 5), substantially re-enacted in section 664, Code of Civil Procedure, determined that under section 197 a motion for a new trial did not stay proceedings, but that the matter of such stay might be regulated by a rule of court, and, in the absence of a rule of court, a party desiring a stay of proceedings pending his motion for a new trial might obtain an order to that effect from the court, which the court has jurisdiction to grant unconditionally or upon terms, according to the circumstances of the case; the matter of such stay being wisely left to the sound discretion of the court. People v. Loucks, 28 Cal. 70. The authority of the court to grant a stay seems to be recognized by section 681, Code of Civil Procedure. This stay, which by its terms was until the further order of court, must be accepted as extending the stay only for such time as the superior court retained jurisdiction to vacate or modify the judgment. Whatever stay plaintiff would be entitled to have upon appeal must be controlled by the statutes providing for undertakings on appeal and the powers of the appellate court to make an order operating as a supersedeas. We think that pending proceedings leading up to such an appeal the trial court should have the power, in the exercise of a wise discretion, to maintain the status to the end that a party moving for a new trial might, in the event of its determination in his favor, be protected adequately and fully in his rights. To say that a trial court pending a motion for a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence—in which case often considerable time must elapse in order that affidavits may be prepared and presented and the application for a new trial properly heard—has no authority or jurisdiction to stay the hands of the parties until the determination of such motion, would often violate the principle that for every wrong there is a remedy, and would remove from the power of the trial court the right to fully correct any error which it might subsequently determine had been committed upon the first hearing."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

We now come to the consideration of the second ground for reversal urged by appellants. They cite section 526 of the Code of Civil Procedure which provides that an injunction may not be granted "to prevent the execution of a public statute by officers of law for the public benefit," their contention being, of course, that public officers are immune from injunctive restraint while acting under a statute presumably for the public benefit. Proceedings of the kind which the court has restrained in this action are in invitum, and the very essence of the litigation is whether or not the steps necessary to acquire jurisdiction were followed by the board of works of the city of Los Angeles in the condemnation of land for street purposes and the apportionment of costs therefor. While the statute is in a sense a public statute and the members of the board of works are public officers, the matters here involved are not the validity of the section of the Code or the right of the public officers to act under it, but the court must ultimately determine the sufficiency or insufficiency of the proceedings by virtue of which the city and the board of works claim jurisdiction to assess costs of improvement and to do and perform the other acts contemplated by them. The statute above cited cannot mean that a court of equity may not, in a case like this, stay the hands of these officers until it is determined finally and judicially whether or not they are seeking to deprive citizens of property, without due process of law.

The orders are affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

(159 Cal. 535)

FINNELL v. FINNELL. (Sac. 1,651.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 14, 1911.)

1. MONEY PAID (§ 1*)—RIGHT TO SUBROGATION.

One who is compelled to pay a debt, or whose property is subjected for a debt which another in good conscience should pay, may recover from such other, the amount so paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Money Paid, Cent. Dig. §§ 1-16; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 112*)—DEFAULT—EFFECT—NOTES.

One sued on a promissory note executed by him, by defaulting, confesses his liability for the indebtedness represented by the note.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 203-206; Dec. Dig. § 112.*]

3. MONEY PAID (§ 1*)—SUBROGATION OR SURETY.

One who purchased land encumbered by a vendor's lien, securing an outstanding purchase-money note, without assuming such indebtedness, and who, upon his vendor's failure to pay the note, is compelled to pay it for his own protection, is entitled to recover the amount so paid from his vendor, being virtually a surety.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Money Paid, Cent. Dig. §§ 1-16; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

4. SUBROGATION (§ 41*)—REMEDY OF SURETY—CROSS-COMPLAINT.

In an action by a vendor against his vendee on a purchase-money note and against the latter's vendee to foreclose a vendor's lien, the second vendee could file a cross-complaint to have itself subrogated as a judgment creditor of the original vendee in the event of the land being sold to satisfy the judgment against him, since the whole controversy should be settled in one proceeding, all of the parties being before the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Subrogation, Cent. Dig. §§ 109-118; Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Action by Williamson Finnell against John Finnell, Jr., as administrator of the estate of John Finnell, deceased, and the Finnell Land Company. From the part of the decree in favor of the Land Company on its cross-complaint against the first-named defendant, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial, such defendant appeals. Affirmed.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes.

See, also, 156 Cal. 589, 105 Pac. 740.

Charles W. Slack and Walter Perry Johnson, for appellants. Garret W. McEnerney, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. On the 18th day of October, 1890, Williamson Finnell, the plaintiff in this action, sold and conveyed to his father, John Finnell, 4,250 acres of land. The whole purchase price of the land was $127,500, of which sum $35,500 were paid at the date of the conveyance. For the balance of $92,000 the plaintiff accepted his father's promissory note, payable on or before October 15, 1900, without other security than his vendor's lien on the land. On the 24th of May, 1900, John Finnell organized the defendant, the Finnell Land Company, a corporation with a nominal capital of $650,000, divided into 6,500 shares, and on the 28th of the same month proposed in writing to convey to said corporation, free of all incumbrances, said 4,250 acres of land purchased from the plaintiff, together with a large body of other lands, in consideration of the issuance of fully paid shares of its stock as follows:

To John Finnell, Jr.....	10 shares
To James Finnell.....	10 shares
To Simpson Finnell.....	10 shares
To Bush Finnell.....	10 shares
To Geo. E. Goodman.....	2,000 shares
To John Finnell.....	4,460 shares

This offer was accepted by the corporation, and John Finnell executed and delivered to the corporation his grant, bargain, and sale deed of said lands. All the members of the corporation knew at the time of this transaction that the purchase-money note for $92,000 for said 4,250 acres of land and some accrued interest, was unpaid, but they seem not to have been advised that in law it was secured by a vendor's lien upon the land.

This action was commenced by Williamson Finnell October 14, 1900, against his father, to recover the principal and interest of his note for $92,000, and against the Land Company to foreclose his vendor's lien. His father defaulted—allowing judgment to go against him for the amount of the note and accrued interest. The Land Company answered contesting the indebtedness and claim of lien, and by cross-bill prayed that in the event judgment should be recovered against John Finnell and the land found subject to the asserted lien and sold to satisfy the judgment, it might be subrogated as a judgment creditor of John Finnell. John Finnell died after the cross-complaint was filed, and his son and administrator, John Finnell, Jr., was substituted in his place. Supplemental and amended pleadings were filed, but these made no material change in the attitude and claims of the parties. The cause was tried by the court, and findings and conclusions filed in favor of the plaintiff against John Finnell, Jr., and the Land Company, and in favor of the Land Company against John Finnell, Jr., as administrator of his father's estate. It was decreed that the aggregate amount of the judgment against John Finnell, Jr., was a lien upon the land sold by the plaintiff to John Finnell, and in the event that the land should be sold, that the Land Company be instated and subrogated as a judgment creditor of John Finnell, Jr., as administrator of John Finnell, for the amount for which the land might be sold, and that if the Land Company should pay the judgment before a sale of the land then said company should be entitled to the benefit of the judgment and to repayment by John Finnell, Jr., as administrator of the estate of his father, in due course of administration, of the money which might be so paid.

From this decree the Land Company and John Finnell, Jr., took separate appeals. On the appeal of the Land Company the judgment in favor of the plaintiff has been affirmed. 156 Cal. 589, 105 Pac. 740. This is the appeal of John Finnell, Jr., from that portion of the decree in favor of the Land Company, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. The appellant makes no question as to the facts found by the trial judge, and only contends, in support of his appeal from the judgment, that the cross-complaint of the Land Company does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, or that, if it does, such cause of action is shown to have been barred by the statute of limitations. In support of this contention he bases his argument upon the mistaken assumption that respondent's action rests for its support upon the implied covenant of John Finnell against incumbrances. This, the respondent shows, is not the theory of its case. It relies upon the offer of John Finnell to convey the land free of all incumbrances, and his deed of grant, bargain, and sale executed in conformity to his offer and its acceptance, only for the purpose of showing that in the purchase of the land it did not assume the indebtedness of John Finnell to his grantor—for the purpose, in other words, of showing that by the decree its land is to be sold, not for the satisfaction of its debt, but for the discharge of an obligation resting primarily upon John Finnell, and as to which it is virtually a surety and nothing more. Upon this ground, and upon this ground alone, it invokes the benefit of the equitable doctrine that one who is compelled to pay a debt, or whose property is made liable for a debt, which another in good conscience ought to pay, is entitled to recover against that other the amount so paid. The soundness of this doctrine has been upheld by innumerable decisions of courts of the highest authority in many jurisdictions, and it is so obviously just and reasonable that it is matter of wonder that it should ever have been called in question. It was applied in this state in favor of the vendee of a mortgagor, suing to recover from the mortgagee the tax on his interest in the mortgaged premises; which the plaintiff had been compelled to pay to prevent a sale of the land—San Gabriel Co. v. Witmer, 96 Cal. 635, 29 Pac. 502 (18 L. R. A. 465, 470), where "the well-settled rule" is stated in these terms: "Where the plaintiff, either by compulsion of law, or to relieve himself from liability, or to save himself from damage, has paid money, not officiously, which the defendant ought to have paid, a count in assumption will be supported." A rehearing was granted in that case—not because any doubt was entertained by any member of the court as to this rule of equity, or of the soundness of the principle upon which it rests, but solely because the court desired to give fuller consideration to the question whether the remedy placed by the Constitution in the hands of the mortgagor himself for the failure of the mortgagee to pay the tax on the mortgage interest was not exclusive of a right of action based upon the equitable doctrine embodied in the rule quoted. After the rehearing a majority of the court adhered to the original opinion, and a careful reading of the several dissenting opinions will show that the dissent was based entirely upon the ground that the constitutional remedy should be deemed exclusive. Aside from this consideration affecting that particular class of cases the equitable rule was expressly approved by six of the seven justices, and not questioned by the seventh. Indeed, there is no question raised by the appellant here as to terms or meaning of the rule. He only contends that this case is not within its terms or meaning. We think, however, that the rule is clearly applicable. That John Finnell was indebted to Williamson Finnell in the amount unpaid of his $92,000 note is indisputable. He confessed the indebtedness by his default, and aside from his confession the case was clear. He received from the Land Company the agreed value of the land free from incumbrance; the company did not assume the indebtedness, and in equity and good conscience, as between him and the company, it was his duty to pay it. Upon his failure to do so, the company, for its own protection, is compelled to pay. It is not nominally his surety, but virtually it is. Any failure by it to pay the debt will be followed by the same injurious consequences that are incurred by one who has made himself surety for another by express agreement, and equity which regards substance rather than form will accord it the same rights that accrue to a surety who is made to pay the debt of his principal.

In respondent's brief a large number of cases are cited in support of these principles, but we do not deem it necessary to pass them in review, or even to cite more than the following: Arnold v. Green, 116 N. Y. 566, 23 N. E. 1; Hazle v. Bondy, 173 Ill. 302, 50

N. E. 671; Hoke v. Jones, 33 W. Va. 501, 10 S. E. 775; Nixon v. Julian, 72 Miss. 570, 18 South. 366. It is clear, we think, that the Land Company, if it pays the debt of John Finnell, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of Williamson Finnell to enforce payment of the note.

The only remaining question is whether the relief demanded by the cross-complaint, and awarded by the court, can be decreed in this action. The objection to the procedure adopted by the respondent is that it is unauthorized by any provision of our Code. Respondent contends that, if it is not authorized by section 709 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the case is so closely analogous to the case there provided for that it ought to be governed by the same rule. If express statutory authority were needed to sustain the decree in favor of the Land Company it might be difficult to find such authority in the section referred to—but such express authority does not seem to be essential. The right asserted by the respondent is an equitable right arising out of the transaction which was involved in the suit as instituted. The parties were all before the court—and that a court of equity governed by the rule which forbids the settlement of controversies by piecemeal. The course pursued was not without precedent, and was amply justified by considerations of convenience and economy. The decree of subrogation imposes no burden upon the appellant other or greater than he is justly subject to.

The decree in favor of respondent, and the order denying appellant's motion for a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(159 Cal. 576)

BIRK et al. v. HODGKINS et al. (L. A. 2,536.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 18, 1911.)

1. BOUNDARIES (§ 3*)—RULES OF CONSTRUCTION — MONUMENTS — COURSES AND DISTANCES.

In the absence of something clearly requiring a different construction, courses and distances named in a description must yield to fixed monuments.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 14–19; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

2. BOUNDARIES (§ 3*)—RULES OF CONSTRUCTION — MONUMENTS — COURSES AND DISTANCES.

Where the call in a description in a deed is for a line running to a fixed monument, viz., "the intersection of Courthouse street and Flower street being the northwest corner of block V," the line would be carried to this point whether the distance required to do this was more or less than that named in the deed;

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

hence such description will control the courses and distances as stated in the deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 25-29; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

3. BOUNDARIES (§ 53*)—REVERSAL OF CALLS—SURVEYS.

In attempting to trace descriptions on the ground, the courts will follow the footsteps of the surveyor, rather than take a reverse course.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by Susie E. Birk and others against Elizabeth A. Hodgkins and others. From a judgment for defendants and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

H. H. Appel, for appellants. Anderson & Anderson, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. Action to quiet title to lots 1 and 2 of block V of the Mott tract in the city of Los Angeles. Lot 1 lies at the corner of First and Flower streets, and lot 2 adjoins it to the north. Each of the lots, as claimed by plaintiffs, has a frontage of 60 feet on Flower street and a depth of 165 feet. The court found that the plaintiffs Susie E. Birk and Rebecca Lee Dorsey, Jr., are the owners of all of lot 1 and the south 52.72 feet, front and rear, of lot 2, and that the defendant Elizabeth A. Hodgkins is the owner of "the south 45.7 feet of the north 376.19 feet of the east 165 feet of block V"; the property so described including the north 7.28 feet of lot 2 as claimed by plaintiffs. Judgment was entered following these findings. The plaintiffs appeal from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

The facts are undisputed, and the only question is whether the court below was justified in finding that the defendant Elizabeth A. Hodgkins, rather than the plaintiffs, was the owner of the strip of 7.28 feet on the northerly side of lot 2. On December 26, 1878, Prudent Beaudry, who was then the owner of the Mott tract, conveyed to Victor Beaudry lots 1 to 16 inclusive, in block V of said tract, according to a map of the tract recorded in the recorder's office of Los Angeles county. The map designated block V as a parallelogram 480 feet in length by 330 feet in width, bounded on the north by Courthouse street, on the west by Grasshopper street, on the south by First street, and on the east by Flower street. The block is, according to the map, divided into 16 lots. Eight of these, numbered from 1 to 8, have a frontage of 60 feet each on Flower street, and run back 165 feet, or half of the distance to Grasshopper street. Lots 9 to 16 have a like frontage on Grasshopper street and a depth of 165 feet to the rear lines of lots 1 to 8. All of the streets running east and west are shown on the map to have a width of 60 feet, with the exception of First street which is 68 feet wide. It was stipulated at the trial that the frontage of block V on Flower street, by actual measurement, is 488.91 feet, instead of 480 feet as shown by the map. On March 8, 1886, Victor Beaudry, who by virtue of the deed from Prudent Beaudry had become the owner of the entire block, made a conveyance to M. E. Hodgkins and E. T. Wright of the following property: "That certain piece and parcel of land situated in the city and county of Los Angeles, state of California and more particularly described as follows: Commencing at a point at the intersection of Courthouse street and Flower street, said point being the northeast corner of block 'V' of Mott tract of said county, and running thence along the southerly line of Courthouse street, north 52° 50' west, 253.84 feet, to the intersection of Courthouse street and Pearl street; thence along the easterly side of Pearl street, 57° 12' west, 217.28 feet, to an angle in the easterly line of Pearl street; thence along said easterly line of Pearl street, south 37° 27' west, 292.02 feet, to a point at the intersection of Pearl street and First street; thence along the northerly line of First street, south 52° 47' east, 163.28 feet, to a point in the northerly line of First street; thence north 37° 21' east, 120 feet, to a point; thence south 52° 47' east, 165 feet, to a point in the westerly line of Flower street; thence along said westerly line of Flower street, north 37° 21' east, 376.19 feet, to the place of beginning." On July 10, 1886, Victor Beaudry conveyed to Frederick William Sparr "the following described property, to wit: Commencing at the northwesterly corner of First and Flower streets at the intersection of the westerly line of Flower street and the northerly line of First street; thence north 37° 30' east, 120 feet, to a point; thence north 52° 30' west, 165 feet, to a point; thence south 37° 30' west, 120 feet, to a point; and thence south 52° 30' east, 165 feet, to the place of beginning, being lots 1 and 2, block 'V' Mott Tract." The defendant Elizabeth A. Hodgkins has succeeded to the interest vested in M. E. Hodgkins and E. T. Wright by the first of these conveyances, and the plaintiffs are the successors in interest of Sparr. Since the Hodgkins and Wright deed is the earlier in time, the sole question seems to be whether that deed conveyed the 7.28 foot strip in controversy. If this question be answered in the affirmative, it is of no consequence that the grantor, Victor Beaudry, undertook, on July 10, 1886, to transfer the whole of lot 2, including this strip, to Sparr, for he could not, of course, convey land which he no longer owned.

The street designated as Pearl street in the Hodgkins and Wright deed is the one marked "Grasshopper street" on the map. Its name has again been changed, and it is now known as Figueroa street. As actually laid on the ground, its course is not a straight line between First and Courthouse streets. After running northerly for over 200 feet from First street, it is deflected at an obtuse angle to the east, thus making the Courthouse street frontage of block V 253.84 feet, and not 330 feet as shown by the map.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The description in the earlier deed begins at the northeast corner of the block, runs thence (1) along Courthouse street to Pearl street (2 and 3), along Pearl street with its angle to First street (4), easterly along First street to a point marking the rear end of lot 1. It then (5) runs into the block on a line parallel with Flower street 120 feet, thence (6) parallel to First street to the westerly line of Flower street, and (7) along said westerly line northerly 376.19 feet to the point of beginning. An addition of the distances contained in the fifth and seventh courses shows that the description was drawn in the belief that the block was 496.19 feet in length along Flower street, whereas its length in fact was and is only 488.91 feet. The third call, therefore, if given the length of 292.02 feet stated in the deed, would run 7.28 feet beyond the northerly line of First street. The appellant claims, accordingly, that inasmuch as the line of First street is a fixed monument (as was conceded by respondents at the trial), and, in construing descriptions, a call for fixed monuments will control courses and distances, the deed should be read as running, in the third call, to the true line of First street; thence along said line to the corner of lot 1; thence at a right angle northerly 120 feet; thence at a right angle easterly to the west line of Flower street, and thence along said line of Flower street to the point of beginning. So read, the description would exclude from the conveyance to Hodgkins and Wright all of lots 1 and 2.

We think this contention must be sustained. The rule that, in the absence of something clearly requiring a different construction, courses and distances named in a description must yield to fixed monuments is thoroughly settled. Vance v. Fore, 24 Cal. 435; Mills v. Lux, 45 Cal. 273; Black v. Sprague, 54 Cal. 266; Anderson v. Richardson, 92 Cal. 623, 28 Pac. 679; Bullard v. Kempff, 119 Cal. 9, 50 Pac. 780; Taylor v. McConigle, 120 Cal. 123, 126, 52 Pac. 159. There is nothing on the face of the deed in question, nor is there evidence of any surrounding circumstances, which could afford any reason why this rule should not be given effect here. The corner which marks the beginning of the fifth call must therefore be taken to be on the line of First street. Following out the description from that point, every call is found to fit the conditions as they exist on the ground, and the description closes perfectly. It is true that the distance named in the last call (376.19 feet) is 7.28 feet longer than the actual distance. But here the call is for a line running to a fixed monument ("the intersection of Courthouse street and Flower street, being the northeast corner of block V"), and the line would, under the rule above stated, be carried to this point, whether the distance required to do this were more or less than that named in the deed. Cowles v. Reavis, 109 N. C. 417, 13 S. E. 930.

The respondents argue that the difference between the actual and the supposed length of the block requires that either the fifth or the seventh call be shortened by 7.28 feet, and that this creates an ambiguity which should be resolved in favor of the grantees under the earlier deed. But, when the description is rightly read, in the light of established rules of construction, and is applied to the topographical conditions shown to exist, there is no ambiguity. In attempting to trace the description on the ground, the court should "follow the footsteps of the surveyor, rather than to take the reverse course." Blackburn v. Nelson, 100 Cal. 336, 34 Pac. 775. A following of the calls of the description in their order would clearly exclude from the granted property a piece 120 feet in width by 165 feet in depth. That the fifth call begins at the northerly line of First street must be conceded. The line then runs north 37° 21' east 120 feet to a point. This point is not marked by any monument, and the only way to fix its location is by measuring along the given course for the required distance. So measuring and then following the sixth call to the line of Flower street, we have the final call, bringing us to a fixed monument, the location of which must control any error in distance. The facts presented in Blackburn v. Nelson, supra, were in their essence the same as those here considered, and the views we have expressed are in harmony with the conclusion there reached. See, also, McNairy v. Hightour, 2 Tenn. 302; Platt v. Bente, 49 N. J. Law, 679, 10 Atl. 283.

For these reasons we are of opinion that the main finding attacked is not sustained by the evidence.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

159 Cal. 559
RIGGINS v. SWEATT et al. (L. A. 2,472.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 15, 1911. Rehearing Denied April 14, 1911.)

1. EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY (§ 5*)—CONTRACT—EFFECT—WAIVER OF CONDITIONS.

Plaintiff and defendant agreed to exchange properties, and their respective deeds were delivered under an escrow agreement which directed the holder to deliver to plaintiff deeds by defendant, together with bills of sale for personalty, upon approval of title and examination of records by the escrow holder, and to deliver to defendant plaintiff's deed, and when the escrow agreement was executed the parties also executed a memorandum, to the effect that all of the provisions of the original contract had been performed to the satisfaction of the parties. Held, that the execution of the escrow agreement and memorandum waived the provision of the original contract of exchange, requiring defendant to furnish an abstract of title showing good title to the land conveyed by him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exchange of Property, Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

2. ESCROWS (§ 14*)—DELIVERY BY DEPOSITORY—FRAUD.

The escrow holder was not a lawyer, and plaintiff told him to have a certain attorney approve the title to defendant's land, which he did, and only recorded the deeds after defendant's abstract of title had been approved by such attorney in good faith, and without any fraud between him and the escrow holder. Held, that plaintiff was not entitled to have his deeds canceled upon the ground of conspiracy between defendant and the escrow holder in recording the deed, or on any other ground.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Escrows, Cent. Dig. §§ 17-20; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

3. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 55*)—DECREE.

Plaintiff and defendant agreed to exchange properties, and the deeds and bills of sale were delivered in escrow and were recorded by the escrow holder, and plaintiff entered into possession of a part of defendant's property and assumed its management, but afterward sued to have his own deed and bill of sale canceled on the ground that defendant and the escrow holder fraudulently conspired to have the deeds prematurely recorded, but did not ask to have the contract rescinded, nor offer to restore defendant's property. Held, that it would be inequitable to cancel plaintiff's deed while he held title to defendant's property and the relief granted should be either a rescission of the contract with an accounting, or a decree limiting the time within which defendant might perform his contract by discharging the excess indebtedness on his property, which plaintiff did not agree to assume, and removing clouds from its title, etc., or a cancellation of the deeds and contract, with an equitable adjustment of the rights of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by J. W. Riggins against John T. Sweatt and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, the defendant named appeals. Reversed for further proceedings.

Avery & French, for appellant. Morton, Pruitt & Goodrich, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This action is for the cancellation of a deed and a bill of sale executed by plaintiff to defendant Sweatt, and placed in escrow in the hands of J. C. Odell, upon the ground that in the consummation of a conspiracy between the defendant Sweatt and the escrowee, the latter prematurely and fraudulently caused the instruments to be recorded. The appeal is from the judgment upon the judgment roll alone.

The findings are voluminous. From them the story of the transactions between the parties is to be gathered and their legal rights determined. In July, 1908, plaintiff employed Odell to negotiate the exchange of his ranch in southern California and the personal property thereon for a ranch in Ward county, Tex., with the personal property thereon, and six other lots of land, upon one of which was a store, with its merchandise, in the village of Grand Falls, and upon certain others cotton gins. The Texas property was owned by defendant Sweatt and his sons. After negotiation a contract was entered into between Riggins and Sweatt on August 11th. This contract was dictated by Riggins. Riggins' California land, with the personal property thereon, was estimated to be worth about $140,000 and was incumbered by a mortgage for about $20,000. Sweatt was to take the California property and assume the payment of the mortgage. Sweatt in turn was to convey the Texas lands, the store, the gins, and the personal property in exchange. It was estimated that the incumbrances upon the Texas property exceeded the incumbrances on the California property by about $36,000. Riggins was to assume the payment of this excess, and, to protect him in this assumption of excess indebtedness, Sweatt agreed to turn over to Riggins notes and book accounts aggregating $30,000, the growing crops on the Texas lands, estimated to be worth $10,000, and further to secure him by an indemnity bond in the sum of $10,000. Sweatt was to "furnish an abstract of title brought down to date, showing good title to all the land conveyed." This contract of August 11th concluded with the following: "It is understood and agreed that the sole condition of this contract is the inspection, and acceptance or rejection of the same by said Riggins." A few days thereafter Riggins went to Texas, inspected, and evaluated the properties. He was accompanied by Mr. Odell and by a Mr. Ottis, an attorney at law familiar with Texas land titles. Riggins pronounced himself satisfied, and thereupon while in Texas, in writing, proposed a modification of the original contract, which Sweatt accepted. The modification went to certain matters not essential to this consideration; Riggins agreeing to take the crops, notes, and accounts absolutely and to assume $56,000 of Sweatt's indebtedness as against the assumption by Sweatt of $20,000 indebtedness on the California property; and Sweatt was released from the necessity of giving any indemnity bond or guaranty for the excess indebtedness. Riggins further stipulated that upon the acceptance by Sweatt of the modified proposition they should "immediately draw up and exchange papers." Thereupon, on the same date, August 18, 1908, at Grand Falls, Tex., deeds and bills of sale from the respective parties were delivered to Odell and the following instrument, designated "Escrow Instructions," was executed: "Grand Falls, Aug. 18th, 1908. Mr. J. C. Odell, Grand Falls, Texas—Dear Sir: You are hereby instructed by the undersigned parties hereto to deliver to J. W. Riggins, deeds by Jno. T. Sweatt and Sweatt Bros., of even date herewith, for 2165 more or less, acres of land in Ward county, Texas, together with two bills of sale conveying chattels, etc., upon approval of title and examination of records by J. C. Odell and to deliver to Jno. T. Sweatt a certain deed of 735 acres, more or less, situated in Los Angeles county, California, together with a bill of sale for chattels now upon the premises there. Jno. T. Sweatt. J. W. Riggins. Sweatt Bros., by E. V. Sweatt."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Later, upon the same day after the escrow instructions had been signed, and the deeds and other papers placed in Odell's hands, Riggins himself signed and procured Sweatt to sign a statement prepared by Riggins to the following effect: "It is mutually agreed and understood by and between the parties to the above contract that all of its stipulations and provisions have been performed and carried out in all things to the entire satisfaction of the parties to this contract and consummated by the signing of an agreement hereto attached and signed at Grand Falls, Texas, on the 18th day of August, 1908. John T. Sweatt. J. W. Riggins."

It is to be noted that the escrow instructions call upon Odell to deliver the papers upon his own "approval of title and an examination of records." To this arrangement Odell demurred, saying that he was not a lawyer, but (we quote from the findings) "Riggins told him to go ahead and examine the abstract to be furnished by Sweatt to his land and get the approval of said Ottis, who, it was stated by Riggins in the conversation, was familiar with the titles of land in that vicinity. J. W. Riggins did not tell Odell to employ any lawyer to examine the titles to Sweatt's land, but he did say that it was not necessary to put him to that expense." The next morning the store and its merchandise were turned over to Riggins by Sweatt, with the consent of his sons, Sweatt Bros., who were the owners thereof and who were also the owners of the notes and accounts. Riggins immediately put one White in charge, with instructions to manage the business, collect the accounts, etc. He had White send out, with the consent of Sweatt Bros., a printed notice to all the debtors of Sweatt Bros. to the effect that the business had been sold and transferred to J. W. Riggins, which notice was followed on the same sheet with a letter signed by Riggins, demanding that the debtors come forward at once and pay or make arrangements for the payments of their accounts. The book accounts amounted to about $15,000 and the notes to about the same sum. Riggins also at this time took charge of the two cotton gins and contracted to have them operated for his account. Mr.

Odell and Mr. Ottis went to Barstow, the county seat, ordered an abstract, and meantime proceeded to examine the records. The court finds that the escrow instructions did not include an examination of the title to the California land, nor to the six lots. It was limited therefore to an examination of the title of the Texas ranch of 2,165 acres. As a result of their examination, Odell and Ottis placed on record the deeds and bills of sale from Sweatt and Sweatt Bros. to Riggins, and Odell returned to his home in California, where he also placed of record the deed and bill of sale of Riggins to Sweatt. The Odell-Ottis examination of the Texas properties at Barstow was made partly from the records and partly from an abstract prepared for them. Ottis O. K'd and approved this abstract, after which Odell filed the deeds for record. The court, however, finds that they did so with knowledge that there existed upon the records, liens, incumbrances and clouds upon the property to the extent of $78,000, but this total includes liens, incumbrances, and clouds upon the six lots which were not within the purview of the examination which Odell and Ottis were to make, and includes, moreover, clouds which were without substance, consisting as they did of apparent liens which had been fully paid, but which had not formally been released of record, as to which latter, in several instances, satisfactory evidence of their payment was given to Ottis and Odell. The charge in the complaint, it will be remembered, was of conspiracy between Odell, Ottis, and Sweatt, a conspiracy charged to have been directed against Riggins, but the court finds no such conspiracy to have existed between these men, or any two of them. The verified complaint of Riggins also charged that Mr. Odell had been specially instructed not to approve the title until he had had the abstract examined by a Mr. Starley, an attorney, whom, it was alleged, Mr. Riggins had theretofore selected to pass upon the title. The court finds to the contrary; that Riggins objected to the employment of any attorney, saving Mr. Ottis. The complaint also charged that in furtherance of the conspiracy invalid deeds from Sweatt and Sweatt Bros. were executed and accepted by Odell; Riggins averring that among the deeds were three quitclaim deeds to a large part of the land. The court, however, found against these charges of conspiracy and collusion, declaring the deeds to be sufficient in form; that amongst them were two warranty deeds, one for 1,625 acres from John T. Sweatt and the other for the remaining 540 acres and the six lots from Sweatt Bros., whom the court finds were the owners thereof. The court further finds that all the deeds were delivered to Odell in the presence of Riggins, and are the exact instruments referred to in the escrow agreement as "deeds from Jno. T. Sweatt and Sweatt Bros." In the original complaint Riggins had alleged that Odell had fraudulently secured possession of his deed to Sweatt. The findings establish that this charge also is unfounded. As to the memorandum which Riggins himself had dictated and secured Sweatt to sign on the 18th of August, and which, as above quoted, is to the effect that the contracts had been fully consummated to the satisfaction of the parties, the court found that this was signed by Sweatt at Riggins' solicitation, but was written only on the copy of the contract which Riggins himself kept, and not upon the copy Sweatt kept, and, notwithstanding that it was signed by both Riggins and Sweatt, Riggins tore it off, without the knowledge and consent of Sweatt, prior to the trial of the action and made no reference to it in his complaint. But the court did find that Odell and Ottis proceeded to carry out the escrow instructions "with the utmost haste." Odell immediately, or very shortly after arriving at Barstow, placed the bill of sale on record from Sweatt and Sweatt Bros. to Riggins, though not the deeds, which were not recorded until after the completion of the examination of title. The court finds that Odell did not act in good faith with Riggins in filing the two bills of sale, in that he filed them before knowledge of the condition of the title to the real property, but in view of the fact that Riggins had immediately taken possession of the store and the gins and was exercising acts of ownership over them, some color, at least, is given to Mr. Odell's explanation that he filed these bills of sale for the protection of Riggins' possession. The court also found, as has been said, that Odell and Ottis approved the title to the land, when the record showed, and they knew, that the records showed incumbrances to the extent of $78,000, but the abstract which was furnished to them and upon which they acted, and which, in turn, was sent to Riggins, did not show incumbrances to exceed $65,000, and of these several thousand dollars were mere clouds, since the indebtedness which they represented had been paid, and they had been shown the receipts and canceled notes and other evidences of payment. In its conclusions of law the court declares that "Odell was guilty of a flagrant violation of his escrow instructions and the contracts between J. W. Riggins and John T. Sweatt" in filing for record the deed from Riggins to Sweatt, and the same conclusion of law is declared, touching Odell's filing of the bill of sale from Riggins to Sweatt.

Upon these and other findings hereafter to be adverted to, the court concluded that the deed and bill of sale from Riggins to Sweatt never became operative or binding; that the exchange of the properties between Riggins and Sweatt had never been effectuated or consummated, and entered its decree, canceling the recordation of the Riggins' deed and bill of sale.

The findings in this case deal with two separate transactions which logically should be separately considered. The first, and the first to invite attention, are those dealing with the violations by Odell of his escrow instructions, by which violations the court finds that the deed and bill of sale from Riggins to Sweatt were improperly placed of record. These findings are based in no small part upon the idea seemingly that Odell was not governed by the escrow instructions alone, but that because he had knowledge of the terms and conditions of the contract of August 11th, modified by the contract of August 18th, he was governed by those terms and conditions also. This argument, however, is not pressed to its logical conclusion, and necessarily could not be, because if Odell were bound to see that the contract of August 11th was carried out before he placed the deeds and bills of sale of record, it became his duty to investigate the title to the six lots which the court finds were not included within his escrow instructions, and it was equally his duty to see that all the promissory notes were delivered by the Sweatts to Riggins, yet it is not contended that such delivery was a condition precedent to his right to act under the escrow instructions. Much stress in this connection is placed upon the fact that the contract of August 11th, as above quoted, provided that Sweatt was to furnish an abstract of title brought down to date, showing good title to all the land conveyed, and by the finding of the court also, as above quoted, that Riggins told Odell "to go ahead and examine the abstract to be furnished by Sweatt to his land." Yet the escrow agreement itself, and the memorandum which Riggins himself procured Sweatt to sign, would seem, if they meant anything, to imply a waiver of the requirement that Sweatt should himself furnish any abstract, since by the terms of the escrow instructions Odell is to deliver the deeds and bills of sale, not upon the approval of any abstract furnished by Sweatt, but upon "his own approval of title and examination of records," and the memorandum agreement which Riggins induced Sweatt to sign expressly declares that the contract of August 11th as to all its stipulations had been performed and carried out "to the entire satisfaction of the parties to this contract and consummated." When it is considered that Odell was not a lawyer, that he was told by Riggins to look to Ottis for the approval of the title to the Texas ranch, that he did look for this approval and filed the deeds for record only after the abstract of title had received Ottis' approval, and that the court distinctly finds that there was no conspiracy to wrong or defraud Riggins in any of the acts of Ottis and Odell, it would be a matter of much difficulty to sustain a judgment ordering a cancellation of the documents upon these findings alone.

But there now come up for review the findings upon the second branch of the case, and these have to do with a new contract entered into by Sweatt and Riggins after the escrow instructions had been given, and, indeed, after Odell had executed those instructions by placing the deeds and bills of sale of record.

The findings under this second branch of the case are aside from the consideration whether or not Odell obeyed his escrow instructions. They deal with the rights of Sweatt and Riggins under a contract which they entered into on the 28th day of August. From them it appears that Riggins was in Barstow, the county seat, on the 27th day of August and learned that the deeds and bills of sale to him had been recorded, and since it was not to be supposed that the escrowee would execute but a part of his instructions, there was at least notice conveyed to him that his own deed and bill of sale had been or would be recorded in California. Before this date Sweatt had furnished Odell with the abstract and Odell had it in his possession, but it was not delivered to Riggins until the 1st day of September. Riggins, therefore, procured his own abstract, which showed all the incumbrances upon the Sweatt property, and therefrom discovered that the recorded liens exceeded $56,000. Thereupon he entered into another contract in writing with Sweatt. The previous contracts are referred to, by which the lands and property in Ward county "belonging to John T. Sweatt and Sweatt Brothers" were to be conveyed to him for his California property. The contract then proceeded: "And whereas, it now develops that the said John T. Sweatt owes a further indebtedness in the state of Texas or growing out of his business conducted at Grand Falls, Ward county, Texas, over and above the said sum of fifty-six thousand dollars, and said Sweatt now wants said Riggins to assume said additional indebtedness, and whereas, the said original contract referred to providing that said sales and transfers are made with the understanding and guaranty by each of said parties that the titles to the lands and property conveyed by each are good and valid titles, free of any and all incumbrances except as herein specified: Now, therefore, know all men by these presents, that for the purpose of arranging said additional indebtedness it is hereby agreed as follows: That said Riggins shall assume and pay said additional indebtedness, now estimated by us at the sum of $6,143.00, and that the said sum or amounts so paid by said Riggins for said Sweatt shall be repaid to said Riggins by said Sweatt as follows: One-half of said amount on January 1st, 1910 and one-half January 1st, 1911, interest from this date at the rate of eight per cent. per annum. The said amounts shall be evidenced by mortgage notes and secured by a proper lien on the said land herein referred to as transferred by J. W. Riggins and situated near Covina, Los Angeles county, California, said lien to be in proper legal and binding form and second only to an indebtedness now in said property of twenty thousand dollars. Said amounts shall be definitely determined and said lien duly executed within fifteen days after this date. It is further understood and agreed that each party has guaranteed to the other party that the titles to be conveyed by each are good and valid and free from all liens except as on said contract specified, but that the parties hereto have not at this time been furnished with proper abstracts or other evidence of the condition of the respective titles, and that this agreement and the contract referred to are made subject to the validity of said titles as in said original contract provided."

At the time that this contract was entered into both of the parties knew, or at least were chargeable with knowledge, that their respective deeds and bills of sale had been placed of record. Their rights, then, are to be determined by the answer to the question whether the terms and conditions of the agreement of August 28th were performed by Sweatt.

1. Book accounts to the proximate amount of $15,000 were made over to Riggins, and of the promissory notes to an equal amount, all but $3,800 of them, properly indorsed, were sent by mail from Barstow by Sweatt Bros. to White (Riggins' agent in charge of the store) at Grand Falls. The rest of the notes, amounting to $3,800, were on deposit with a bank and a mercantile house as collateral for a part of the debt which Riggins was to assume. Riggins was informed of these facts and told where the notes were on deposit, but they were not formally indorsed to him.

2. It appears that the actual unpaid obligations against the real properties showing of record amounted to about $59,369, a sum within the limit of $56,000, and the later $6,143 which, by the contract of August 28th, Riggins was to assume, but the court finds that there was an additional unsecured indebtedness of $4,400. This, added to the valid existing claim calculated at $59,369, would make an excess of $526 over the total which Sweatt had agreed to assume.

3. In addition to the valid subsisting indebtedness against the properties, there were the clouds of apparent liens standing unreleased on the records. In one instance a debt of $10,000 secured by a trust deed appeared. The debt had been paid, but the record of the obligation had not been satisfied. There were other instances of like character which it was clearly the duty of Sweatt to have caused to be canceled from the records.

4. As to the land itself, the court found that title to 540 acres was in Sweatt Bros. and not in Sweatt; that there was a suit involving the title to an undivided one-third of 36 acres; and the descriptions of a 2-acre tract and a 64-acre tract were invalid.

No weight can attach to the fact that ti-title to part of this land stood in the name of Sweatt Bros., the defendant's sons, since the later contracts contemplated deeds from them, and their deeds, sufficient in form and substance, were actually made. We need not stop to analyze the descriptions in the deeds which the court finds were so radically defective as not to convey title, for it is apparent under all the findings, and it is the findings alone which we have before us, that Sweatt had failed to live up to the terms of the last contract of August 28th after specific demand upon him, made by Riggins on September 9th, that he do so.

But in this situation, what is the relief to which Riggins is entitled? He stands as the record owner of all the real and personal property of Sweatt and of the Sweatt Bros., to which reference has been made. He has entered into possession and control of at least a part of that property; has collected debts and made contracts touching its management. He seeks the aid of a court of equity and asks merely that his own deed and bill of sale to Sweatt shall be canceled, and this relief the court accords him. But it is manifestly inequitable that he should thus be restored to everything with which he has parted, while retaining the record title to all of the Sweatt real and personal property. Equity, having acquired jurisdiction, does not do justice by piecemeal. Riggins himself is not seeking to rescind, and seemingly disclaims any desire for a rescission, since he makes no offer to rescind or restore, and yet an equitable decision in a case such as this could only be one of two kinds, either for a rescission with such an accounting as might be necessary to adjust loss or damage, or a decree limiting the time within which Sweatt may fulfill his contract, pay off his excess indebtedness, and discharge the clouds upon his titles, or, upon his failure so to do, a direction for further proceedings looking to a cancellation of the deeds and contracts and an adjustment of the respective rights of the parties.

The judgment is therefore reversed for further proceedings in accordance with the foregoing.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

159 Cal. 520

PEOPLE v. WONG LOUNG. (Cr. 1536.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 14, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 855*)—MISCONDUCT OF JURORS—READING NEWSPAPERS.

Reading of newspapers by a juror outside the jury room is as much misconduct as if read therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2050; Dec. Dig. § 855.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 925*)—MISCONDUCT OF JURORS—READING NEWSPAPERS.

One convicted of murder is entitled to a new trial on a showing that the wife of one of the jurors on the night before the case was submitted read aloud to her husband a newspaper article stating that accused was a noted highbinder, that he had been convicted of murder, but that he was released on account of the destruction of records.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2238-2247; Dec. Dig. § 925.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 956*)—EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTIONS.

In the absence of a showing that a juror did not hear a reading of a newspaper article in his presence, it must be assumed that he heard it where there is uncontradicted evidence that the article was read aloud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2387-2391; Dec. Dig. § 956.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1163*)—PREJUDICIAL ERROR—PRESUMPTIONS.

The presumption of prejudice to accused arising from a juror's misconduct in hearing a newspaper article read cannot be overcome by a counter conclusion based on the conjecture that the trial court knew the mental and moral characteristics of the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3098; Dec. Dig. § 1163.*]

5. HOMICIDE (§ 203*)—DYING DECLARATIONS—OBJECTIONS—SUFFICIENCY.

Decedent's statement reciting that he knew that he was going to die sufficiently shows that it was made in extremis, in the absence of specific objection.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 430-437; Dec. Dig. § 203.*]

6. HOMICIDE (§ 205*)—EVIDENCE—DYING DECLARATIONS—ATTENDING CIRCUMSTANCES.

It was error to admit evidence that, while making a dying declaration, decedent first cursed accused and spat in his face, and that thereupon accused "wiped his face off, and some one removed him to the other corner of the room."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 443; Dec. Dig. § 205.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 364*)—EVIDENCE—RES GESTÆ.

Evidence of a conversation between accused and the arresting officers, after the officers had run about a block and apprehended him, was not admissible as part of the res gestæ.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 816, 817; Dec. Dig. § 364.*]

8. HOMICIDE (§ 174*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIONS.

Accused's declaration when arrested that he had not done anything and had no gun was not admissible as indicating consciousness of guilt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 367; Dec. Dig. § 174.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 417*)—DECLARATIONS BY THIRD PERSONS—ADMISSIBILITY.

Remarks of policemen to each other on apprehending accused that he was "the man" were not admissible against accused; he not having acquiesced therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 950-957; Dec. Dig. § 417.*]

10. HOMICIDE (§ 174*)—EVIDENCE—CONDUCT IN DECEDENT'S PRESENCE.

It was proper to allow the arresting officers to state what occurred when they brought accused into decedent's presence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 359-371; Dec. Dig. § 174.*]

11. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 359*)—EVIDENCE—RELEVANCY—OTHER OFFENSES.

Evidence of other murders before and after decedent's was not admissible as tending to show that persons other than accused killed decedent where no connection between the other murders and the particular one was shown.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 789, 790; Dec. Dig. § 359.*]

12. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 670*)—EVIDENCE—RELEVANCY.

Evidence, relevancy of which is not disclosed, is properly excluded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1593; Dec. Dig. § 670.*]

13. HOMICIDE (§ 338*)—HARMLESS ERROR—EXTENDING CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Any error in extending cross-examination of a witness for one accused of murder was harmless where the inquiry related to the witness' whereabouts during the shooting.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 709-713; Dec. Dig. § 338.*]

14. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1153*)—REVIEW—DISCRETION — CROSS-EXAMINING OWN WITNESSES.

Flagrant error must appear before the court will disturb a ruling refusing to permit accused to cross-examine his own witnesses.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3064; Dec. Dig. § 1153.*]

15. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1170½*) — APPEAL—PREJUDICIAL ERROR — CROSS-EXAMINING OWN WITNESSES.

It was not prejudicial error to refuse to permit accused to cross-examine his own witnesses by asking a question which insinuated that witness had testified falsely, seeking information concerning the employment of a special prosecutor and whether witness belonged to a certain society.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3133; Dec. Dig. § 1170½.*]

16. HOMICIDE (§ 174*)—EVIDENCE—ACCUSED'S APPEARANCE WHEN ARRESTED.

In a murder trial the jury could show that when apprehended accused was puffing, pale, nervous, and excited.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 361; Dec. Dig. § 174.*]

17. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1171*)—MISCONDUCT OF PROSECUTOR.

Argument by a special prosecutor insinuating that accused had procured the murder of a witness to prevent his appearance was prejudicial error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3127; Dec. Dig. § 1171.*]

18. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 798*)—INSTRUCTIONS—AGREEMENT UPON VERDICT.

It was error to refuse to instruct that jurors need not surrender their honest convictions in order to agree upon a verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 798.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; F. B. Ogden, Judge.

Wong Loung was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial. Reversed.

Stanley Moore, L. G. Carpenter, and Fred C. Clift (W. H. Orrick, of counsel), for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

MELVIN, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of murder in the first degree, and was sentenced to death. He appeals from the judgment of conviction and from the order of the superior court denying his motion for a new trial.

Lee Chung, a Chinaman, was shot one evening while he was walking on Harrison street in the city of Oakland, and he died two days later from the effects of his wounds. Two policemen (one a regular and the other a special officer) testified that the shooting was done by three Chinamen, and that the defendant was one of them. The policemen said that the defendant after firing the last two shots at Lee Chung ran into an alleyway, and that they captured him a few moments later at the other end of the alley from that near which the shooting occurred. When they brought the defendant to the place where the wounded Chinaman lay on the sidewalk, the latter, according to the testimony of the officers, identified defendant as one of his assailants.

The wounded man made two statements. Testimony regarding both of these was admitted in evidence by the court on the ground that the utterances were dying declarations. In both statements the defendant was accused by Lee Chung of being one of his murderers. On defendant's behalf several Chinamen stated upon the witness stand that they saw the shooting; that it was done by two men; and that defendant was not one of the assassins. The defendant and one other witness testified that, when the shots were fired, they were on Third street some distance from the scene of the attack on Lee Chung, and near the place where the defendant was subsequently arrested. Defendant stated that he stepped into the alley in which he was captured intending to visit a resort on the upper floor of a building there. His companion (who was not captured at the time of the defendant's arrest) on the trial corroborated him in this account of his movements. Defendant also testified that before the dying man accused him of being one of his murderers, Lee Chung was urged by another Chinaman to make the accusation because defendant was a member of the Hop Sing Tong. He also asserted that a similar incident occurred at the receiving hospital before the first "dying statement" was made.

Alleged misconduct of the jury is the first matter presented by appellant as constituting error of sufficient gravity to demand a reversal. A number of affidavits were made by jurors, in which they deposed that they had read a certain article which had been published in the Oakland Tribune on the day before the case was given to them for decision. According to this offered evidence some of the jurors had read the article in question outside the jury room and others had perused it after the jury had retired to deliberate. All of these affidavits were, upon respondent's objection, rejected by the court at the hearing of the motion for a new trial upon the ground that a juror may impeach his own verdict only in those excepted cases specially designated by statute. Appellant concedes that such is the rule with reference to misconduct occurring in the jury room, but insists that it does not apply to occurrences elsewhere. In this behalf his counsel cite the following cases which make the distinction for which they contend: Hempton v. State, 111 Wis. 127, 86 N. W. 596, 602; Heffron v. Gallupe, 55 Me. 563; Rush v. St. Paul, etc., Co., 70 Minn. 5, 72 N. W. 733; Peppercorn v. Black River Falls, 89 Wis. 38, 61 N. W. 79, 46 Am. St. Rep. 818; Harrington v. Worcester, etc., Co., 157 Mass. 579, 32 N. E. 955. In California, however, no such rule has ever been announced, and we cannot see any logical reason for its existence. If considerations of public policy prevent a juror from overturning a verdict by swearing that he or his associates committed some act or acts of misconduct in the jury room, the same reasons should exclude his attempted impeachment of the jury's solemn finding by an affidavit relating to occurrences which may have taken place at his home or elsewhere while the trial was in progress. If a juror reads a newspaper containing some matter prejudicial to a defendant on trial, the injury might be and probably would be as great if his violation of his duty took place at home as it would be if the article were perused in the jury room, and we can see no reason why he should be silenced with reference to misconduct committed at one place and permitted to speak regarding the same sort of impropriety indulged in elsewhere. The ruling excluding the affidavits of jurors was proper. People v. Azoff, 105 Cal. 633, 39 Pac. 59; People v. Soap, 127 Cal. 411, 59 Pac. 771. But in this case there was an affidavit by Mrs. Lily Bartholomew, the wife of one of the jurors, in which she deposed that on the night before the case was submitted to the jury she read aloud to her husband that portion of the article in the Oakland Tribune wherein it was stated that defendant was a noted highbinder and had been tried and convicted in San Francisco for murder, sentenced to 99 years' imprisonment, had been granted a new trial upon appeal, but released afterwards because of the burning of the records. This affidavit was admitted in evidence at the hearing of the motion for a new trial, and no showing of any sort in opposition to it was made by the prosecution. At the hearing it was stipulated that the article in question was one reproduced in the affidavit of John F. Conners, managing editor of the Tribune, its text being as follows:

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

"Highbinder is before Jury.

"Attorney Philip M. Walsh Asks for the Life of a Noted Chinese.

"Won Loung, a noted highbinder of the Hop Sing Tong is on trial before Judge Ogden and a jury to-day in the Superior Court on a charge of murder, accused of shooting Lee Chung, a Chinese. The case will probably be concluded late this evening.

"Unusual interest has been manifested in the case by the Chinese residents of this city, on account of the record of the defendant. The latter was convicted before Judge Lawlor of San Francisco for the crime of murder and sentenced to 99 years in prison. The Supreme Court granted a new trial owing to errors in the instruction of the court to the jury. Before the defendant could be tried a second time the earthquake and big fire occurred, and the records in the case were destroyed, necessitating the release of the defendant.

"Attorney Philip M. Walsh, of the firm of Allen & Walsh, this morning made the opening argument for the prosecution."

That the article above quoted was one calculated to prejudice the mind of a juror against the defendant there cannot be the slightest doubt. It stated in positive terms that he was a noted highbinder; that he had been convicted of murder; and that after the granting of a new trial because of the court's errors in instructing the jury he was released on account of the destruction by fire of the records in the case. These allegations, even if true, could not have been received in evidence at the trial. Indeed, the mere asking by the district attorney of questions suggesting and insinuating the existence of such a state of facts as that described in the newspaper article would have been misconduct. People v. Wells, 100 Cal. 460, 34 Pac. 1078; People v. Ryan, 108 Cal. 585, 41 Pac. 451; People v. Derwae, 155 Cal. 595, 102 Pac. 266. Coming to the juror as they did, the statements in the newspaper might have been as prejudicial to the defendant's cause as their suggestion or allegation by the district attorney, depending largely, of course, upon the vividness of the impression produced on the juror's mind, and there was the added disadvantage to the defendant that neither the court nor his own counsel knew of the juror's misconduct in listening to the reading of the damaging article. The law has always jealously protected defendants from the prejudicial influence of matters not properly in evidence in the case on trial. No defendant should be convicted "on general principles" or because he is an undesirable citizen. This rule is so perfectly consonant with every rational man's sense of justice as to be axiomatic, and therefore we find that judgments for conviction have been reversed in many cases where evidence of other offenses alleged to have been committed by defendants on trial has crept into the records by statements of attorneys, the reading of newspapers by jurors, or supposed information improperly conveyed to them by persons not in court and under oath. In People v. McCoy, 71 Cal. 397, 12 Pac. 273, Mr. Justice McKee, delivering the opinion of the court said: "There is no doubt, however, that the reading of newspapers by jurors, while engaged in the trial of a cause, is an inattention to duty which ought to be promptly corrected; and, if the newspaper contains any matter in connection with the subject-matter of the trial which would be at all likely to influence jurors in the performance of duty, the act would constitute ground for a motion for a new trial. Jurors in a criminal action are sworn to render a true verdict according to the evidence. They cannot, under the oath which they take, receive impressions from any other source. If it be proved as a fact, or may be presumed as a conclusion of law, that their verdict may have been influenced by information or impressions received from sources outside of the evidence in the case, such a verdict is subject to be set aside on a motion for a new trial. Pen. Code, § 1181, subd. 2." In People v. Stokes, 103 Cal. 196, 37 Pac. 208, 42 Am. St. Rep. 102, this language is used: "It is insisted that a new trial should have been granted because of misconduct of the jury after they had retired to deliberate upon their verdict. The misconduct charged consisted in the jury reading from a local newspaper an article containing a report of some of the evidence in the case, given at the trial, which included a matter of evidence the court had rejected as inadmissible, and also contained intimations that two of the jurors had been corrupted. The evidence bearing upon the question was given by the officer in charge of the jury. No contrary showing was made by the affidavits of jurors or otherwise. Indeed, conceding that the article was read by them, they could make no showing that would relieve them of the effects of their own misconduct. A juror is not allowed to say: 'I acknowledge the grave misconduct. I received evidence without the presence of the court, but those matters have no influence upon my mind when casting my vote in the jury room.' The law in its wisdom does not allow a juror to purge himself in that way." See, also, Wright v. Eastlick, 125 Cal. 517, 58 Pac. 87; People v. Chin Non, 146 Cal. 563, 80 Pac. 681.

It is contended that Mrs. Bartholomew's affidavit is of little value because it does not show what degree of attention her husband paid to her reading. How could it? She says she read the article to him, and he alone could have stated how faithfully he listened. As he was serving on a jury it must be presumed that his hearing was normal. Section 198, subd. 2, Code Civ. Proc. If in fact he did not hear, his affidavit to that effect would have been admissible in support of the verdict. In the absence of such showing we must assume that he heard the reading of the article by his wife.

The Attorney General contends that the court had the right to consider "the conduct, degree of intelligence, and appearance of each juror, including juror Bartholomew, as witnessed by him throughout the trial, in determining whether the irregularity complained of warranted the conclusion that the accused had been prejudiced in his rights, or whether the showing required that the verdict be set aside and a new trial granted," and he insists that the court's conclusion, based upon such considerations, that "no improper influence had affected the verdict," should stand. We know of no rule of law whereby a court is presumed to make such a study of jurors as would enable the judge to say whether or not any particular trier of a case would be influenced by the reading of any article in a newspaper. In the case at bar, 6 months and 20 days elapsed between the return of the verdict and the argument on motion for a new trial. It would be absurd to presume that the court carried a mental picture of the juror and a close recollection of his demeanor at the trial during all of that time. Upon a showing of misconduct such as was here demonstrated, the law presumes prejudice and this presumption cannot be overcome by a counter conclusion based upon a mere conjecture that the court knew the mental and moral characteristics of the juror. The presumption of injury from such misconduct is so well established in this state as to need citation of but few authorities.

In People v. Lee Chuck, 78 Cal. 335, 20 Pac. 726, this language is used: "Section 1181 of the Penal Code, relied on by the respondent, provides (subdivision 3) that a new trial may be granted to the defendant 'when the jury has separated without leave of the court, after retiring to deliberate upon their verdict, or been guilty of any misconduct by which a fair and due consideration of the case has been prevented.' It is urged upon us that the section referred to sets forth and limits the kind of misconduct for which a new trial may be granted, and that, to authorize the setting aside of the verdict, it must affirmatively appear that fair and due consideration of the case is prevented. Such a construction of the statute would compel a defendant in every case of this kind to show affirmatively that he had been actually injured by the misconduct complained of. None of the cases cited go to that extent, and, if they did, we should not be inclined to follow them. That the jury in this case was guilty of misconduct we presume none will deny. The wrongful act committed was one the direct tendency and natural consequence of which was to affect their capacity to perform their duties." In People v. Leary, 105 Cal. 490, 39 Pac. 24, Mr. Justice Van Fleet, speaking for the court, said (referring to the reading of newspapers by jurors during the progress of a trial): "If the matter * * * be such as would from its character, or the manner or connection in which it is stated, be calculated to prejudice or injuriously affect the minds of the jury, a presumption of improper influence arises, and a new trial will be granted, without requiring defendant to show that harm has in fact been done his cause." The same rule is announced in People v. Conkling, 111 Cal. 628, 44 Pac. 318, where this language is employed: "Jurors cannot be permitted to investigate the case outside the courtroom. They must decide the guilt or the innocence of the defendant upon the evidence introduced at the trial. It is impossible for this court to say that this outside investigation did not affect the result as to the character of the verdict rendered. For, when misconduct of jurors is shown, it is presumed to be injurious to defendant, unless the contrary appears. People v. Stokes, 103 Cal. 193 [37 Pac. 207] 42 Am. St. Rep. 102." There is nothing in the cases of People v. Higgins, 9 Cal. App. 269, 98 Pac. 683, nor People v. Amer, 8 Cal. App. 137, 96 Pac. 401, cited by appellant, in conflict with the above authorities. We are confronted with an uncontradicted affidavit showing that one of the jurors received out of court evidence which must have been prejudicial to the prisoner on trial, and we feel compelled, both upon principle and the great weight of authority, to hold that the order denying a new trial must be set aside.

Two purported "dying statements" were made by Lee Chung. One of these was given at the receiving hospital in Oakland shortly after the shooting and the other at Providence hospital. The substance of the first statement was reduced to writing by W. J. Hennessey, Esq., deputy district attorney, and was read to the wounded man, who declared that it was correct. This writing was not introduced in evidence by the prosecution, but was used by Mr. Hennessey and Capt. Peterson, chief of detectives of the Oakland police department, as a memorandum while they were testifying. The defendant Wong Loung was present during the taking of this declaration and the prosecution contended that the affirmations of the dying man at the receiving hospital were admissible in evidence, not only as his utterances under a sense of impending death, but also as statements made in the presence of defendant. The declaration of Lee Chung made at Providence hospital was reduced to writing by Dr. Hamlin and read by him to the patient, who said that it was correct and signed it by his mark. This document was introduced in evidence. Dr. Hamlin testified that just before the statement was taken he asked Lee Chung how he felt. The reply was "very weak." The physician then asked him if he thought he was going to die, and the Chinaman answered that he knew he was going to die. The written declaration received in evidence begins: "I know I am going to die. I was shot by Wong Loung between 10 and 11 p. m. last night, September 13, 1907, near the corner of Third and Harrison streets in Oakland." Appellant insists that this statement does not satisfy the rule that such utterances may be recorded and afterwards introduced in evidence at the trial of a person accused of murder only when the speaker was under a full sense of impending and almost immediate death; and he also makes the same contention with reference to the previous declaration made at the receiving hospital. In this connection we may say that defendant's counsel failed to make such objection as called this matter to the court's attention. In the absence of specific objection we must hold that the statement on its face is sufficient. People v. Ybarra, 17 Cal. 167. As the case must be tried again, doubtless the district attorney will bring to the notice of the court all the circumstances surrounding the making of the statements by the wounded man. The court admitted evidence of the fact that while making the statement at the receiving hospital Lee Chung raised himself slightly from the operating table, applied a vile name to the defendant, and spat in his face. We can see no theory upon which such matter was allowed to go before the jury. If offered to show the defendant's tame submission to insult, a complete answer is that he was in custody, and that the affront was offered by a wounded man. What action or comment would have been naturally expected from the defendant? And what inference could be drawn from the circumstances that Wong Loung "wiped his face off and some one removed him to the other corner of the room"? We confess that we can find no suitable answer to these questions. Yet we can see how the detailing of this incident to the jury may have been injurious to the defendant. Jurors may well have concluded that such bitter animosity displayed by the stricken man indicated his certainty of the identity of his assailant. The objection to the evidence should have been sustained. During the examination of Capt. Peterson, the district attorney consented that the answer to the question "Why did he shoot you?" be not stated. It appeared, however, in Mr. Hennessey's testimony and was not stricken out, although at a subsequent session of the court the district attorney offered to allow all matters relating to Lee Chung's statement of the reason for the shooting to be eliminated from the record. This offer was rejected by defendant's counsel, and, in view of their attitude, the court permitted the record to remain unchanged. Whether or not counsel's refusal to accept that for which they had previously asked the court would prevent the defendant from taking advantage of the original error in allowing the evidence to go before the jury need not be discussed here as the case must be tried again and the inadmissible matter will doubtless not be offered.

Certain declarations made after the shooting were admitted upon the ground that they were pronounced in the presence of the defendant. Error is assigned relative to the conversation between the arresting officers when they took Wong Loung into custody. One of them said, "This is the man," or "This is the Chinaman," and the other replied, "Yes; this is him," and the defendant exclaimed, "I haven't anything," or "I haven't done anything. I haven't got any gun." The Attorney General insists that this conversation was a part of the res gestæ and properly admitted as such. We cannot agree with that contention. The officers had run some distance from the scene of the crime, turning a corner and proceeding along another street from that upon which the wounded Chinaman fell, and had finally apprehended Wong Loung near the end of an alley. What there occurred was no more a part of the res gestæ than it would have been if their pursuit had covered a mile rather than a distance of about a block. Nor can we agree with the conclusion that this matter comes under the rule announced in People v. Cole, 141 Cal. 90, 74 Pac. 547, where a denial of guilt was held under the facts of that case to be a circumstance tending to show the defendant's sense of responsibility for the crime just as flight and concealment of a person charged with an offense are interpreted as having that tendency. In this case the only conduct of the defendant attempted to be shown as being exhibited at the time the above-quoted statements were made by the officers was his denial of having done anything. No admission of any kind was proven, nor was there anything about the denial which converted it into a confession or a statement indicating consciousness of guilt. The remarks of the policemen were not properly admissible. Such evidence is only adduced without error when it is admitted by the defendant to be correct, "his acquiescence being indicated by express assent, by his silence or by acts or by conduct on his part which could be fairly construed as assent." People v. Estrado, 49 Cal. 173. This well-known rule is also announced and applied in People v. Ah Yute, 54 Cal. 89; People v. Ah Lee, 60 Cal. 86; People v. Morton, 139 Cal. 722, 73 Pac. 609; and People v. Long, 7 Cal. App. 31, 93 Pac. 387.

There was no error in allowing the officers to state what occurred when they brought their prisoner to the place where Lee Chung lay on the sidewalk. They asked him if the defendant was the man who shot him, and Wong Loung turned his head away. Nevertheless, he was identified by the wounded man as one of the latter's assailants. Obviously the defendant's conduct under the circumstances was something which might be considered by the jury as indicating a wish on the part of the prisoner to escape identification.

Appellant's next important assignments of error are (1) that the court erred in excluding evidence tending to show that persons other than defendant killed decedent; (2) that the court erred in excluding evidence tending to show motive in the members of the Bing Gong Tong to commit the crime; and (3) that the court erred in excluding evidence tending to show a consciousness of guilt in members of the Bing Gong Tong. If competent testimony were offered for any one of the purposes mentioned in the above assignments it would have been proper, but in their offers of proof counsel for defendant failed to indicate enough of what they expected to show to enable the court to see the relevancy of the promised evidence. For example, they sought to prove that certain murders had been committed both before and after the killing of Lee Chung, but failed to disclose the logical connection between those homicides and the case which was on trial. The court's rulings excluding the promised proof of these other and distinct crimes were therefore free from error. Without going into a detailed discussion of this branch of the case, we can say that we find no material error in the rulings which appellant attacks.

Dr. Hamlin was asked about the presence of a certain Chinaman, Louis Doon or Tun, at Providence hospital when the decedent was there. Objection that this was not proper cross-examination was sustained. Evidently the question was preliminary in its nature, as it did not refer to the time of the taking of the dying statement which was the only period included in Dr. Hamlin's testimony in chief. The purpose of the question being undisclosed, the ruling was proper.

Complaint is made that the court unduly extended the cross-examination of a witness called by defendant. If error was committed, it was not injurious to defendant as the inquiry related to the whereabouts of the witness during the shooting. One of defendant's counsel was denied the opportunity of cross-examining certain of his own witnesses declared by him to be hostile. Flagrant error must appear in such refusal before this court will interfere with the ruling denying one the privilege of cross-examining his own witness. This is a matter largely within the discretion of the trial court, and we cannot see that this discretion was abused in the present case. A question to which objection was made was one pointedly insinuating that the witness had not told the truth when he testified that he had not said a word to Lee Chung at the receiving hospital. Other questions sought information upon the matter of the employment of Mr. Walsh, the special prosecutor. Others were inquiries whether or not witnesses belonged to a certain tong. None of the rulings concerning these questions were prejudicial to defendant, but, even if they had been, such rulings would have to be upheld as there was no sufficient showing of the hostility of the witnesses whom defendant's counsel desired to cross-examine.

The police officers were allowed to testify over defendant's objection that Wong Loung was puffing, and was pale, nervous, and excited when they captured him. It is well settled that such phenomena as paleness, excitement, intoxication, and the like may be described by a witness. People v. Lavelle, 71 Cal. 352, 12 Pac. 226; People v. Monteith, 73 Cal. 8, 14 Pac. 373. The reason of this rule is well expressed in State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 10, 12 Pac. 323, cited by the Attorney General. There the court used this language: "There is another equally well-recognized exception, founded in necessity, under which the opinions of ordinary witnesses are received. Facts which are made up of a great variety of circumstances and a combination of appearances, which, from the infirmity of language, cannot be properly described, may be shown by witnesses who observed them; and, where their observation is such as to justify it, they may state the conclusions of their own minds. In this category may be placed matters involving magnitude or quantities, portions of time, space, motion, gravitation, value, and such as relate to the condition or appearance of persons and things. City of Parsons v. Lindsay, 26 Kan. 426; State v. Folwell, 14 Kan. 105. On the same principle the emotions or feelings of persons, such as grief, joy, hope, despondency, anger, fear, and excitement may be likewise shown; and hence the testimony objected to was properly admitted." Lawson's Expert and Opinion Evidence, rule 64; 2 Best on Ev. par. 517. See, also, People v. Manoogian, 141 Cal. 595, 75 Pac. 177.

Defendant, as we have indicated previously herein, had introduced evidence which, if true, would show that he was not present at the time of the shooting. His counsel offered an instruction on alibi which was refused and nothing on that subject was said to the jury. The Attorney General maintains that the law applicable to the defense of alibi was covered by an instruction which was given to the effect that, if there was any reasonable doubt as to any one of the facts essential to establish the guilt of defendant, it was the duty of the jury to acquit. The presence of the defendant being one of these essentials, it is argued that the jury would regard proof of his being elsewhere as sufficient to require an acquittal if it should raise a reasonable doubt in their minds regarding the question whether or not he was at the scene of the homicide. As this case must be tried again because of errors heretofore discussed, we need not determine whether or not the court's failure to instruct on this subject of alibi is error requiring reversal of a case like the one at bar. Doubtless at the next trial the lower court will save all question on this matter by fully instructing the jury on the law respecting that defense.

The special prosecutor, Mr. Walsh, in his address to the jury said: " * * * Wong Foon, I think, as was established to your satisfaction, was not there that night, and to-day he is a dead man. Whether killed by a Hop Sing man or by some other person, it is not necessary at this time to state, but that is the reason why Wong Foon, the interpreter, that the defense attempted to place in the hospital on the night of the 13th, in their endeavor to show that Wong Foon was the one who prepared this dying statement, the reason he is not here is because he met with a sudden death." Mr. Moore for the defense promptly interposed an objection, and asked the court to instruct the jury to disregard the remarks. The court did not do so. This was error. Not only did this part of the argument deal with happenings entirely outside the record, but it really amounted to an insinuation that the Hop Sing Tong had procured the murder of a man to prevent his appearance in the case. Such misconduct is highly prejudicial to a defendant on trial for his life or liberty and should always be overcome, when possible, by an instruction by the court.

The court refused to give the instruction frequently asked for in cases of this sort, and, indeed, in all kinds of criminal cases, to the general effect that jurors are not required to surrender their honest convictions for the mere purpose of agreeing upon a verdict. Under the authority of People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 495, 55 Pac. 581, 68 Am. St. Rep. 50, and People v. Howard, 143 Cal. 324, 76 Pac. 1116, this instruction should have been given.

From the foregoing it follows that the judgment and order must be reversed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.

159 Cal. 508

Ex parte YUN QUONG. (Cr. 1,633.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 13, 1911.)

1. STATUTES (§ 114*)—TITLE—SUFFICIENCY.

Under Const. art. 4, § 24, requiring every act to embrace but one subject, to be expressed in the title, St. 1909, p. 422, entitled "An act to regulate the sale and use of poisons * * * and providing a penalty for the violation thereof" is sufficient to embrace provisions making it unlawful for any person to have in his possession opium except on the written prescription of a physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon, unless he is a jobber, wholesaler, manufacturer, retail pharmacist, dentist, or surgeon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 145-149; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 87*) — POLICE POWER.

The constitutional right to hold and enjoy property is subject to such reasonable regulation as is necessary to conserve the public health and morals and to promote the common good.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 150-171; Dec. Dig. § 87.*]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 278*)—DUE PROCESS OF LAW—REGULATING USE OF OPIUM—STATUTES—VALIDITY.

St. 1909, p. 422, making it unlawful for any person to have in his possession opium except on the written prescription of a physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon, or unless he belongs to specified classes, is not unreasonable for the protection of the public from the evils resulting from the use of opium which is an active poison, the unrestricted use of which has a debasing effect, and the act is not violative of the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution, protecting the citizen's right to the enjoyment of property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 762-824; Dec. Dig. § 278.*]

4. HEALTH (§ 21*) — REGULATING USE OF OPIUM—STATUTES—VALIDITY.

The statute means only a conscious and voluntary possession of opium, and it is not unreasonable because it is possible for one to have the possession of opium innocently and without knowledge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Health, Cent. Dig. § 25; Dec. Dig. § 21.*]

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 38*) — VALIDITY OF STATUTE—EVIL TO BE CURED—ACTUAL EXISTENCE—NECESSITY.

The validity of legislation, which would be necessary or proper under a given state of facts, does not depend on the actual existence of the supposed facts, but it is enough if the Legislature may rationally believe such facts to be established.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 36; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; B. V. Sargent, Judge.

Habeas corpus by Yun Quong for his discharge from imprisonment charged with violating a statute. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

Dougherty & Lacey, Carroll Cook, and Geo. W. Smith, for petitioner. J. A. Bardin, John F. Davis, and P. E. Zabala, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The purpose for which the writ is sought is to test the validity of a certain statute hereinafter mentioned. Before applying to this court the petitioner had sought relief in the District Court of Appeal for the First appellate district. The justices of that court were unable to agree on the question presented to them, and made an order remanding the prisoner. Accompanying the order were two opinions, one of which, prepared by Mr. Justice Kerrigan, reads as follows:

"Upon the petition of Yun Quong a writ of habeas corpus was issued by this court. Yun Quong was arrested and is now in custody upon a charge of violating the provisions of a statute entitled 'An act to regulate the sale and use of poisons in the state of California, and providing a penalty for the violation thereof' (St. 1909, p. 422), in that the said Yun Quong had in his possession a certain preparation of opium prohibited by the act.

"Section 8 of said statute is attacked by petitioner as being in violation of his rights under the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution. In substance, that section provides that it shall be unlawful for any person to have in his possession 'any cocaine, opium, morphine, etc.,' or any preparation thereof containing more than two grains to the fluid ounce, except upon the written order or prescription of a physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon licensed to practice in this state, or unless such possession is that of a jobber, wholesaler, manufacturer to pharmacies, retail pharmacy, physician, dentist, or surgeon licensed to practice in the state.

"Before proceeding to a consideration of the constitutional question presented in the briefs, it is proper to observe that, while there have been a number of amendments to the act as originally passed by the Legislature, regulating the use and sale of poisonous drugs (St. 1880, p. 102; St. 1891, p. 86; St. 1893, p. 68; St. 1901, p. 299; St. 1907, p. 124), it was not until the last amendment in 1909 that the mere possession of such drugs (with the exceptions therein specified) was made a crime. Doubtless this amendment was enacted because experience had shown that the statute in force was not sufficient to accomplish the end sought by the law-making power.

"We are not inclined to regard seriously the contention of petitioner that the act also violates section 24 of article 4 of the Constitution of this state, for we believe that its title sufficiently embraces the subject-matter of the act. Ex parte Liddell, 93 Cal. 633 [29 Pac. 251]; Ex parte Hallawell, 155 Cal. 112 [99 Pac. 490]

"Passing to the main point in the case, petitioner contends that opium is property and that the act of the Legislature making the mere possession of it a crime is an infringement upon the rights of liberty and property, and that therefore the act is void.

"The constitutional right to hold and enjoy property is subject to such reasonable regulation as is necessary to conserve the public health and morals and to promote the common good. Touching the subject of the proper exercise by the Legislature of its general police power, the Supreme Court, in French v. Davidson, 143 Cal. 658 [77 Pac. 663], in passing upon the constitutionality of an act requiring the vaccination of school children, employs this language: 'Police regulations generally interfere with the liberty of the citizens in one sense. * * * It is no valid objection to a police regulation that it prevents a person doing something that he wants to do or that he might do, were it not for the regulation. When we have determined that the act is within the police power of the state, nothing further need be said. The rest is left to the discretion of the law-making power. * * *'

"In Ingram v. Colgan, 106 Cal. 113 [38

Pac. 315, 39 Pac. 437, 28 L. R. A. 187, 46 Am. St. Rep. 221], the court said: 'Under the exercise of this general police power, persons and property are subject to restraints and burdens in order to secure the general comfort, health, and prosperity of the state, of the perfect right of the Legislature to do which * * * "no question ever was or upon acknowledged general principles ever can be made, so far as natural persons are concerned. It is coextensive with self-protection, and is often referred to as the law of overruling necessity." It is that inherent and plenary power in the state which enables it to prohibit all things hurtful to the comfort and welfare of society.'

"Opium is an active poison, and while it has no beneficial use except as a medicinal drug, its unrestricted use would have a debasing effect on the moral and economic welfare of a large portion of our population. We are, therefore, of opinion that its use, possession, and sale may be regulated by the Legislature, and that the act under consideration does not violate the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution touching the citizen's right to the enjoyment of property. It permits the use and possession of opium under all proper circumstances while otherwise prohibiting it. Hence we have no doubt that the act is within the general police power of the Legislature and is valid.

"The courts have held to be constitutional statutes against carrying concealed weapons (5 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law [2d Ed.] 729; English v. State, 35 Tex. 473 [14 Am. Rep. 374]; Ex parte Cheney, 90 Cal. 617 [27 Pac. 436]); acts making it unlawful for one to have in his possession gill nets (State v. Lewis [134 Ind. 250, 33 N. E. 1024], 20 L. R. A. 52); or lottery tickets (Ex parte McClain, 134 Cal. 110 [66 Pac. 69, 54 L. R. A. 779, 85 Am. St. Rep. 243]; Ford v. State, 85 Md. 466, 37 Atl. 173 [41 L. R. A. 551, 60 Am. St. Rep. 337]); or game and fish out of season (Forster v. Scott, 136 N. Y. 577 [32 N. E. 976, 18 L. R. A. 543]; Ex parte Maier, 103 Cal. 476 [37 Pac. 402, 42 Am. St. Rep. 129]). They have also held that acts limiting the hours of labor in underground mines and in smelting works, being for the preservation of the public health, are not violative of the federal Constitution. In re Fred J. Martin, 157 Cal. 51, 106 Pac. 235 [26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242].

"In Ex parte Cheney, supra, an ordinance prohibiting the carrying of concealed weapons was under consideration, and the court said that the unrestricted habit of carrying weapons was the source of much crime; that the majority of citizens had no occasion or inclination to carry such weapons, and that the act in question was for the purpose of preventing breaches of the peace and the commission of other crimes. In the course of its opinion it said (referring to the act): 'By its terms ample provision is made for those whose necessities of life or of occupation require protection from carrying such weapons, and as the prohibition does not extend to those who come within the exceptions there is no invasion of the rights of the citizen.'

"So it may be said that the unrestricted use of poisonous drugs would be the source of ill health, pauperism, misery, and insanity, the prevention of which must be numbered among the objects of all enlightened government. Most of our citizens have no desire or occasion to use any of the prohibited narcotics, and the rights of those who need them are amply protected by the terms of the act.

"In Re Hallawell, 8 Cal. App. 563 [97 Pac. 320], the court in the course of its opinion stated that opium was a medicinal drug of a poisonous nature, the use of which often tends to moral, mental, and physical destruction; and that the Legislature, in the exercise of its police power, could go so far as to absolutely prohibit the use and sale thereof. The Legislature having the power to go to that extent, we can see no reason why it cannot specify all the conditions under which opium may be held and distributed as a medicine, and provide, as it has done, that in all other instances, its mere possession is unlawful.

"In Luck v. Sears, 29 Or. 421, 44 Pac. 693 [32 L. R. A. 738, 54 Am. St. Rep. 804], a well-considered case, the precise question was passed upon. There the statute, as here, provided that it was unlawful, with certain specified exceptions, to have even the possession of opium. The court, in considering the same contention that is made here, said: 'The act is not an infringement on the rights of liberty and property, as guaranteed by the fundamental law. The discretion of the Legislature in the employment of means which are reasonably calculated to protect the health, morals, or safety of the public is very great; and so long as it does not infringe upon the inherent rights of life, liberty, and property, either directly or through some limitations upon the means of living, or some material right essential to the enjoyment of life, its determination is conclusive upon the court. * * * The object and purpose of the act is to so regulate the possession, sale, and disposition of a dangerous yet useful drug as to prevent the weak and unwary from using it for their own physical and mental ruin, and to the serious injury of the general public, and, in our opinion, violates no constitutional right.'

"The policy of the federal government on this subject is in harmony with the policy of this state, as is attested by the act of Congress approved February 9, 1909 [Act Feb. 9, 1909, c. 100, 35 Stat. 614 (U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1909, p. 65S)], which prohibits the importation and use of opium for any other than medicinal purposes, and makes the mere possession of this drug sufficient evidence of a violation of the act unless satisfactorily explained to the jury. Statistics show that the vice of using opium is increasing in this country. It must be conceded that its indiscriminate use would have a very deleterious and debasing effect upon our race, and in order to prevent such a condition, and to make more effectual existing enactments, the Legislature found it imperative to prohibit even the possession of the drug (with the exception above noted).

"Our attention has been called to a number of cases which hold that, although the sale of intoxicating liquors may be regulated or even prohibited, the mere possession of such liquors cannot be made an offense. But liquor is used daily in this and other countries as a beverage, moderately and without harm, by countless thousands (Ex parte Mon Luck, supra; Ex parte Yung Jon [D. C.] 28 Fed. 308); whereas it appears there is no such thing as moderation in the use of opium. Once the habit is formed the desire for it is insatiable, and its use is invariably disastrous.

"There is no merit in the argument that the statute is unreasonable, and therefore void, because it is possible for one to have the possession of opium innocently and without knowledge. The act clearly means a conscious and voluntary possession. Ex parte McClain, supra.

"The writ is denied."

In distinguishing the case from those in which it had been held that the mere possession of intoxicating liquors cannot constitutionally be made a crime, the learned justice, in the foregoing opinion uses this language: "It appears that there is no such thing as moderation in the use of opium. Once the habit is formed the desire for it is insatiable, and its use is invariably disastrous." We do not understand this to have been intended to declare an established or conceded fact. So interpreted, the expression would be, perhaps unduly sweeping. But the validity of legislation which would be necessary or proper under a given state of facts does not depend upon the actual existence of the supposed facts. It is enough if the law-making body may rationally believe such facts to be established. If the belief that the use of opium, once begun, almost inevitably leads to excess may be entertained by reasonable men—and we do not doubt that it may—such belief affords a sufficient justification for applying to opium restrictions which might be unduly burdensome in the case of other substances, as, for example, intoxicating liquors, the use of which may fairly be regarded as less dangerous to their users or to the public. Assuming, as we must, that the Legislature acted upon some such view, the restrictions upon the right to possess the drugs named in the act cannot be said to be clearly unreasonable or unnecessary for the protection of the public from the evils against which the legislation in question is aimed.

With such modification as may be implied from what we have just said, we are entirely satisfied with the opinion in question, and adopt it as the opinion of this court.

The writ is discharged and the petitioner remanded.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

(159 Cal. 484)

TITLE INS. & TRUST CO. v. CALIFORNIA DEVELOPMENT CO. (DUNCAN, Intervener). (L. A. 2,791, 2,792.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 13, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 66*)—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE—INTERLOCUTORY ORDERS.

In the absence of statutory authority no appeal lies from an interlocutory order.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 329-343; Dec. Dig. § 66.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 113*)—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE—MOTION TO VACATE AN ORDER.

Where an order is not appealable, it is not reviewable on appeal from an order denying a motion to set it aside.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 758-785; Dec. Dig. § 113.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 71*)—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE—INTERLOCUTORY ORDERS.

While Code Civ. Proc. § 963, authorizes an appeal from an interlocutory order appointing a receiver, it does not authorize an appeal from an order refusing to vacate such an appointment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 386-401; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 78*)—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE—INTERLOCUTORY ORDERS—COLLATERAL MATTERS.

Where an interlocutory order with reference to a receivership requires the payment of money by the one complaining or the doing of an act by or against him, it is in effect a final judgment, and may be reviewed as such by a direct appeal, but if before execution or enforcement it is subject to further action by the court, it is not a final judgment, and cannot be reviewed by direct appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 464-483; Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 78*)—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE—INTERLOCUTORY ORDERS—RECEIVERSHIP.

Interlocutory orders directing a receiver to issue receiver's certificates secured by a first lien upon the property in his hands and to apply the proceeds thereon, and pay them with the revenues collected, are not appealable as final judgments.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 464-483; Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by the Title Insurance & Trust Company, as trustee in a deed of trust, against the California Development Company, in which Boaz Duncan intervened. From certain interlocutory orders, the intervener appeals. Appeals dismissed.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Valentine & Newby, for appellant. O'Melveny, Stevens & Millikin, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Motions to dismiss appeals. This action is one to foreclose the lien of a mortgage or deed of trust executed by the California Development Company to plaintiff as trustee to secure the payment of bonds of said Development Company. The complaint was filed on December 12, 1909, and on the same day the court below made and entered an ex parte order appointing W. H. Holabird receiver of the property conveyed as security. On January 15, 1910, an order was made by the superior court permitting Boaz Duncan to intervene in the cause, and he at once filed his complaint in intervention asserting rights as the holder of a large number of the bonds issued by the Development Company. On March 4, 1910, he made a motion for an order setting aside the order theretofore entered appointing the receiver. This motion was on the 6th day of April, 1910, denied by the superior court. Within sixty days thereafter he served and filed his notice of appeal from the last-mentioned order denying his motion. On April 6, 1910, the superior court made and entered an order authorizing the receiver to issue receiver's certificates to the amount of $80,000, to dispose of the same at their face value and spend the proceeds for labor and material and other necessary expenses in the construction of a restraining levee, and to apply revenues resulting from his carrying on of the business of the California Development Company to the payment of such certificates which, by the terms of the order, are declared to be a first lien on the property in his possession. On the same day a second order of like purport was made, authorizing the receiver to issue certificates to the further amount of $216,100 for construction and repair work and general expense. The intervener Duncan promptly served and filed his notices of appeal from both these orders. The plaintiff and respondent now moves to dismiss the three appeals upon the ground that none of the orders sought to be reviewed is an appealable order.

1. The appeal from the order denying the intervener's motion to vacate the order appointing a receiver. It is well settled by the decisions of this court that no appeal can be taken from an interlocutory order unless the order be designated by statute as one of those from which an appeal may be taken. Such was the rule under the Constitution of 1849 and the Practice Act (Allender v. Fritts, 24 Cal. 447; Myers v. Mott, 29 Cal. 359, 89 Am. Dec. 49), and the same conclusion has been reached in cases arising since the adoption of the Constitution of 1879 and the enactment of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Thus, in Illinois Trust & Savings Bank v. Alvord, 99 Cal. 410, 33 Pac. 1133, the court said that "the only interlocutory or intermediate orders from which a separate appeal can be prosecuted are those enumerated in subdivision 3 of section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure." See, also, Rochat v. Gee, 91 Cal. 356, 27 Pac. 670. Upon the same ground it was held that, prior to the amendment of 1897 to said section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure (St. 1897, p. 209), there was no right of appeal from an interlocutory order appointing a receiver. French Bank Case, 53 Cal. 495; Emeric v. Alvarado, 64 Cal. 529, 622, 2 Pac. 418. In the case at bar the appellant seeks to appeal from an order (made before judgment) refusing to vacate a prior order appointing a receiver. An order appointing a receiver is, since the amendment of 1897 (St. 1897, c. 151), to section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the subject of direct appeal. The statute does not, however, authorize an appeal from an order refusing to vacate the appointment of a receiver. It would seem clear, therefore, that the attempted appeal now under discussion does not come within the terms of the statute and that, if the appellant has any right to a review of the order complained of, it must be by means of an appeal from such final judgment as may hereafter be entered in the action. Code Civ. Proc. § 956. The appellant seeks to avoid the effect of this reasoning by a reference to the decisions of this court holding that an appeal from an order refusing to vacate an appealable judgment or order may be permitted where the party appealing was, without fault on his part, unable to take an effective appeal from the original judgment or order. People v. Grant, 45 Cal. 97; San Jose v. Fulton, 45 Cal. 316; Green v. Hebbard, 95 Cal. 39, 30 Pac. 202; Pignaz v. Burnett, 119 Cal. 157, 51 Pac. 48; Elliott v. Superior Court, 144 Cal. 501, 77 Pac. 1109, 103 Am. St. Rep. 102; Tattenham v. Superior Court, 155 Cal. 205, 100 Pac. 248. These cases merely declare an exception to the general rule that an order refusing to vacate a prior order is not itself appealable. Where the original judgment or order is not the subject of appeal it cannot be made reviewable by the device of moving to set it aside and appealing from the order denying the motion. Estate of Keane, 56 Cal. 407; Harper v. Hildreth, 99 Cal. 205, 33 Pac. 1103. And even where there is a right of appeal from a judgment or order, a party cannot ordinarily take an appeal from a subsequent order denying a motion to vacate the judgment or order complained of. Holmes v. McCleary, 63 Cal. 497; Reay v. Butler, 69 Cal. 572, 11 Pac. 463; Larkin v. Larkin, 76 Cal. 323, 18 Pac. 396; Goyhinech v. Goyhinech, 80 Cal. 409, 410, 22 Pac. 175; Harper v. Hildreth, supra; Sutton v. Symons, 100 Cal. 577, 35 Pac. 158; Kent v. Williams, 146 Cal. 3, 79 Pac. 527. The cases last cited are based upon the ground that an order denying a motion to set aside a former order amounts to no more than refusal by the court to reconsider an action already taken, and that the appeal should be from the original order. Henly v. Hastings, 3 Cal. 342. This is a mere rule of practice established by this court without the aid of any statute. As above stated, there have been cases recognizing an exception to the rule. The circumstances which will authorize an appeal from an order refusing to vacate are that the appellant was not a party to the proceeding resulting in the original judgment or order, and for that reason could not appeal therefrom, or that such original judgment or order was made ex parte, and the party complaining did not have notice in time to appeal, or had no opportunity to make a bill of exceptions or other record which would present his real grounds of objection. But in every case where this course has been allowed, the order from which an appeal was sought to be taken was within the class of orders made directly appealable by the terms of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In People v. Grant, supra, San Jose v. Fulton, supra, Green v. Hebbard, supra, Pignaz v. Burnett, supra, and Elliott v. Superior Court, supra, the order refusing to vacate was an order made after final judgment, and was, therefore, within the terms of subdivision 2 of section 963. In Tattenham v. Superior Court, supra, the original order complained of was one granting an injunction pendente lite and an order refusing to dissolve the injunction would have been subject to direct appeal. Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 2. In each of these cases, therefore, the court was permitting a direct appeal in a case where such appeal was authorized by the provisions of the Code and was merely relieving the appellant from the rule of practice theretofore established to the effect that an order refusing to vacate a prior appealable order, although described as appealable by the statute, could not be made to take the place of an appeal from the original order.

The only theory upon which the court could entertain an appeal from an order refusing to vacate, where such order is not made the subject of direct appeal, would be that the order refusing to vacate is identical with the original order. Such theory is, however, not tenable in reason, and is inconsistent with the rulings of this court. In Credits Commutation Co. v. Superior Court, 140 Cal. 82, 73 Pac. 1009, the court below had made an order settling a receiver's account and directing him to pay certain claims. Thereafter, the petitioner moved the court to vacate the order, which motion was denied. From the second order the petitioner appealed, filed a $300 undertaking, and claimed that this undertaking stayed the execution of the order directing the payment of the claim. His claim was denied by this court upon the ground that the undertaking had reference only to the order appealed from and not to the prior order which it sought to vacate. See, also, Reay v. Butler, supra; Weldon v. Rogers, 154 Cal. 632, 98 Pac. 1070.

The view that an order refusing to vacate cannot under any circumstances be made the subject of direct appeal, unless it itself be one of a class of orders designated by the Code as appealable, finds further support in Estate of Cahill, 142 Cal. 628, 76 Pac. 383, where an attempted appeal from an order denying a motion to vacate an order setting apart a homestead was dismissed upon the ground that the order sought to be appealed from was not included within the terms of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is said that the case last cited was a probate matter and it is sought to draw a distinction on the ground that under the Constitution this court is given appellate jurisdiction only "in such probate matters as may be provided by law," whereas the like jurisdiction extends to "all cases in equity." But as we have seen, the grant of appellate jurisdiction in all cases in equity does not authorize the court to entertain direct appeals from interlocutory orders in equity cases, the appellate jurisdiction as to such orders being no wider than that permitted in probate cases. Interlocutory orders in equity cases, like all orders in probate, may be made the subject of direct appeal only when such appeal is authorized by the statute.

2. The appeals from the orders authorizing the issuance of receiver's certificates, to dispose of the same and expend the proceeds in the construction of a restraining levee, etc.

Whether these orders may be reviewed on appeal from the final judgment in the action is not here in question. The only point made by the respondent is that such review may not be had on direct appeal from the orders complained of. The orders are not specified in section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure as orders before judgment from which an appeal is authorized, nor are they special orders made after final judgment. It is claimed, however, by the appellant, that each order is, in its nature, a final judgment in a collateral proceeding arising out of the action, and that a direct appeal may, therefore, be taken as from such final judgment. In order to determine the character of the orders in question, it may be well to briefly review the decisions of this court dealing with similar questions. In Rochat v. Gee, 91 Cal. 355, 27 Pac. 670, it was held that a direct appeal could not be taken from an order before judgment approving the account of a receiver. In Illinois Trust & Savings Bank v. Alvord, supra, an action to foreclose a mortgage on the property of a street railway company, the court dismissed an appeal from an order declaring certain indebtedness contracted by the receiver in the same action and a receiver in another action a lien prior and paramount to any of the liens in litigation. The opinion states that the enforcement of the order directing the payment of the contested claims out of the first proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property could not be had until the entry of a final decree directing such sale, and that the appellants could preserve all their rights by an appeal from such final decree. In Grant v. Superior Court, 106 Cal. 324, 39 Pac. 604, the petitioner sought a writ of prohibition restraining the superior court from making an order fixing the compensation of a receiver in an action pending before it. The petition was denied, this court saying: "The only order which the court proposes to make is one fixing the amount of the compensation. Such an order cannot by itself injure anyone; but if in addition to the order fixing the amount the court should order it paid out of the fund in the receiver's hands, such order, under whatever name it might be designated, would be a final judgment upon a collateral matter arising out of the action, and would be appealable by any party interested in the fund." Grant v. L. A., etc., Ry. Co., 116 Cal. 71, 47 Pac. 872, was an appeal from an order such as the one referred to in Grant v. Superior Court, fixing the compensation of the receiver, taxing such compensation as costs against all the parties, and directing the receiver to apply towards its payment the balance of a fund remaining in his hand. Motion to dismiss the appeal was denied upon the ground that such order was, in legal effect, a final judgment upon a collateral matter arising out of the action. Los Angeles v. Los Angeles Water Co., 134 Cal. 121, 66 Pac. 198, involved an appeal from an order settling the account of a receiver and directing the payment of his compensation by one of the parties. It was held that this was, in effect, an appeal from a final judgment, and that the appeal might be taken within six months after the entry of the order. In Free Golding Mining Co. v. Spiers, 135 Cal. 130, 67 Pac. 61, the order authorized a receiver in charge of mining property to purchase and install a cyanide plant and to pay for the cost of such purchase and installation out of any funds that might come into his hands. This was held to be not subject to direct appeal. Finally, in Anglo-Californian Bank v. Superior Court, 153 Cal. 753, 756, 96 Pac. 803, it was held that an order requiring the petitioner, not a party to the suit, to pay money to the receiver of an insolvent bank, notwithstanding the fact that a part of the money was claimed by third parties, was a final adjudication of the rights of the parties, and might be made the subject of direct appeal.

From these decisions the following rules are clearly deducible. Where the order requires the payment of money by the party complaining (Los Angeles v. Los Angeles City Water Co., supra; Anglo-Californian Bank v. Superior Court, supra), or the doing of an act by or against him, the order is in effect final as against such party and may be appealed from by him. If, on the other hand, the order be in its nature such as to be subject, before enforcement or execution, to the further action of the court, either by decree or subsequent order (Rochat v. Gee, supra; Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank v. Alvord, supra; Grant v. Superior Court, supra), the order complained of is not final, and review must be sought by means of appeal from the decree or order subsequently entered.

There remains, however, a third class of cases, i. e., those of orders requiring a receiver to make expenditures out of the funds in his hands. It seems difficult to reconcile the decisions dealing with this question. In Grant v. Railway Co., supra, an order directing the receiver to apply the funds in his hands toward the payment of his compensation was held to be a final judgment. On the other hand, the appeal dismissed in Free Gold Mining Co. v. Spiers, supra, was from an order authorizing the receiver to pay the cost of installation of a cyanide plant out of the funds coming into his hands as a receiver.

The question involved is to some extent one of convenience and policy. Where a court has taken possession and control of property through a receiver, the preservation and proper management of such property can best be effected by permitting the trial court, pending a final hearing of the cause, to direct the receiver in the disposition of the funds coming into his hands, without having its supervisory action subject to the delay and inconvenience incident to repeated and successive appeals from separate orders. This consideration seems to have been the basis of the decision in Free Gold Mining Co. v. Spiers, supra, where the court said: "The receiver is but the hand of the court to aid it in preserving and managing the property involved in the suit for the benefit of those to whom it may ultimately be determined to belong. Any order that the court may make upon his application for such direction, whether for the expenditure of money or for the performance of any duty, may, if erroneous, be reviewed upon proper exceptions thereto after final judgment has been rendered, or, in exceptional cases, after the settlement of the final account of the receiver. Such orders usually depend upon the discretion of the court, to be exercised according to the necessities of the case, and require immediate execution in order to be of any avail; but if every order which the court might make for the preservation or proper management of the property in its custody is subject to a direct appeal therefrom, not only would the court be greatly hampered in its efforts to preserve the property, but the interests of all the parties interested might be greatly prejudiced." Similarly, in Heinze v. B. & B. Consolidated Min. Co., 129 Fed. 337, 64 C. C. A. 15, the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit said: "If such an order be held appealable, it follows that every order directing the action of the receiver in the disbursement of any portion of the funds in his hands, and each order approving his monthly accounts, may be made the subject of an appeal, and the matters involved in the receivership may be brought into this court piecemeal. In a receivership such as this, extending over a long period of time, such a rule would involve burdensome litigation. * * *" These expressions were used in reference to an order confirming eight monthly reports of the receiver. In speaking of a further order directing the receiver to pay counsel fees out of the funds in his hands, the court said: "We are unable to see that it stands on different ground from the other appeal. It is true that if the money be paid to the receiver's attorney under the order of court, it is a final disposition of the sum so paid. But the court thereafter still had the receiver's account under its control. If the sums so paid were improperly disbursed, the error in its payment may be reviewed in adjusting the receiver's final account. * * * The argument that the money so paid is a final disposition of so much of the funds in the receiver's hands applies with equal force to any item of the current expense account of the receiver. In each case the money paid is a final payment out of the fund in the receiver's hands. * * *" If the holdings in Grant v. Superior Court, supra, and Grant v. Los Angeles, etc., Ry. Co., supra, are in conflict with these views, those cases must, to the extent of such conflict, be regarded as overruled by the later decision in Free Gold Min. Co. v. Spiers, supra.

Applying the foregoing principles to the case at bar, we find that the orders complained of do not direct the payment of any money by the appellant Duncan, nor do they direct the performance of any act by or against him. In so far as they authorize the receiver to sell receiver's certificates, which are to be a paramount lien on the property, they are not distinguishable from Illinois Trust & Savings Bank v. Alvord, supra. In so far as they authorize the receiver to apply the revenues resulting from his carrying on of the business of the defendant corporation to the payment of such certificates, the case presents the same question that was decided in Free Gold Mining Company v. Spiers, supra. Under the doctrine of the cases cited, the orders are not to be regarded as final judgments.

For the foregoing reasons, it must be held that none of the three orders in question is appealable. The appeals are dismissed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

(159 Cal. 541)

REGENTS OF UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA v. TURNER et al. (Sac. 1,710.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 14, 1911.)

1. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF (§ 58*)—AMENDMENTS—OMISSION—ENGROSSED BILL—FAILURE TO SERVE.

Where it did not appear that the respondent proposed any amendments to appellants' original bill of exceptions, appellants' omission to serve the bill on respondents after a certification as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 650, as amended by St. 1907, c. 379, did not invalidate the bill.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exceptions, Bill of, Cent. Dig. §§ 100-105; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

2. JUDGES (§ 42*)—INTEREST—DISQUALIFICATION—LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION—JUDGE AS CREDITOR.

Code Civ. Proc. § 170, provides that no judge shall sit or act as such in any action or proceeding to which he is a party or in which he is interested. Section 1430 declares that no letters of administration shall be granted before any judge who is interested as next of kin to the decedent, or is in any manner interested or disqualified from acting. Section 1495 provides that any judge of the superior court may present a claim against the estate of a decedent for allowance to the executor or administrator, and if the claim is allowed, the judge must designate some other judge of the superior court in the same or an adjoining county, who, on the presentation of such claim to him is vested with power to allow or reject it. Held, that the fact that a superior court judge was a creditor of a decedent's estate did not disqualify him to appoint an administrator; the judge being disqualified only to act on the allowance of his own claim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judges, Cent. Dig. §§ 190-200; Dec. Dig. § 42.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by the Regents of the University of California against Elizabeth Turner, as administratrix of the estate of W. C. Turner, deceased, and another. From a judgment denying plaintiffs' motion for a new trial, they appeal. Affirmed.

F. A. Cutler, for appellants. Edward F. Treadwell and J. W. Knox, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Appeal by plaintiff from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial. The plaintiff sues to foreclose a mortgage on real estate and to obtain judgment upon the note given for the debt secured thereby. The note and mortgage were executed by W. C. Turner. The Merced Security Savings Bank is the owner of a part of the mortgaged premises by title acquired after the execution of said mortgage. The defendant bank answered that the action was barred by the provisions of sections 318, 319, 337, 343, 1493, and 1500, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The administratrix alleges that it is barred by sections 337, 338, 339, 343, 353, 1493, and 1500, of said Code. The court found that the action was barred by the provisions of sections 318, 319, 337, 343, 1493, and 1500 of said Code. It made no express finding as to section 353. The facts to which that section relates are found, however, and the question whether the action is barred thereby is presented by the finding. Judgment was given for the defendants. The principal question is whether or not the evidence sustains the findings on the subject of the statute of limitations. Sections 318, 319 and 343 do not apply to the case. Sections 337 and 353 are the only ones necessary to be considered.

The respondent makes the preliminary objection that the bill of exceptions containing the evidence cannot be considered a part of the record on appeal, because it was not served on the respondents after it was engrossed. It was settled in 1908, while the provision of section 650, Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1907, was in force, providing that a bill of exceptions after being settled and engrossed, must be presented to the judge to be certified, "and upon being certified must within five days thereafter be served upon the adverse party." St. 1907, p. 715. It is sufficient to say upon this point that the bill appears to have been duly settled by the judge, and that there is nothing in the record to show that any amendments to the original bill of the plaintiffs were ever proposed, in which case it could have been settled without notice or engrossment, and the provision above quoted would not be applicable. The contrary will not be presumed. We are not to be understood as intimating that the provision is other than directory, or that the failure to serve such engrossed bill, when certified, would preclude its use on appeal.

The note and mortgage sued on were executed on February 28, 1889, and became due on February 28, 1892. If Turner, the mortgagor, had lived, the four years' limitation prescribed by section 337, Code of Civil Procedure, would have expired on February 28, 1896. Turner died on February 14, 1894. The present action was begun on July 18, 1904, more than eight years after the period of limitation had run. Section 353, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that if a person against whom an action may be brought die before the period of limitation has run, the action may be begun against his personal representative, after the expiration of the time limited, and within one year after the issuing of letters testamentary or of administration. Plaintiff contends that the extension of the time thus provided had not expired when the action was begun.

The record of the proceedings in the administration of the estate of Turner shows that one W. W. Gray was appointed administrator of his estate, that letters of administration thereon were issued to him on April 7, 1894, and that he continued to act as administrator thereof from that time until his death, which occurred on April 12, 1902. The giving of notice to creditors of the estate to present their claims, was completed on May 26, 1894. The plaintiff presented to him for allowance its note and it was allowed by him on September 13, 1894. The mortgage was not included in the claim so presented. See Estate of Turner, 128 Cal. 392, 60 Pac. 967. On August 30, 1898, plaintiff moved the court for leave to amend said claim, by including the mortgage therein. This motion was denied and plaintiff's appeal therefrom was dismissed. Estate of Turner, 139 Cal. 86, 72 Pac. 718. During his administration of the estate, Gray filed three accounts current which were duly settled by the court. The plaintiff caused him to be cited to render an exhibit as provided in section 1622, Code of Civil Procedure. He received and allowed a large number of claims against the estate. He filed a petition, in which plaintiff joined, for an order to sell the land covered by plaintiff's mortgage, the order was made, the land was offered for sale, and plaintiff purchased it. Plaintiff applied to the court to have its claim accepted as payment on the purchase price of the land, under section 1570, Code of Civil Procedure, which was refused. Plaintiff appealed, and on appeal the refusal was held to be correct, for the reason that the allowance of plaintiff's claim did not include the mortgage, and did not establish the claim as a mortgage lien. Estate of Turner, 128 Cal. 388, 60 Pac. 967. This decision on appeal was made on April 14, 1900. Up to this time plaintiff, as shown by the facts we have recited, had recognized Gray as the lawfully appointed administrator of the estate, dealt with him as such and participated in the proceeding for administration. Thereafter it claimed, and it now claims, that there was no administration of the estate until Elizabeth Turner was appointed, after the death of Gray, and that the statute of limitations was suspended, as provided in section 353, Code of Civil Procedure, for the entire period from 1894 to 1902, during which Gray was acting as administrator, and until one year after the appointment of Mrs. Turner. If this point is not sustained it is obvious that the extension of the period of limitation, provided by section 353, had run before the action was begun, or rather that it did not become operative at all, and that the action is barred.

The order appointing Gray administrator of Turner's estate was made by Hon. J. K. Law, as judge of the superior court of Merced county. Judge Law was a creditor of the decedent, upon a note executed by Turner to him for $3,419.07. His claim thereon was afterwards duly presented and allowed by Gray as administrator and by the judge of the superior court of the adjoining county. Respondent argues that the evidence does not show that Law was the judge who appointed Gray, but, while the language is not very definite, we think that fact was, in effect, stipulated upon the trial. The theory of the plaintiff is that Judge Law, as a creditor of the estate, was interested therein, and that, in consequence thereof, he was not qualified or competent to act in the matter, and that the appointment of Gray and all proceedings thereafter had in the administration of the estate are invalid and void, and must, in law, be considered as not having occurred.

Section 170, Code of Civil Procedure, declares, among other things, that no judge "shall sit or act as such in any action or proceeding to which he is a party, or in which he is interested." Section 1430, Code of Civil Procedure, provides as follows: "No will shall be admitted to probate, or letters testamentary or of administration granted, before any judge who is interested as next of kin to the decedent, or as legatee or devisee under the will, or when he is named as executor or trustee in the will, or is a witness thereto, or is in any manner interested or disqualified from acting." It has been held that an order extending time in a civil action, made by a judge who is disqualified by relationship, is absolutely void. Johnson v. German A. I. Co., 150 Cal. 339, 88 Pac. 985. The authorities of other states are to the effect that if a judge is a creditor of the decedent he is interested in the matter of the appointment of an administrator and in all other proceedings in the administration, within the meaning of similar statutes, and that if he assumes to make such an order it will be void. Sigourney v. Sibley, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 104, 32 Am. Dec. 248; Hall v. Thayer, 105 Mass. 222, 7 Am. Rep. 513; Aldrich's Case, 110 Mass. 193; Coffin v. Cottle, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 292; In re Cottle, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 483; Thornton v. Moore, 61 Ala. 354; Succession of Payne, 32 La. Ann. 355; Succession of Rhea, 31 La. Ann. 323; Burks v. Bennett, 62 Tex. 278; Moody v. Looscan, (Tex. Civ. App.) 44 S. W. 624; Bedell v. Bailey, 58 N. H. 62. In some of these cases the matter was presented on direct appeal, but in others the order was held to be void on collateral attack. The only authority that such an interest does not disqualify the judge, except in matters where he acts directly upon or in respect of his claim, is State v. Woody, 14 Mont. 457, 36 Pac. 1043. The question has not heretofore arisen in this court. If the foregoing sections are to be given the same construction as similar statutes have received in other states, it must be admitted that the interest of a judge as a creditor of the decedent will disqualify him to act as judge in proceedings for the administration of the estate. There is another section of the Code which must be considered and which we think shows that the Legislature did not intend to disqualify a creditor judge to act generally in proceedings for administration, but only where the act directly affects his claim. Section 1495, so far as material, is as follows: "Any judge of a superior court may present a claim against the estate of a decedent for allowance to the executor or administrator thereof, and if the executor or administrator allows the claim, he must, in writing, designate some other judge of the superior court of the same or an adjoining county, who, upon the presentation of such claim to him, is vested with power to allow or reject it."

Under sections 170 and 1430, if the interest of the judge as a creditor of the decedent disqualified him to act, the only method to pursue would be to transfer the matter to some other county, if there was only one judge in the county, or to some other department of the court, if there were more than one. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 397, 398. In such a case, there would be no necessity for any provision for the designation of another judge to allow or reject his claim, for the entire proceeding would be had before some other judge. The purpose of section 1495 evidently was to provide for the case of the judge who is in charge, so to speak, of the proceedings in administration and who is a creditor of the decedent, and to afford means whereby he may obtain the allowance or rejection of his claim. It refers to that judge alone. It implies that the administration proceedings are pending before the judge who has the claim against the estate, that he has acted in the other matters of the administration, including the claims of other creditors, and that it is necessary to provide a special mode of passing upon his debt because as to that he is disqualified by the other sections of the Code above quoted. The necessary inference from its enactment is that he is not, by reason of being a creditor, necessarily disqualified in other proceedings in the same estate, except where his debt gives him a direct interest in the matter to be done. Our conclusion is that the several provisions of the Code on the subject, when considered in connection with each other, are not to be construed to provide that the interest of a judge as a creditor of the decedent necessarily disqualifies him to act in other matters in the proceeding, and that they do not forbid him to act in granting letters, or make his order to that effect necessarily void or voidable.

Possibly if a creditor applied for letters, the judge, being equally interested and equally entitled, might be deemed to be directly interested in that application, and therefore disqualified. Perhaps, also, the fact that the judge was a creditor, taken in connection with the solvency or insolvency of the particular estate, its condition and other facts, might establish bias or prejudice, or an actual personal interest in the appointment which would disqualify him under subdivision 4 of section 170, but that objection would be waived if not made at the time. We do not express any opinion as to either of these contingencies, for the appointment of Gray was a preferred one, he having been appointed as the nominee of the widow, under subdivision 1 of section 1365. If he was a competent person, the judge had no right of discretion to do otherwise than appoint him. In such a case, at least, the interest of the judge as a creditor, should not disqualify him, or render that and subsequent proceedings absolutely void.

We are led to this conclusion the more readily by a consideration of the consequences that might ensue if it were held that the fact that the judge who appoints an administrator was a creditor of the decedent, would render all proceedings void, and that it could be shown collaterally, even after the administration was closed, to invalidate all that had been done, including final distribution. We have no information as to the usual practice or custom, but the fact that the judge acted in the estate of Turner, although a creditor, and that he continued to act for several years after his relation as a creditor was known to all parties concerned in a large estate, without any objection or protest ever having been made by any one, justifies the inference that there are frequent instances of the same kind. It might easily happen that a judge having a small debt against a decedent would not recall the fact at the time. One may, indeed, become a creditor of another without being aware of the fact at the time, as, for example, a creditor of a corporation, is a creditor of each stockholder, although he may not know one of them.

The claim might be presented in the name of another person, although owned by the judge. If the fact alone disqualifies the judge and renders all proceedings void, it need not appear in the record. No person whose title to property was obtained through probate proceedings could regard his title as secure or safe against such an impeachment. While there might be rare instances in which, because of such interest, a judge would act unfairly or unjustly in such matters, it is apparent that the injustice from that cause would be very slight as compared with that which would ensue if the rule was that such interest made the entire administration void.

Having reached this conclusion the necessary consequence is that the action was barred, under any theory of the case. Defendants further contend that inasmuch as the letters to Elizabeth Turner were issued on June 23, 1902, and the plaintiffs presented their claim to her on May 5, 1904, and began this action on July 18, 1904, the action was again barred after the issuance of such letters. Plaintiff, in answer to this, shows that on August 19, 1902, it appealed from the order of June 23, 1902, appointing Elizabeth Turner administratrix, which appeal was pending until April 20, 1904, and, upon that fact, it is claimed that the issuance of the letters to her did not take effect until the appeal was determined, and that therefore the year from such issuance had not run when the action was begun. We find it unnecessary to decide as to this controversy, since the action was barred before the death of Gray.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

to the whole record of the inferior court and to the evidence, where necessary to determine the jurisdictional fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Certiorari, Cent. Dig. §§ 33, 41, 174, 175, 183, 184; Dec. Dig. §§ 28, 64.*]

3. INJUNCTION (§ 27*) — APPEAL — JURISDICTION.

Where a superior court has no jurisdiction of an appeal from a justice's court because of defects in the appeal, the superior court may be restrained from proceeding to hear and determine the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 51–53; Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

4. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 159*)—APPEAL—REQUISITES.

The superior court acquired jurisdiction on appeal from a justice's court under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 974, 978, 978a, authorizing appeals from justice's courts within 30 days after judgment by filing notice of appeal with the judge and serving a copy, and by filing an undertaking within five days after the filing of the notice of appeal, and providing for notice of the filing of the undertaking, and authorizing the adverse party to except to the sufficiency of the sureties within five days after the filing of the undertaking, where the party aggrieved complied with the statute within 30 days from the rendition of the judgment, though he did not give notice of the filing of the undertaking within five days thereof; the adverse party not complaining that he had no opportunity to except to the sureties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 550–578; Dec. Dig. § 159.*]

5. MANDAMUS (§ 31*)—COMPELLING INFERIOR COURT TO ACT.

Where the superior court acquired jurisdiction on appeal from a justice's court, but erroneously determined that it was without jurisdiction, mandamus would lie to compel it to proceed to a trial of the action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 74, 75; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

Petition by the Golden Gate Tile Company against the Superior Court of State of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco and another for a writ of review. Writ of mandate issued.

Fisher Ames and Ames & Manning, for petitioner. L. P. Dunkley and Henry C. Schaertzer, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Petitioner asked for a writ of review, directed to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco and Hon. Thomas F. Graham, one of the judges thereof. Upon reading and considering said petition, this court, being of the opinion that the appropriate remedy under the facts stated was an alternative writ of mandate, such writ was accordingly issued.

There is no controversy respecting the facts alleged in the petition, which, briefly stated, are as follows: On October 27, 1909, judgment was entered for the plaintiff in the justice's court of the city and county of San Francisco, in the case of H. S. Ripley v. Golden Gate Tile Co., a corporation. On November 3, 1909, defendant regularly served

(159 Cal. 474)

GOLDEN GATE TILE CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA, CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (S. F. 5,509.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 13, 1911.)

1. MANDAMUS (§ 31*)—COMPELLING ACTION BY INFERIOR COURT.

Mandamus lies to compel an inferior court to act when it has neglected or refused to act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 74, 75; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

2. CERTIORARI (§§ 28, 64*)—REMEDY—EXCESS OF JURISDICTION BY INFERIOR COURT.

A writ of review is proper when an inferior court exceeds its jurisdiction, and, while not a writ of error or appeal by which the mere manner of conducting the proceedings, the rulings of the court on questions of evidence, and other matters within the jurisdiction involving the merits can be reviewed, it is the means by which the power of the court can be inquired into, and for such purpose the review extends and filed its notice of appeal from said judgment and on the same day an undertaking on appeal was duly filed. On the 24th of November, 1909, notice of the filing of said undertaking was duly served on plaintiff's attorneys and filed. It will be seen that all of these transactions occurred within a period of 28 days. Subsequently a motion to dismiss the appeal was made, and after a hearing by the court was granted. The ground of the motion was that the appellant had not complied with the provisions of section 978a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The first question which we shall determine is this: Conceding that the superior court's finding that it was without jurisdiction to consider the case on appeal was erroneous, may this court by a writ of mandamus compel it to proceed to a trial of the action? For a long time this court held that, where a superior court erroneously concludes that it is without jurisdiction to try a cause appealed from a justice's court, its action in dismissing the appeal cannot be disturbed. That the court now inclines to a different doctrine is evidenced in the granting of the alternative writ herein, as well as in making peremptory by an order from the bench a similar writ in the Matter of R. B. Vinson, S. F. No. 5,472.¹ The facts in that case were as follows: A notice and an undertaking on appeal were filed, but the sureties having failed to justify after exception, a second motion was filed and all the steps required to perfect the appeal were taken within the time prescribed by law. This court held that the first attempted appeal was ineffectual for any purpose; that the other appeal was properly perfected; and that the superior court should proceed to try the cause. In the Matter of Vinson, application for a writ had been made to the District Court of Appeal of the First appellate district. Being unable to agree, the justices of that court filed separate opinions, setting forth their views.

Mr. Justice Kerrigan, in his opinion, while conceding that the case of Buckley v. Superior Court, 96 Cal. 119, 31 Pac. 8, was opposed to petitioner's contention, called attention to the fact that a later decision had thrown doubt upon the correctness of the rule announced in that case. In an elaborate opinion he reached the conclusion that a writ of mandate should issue. That portion of his opinion applicable to the case at bar is hereby adopted. It is as follows:

"Mandamus lies to compel an inferior court to act when it has neglected or refused to do so. 19 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 827. A writ of review is the proper remedy when such a court has acted, but in acting has exceeded its jurisdiction. Spelling on Injunctions and other Extraordinary Remedies, vol. 2, § 1958.

"Where a superior court has no jurisdiction of an appeal from a justice's court, because, for example, of some defect in the appeal, the superior court may be restrained from proceeding to hear and determine such a case. Swem v. Monroe, 148 Cal. 741, 83 Pac. 1074; Crowley L. & T. Co. v. Sup. Ct., 10 Cal. App. 342, 101 Pac. 935; S. P. R. R. Co. v. Sup. Ct., 59 Cal. 471; Rickey v. Sup. Ct., 59 Cal. 661; Lewis v. Sup. Ct., 11 Cal. App. 483, 105 Pac. 763. And it would seem that the converse of this proposition must be true, and that where a court has jurisdiction of a cause, it should not be permitted, by an arbitrary or erroneous order, to divest itself of jurisdiction, but it should be compelled to proceed with the case to judgment. Under the circumstances mentioned, it has been held that either writ is proper. Snover v. Tinsman, 38 N. J. Law, 210. One line of cases holds that, where a court has jurisdiction, but determines that it has not, and for that reason dismisses the appeal, thus depriving a party of a hearing, such court may be required to vacate the order dismissing the appeal and to proceed with the trial of the cause; that such a dismissal of the appeal is nothing more or less than a refusal to proceed in the action, and comes within the general rule that, when a court having jurisdiction refuses to act on the ground that it has not jurisdiction, it may be compelled to do so.

"In the case of Washington v. Hunter, 3 Wash. 92, 27 Pac. 1076, the superior court had erroneously dismissed an appeal from the justice's court on the theory that there was a defect in the appeal, and that therefore it was without jurisdiction. Mandamus was there held to be the proper remedy to compel the superior court to proceed with the cause.

"Merrill on Mandamus, after reviewing the authorities on the question whether mandamus lies in case of the erroneous dismissal of an appeal by an inferior court, says (at pages 256 and 257, § 205): 'The weight of authority seems to be that a writ of mandamus will lie in all cases to compel the reinstatement of an appeal, except when another remedy * * * is provided by statute.' Again in section 203 he says: 'When a court refuses to proceed to try a cause, erroneously deciding that it has no jurisdiction, it will be compelled by the writ of mandamus to assume jurisdiction and proceed with the cause.' See, also, section 206.

"In the case of State ex rel. v. Philips, 97 Mo. 331, 10 S. W. 855, 3 L. R. A. 476, after citing and quoting from a great many cases, the court says (at page 346): 'The weight of authority, and certainly of reason, would seem to say that, if the lower court has plainly erred on a point of practice, either by misapprehending its own rules or a plain rule of law, and in consequence has dismissed an appeal, mandamus will lie to correct and remedy the erroneous or arbitrary exercise of its discretion, notwithstanding it has acted.'

¹ No opinion.

Cal. Rep. 114-117 P.—11

"And in Re Parker, 120 U. S. 737, 7 Sup. Ct. 767, 30 L. Ed. 818, the superior court of Washington Territory had decided upon a hearing that the appeal had not been properly taken, that it had no jurisdiction, and therefore dismissed it. But the Supreme Court of the United States, by a writ of mandate, compelled the superior court to reinstate the case and to proceed to trial.

"Again, in Harrington v. Holler, 111 U. S. 796, 4 Sup. Ct. 697, 28 L. Ed. 602, it was held that a dismissal was a refusal to hear and decide a cause, and that mandamus was the proper remedy to compel the court to entertain the case and to proceed with its determination. See, also, Hollon Parker, Petitioner, 131 U. S. 221, 9 Sup. Ct. 708, 33 L. Ed. 123; Ex parte Bradstreet, 7 Pet. 634, 8 L. Ed. 810; State ex rel. v. Laughlin, 75 Mo. 358; Fabretti v. Superior Court, 77 Cal. 305, 307, 19 Pac. 481; People ex rel. v. Scates, 3 Scam. (Ill.) 351, cited in Avery v. Superior Court, 57 Cal. 249. This is the doctrine in Alabama and Michigan.

"Under the authorities just referred to, it not only appears that under circumstances such as are present here the aggrieved party is entitled to relief, but also that mandamus is the appropriate remedy. However, according to another view, a writ of certiorari is the proper remedy. But the pleadings are in such shape here that I think that the petitioner is unembarrassed by the question of remedy. The petition in this proceeding sets forth that the superior court refused to proceed with the trial of the case, and a writ of mandate is prayed for; and, if it were not for certain allegations in the answer of respondent, the petitioner would fail or succeed as he is entitled or not to a writ of mandate. But the undenied facts set forth in the petition, with the allegations of the answer and the exhibits attached, show a sufficient application for a writ of review. The two pleadings embrace all the matters and things that would be required in such an application. It is true that the petitioner prays for a writ of mandate, but, notwithstanding this, or what he may denominate the proceeding, he may be granted the relief to which the admitted facts show him entitled. Perhaps, when respondent drew his answer setting forth the record of the proceedings in the lower court, he was in the same frame of mind as at the time of the oral argument before this court when, in effect, he waived any objection to the remedy.

"With the exception of the case of Buckley v. Sup. Ct., 96 Cal. 119, 31 Pac. 8, and a few cases in this state following it, and a case in Utah (Crooks v. District Court, 21 Utah, 98, 59 Pac. 529), which also follows it, and which like it was decided by a divided court, I have been unable to find any authority holding, as those cases seem to hold, that neither the writ of mandate nor the writ of certiorari will lie to review the erroneous dismissal of an appeal from an inferior court. No doubt in some jurisdictions in such a case it would be held that the court had acted, and that therefore certiorari, and not mandamus, is the proper remedy. Such was the determination of the court in Levy v. Sup. Ct., 66 Cal. 292, 5 Pac. 353, where, for a supposed insufficiency in the undertaking, a justice's court appeal was dismissed. The court held that mandamus was not the appropriate remedy, and said: 'A mandate that the superior court proceed to a hearing of the appeal on the merits, or to a retrial of the issue, would not annul, but simply ignore, the order dismissing the appeal. The order must first be annulled by a direct proceeding; that is, by certiorari. Such is the remedy when a court has entered a judgment or made an order in excess of its jurisdiction.' The court also said: 'That court can neither give to itself jurisdiction by holding an insufficient undertaking sufficient, nor divest itself of jurisdiction by holding a sufficient bond insufficient.'

"In Hall v. Superior Court, 68 Cal. 24, 8 Pac. 509, through a mistaken conception of the law a justice's court appeal was dismissed, and an application for a writ of certiorari was granted. See, also, Hall v. Sup. Ct., 71 Cal. 550, 12 Pac. 672; Carlson v. Sup. Ct., 70 Cal. 628, 11 Pac. 788.

"In Myrick v. Sup. Ct., 68 Cal. 98, 8 Pac. 648, the justice's court upon motion dismissed the action on the ground that the complaint had not been indorsed 'Filed' as required by law. An appeal was taken upon questions both of law and fact to the superior court, and over an objection the superior court tried the case upon those issues and rendered a judgment. There it was held that the superior court had exceeded its jurisdiction; that the judgment was void and should be annulled.

"In Null v. Superior Court, 4 Cal. App. 207, 87 Pac. 392, it was held that the superior court having improperly tried an appeal de novo from a justice's court, and rendered judgment thereon, such judgment will be annulled upon certiorari.

"If an inferior court should make a finding in favor of its jurisdiction, basing the finding on conflicting evidence, it must be conceded that such a determination would be conclusive upon this court; but where there is no conflict in the evidence, thus presenting a clear question of law only, and an inferior court holds that it has jurisdiction when under the uncontradicted evidence it has not, then its judgment may be annulled on writ of review. 'While a writ of review is not a writ of error, and is not a means by which, as upon appeal, the mere manner of conducting the proceedings, the rulings of the court upon questions of evidence, and other matters within the jurisdiction, involving the merits, however erroneous they may be, can be reviewed, it is nevertheless a means by which the power of the court in the premises can be inquired into; and for this purpose the review extends, not only to the whole of the record of the court below, but even to the evidence itself, where necessary to determine the jurisdictional fact.' Schwartz v. Sup. Ct., 111 Cal. 106, 43 Pac. 580; Whitney v. Board of Delegates, 14 Cal. 479.

"In many cases jurisdictional facts may not appear of record, either by failure of the inferior court or officer to follow the requirements of the law and make them of record, or because the law does not require it to be done. In such cases this court, and all other courts having jurisdiction to review and correct the proceedings of inferior courts, would be powerless, unless it can compel the inferior tribunal to certify to this court, not only what is technically denominated the record, but such facts, or the evidence of them, as may be necessary to determine whatever questions as to the jurisdiction of the inferior tribunal may be involved, and the grossest abuses of power, to the great reproach of the law, might be perpetrated with impunity and without the possibility of a remedy.' Blair v. Hamilton, 32 Cal. 49. See, also, 6 Cyc. 827; Stumpf v. Board of Supervisors, 131 Cal. 364, 63 Pac. 663, 82 Am. St. Rep. 350; 4 Ency. of Plead. & Prac. 262; Los Angeles v. Young, 118 Cal. 295, 50 Pac. 534, 62 Am. St. Rep. 234.

"The case of Buckley v. Sup. Ct., 96 Cal. 119, 31 Pac. 8, is opposed to this doctrine, but the views expressed in the dissenting opinion, concurred in by Beatty, C. J., are warranted, it would seem, by examination of the authorities. Prior to that decision, the Supreme Court of this state had held that the erroneous dismissal of a justice's court appeal was subject to review. Levy v. Sup. Ct., supra; Hall v. Sup. Ct., supra; Carlson v. Sup. Ct., supra. In Bergevin, etc., Co. v. Wood, 11 Cal. App. 643, 105 Pac. 935, it is said that the rule laid down in the Buckley Case is 'liable to be pressed so far as virtually to destroy the operation of the writ of review in relation to the proceedings of the superior court.' And the same court in another case (Pacific Window Glass Co. v. Smith, 8 Cal. App. 762, 97 Pac. 898) decided that certiorari would lie to annul the wrongful dismissal of an appeal from the justice's court. In the case of Laws v. Troutt, 147 Cal. 174, 81 Pac. 401, this question, it appears, was again presented, but the case was decided upon another point; nevertheless in referring to the Buckley Case it is intimated by the court that the correctness of that decision is doubtful.

"The function of the writs of mandamus and review is often much the same; yet, under circumstances such as prevail here, and leaving out of consideration the California cases hereinbefore referred to which were reversed by the Buckley Case, the writ of mandamus has been invariably granted, and when not granted it has generally been because there was another remedy by writ of error or by appeal. Merrill on Mandamus, § 205 et seq. Here the appeal was perfected, and the superior court had jurisdiction, and it should have proceeded to entertain and decide the cause. Entertaining these views, it is my opinion that the writ of mandamus should issue as prayed for."

We now come to the discussion of the merits of the question whether or not the superior court obtained jurisdiction of the appeal. This involves an examination of sections 974, 978, and 978a of the Code of Civil Procedure. The first-named section provides that the aggrieved party may appeal at any time within 30 days after the rendition of judgment, and that "the appeal is taken by filing a notice of appeal with the justice or judge and serving a copy on the adverse party." Section 978 is to the effect that an appeal from a justice's court is ineffectual for any purpose without the filing of the undertaking therein prescribed. Section 978a is as follows: "The undertaking on appeal must be filed within five days after the filing of the notice of appeal and notice of the filing of the undertaking must be given to the respondent. The adverse party may except to the sufficiency of the sureties within five days after the filing of the undertaking, and unless they or other sureties justify before the justice or judge within five days thereafter, upon notice to the adverse party, to the amounts stated in their affidavits, the appeal must be regarded as if no such undertaking had been given."

Respondents contend that under the section last quoted the notice of the filing of the undertaking on appeal must be served at the time of such filing, so that the adverse party may have five days after the filing and notice in which to except to the sureties. The statute does not so provide. While the undertaking on appeal must be filed within five days after the filing of notice of appeal, no time is specified during which notice of the filing of the undertaking must be given to the respondent. It is contended, however, that as respondents' five days within which exception to the sureties may be taken runs from the filing of the undertaking, and not from the notice of such filing, appellant might deprive his adversary of the right of questioning the sufficiency of the sureties by the simple device of waiting more than five days before giving notice—that the very object of the Code section is to save a successful litigant from the trouble of daily inspection of the justice's record to learn whether or not the losing party has filed an undertaking. Perhaps that was the purpose of the Legislature in enacting said section 978a, and perhaps, in a case where that question was involved, we might determine that the period of five days allowed respondent for exception to the sureties begins to run only after the service of notice upon him. Such construction would be reasonable, and would be just as readily reached under the language of the statutes as one requiring almost contemporaneous filing of an appeal bond and service of notice on the opposite party. But, without reading anything into any of these Code sections, we find, first, that appellant has 30 days from the rendition of judgment within which to appeal; second, that his first step is the filing of a notice of appeal and service thereof on the adverse party (Code Civ. Proc. § 974); third, that to make his appeal effectual he must file the required undertaking (section 978, Code Civ. Proc.); fourth, that said undertaking on appeal must be filed within five days after the filing of the notice of appeal; fifth, that respondent must be given notice of the filing of the undertaking (section 978a). All of these things were done by appellant within 30 days after rendition of judgment. Respondent is not here complaining that he had no chance to except to the sureties. Practically he wishes us to add the word "immediately" at the end of the first sentence of section 978a, Code of Civil Procedure, so that the latter part of that sentence would read, "and notice of the filing of the undertaking must be given to the respondent immediately." He asks us to interpolate a word in this section that the Legislature did not put there, and, after doing so, to declare that jurisdiction of the appeal was never obtained by the superior court, because appellant did not supply the missing word and act upon its direction. We cannot agree with any such contention. The necessary steps to give the superior court jurisdiction of the appeal were all taken. The said appeal was regularly and properly before that court, and petitioner is therefore entitled to a writ of mandate.

Let the writ issue accordingly.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(159 Cal. 599)

SESSIONS et al. v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.
et al. (S. F. 5356.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 23, 1911.
Rehearing Denied April 21, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 339*)—TIME TO APPEAL—APPEAL FROM JUDGMENT.

The Supreme Court has no jurisdiction of an appeal from a judgment taken more than six months after entry thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 339.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 358*)—SPECIAL INTERROGATORIES—INCONSISTENT ANSWERS.

Special findings of the jury in reply to interrogatories which are in direct conflict with other special findings and with the uncontradicted evidence must be disregarded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 856; Dec. Dig. § 358.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 282*)—INJURIES TO PASSENGERS—TRESPASSER—FRAUD OF PASSENGER—"PASSENGER WITHOUT REWARD."

A person who obtains free passage on a passenger train from the conductor by means of fraud or misrepresentation, or with knowledge of the want of authority on the part of the conductor to allow such free passage, is not a lawful passenger without reward within Civ. Code, § 2096, requiring ordinary care and diligence for his safe carriage, but is a mere trespasser, entitled only to demand that he be not willfully or recklessly injured.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1107, 1108, 1115, 1116; Dec. Dig. § 282.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 318*)—PASSENGERS—TRESPASSERS—EVIDENCE.

In an action for the negligent killing of a person in a rear end collision between defendant's trains, evidence held to show that decedent took passage on the train pursuant to an arrangement with the conductor for free passage, and knowing that the conductor had no right to allow him to ride free, rendering him merely a trespasser on the train, to whom the carrier was not liable for injuries, unless willfully or wantonly inflicted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 318.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by Ella A. Sessions and another against the Southern Pacific Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Appeal from judgment dismissed, and order denying a new trial reversed.

Frank McGowan and McGowan, Squires & Westlake (Wm. F. Herrin and P. F. Dunne, of counsel), for appellants. W. B. Rinehart and Welles Whitmore, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an action to recover damages arising from the death of Charles A. Sessions, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendants. The plaintiffs are, respectively, the widow and the only child of the decedent. They recovered judgment for $5,000 in the court below. In addition to the general verdict the jury made answer to certain questions of fact. The defendants moved the court under section 663 of the Code of Civil Procedure for judgment in their favor upon the answers to these questions. The court denied the motion. The defendants' motion for new trial was also denied. From the judgment and from these orders the defendants appeal. The verdict and judgment were against the Southern Pacific Company alone. It would seem, therefore, that the defendant Cole is not aggrieved and has no right of appeal, but, as the objection is not raised, we will not consider the question. [1] The appeal from the judgment was taken more than six months after it was entered. This court therefore has no jurisdiction thereof, and that appeal must be dismissed.

In support of the appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial, it is contended that the verdict is not sustained by the evidence, and that the court erred in giving and refusing instructions and in rulings upon the admission of evidence. In view of our conclusion as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the general verdict and one of the special findings, it will be unnecessary to consider the appeal from the order refusing to enter judgment for the defendants or the rulings upon instructions and upon the admission of evidence.

The defendant company was operating a railroad running from the Oakland mole in Alameda county, through the city of Fresno to Los Angeles. At the time of his death, December 20, 1902, Sessions was on board one of the company's passenger trains known as the "Owl" on a trip from Oakland to Fresno. At Byron station another train operated by the company ran into the rear coach of the "Owl" train, and Sessions was killed by the collision. The complaint alleges that Sessions had paid for his passage, and was riding as a passenger on said train. The principal controversy at the trial and upon this appeal is over the question whether he did sustain that relation to the company or was a trespasser on the train. [2] In answer to interrogatories the jury found that Sessions did not purchase a ticket for the trip, nor pay any money or other consideration therefor, and that he accepted free passage on the train by invitation of the conductor in charge thereof. In answer to other interrogatories, the jury found that Sessions was not riding on the train by invitation of the conductor or with the understanding between him and the conductor that he should ride without paying fare, but, as these findings are inconsistent with the findings first above stated, and are also contrary to the undisputed evidence, they will be disregarded. The evidence, without substantial conflict, showed the following facts. A man named Teeple had been running the "Owl" train as conductor from Oakland as far as Fresno for about two weeks prior to the day of the accident, in place of one Dolan, the regular conductor, who had been sick. On that day, in Oakland, an hour or two before the train left the mole, Teeple arranged with Sessions to carry Sessions on the "Owl" train from the Oakland mole to Fresno and back to Oakland without charge and as his guest; it being arranged that Sessions was to take the train at the mole. When Sessions arrived at the mole, Teeple had learned that Dolan had resumed work, and would take out the "Owl" train on that trip. Teeple then gave Sessions an old and expired trip pass running to Teeple and told Sessions to hand it to the conductor, Dolan, when he came to collect tickets on the train, and that Dolan would punch it and hand it back to him. Teeple then saw Dolan and arranged with him to punch the pass as if it were a ticket, and allow Sessions to ride on the train free in pursuance of the agreement he, Teeple, had made with Sessions. Under this arrangement, Sessions entered the train and began the trip. When Dolan came around to collect the tickets, Sessions handed him the pass and Dolan took it, punched it, and handed it back to Sessions, as Teeple had directed. Thereafter Sessions continued on the train until the collision occurred. A rule of the company forbade the carrying of passengers without payment of fare.

There is some conflict in the authorities with respect to the degree of care due from a carrier to a passenger who does not pay fare for his passage and is carried free. In this state, however, the question is settled by sections 2096 and 2100 of the Civil Code, which are as follows:

"Sec. 2096. A carrier of persons without reward must use ordinary care and diligence for their safe carriage."

"Sec. 2100. A carrier of persons for reward must use the utmost care and diligence for their safe carriage, must provide everything necessary for that purpose, and must exercise to that end a reasonable degree of skill."

Both parties devote much space in their brief to a discussion of the questions whether or not the company under the circumstances was bound to use the utmost care and diligence for the safe carriage of Sessions or only ordinary care to that end, and to the question whether or not the conductor of a train is presumed to have authority to carry a passenger free or is presumed not to have such authority. We do not find it necessary to consider at length these propositions. One of the propositions of the appellant is that the company never made any lawful contract to carry Sessions as a passenger or at all, that he rode on the train by means of a fraudulent contrivance with the conductor, and that his status was that of a trespasser toward whom the company owed no duty except to avoid doing him a willful or wanton injury. There is no evidence sufficient to show that the collision which caused the death of Sessions was due to the willful or wanton negligence or recklessness of the company. This being the case, it follows that if the decedent was, at the time of the collision, a trespasser on the train, the company is not liable in damages for his death. [3] It is well settled by the authorities, and in fact it is not controverted by the plaintiffs, that if a person obtains free passage on a passenger train from the conductor by means of fraud or misrepresentation, or with knowledge of the want of authority of the conductor to allow such free passage, such person does not become a lawful passenger without reward under section 2096 aforesaid, but is a mere trespasser, entitled only to demand that he be not willfully or recklessly injured. Condman v. Chicago, etc., Co., 67 Fed. 522, 14 C. C. A. 506, 28 L. R. A. 749; McVeety v. St. Paul, etc., Co., 45 Minn. 268, 47 N. W. 809, 11 L. R. A. 174, 22 Am. St. Rep. 728; Louisville, etc., Co. v. Thompson, 107 Ind. 442, 8 N. E. 18, 9 N. E. 357, 57 Am. Rep. 120; Purple v. Union, etc., Co., 114 Fed. 123, 51 C. C. A. 564, 57 L. R. A. 703. Many other decisions could be cited to the same effect. It is not necessary to extend the list. The jury found specially that Sessions did not accept free passage on that trip with the intent to defraud the defendant company. [4] This finding is clearly contrary to the evidence above related. The arrangement which was made by Teeplees and Dolan to allow Sessions to ride on the train without payment of fare was sufficient to inform him, or at least to give him good cause to believe, that the conductor of that train had no authority to carry him without charge. The very terms of the agreement and the manner in which it was to be carried out, of all of which he was fully aware, were sufficient to cause him, as a reasonable man, to believe that it was contrary to the rules of the company to allow him free passage. The obvious purpose in giving him the expired pass to be handed to the conductor to be punched and returned as if it were a ticket was to prevent any agent of the company or any person who might inform the company of the fact from discovering that the conductor was allowing Sessions to ride without presenting a ticket. There is no other reasonable explanation of the device. It was a plan designed and carried out to conceal the evasion of the payment of fare, and the only fair inference from the making of it would be that the conductor was required by the company to exact payment of fare or a ticket from every person riding on the train. The decedent was thereby charged with knowledge of this lack of authority to pass him free. He was in collusion with the conductor to defraud the company of the amount of his fare. Under the authorities cited, his status was that of a trespasser, and not that of a passenger. The special finding was therefore contrary to the evidence, and the defendant was not liable in damages for causing his death unless it had been guilty of willful or wanton injury which the evidence does not show. The court should have granted the motion for a new trial.

It is ordered that the appeal from the judgment be dismissed, that the judgment be vacated, and that the order denying a motion for a new trial be reversed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

150 Cal. 581

ROBISON v. MITCHEL et al. (L. A. 2,595.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 20, 1911.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 132*)—NOTICE OF COMPLETION OF WORK—STATUTES.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, as amended by Laws 1897, c. 141, requiring the owner within 10 days after the completion of the work to file a notice of the date of completion, or he will be estopped from maintaining a defense to liens on the ground that they were not filed within the statutory time, an owner who recognizes the actual completion of the work must give the statutory notice, or he will be estopped in an action to foreclose liens from defending that the lien was not filed in the statutory time, but where he gives the notice the contractor and materialmen must file their liens within the statutory time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 190-207; Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

2. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 132*)—NOTICE OF COMPLETION OF WORK—STATUTES.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, as amended by Laws 1897, c. 141, requiring the owner within 40 days after cessation from labor on any unfinished contract or unfinished structure to file a notice of cessation, giving the date on which cessation actually occurred, etc., relates to structures on which work ceases while in an unfinished condition, and continuous cessation from labor for 30 days sets in motion the requirement of notice, and where the owner files the notice of cessation the original contractor and other lien claimants have specified times within which to file their claims of liens.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 190-207; Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

3. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 132*)—NOTICE OF COMPLETION OF WORK—STATUTES.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, as amended by Laws 1897, c. 141, providing that any trivial imperfections in the construction of work contracted for is not such a lack of completion as to prevent the filing of a lien, and in all cases the occupation of the work by the owner or his acceptance thereof, and cessation from labor for 30 days on any contract or any work, shall be equivalent to completion thereof for the purposes of the chapter relating to the enforcement of liens, deals with cases of apparent completion of the work which may not prove to be actual completion, and cases of apparent incompleteness which may prove actual completion, and unfinished structures are not deemed constructively completed where there has been cessation from labor for 30 days, and the owner to set the time running for the filing of liens, must file his notice of cessation, and occupancy or acceptance must be coupled with cessation from labor for 30 days on the structure before constructive completion is established, and the time set running for the filing of liens, and constructive completion by way of occupation or acceptance, applies to all cases, whether the work has been performed under contract or not.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 190-207; Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

4. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 132*)—NOTICE OF COMPLETION OF WORK—STATUTES—"CESSATION FROM LABOR."

In Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, as amended by Laws 1897, c. 141, requiring the owner to file a notice after "cessation from labor upon any unfinished contract or upon any unfinished building," and providing that all cases of the occupation of the work contracted for or acceptance thereof by the owner, and "cessation from labor for 30 days" on any contract or on any building, shall be deemed equivalent to the completion thereof for the purposes of the chapter relating to the enforcement of liens, the quoted phrases mean cessation from labor on the work by the contractor, and an owner who, on the contractor abandoning the work, proceeds therewith as authorized by the contract, or without such authorization, must give the statutory notice of cessation from labor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 190-207; Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

5. STATUTES (§ 205*)—CONSTRUCTION—LEGISLATIVE INTENT.

The court in construing a statute must resolve the meaning of obscure language thereof to reach the true legislative intent by a consideration of the whole statute, in view of the end sought to be attained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 282; Dec. Dig. § 205.*]

6. COURTS (§ 90*)—DECISIONS—CONCLUSIVE-NESS.

Where a decision of the Supreme Court in bank was overruled by a decision in department, and there was no petition for rehearing, so that the case was not called to the attention of the full bench, and no rule of property was involved, the Supreme Court in bank could adhere to its former decision.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 313-321, 351; Dec. Dig. § 90.*]

7. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 277*)—ENFORCEMENT—ISSUES.

Where the complaint to foreclose a materialman's lien alleged that the contractor abandoned the work on October 18th because of the refusal of the owner to perform his contract; that the owner on November 19th undertook to complete the work and proceeded to do so until June 15th following, at which time the building was completed; and the answer alleged that the contractor abandoned the work on October 18th, and that on November 19th the owner filed his notice of cessation, and that after October 18th the contractors never did any work on the building—the question whether there had been a cessation of labor for 30 days within Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, as amended by Laws 1897, c. 141, was not in issue, and a finding in conflict with the admissions of the pleadings could not be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 546-554; Dec. Dig. § 277.*]

8. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 132*)—MATERIAL-MAN'S LIEN—ENFORCEMENT.

Where a contractor abandoned the work, and the owner, who undertook to complete the work as authorized by the contract, filed within 40 days after the abandonment the notice of cessation required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, as amended by Laws 1897, c. 141, a claim of a materialman's lien must be filed within 30 days after the filing of notice of cessation, or the claim of lien could not be sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 190-207; Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by J. W. Robison against J. Burris Mitchel and another, partners, under the name of J. Burris Mitchel & Co., and others. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying a new trial, defendant Joseph W. Fawkes appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Gray, Barker, Bowen, Allen, Van Dyke & Jutten, for appellant. C. M. Stephens and Kendrick, Knott & Ardis, for respondent.

IIENSHAW, J. This action was by a materialman to foreclose his lien upon the property of defendant Fawkes for material furnished in the construction of a frame dwelling. Judgment passed for plaintiff, awarding him a lien, and from that judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial, the defendant Fawkes appeals.

The contractors for the construction of the building were copartners, doing business under the firm name of J. Burris Mitchel & Co. Their contract with appellant was in writing and valid. It contained the usual stipulation for partial payments, and provided that, if at any time during the progress of the work the contractors should refuse or neglect, without fault of the owner, to supply a sufficiency of material and workmen to complete the contract within the time limited, for the period of more than three days after having been notified by the owner in writing to furnish the same, the owner should have power to furnish and provide the material or workmen to finish the work, and the reasonable expense thereof should be deducted from the contract price. It also provided that, if the owner should delay a progress payment for more than five days after the date when such payment became due, at the option of the contractor this should be held to be a prevention by the owner of performance of the contract by the contractor.

It was over these provisions of the contract that difficulty arose. Work had progressed and progress payments had been made until the time came when the frame was up, and there became due under the terms of the contract a payment of $800. This payment the owner refused to make upon the ground of faulty and imperfect construction. The contractors refused to proceed until payment was made. The owner thereupon gave the notice contemplated by the contract, calling upon the contractors to continue with the work, and upon the contractors' failure and refusal so to do for a period of more than three days the owner proceeded with the construction and completed the building. It will thus be seen that the contractors' position was that the contract was violated by the owner in his unwarranted refusal to make a proper payment when it became due. Upon the other hand, the owner's position was that the payment was not due because of faulty construction, and that the contractors' refusal to proceed with the work after notice given justified him, under the contract, in pushing the work to completion. The court found, in effect, that the contractors had not violated the contract, that the refusal of the owner to make the payment was unwarranted, and consequently that the contractors had been unlawfully prevented by the acts of the owner from prosecuting the contract, and the owner's completion of the building was not, therefore, in conformity with the terms of the contract, but in violation thereof.

The owner's notice to the contractors to proceed with the work was given upon October 15, 1906. Upon November 19, 1906, the owner filed for record his verified notice of cessation, as contemplated by the opening paragraph of section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Therein he declared that J. Burris Mitchel & Co. had abandoned work, that the abandonment occurred upon the 18th day of October, 1906, and that since the abandonment, and for more than 30 days and less than 40 days, the contractors had done no work upon the building and improvements under the contract, and that the owner is now proceeding to complete the building. It is a fact that the contractors ceased labor from the date mentioned and never resumed labor upon the building, but the court found that there was no cessation from labor upon the unfinished building, under the belief that the owner himself undertook the completion of the building before there had been a cessation of labor thereon for the period of 30 days. The finding to this effect is attacked and will require examination. But for the present, considering the case made by the findings, it appears that the contractors ceased work under circumstances which the court finds justified their doing so, and the owner, before there had been a cessation from labor upon the unfinished contract or upon the unfinished structure for the period of 30 days, undertook the work of completion.

The lien in this case was admittedly filed within time after the actual completion of the building, but was not filed within time, if the notice of cessation and abandonment filed by the owner upon November 19, 1906, set running the statutory time for the filing of the lien.

The case thus demands a consideration and an analysis of section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1897 (Laws 1897, c. 141). That section deals:

(1) With the situation presented by actual completion recognized as such by the owner. [1] In such a case the owner must within 10 days after such completion file in the office of the county recorder of the county, a notice setting forth the date of completion, etc. If he does not do this, he is estopped, in any action brought to foreclose a lien upon his property, from maintaining as a defense that the lien has not been filed within the time prescribed by law. If he does do this, then the original contractor has 60 days after the filing of the notice, and other lien claimants have 30 days after the filing of the notice, within which to file their claims of lien, provided, however, that if the lien sought be for labor performed in a mining claim it must be filed within 30 days after the performance of the labor, without regard to the filing by the owner of any notice of completion, which, because of the character of the work, is in this instance unnecessary, if not impossible. It is further provided in this connection "that in any event all claims of lien must be filed within ninety days after the completion of said building, improvement or structure, or the alteration, addition to or repair thereof." This would seem to fix a time limit within which all liens must be filed, regardless of whether the owner has filed his notice of completion or not, and it gives rise to the question whether the statute which forbids the owner, who has failed to file the notice of completion, to make the defense that the lien has not been filed within the time provided by the chapter means to forbid him to make that defense in every case, or only in those cases where liens have been filed within 90 days after completion. But this question it is not necessary here to resolve.

(2) The section next takes up the reciprocal rights and duties of the owner and lien claimants, where for any cause there has been for 30 days "a cessation from labor upon any unfinished contract, or upon any unfinished building," etc. It is here to be noted that the continuous cessation from labor for 30 days, and this alone, is sufficient to set in motion the requirements of the statute. [2] Nothing less than cessation from labor for 30 days will meet the statutory exaction, and nothing more than a cessation from labor for 30 days is required. When there has been such cessation, it becomes the duty of the owner within 10 days thereafter to file the required notice of cessation or abandonment of work under the penalty above set forth for his failure so to do, namely, that he shall not be permitted to maintain a defense based on the ground that any lien has not been filed within the time provided. If, however, he does duly file the notice of cessation of labor, the original contractor has 60 days after the date of its filing, and all other persons 30 days after the date of the filing, within which to file their claims of lien; the exception to this being, as above, the case of labor bestowed upon a mining claim, where, without regard to the notice, the laborer must file his lien within 30 days after the performance of his work. These two provisions, grouped together in the language of section 1187, are for convenience of construction here separated. They have to do, first, with the building actually completed, and, second, with structures upon which work ceases while they are still in an unfinished condition.

(3) But it yet remained for the Legislature to make provision for that class of cases where the owner might not regard the building as completed, and yet where, for the purpose of protecting lien claimants and enabling them to enforce their liens, some time should be fixed without regard to the owner's views of completion. Therefore provision was made for what may be termed "constructive completion." Up to 1897, when section 1187 was amended to read as it now does, the law in this regard declared (a) that the occupation or use of the building by the owner or his representative, or (b) the acceptance by the owner or his agent of the building, should be deemed conclusive evidence of completion, whether the building was actually completed or not, and (c) that cessation from labor for 30 days upon any unfinished contract or upon any unfinished building should be deemed equivalent to a completion thereof. [3] In 1897 this section was again amended and remodeled to its present form. The changes which were made were the following: The owner was required to file a notice of completion or a notice of cessation of labor, requirements not in the earlier section. Cessation from labor upon any unfinished contract or structure for a period of 30 days was no longer to be "deemed equivalent to a completion," as in the earlier section, but provision was made that after any such cessation it became the duty of the owner to file a notice to that effect. If he did so, the time for filing liens began to run. If he did not do so, the time for filing liens was not set in motion. Another change was also made in the matter of constructive completion. The earlier section, as has been shown, made either one of three things evidence of constructive completion, namely, acceptance, occupation, or cessation from labor for 30 days. The amended section, the section as it now stands, makes different provision. It had already met the case of cessation from labor for 30 days upon an unfinished contract or structure. When it came to deal with constructive completion, it was no longer necessary for it to provide for the cases of unfinished buildings, but it was called upon to deal with those cases where there was apparent completion which might not in fact prove to be absolute completion, and cases where there was apparent incompleteness which might prove to be actual completion. It provided, first, after declaring that trivial imperfections should not avail to avoid completion, that the occupation or use of a building, improvement, or structure by the owner or his representative, together with cessation from labor for 30 days upon it, or, second, the acceptance by the owner or his agent of the building, together with cessation from labor for 30 days upon it, should, for the purposes of lien claimants, be deemed equivalent to a completion. Thus, while under the old law unfinished structures were deemed constructively completed when there had been cessation from labor for 30 days, under the present law they are not deemed constructively completed, and the owner to set the time running for the filing of liens must first file his notice of cessation. Again, while under the old law, either occupation or acceptance was deemed a completion which set in motion the time for filing liens, under the present law either or both the occupation and the acceptance must be coupled with cessation from labor for 30 days upon the structure before the constructive completion is established and the time set running. Also, under the present law, constructive completion by way of occupation or acceptance is made to apply to all cases, whether the work has been performed under contract or not, whereas, under the old law, such constructive completion was declared to apply only "in case of contracts." Marble Lime Co. v. Hotel Co., 96 Cal. 332, 31 Pac. 164.

[4] (4) One final matter in the construction of section 1187 demands consideration; that is the meaning of the phrases "cessation from labor upon any unfinished contract or upon any unfinished building," etc., found in the earlier part of the section, and "cessation from labor for 30 days upon any contract or upon any building," etc., found in the latter part of the section. Historically the first use of this language is in the amendment of 1887, which provided as follows: "And in case of contracts, the occupation or use of the building, improvement, or structure by the owner, or his representative, or the acceptance by said owner or his agent of said building, improvement, or structure, shall be deemed conclusive evidence of completion; and cessation from labor for thirty days upon any unfinished contract or upon any unfinished building, improvement, or structure, or the alteration, addition to, or repair thereof, shall be deemed equivalent to a completion thereof for all the purposes of this chapter." The most obvious and natural construction of this language would seem to be that the Legislature decreed that occupation or acceptance by the owner should be held conclusive evidence of completion in all cases where the work was done under contract, and that cessation from labor for the period of 30 days in all cases, whether the work was done under contract or not, should be deemed equivalent to a completion. That the language was not happily chosen to express this idea may be conceded. It is not an apposite use of words to speak of a "finished" or "unfinished" contract or to speak of cessation from labor upon a finished or unfinished contract. Apart from its context, the labor of "finishing" a contract means the labor of the contracting parties in agreeing upon its terms, and the labor of the scrivener in reducing those terms to writing after a meeting of the minds of the contracting parties. But, of course, in its context, an "unfinished contract" means that the terms, conditions, and requirements of one or the other party—the moving consideration—has not been accomplished or performed. [5] This instance is taken from the statute under consideration in exemplification of the fact that strict legal accuracy in terms and phrase is not to be expected in every legislative enactment, and that the courts will, and frequently must, resolve the meaning of obscure language to reach the true legislative intent. They do this through a consideration of the whole enactment, in view of the end sought to be attained.

In this case there can be little doubt that under the amendment of 1887 the dominant idea was to declare that cessation from labor for 30 days upon any unfinished work should be made the equivalent of an actual completion for the purpose of filing claims of lien, that the author of the bill had in the previous sentence declared that occupation or acceptance should be deemed completion only in the case of contracts, and that when next he came to treat of cessation from labor for 30 days he meant merely that cessation from labor for that period should be deemed a completion, whether the work was being prosecuted under a contract or not. It is not to be believed that the Legislature sought to indulge in overrefinements and to distinguish cessation from labor under a contract and cessation from labor where there was no contract, distinctions which could but lead to difficulty and confusion and to the frequent loss of just liens. To illustrate, take two cases in each of which the original contract between the owner and the contractor is valid. The one contains provision that in case of the abandonment by the contractor the owner may complete the work under the contract; the other does not. In each case the contractor gives notice to the owner of abandonment. In each case, before a cessation of labor for 30 days, or, indeed, without an hour's cessation from labor, the owner employs the same foreman, who in turn employs the same laborers, and completes the work himself. No notice is conveyed to the materialmen, or even to the subordinate employes, that there is any change at all in the nature or character of their employment. Under the view which we have given of the meaning of section 1187, no difference would result in the rights of any lien claimants. There having been no cessation from labor, the time for filing liens would not commence until after completion. But if it is to be held that cessation from labor upon an unfinished contract, without regard to the question whether or not there shall have been actual cessation from labor upon the work, is the controlling factor, then, of course, where the contract provided that the owner might continue the work under the contract there would have been no cessation from labor under the contract for 30 days, and lien claimants would have the time allowed for filing their liens after the owner had completed the structure. Whereas, in the other case, identical in all respects so far as outward appearances can go, the work would not have been done by the owner under the contract, there would have been a cessation from labor under the unfinished contract for a period of 30 days, and the lien claimants (under the earlier law) would forever have lost their liens, if they were not in some way able to discover the fact that the owner was prosecuting it, not under, but after abandonment of, the contract, because their time for filing liens would have begun 30 days after this undisclosed cessation from labor upon an unfinished contract.

That such was the original interpretation of this court may be gathered from a reading of Mill & Lumber Co. v. Olmstead, 85 Cal. 80, 24 Pac. 648; Willamette, etc., Co. v. College Co., 94 Cal. 229, 29 Pac. 629; and Marble Lime Co. v. Hotel Co., supra. [5] Subsequently this court, in the case of Johnson v. La Grave, 102 Cal. 324, 36 Pac. 651, declared that, though there was no cessation from labor on the structure for the period of 30 days, where there was cessation from labor upon an unfinished contract, even though labor on the building continued, there was a constructive completion which required the filing of lien claims after 30 days. This case, however, was decided in department. The case of Marble Lime Co. v. Hotel Co., supra, which it overruled (see note to Goodman v. Baerlocher, 43 Am. St. Rep. 902) was a decision in bank. It was not mentioned in the department opinion, nor cited in the briefs. There was no petition for a rehearing in Johnson v. La Grave, so that it was not called to the attention of the full bench, nor in any subsequent case was its interpretation affirmed or challenged. For these reasons, since no rule or property or of property rights can have arisen under it, no embarrassment or hardship will result from this present declaration of what we conceive to be the true construction. In this connection it should be added that, if the case of Baker v. Lake Land C. & I. Co., 7 Cal. App. 482, 94 Pac. 773, shall be thought in any respect to be at variance with the views here expressed, to that extent it must be considered superseded and overruled.

Making application of the construction thus given to the facts in the present case, we have a notice of cessation of labor filed by the owner, with a finding by the court that this cessation of labor did not continue for a period of 30 days. If this finding be within the issues and supported, plaintiff is entitled to his lien. In his attack upon this finding, appellant contends, first, that it is without the issues and contrary to the admissions in the pleadings, and, second, that it is unsupported by the evidence. [7] The first of these contentions is all that requires consideration, for an examination of the pleadings discloses that appellant's position is well founded. The complaint itself charges that the contractors "proceeded in the erection of said building upon said premises and continued in the said construction of said dwelling until about the 18th day of October, 1906; that on or about the last-mentioned date, according to plaintiff's information and belief, defendant Fawkes refused to carry out his said agreement with said defendants J. Burris Mitchel & Co., and thereafter, on or about the 19th day of November, 1906, undertook the completion of his said dwelling and proceeded to complete the same until the 15th day of June, 1907, at which time said structure was by said defendant Fawkes completed." The answer contains no denial of this allegation. To the contrary, it reaffirms it, alleging that the contractors abandoned their work on or about the 18th day of October, and that on the 19th day of November the defendant filed his notice of cessation; that after the 18th day of October the contractors never did any work upon the building, and after filing the notice of abandonment on the 19th of November, "and not before, this defendant undertook the completion of said work." It is apparent therefore that the question whether or not there had been a cessation of labor for a period of 30 days was not an issue in the case, and that the finding here made, in conflict with the admissions of the pleadings, cannot be considered. [8] It results, then, that there was a cessation from labor upon the unfinished structure for a period of 30 days; that appellant's notice of cessation was filed within 10 days thereafter as required by law, and that plaintiff's claim of lien, not having been filed within 30 days after the filing of such notice of cessation, is too late. Consequently the judgment of the trial court was erroneous in decreeing plaintiff a lien and in directing a sale of appellant's property to satisfy the same.

The trial court is therefore directed to modify its judgment in accordance with the foregoing.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.; SLOSS, J.

159 Cal. 592

LOGAN v. GUICHARD et al. (S. F. 5,462.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 21, 1911.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 152*)—APPROPRIATION—DIVERSION — INJUNCTION — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence in a suit to abate a water ditch over plaintiff's land which defendant claimed the right to maintain by prescription as well as the right to divert water through it held not to show the quantity of water which defendant had diverted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 157; Dec. Dig. § 152.*]

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 143*)—PRESCRIPTION.

In order to support a prescriptive right to take water from a stream at a point on another's land, the claimant must show that they have taken some definite quantity of water therefrom in the past; it being insufficient merely to show that they have taken some water.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 152; Dec. Dig. § 143.*]

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 138*)—ADVERSE POSSESSION—PERMIT OF USER.

Defendant by agreeing at plaintiff's request that he and his wife surrender all their rights as riparian owners in a creek except those exercised by a certain ditch to get his wife, in whose name the property stood, to waive such rights, did not amount to an acknowledgment of plaintiff's right to prevent the diversion of water through such ditch so as to prevent defendant from claiming a prescriptive right to maintain the ditch.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 150, 151; Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

4. WATER AND WATER COURSES (§ 138*)—RIPARIAN RIGHT—PRESCRIPTION.

That another landowner permitted defendant to construct a ditch across his land to a stream because he believed that defendant as riparian owner could condemn a right of way over his land for taking water would not prevent defendant from subsequently acquiring the right to maintain the ditch over such land by prescription.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

5. ESTOPPEL (§ 93*)—ESTOPPEL BY CONDUCT — KNOWLEDGE.

Defendants by permitting plaintiff without objection to construct a dam and flume to divert the waters of a stream did not estop themselves from asserting their water rights in the stream where they had no reason to believe at the time that plaintiff intended to divert water to which they were entitled.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. § 275; Dec. Dig. § 93.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

Action by J. H. Logan against D. R. Guichard and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

H. A. Van C. Torchiana and W. P. Nether-ton, for appellant. Harry J. Bias and Cas-sin & Lucas, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment given in an action brought by him to obtain the abatement of a water ditch about 1,000 feet long, constructed and maintained by defendants Guichard (husband and wife) over a portion of his land to a point on Alba creek located on such land, and used by said defendants in diverting and carrying to their land water from said creek, an injunction restraining the defendants from conducting or maintaining any ditch or flume on said land or from maintaining any flow or diversion of water from the waters of said Alba creek on said plaintiff's land, and for $500 damages.

Alba creek runs for about 4,000 feet through plaintiff's land, and thence for about 60 or 70 feet through one corner of a small parcel of land owned by the Guichards, lying south of plaintiff's land. Mr. Guichard put his acreage at 43 acres, and 90 per cent. of his 43-acre tract as being within the watershed of Alba creek. The Guichards have lived on this land ever since 1894, using the same continuously for growing "strawberries and garden truck." To accomplish this, water from Alba creek has at all times been necessary for the irrigation of the lands. It is not questioned that the Guichard land is riparian to Alba creek. Ever since 1897 the Guichards' point of diversion has been at a point on plaintiff's land some 800 feet from their own land. In that year the Guichards constructed the ditch complained of, commencing at such point of diversion and running over plaintiff's land, then owned by one Grover, plaintiff's predecessor in interest, to their land, and have ever since used the same for conducting such water as they have taken from Alba creek. Although some of plaintiff's land is also riparian to Alba creek, water therefrom has never been used thereon. In 1907, plaintiff, at a point on the creek above the Guichards' point of diversion, constructed a dam and a flume leading therefrom over a well-defined ridge and divide to his land in the place known as the village of Brookdale, and by means thereof has diverted water to supply the inhabitants of Brookdale with water for domestic purposes and with electricity for lighting purposes. Brookdale is not riparian to Alba creek. The amount so diverted by plaintiff was the whole of the water of said creek when there was less than eight inches under a four-inch pressure flowing therein, which was the situation at times. The result was that the Guichards' supply was at times entirely cut off and at other times materially reduced, causing failure of their crops, injury to their stock, and permanent injury to their land; the damage alleged and found being $500.

By their pleadings, including a cross-complaint, the Guichards set up the alleged facts upon which they base their claim of right by prescription to maintain their ditch over plaintiff's land and to divert by means thereof to their land the amount of water they have diverted and used ever since the construction of said ditch. Certain special issues were submitted to an advisory jury. The answers of the jury upon these submitted issues and the findings of the trial court upon all the issues were in favor of the Guichards.

By the judgment the defendants Guichard are decreed to be the owners of the right to maintain the ditch over plaintiff's land and to keep the same in repair, and also of the right to divert from Alba creek through the ditch for use on their riparian land "waters to the extent of three inches." Plaintiff was enjoined by the judgment from taking any of the waters of said creek to any lands apart from the watershed belonging to and draining into Alba creek, and the Guichards were awarded $500 damages.

[1] Regardless of other questions involved, it is clear that the judgment must be reversed because of the absolute want of showing of the amount of water which the Guichards are entitled to divert by means of their ditch from Alba creek on plaintiff's land. As we have seen, the provision of the judgment in this regard is simply "water to the extent of three inches." There is nothing else in the judgment that goes to the question of the amount of water to which the Guichards are entitled. The expression quoted is meaningless, unless we are to assume that miners' inches are meant. With such an assumption, the expression might be certain and definite enough, in view of the act fixing and defining a miner's inch of water, approved March 23, 1901. St. 1901, p. 660. It is there provided: "The standard miner's inch of water shall be equivalent or equal to one and one-half cubic feet of water per minute, measured through any aperture or orifice." The statements in the findings as to the amount of water the Guichards have been diverting and are entitled to continue to divert are the same as in the judgment, viz., "waters to the extent of three inches," and these statements correspond with those in the pleadings of the Guichards. According to their answer and cross-complaint, they have diverted and used under claim of right "water to the extent of three inches," and are the owners of the right to divert "waters to the extent of three inches." It may be doubted whether we may assume that such an expression, especially when contained in a judgment purporting to determine conflicting rights in water, should be assumed to mean miners' inches. But, if we do so assume, the evidence is entirely insufficient to show that the Guichards have ever diverted any such amount of water, and insufficient to furnish the data upon which the amount of water diverted can be ascertained. The evidence was such as to furnish no basis for an adjudication as to the amount of water they were entitled to take on plaintiff's land from Alba creek by means of their ditch, except as such basis was furnished by evidence of the amount that they had actually diverted. The only evidence in this behalf was given by Mr. Guichard, and was as follows: "I would estimate the amount of water which flows from Alba creek and has been accustomed to flow from Alba creek, through my ditch, to be about three inches, a little over perhaps, no pressure. That is, if I put a trough three inches wide, it runs one inch deep in there, runs there itself, naturally comes. I have not taken any measurements. I don't know the fall. I don't know the quantity of water, in gallons, per hour." It is to be observed that neither the fall at the point of diversion nor the grade of the ditch itself is given. It is clear that this evidence does not show that three miners' inches of water have been diverted, according either to the statutory definition of a miner's inch, or any definition thereof recognized by the authorities. See Gardner v. Wright, 49 Or. 609, 91 Pac. 286, 297. The evidence quoted is absolutely devoid of data upon which a conclusion can be reached as to the quantity of water actually diverted into or through the ditch. To show the quantity in miners' inches there should have been either evidence as to a measurement according to some prescribed method, or evidence of facts upon which a definite calculation could be made. Without evidence from which the quantity of water diverted could be ascertained, the trial court was without evidence upon which it could base any conclusion as to the number of miners' inches which the Guichards were entitled to take on Logan's land, or could make any adjudication whatever of the extent of their rights. [2] In the absence of a finding of the actual diversion of some definite quantity of water, sufficiently supported by evidence, the plea of prescriptive right to take water above their boundary must necessarily fail. See Hayes v. Silver Creek, etc., Co., 136 Cal. 233, 68 Pac. 704. See, also, Walsh v. Wallace, 26 Nev. 330, 67 Pac. 914, 99 Am. St. Rep. 692. Senior v. Anderson, 130 Cal. 290, 62 Pac. 563, relied on by respondents, is not in point, for the reason that sufficient facts did appear in that case to enable a determination to be made of the relative rights of the parties.

For the purposes of a new trial, it is proper to consider certain other points made by plaintiff for reversal.

We are of the opinion that there was evidence sufficient to support a conclusion that the Guichards have acquired by prescription the right to maintain the ditch constructed and maintained by them on plaintiff's land, for the purpose of diverting from Alba creek and conducting to their riparian land the quantity of water which they continuously used through their ditch. Their claim was of the right to divert water to which they were entitled as riparian owners from a point on the creek located on plaintiff's land, and to maintain a ditch over plaintiff's land for the purpose of conducting such water to their land. The trial court recognized this limitation, the judgment expressly limiting the use of the water by the Guichards to their lands riparian to Alba creek. Evidence given on the trial warranted the conclusion that, although the ditch was constructed on plaintiff's land and the diversion commenced in the year 1897, under permission of Mr. Grover, the then owner of such land, the circumstances under which such permission was originally given, are sufficient to constitute a basis for a claim of right on the part of the Guichards to thenceforth permanently maintain and use the ditch and continue the diversion of water through the same. While there was a conflict in the evidence upon the point, there was sufficient evidence to sustain a conclusion that their subsequent use of the ditch, which continued uninterrupted to the time of the construction by plaintiff of his dam in the year 1907, was, to the knowledge of both Grover and plaintiff, his successor in interest, open, notorious, under a claim of right, and adverse to Grover, plaintiff and all other persons. The evidence as to what occurred between Grover, plaintiff, and Guichard in 1901 did not necessarily bring the case within the rule of Jensen v. Hunter, 41 Pac. 14,¹ where it was held that an offer of money made by the claimant to the landowner for a right of way for water before the statute of limitations had run in such claimant's favor was a confession by the claimant of title in the landowner, which interrupted the running of the statute. Guichard's evidence as to this is enough to support the conclusion that all he did in the matter was, in response to the solicitation of plaintiff that he and his wife surrender all right as riparian owners in the creek except such as they exercised by means of the ditch leading to the point of diversion on plaintiff's land, to agree to get his wife, in whose name their property stood, to waive all such rights. [3] This is not sufficient to compel a conclusion of acknowledgment of any right in the plaintiff to prevent the use of the ditch or the diversion of water through the same. Nothing further appears to have been done toward procuring such waiver.

The evidence of Guichard indicated that Grover, in allowing him to construct his ditch upon his land and establish his place of diversion thereon, and Guichard, in so constructing his ditch and diverting water through the same, believed that the Guichards, as riparian owners, by a resort to condemnation proceedings, could obtain a right of way over Grover's land for the taking of this water. [4] We do not see how this mistaken view could in any way operate to preclude the subsequent acquirement of the right by prescription. In fact, it is rather in support of Guichard's contention that the subsequent construction and maintenance of the ditch was under claim of right, with the knowledge of and adverse to Grover and all other parties.

We see nothing in the record compelling the conclusion that the Guichards are estopped from asserting their rights in the waters of Alba creek by reason of standing by and allowing plaintiff without objection to construct his dam and flume for supplying the inhabitants of Brookdale with water. [5] It does not appear that they knew of, or had any reason to suspect, any intended diversion by plaintiff of any of the water to which they were entitled, until after such diversion had actually been made.

There is no other matter that we deem it necessary to discuss for the purposes of further proceedings.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

¹ Reported in full in the Pacific Reporter; reported as a memorandum decision without opinion in 108 Cal. xvii.

(159 Cal. 466)

In re WOOD'S ESTATE AND GUARDIANSHIP. (S. F. 5,615.)(Supreme Court of California. March 13, 1911.
Rehearing Denied April 12, 1911.)1. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 53*)—PROPERTY OF WARD—INVESTMENTS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1792, empowering the court to order the investment of a ward's money, the action of the court which will protect a guardian in investments must be had under circumstances bringing such matter to the attention of the court for an adjudication thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Cent. Dig. §§ 232-241; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

2. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 37*)—CARE REQUIRED OF GUARDIAN.

The measure of care and diligence required of a guardian or similar trustee is such as would be exercised by a man of ordinary prudence and skill in the management of his own business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Cent. Dig. § 168; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

3. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 55*) — TRUST FUNDS—DEPOSIT—LIABILITY FOR LOSS.

A guardian who, in selecting a bank for the temporary deposit of trust funds exercises such care as a man of ordinary skill and prudence would in the management of his own business, and so earmarks the deposit as to show its trust character, is not responsible if the bank fails, though he is generally liable if he deposits the money in his individual name without any indication of his representative character, notwithstanding he is guilty of no negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

4. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 55*)—MONEY OF WARD—DEPOSIT IN BANK—LIABILITY FOR LOSS.

A guardian limiting his control over his ward's funds becomes a guarantor thereof, and where he deposits his ward's money in a bank under an arrangement whereby he could withdraw the money only with the concurrence of the surety on his bond he is liable for loss of the fund through failure of the bank.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Cent. Dig. § 254; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; B. V. Sargent, Judge.

In the matter of the estate and guardianship of Bennett Wood, a minor. From portion of a decree settling and allowing his final and supplemental account, William R. Taylor, guardian, appeals. Affirmed.

Heller, Powers & Ehrman and P. E. Zabala, for appellant. Wyckoff & Gardner and C. F. Lacey, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by William R. Taylor, the guardian of the person and estate of Bennett Wood, a minor, from that portion of the decree settling and allowing his final and supplemental account which denies him credit for $7,269.53, money of the minor which had been deposited by such guardian in the bank of the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company of San Francisco, and which was on deposit in said bank at the time of its failure in October, 1907.

Appellant was appointed guardian of the estate of this minor and the estates of James Cleveland Wood and Hazel May Wood, minors, by the superior court of Monterey county, in March, 1903. He himself was a resident of Monterey county, as also were his attorneys. The property of his wards, consisting of money received from an estate in Illinois, aggregated $19,176.68; each minor owning one-third. This money having been brought from the East, appellant deposited the same, in the year 1903, in three San Francisco banks; the share belonging to Bennett Wood being deposited in the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company to the credit of "Wm. R. Taylor, guardian." No order of court was ever obtained authorizing this deposit to be made. The guardian was himself unacquainted with the standing of San Francisco banks, and apparently relied in the selection of a place of deposit entirely on his attorney, Mr. Wyatt, and the Pacific Surety Company, his sole bondsman, as guardian.

The deposit was one upon interest and was what is known as an ordinary savings bank deposit as distinguished from a term deposit, and it was made in such a manner that money could be withdrawn only upon the signatures of the surety company and the guardian; the bank book delivered to the guardian containing the provision: "Checks to be countersigned by the Pacific Surety Co." This book was kept in the possession of the surety company in San Francisco. The effect of this arrangement was to give the surety an effectual veto power over any attempted withdrawal of any of the money on deposit. Not a dollar could be drawn by the guardian without the concurrence of the surety company. The practice of the parties in withdrawing money was for the guardian or Mr. Wyatt to forward the guardian's check from Monterey county to the surety company in San Francisco, and the agent of the company would countersign such check, collect the money from the bank, and forward it to the guardian or his attorney.

The money, with the accretions of interest, less such small amounts as were drawn from time to time for expenses and the support of the minor, continued on deposit with such bank until the time of its failure in October, 1907, at which time it amounted to $7,269.53. In January, 1907, the National Surety Company was substituted as bondsman for the guardian; the account not being changed in any way, save that the custody of the bank book was given to the new bondsman, and the right to countersign changed from the old bondsman to the new.

The evidence was sufficient to support a conclusion that the guardian made practically no inquiry as to the standing of this bank after the opening of the account, taking it for granted that it was perfectly safe. In this he was apparently relying entirely on Mr. Wyatt and the surety company.

The evidence was likewise sufficient to support a conclusion that the money was deposited in this bank as a permanent investment, rather than as a mere temporary deposit for safe-keeping until a permanent investment could be found. There was nothing to indicate that the guardian did not consider his full duty and responsibility discharged in the matter of investing this money when he had once deposited it with California Safe Deposit & Trust Company.

As is said in respondent's brief, none of the recitals made in papers filed in the guardianship proceedings brought the matter of the deposit to the attention of the superior court in such a manner as to make it an object of inquiry or adjudication so as to amount to leave or ratification by the court. The action of the guardianship court which will protect a guardian in the matter of investments (see section 1792, Code Civ. Proc.; Guardianship of Cardwell, 55 Cal. 141; Estate of Schandoney, a minor, 133 Cal. 387, 65 Pac. 877) must be action had under such circumstances as show a bringing of such matter to the attention of the court for an adjudication thereon. The record does not compel the conclusion that orders of the guardianship court, authorizing the withdrawal of small amounts needed from time to time for expenses in support of the minor, indicated any permanent deposit anywhere. There is absolutely nothing to indicate that the guardianship court had any notice of any arrangement under which the surety company had any control over the money of the minor.

The California Safe Deposit & Trust Company was doing a general banking business, and at the time of its failure had a very large number of depositors. One of the witnesses testified that the deposits aggregated $9,000,000, and that among the depositors were some "of the very large business men of San Francisco." The only evidence affording ground for the conclusion that it was considered at all unsafe was that given by persons engaged in the banking business in Santa Cruz county and Monterey county, to the effect that it was looked upon with considerable concern as doing an unsafe business in the matter of loans and special inducements offered depositors, and as being "the weak member in the banking business of San Francisco." The closing of its doors by the bank in October, 1907, was without notice and entirely unexpected by the general public.

There is absolutely nothing in the record to impugn the good faith of the guardian in the matter of this deposit. He undoubtedly believed, with such limited knowledge as he had, that the bank was safe.

The main question on this appeal is as to the liability of the guardian to his ward upon these facts for the money lost by the failure of the bank.

It is universally held that the measure of care and diligence required of a guardian or similar trustee is such as would be exercised by a man of ordinary prudence and skill in the management of his own business. See Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. § 1070; Estate of Law, 144 Pa. 499, 22 Atl. 831, 14 L. R. A. 103.

The necessity of temporarily depositing trust funds in a bank for safe-keeping is recognized, and it is settled law that, if a trustee, for the purposes of such temporary deposit, exercises the degree of care above stated in the selection of a bank, and so earmarks the deposit as to show its trust character, he is not responsible in the event of the failure of the bank. See Woerner, Am. Law of Guardianship, §§ 62, 63. But exercise of this degree of care in the selection of a bank for the deposit of trust funds is not necessarily sufficient to protect the trustee in the event of the failure of the bank.

If he deposits the money in his individual name without any designation or indication of his representative character, he is generally liable in the event of loss, notwithstanding that he has not been guilty of any negligence. See In re Arguello, 97 Cal. 196, 31 Pac. 937; In re Bane, 120 Cal. 533, 52 Pac. 852, 65 Am. St. Rep. 197. This rule finds its warrant in the fact that the trustee "would be otherwise able to play fast and loose with his cestui que trust, and throw the hazards of his own business on them, by designating the fund in which the loss has fallen as theirs, whether it was or was not so in reality" (see In re Bane, supra, p. 536), and in the theory that public policy forbids that the trustee under such circumstances should be permitted to claim that the lost property was trust property, rather than his own, as he had voluntarily caused it to appear.

Likewise, it appears to be in accord with many authorities that, in the absence of an order of court permitting it, such a deposit of trust funds in bank is not warranted as an investment, but only for temporary purposes pending investment, such a deposit as an investment being held to be a loan to the bank on personal security only, a kind of investment not considered by such authorities as one ordinarily proper to be made in the exercise of due care. See Perry on Trusts, § 443; Estate of Law, supra; Murph v. McCullough, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 403, 90 S. W. 69. Mr. Woerner, in his American Law of Guardianship, declares it to be a rule of almost universal application to trustees, particularly where minors are concerned, that trust funds shall not be loaned on personal security, and that a guardian is liable to make good all losses arising in consequence of loaning the ward's money without any security. He says that permanent deposits in banks as investments are held to be loans on personal security only, and should not be made, except by leave of the guardianship court. A distinction is drawn between a temporary deposit of the ward's money for safe-keeping, subject to the demand of the depositor, which case constitutes an exception to the general rule making trustees liable for the loss of trust funds invested on personal security, and a loan constituting an investment of the ward's funds. Section 63. We do not consider it necessary here to definitely decide whether the rule enunciated by these authorities is the true rule, or whether the facts of this case render the guardian liable thereunder on account of the deposit in question. It may be said, however, that in view of the authorities it would appear to be always advisable for a guardian desiring to make this character of investment to bring the matter before the guardianship court, and to act only upon authorization therefor given by such court.

There is another rule sustained by the authorities that appears to us to settle the question of the guardian's liability. That rule is well stated in the syllabus to McColister v. Bishop, 78 Minn. 228, 80 N. W. 1118, as follows: "If a trustee enters into any arrangement with reference to trust funds which surrenders or limits his control over them, he becomes a guarantor of the fund, irrespective of his motive or whether his surrender of control was the cause of the loss of the fund." In such a case, in the event of loss of the fund, the court will not enter upon an inquiry whether the loss is due to such abdication of control. While the court there held that the facts of that case did not bring it within this rule, it upheld the principle therein stated as an eminently salutary rule. The same principle was declared by the United States Supreme Court in Forsyth v. Woods, 11 Wall. 484, 487, 20 L. Ed. 207, where the court said: "Letters of administration are a trust. They are granted by the probate court, or ordinary, because of confidence reposed in the grantee. They require him to take exclusive charge of the personal property of his intestate and to bring to its administration his own personal attention and judgment. He has no right to allow others to control it or to share in its administration. If he does, he exposes it to unnecessary hazards and subjects it to the disposition of persons in whom the officer of the law has reposed no confidence." Such limitation on the control of the trust property by the trustee as is shown by the facts of this case has been considered at great length in at least two cases, and in each case the conclusion was reached that such a limitation was prohibited by this rule. In Perry on Trusts, § 443, we find it declared that, if the trustee deposits trust money "in such manner that it is not under his own exclusive control, as where money is deposited in bank, so that it cannot be drawn without the concurrence of other persons, the trustee will be liable for the failure of the bank, on the principle that it is the duty of the trustee to withdraw the money from the bank upon the slightest indication of danger or loss, and he cannot perform his duty promptly if he is clogged by the necessity of procuring the concurrent action of other persons." The leading case in England of White v. Baugh, 3 Clark & Fin. 44, 6 Eng. Reprint, 1354, and the case of Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Butler, 130 Ga. 225, 60 S. E. 851, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 994, in each of which the facts, in all respects material to the question under consideration, were the same as those in the case at bar, and in each of which the rule above declared was held applicable, show reasons for the rule additional to that given in the above quotation from Perry on Trusts. The reasons for the rule stated in those decisions are substantially stated in respondent's brief, being that such an arrangement is contrary to public policy, as incompatible with the absolute control which court and guardian should have at all times over the fund in order to preserve it, as placing temptation in the way of officers of surety companies in no way under the jurisdiction of the court to obtain favors from weak banks in return for the bestowal or continuance of deposits, as hindering the guardian from seeking more favorable investments of the funds, and as being, in effect, a pledge of the fund to obtain the bond required by law. The discussion by Lord Brougham and Lord Lyndhurst in White v. Baugh, supra, and the exhaustive opinion of Justice Lumpkin in Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Butler, in which all of the authorities on the question are reviewed and discussed, satisfy us that the rule forbidding the surrender by a trustee of his control over trust funds, on penalty of becoming a guarantor of the fund, an eminently salutary rule, applies to such an arrangement between the guardian and his surety as is shown by the evidence in this case. No authority in conflict with these views has been cited or found by us, and we know of no reasonable ground for a material distinction between such a limitation on the guardian's control of the trust fund as is shown by the facts herein, and the case of a trustee parting altogether with such control. As substantially said in Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Butler, the effect of such an arrangement is to give a surety a complete veto power in the matter of any proposed change of a place of deposit, no matter what circumstances may arise. Whether this arrangement could be enforced or not as between the guardian, the surety and the bank, it did limit and impede the actual control of the fund in such manner as to bring it within the operation of a rule that is thoroughly established and that appears to us to rest upon sound considerations of public policy. If it be desired to provide some method by which a surety company may have some control of a trust fund as to which it has merely become surety for the officer of a court, such as a guardian or administrator, to whom the court has given such fund in charge, the method must be provided by the legislative department of the government, for the law as it now stands in this state does not authorize it.

Our conclusion on this point renders it unnecessary to consider any of the alleged errors in the matter of the admission of evidence, for none of them affects the question under consideration; the evidence on that point being entirely without conflict.

The decree appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

15 Cal. App. 410

VULCAN IRON WORKS v. COOK.

(Civ. 851.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Feb. 16, 1911.)

1. CONTRACTS (§ 214*)—CUSTOMS AND USAGES (§ 13*)—CONSTRUCTION—PAYMENT.

A provision of a contract for furnishing and erecting steel work, that payment of 90 per cent. of the work should be made at delivery, and the balance 35 days after completion of the work, and that when each installment shall become due, and at the final completion of the work, certificates in writing shall be obtained from the contractor, etc., called for payment in installments as the work progressed; the period of such installments being left to general custom.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 980-995; Dec. Dig. § 214;* Customs and Usages, Cent. Dig. §§ 25, 26; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

2. CONTRACTS (§ 170*)—CONSTRUCTION BY THE PARTIES—USUAL CUSTOM.

Where a building contract, providing for payment in installments as the work progressed, was by the parties treated as providing for monthly payments, which was the usual custom, the doubt and ambiguity in the contract was settled by the construction of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 753; Dec. Dig. § 170.*]

3. CONTRACTS (§ 303*)—NONPERFORMANCE—EXCUSE.

Where a building contract, providing for payment by installments, was breached by the failure of the party owning the building to pay the installments, and the other party failed to complete the work, the owner of the building was not entitled to any damages by reason of the higher price he had to pay to have the work completed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 1411; Dec. Dig. § 303.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by the Vulcan Iron Works against Morton L. Cook. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Heller, Powers & Ehrman, for appellant. Alex. G. Eells and H. K. Eells, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant for goods sold and delivered.

The action arose out of a contract entered into by the parties, whereby the plaintiff agreed to furnish and erect all the cast iron columns and bases and steel beam girders for the interior and other parts of a six-story and basement brick building to be erected by the defendant on his property at the corner of Minna and Second streets in San Francisco. Paragraph 5 of the contract provides that the defendant was to pay the plaintiff $75 per ton for the cast iron and $85 for the steel "at times and in the manner following, to wit: Ninety per cent. (90%) of the work at delivery and the balance thirty-five days after the entire completion of the work: Provided, that when each payment or installment shall become due, and at the final completion of the work, certificates in writing shall be obtained from said architect, stating that the payment or installment is due or work completed, as the case may be, and the amount then due. * * *"

Materials were delivered and set in place, according to the terms of the contract, for a period of three months, and until two stories of the building were completed, when a dispute arose between the parties. At the expiration of the first month's work, the estimate of plaintiff as to the amount due it from the defendant was approved by the architect and paid by the defendant. The second month's work was also approved and paid, except for $207.64 of the amount claimed, and this arose from an error of the architect in withholding 15 per cent., instead of 10 per cent., of the contract price of the material furnished. Subsequently a certificate was issued by the architect rectifying this error, and also for the third month's work. Defendant failed to pay plaintiff either of these sums; and it is not seriously disputed, and could not be, that this is the reason plaintiff refused to proceed with the work.

The only real point urged in the case is as to when payments were due. Defendant in effect concedes that, if payments were to be made as the work progressed, the usual custom in San Francisco is that they should be made monthly; but he contends that under the terms of the contract in this case the plaintiff was not entitled to receive any payment until all the materials provided for in the contract were delivered. In support of this contention defendant argues that the words of the contract above quoted, "ninety per cent. (90%) of the work at delivery," mean that all of the materials were to be furnished before the plaintiff was entitled to ninety per cent. of the amount due or to any payment. [1] But we think, when the whole of paragraph 5 is read, that it is clear that the contract contemplated installments as the work progressed; the period of such installments to be left probably to the general custom. Indeed, the defendant himself testified that the 90 per cent. clause was stipulated, instead of the usual 75 per cent.

clause, in order to enable the plaintiff to finish the contract on time. [2] However, any possible doubt or ambiguity in the contract as to when payments were due was settled by the contemporaneous acts and conduct of the parties, for the usual custom was followed, and during several months certificates were issued by the architect and payments made by the defendant.

Defendant asserts that the trial court erred in permitting certain certificates of the architect to be introduced in evidence, because of the insufficiency of the bill of items as served on him by plaintiff. He has failed to point out wherein the bill is insufficient, and upon examination it is not apparent to us wherein the defect consists.

[3] Defendant claimed, by way of cross-complaint, that he was entitled to damages by reason of the fact that he was compelled to pay in the market an increased price for iron and steel above the contract price, and also for the rental value of the building during the time that, as he alleges, its completion was delayed through the default of plaintiff. The finding of the court (which is amply supported by the evidence) that the stoppage of the work was due to defendant's failure to make payments when due is a complete and sufficient answer to defendant's position on the cross-complaint. It is true there was considerable delay in the work; but this was not the fault of plaintiff.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; HALL, J.

15 Cal. App. 382

BROADBENT v. KEITH. (Civ. 930.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Feb. 14, 1911.)

ELECTIONS (§ 296*) — CONTEST — DISMISSAL — GROUNDS.

An election contest by an elector, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1115, is not subject to dismissal because the original complaint was prematurely filed, where no citation issued thereon, and another complaint was subsequently filed, on which citation duly issued.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Dec. Dig. § 296.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Election contest by Andrew E. Broadbent against John M. Keith. Judgment dismissing the contest, and contestant appeals. Reversed.

Conkling & Brown, for appellant. Shaw, Ross & Dyke, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff, as an elector of the city of Imperial, on April 15, 1910, filed with the county clerk of Imperial county a verified statement by which he sought to institute a proceeding to contest the election of defendant as marshal of said city. No citation was issued upon this statement or complaint; but on April 26, 1910, plaintiff filed a new verified statement, setting forth grounds of contest, and upon May 17, 1910, a citation was issued thereon, requiring respondent to appear in the superior court on the 3d day of June and make answer. At the time set for hearing respondent appeared and moved the court to dismiss the proceedings, on the ground that at the time the first statement of contest was filed the board of trustees of the city of Imperial had not declared the result of the canvass of the votes for the office of city marshal. In support of this motion affidavits were filed, showing that the result of the city election was formally declared by the canvassing board on the 16th day of April, 1910, or one day after the day when the first statement or complaint was filed. The superior court granted the motion, and a judgment of dismissal was entered, from which an appeal has been taken.

A proceeding to contest the right of a person to an office is a special proceeding, governed by those sections of the Code of Civil Procedure found in title 2, pt. 3, thereof. Section 1115 provides that, when an elector contests the right of any person declared elected to an office, he must "file with the county clerk a written statement" setting forth certain facts, which statement "must be filed within thirty days after the declaration of the result of the election by the body canvassing the returns thereof." It is provided by section 1118 of the same Code that within 5 days after the end of the time allowed for filing such statements (of contest) the county clerk must notify the superior court thereof, and that the court shall order a special session to be held on some day, not less than 10 nor more than 20 days from the date of its order, at which session a hearing on the merits of the contest shall be had. Section 1119 provides that a citation shall be issued by the clerk to the person whose right to the office is contested to appear at the time and place specified by the order of court for the hearing. Section 1122 then provides as follows: "The court must be governed, in the trial and determination of such contested election, by the rules of law and evidence governing the determination of questions of law and fact, so far as the same may be applicable, and may dismiss the proceedings if the statement of the cause or causes of the contest is insufficient, or for want of prosecution. After hearing the proofs and allegations of the parties, the court must pronounce judgment in the premises, either confirming or annulling and setting aside such election." It is conceded that the second verified statement of contest as filed by plaintiff was sufficient in form and filed within the required time after the canvassing board had officially declared the result of the election. The order of the court for the hearing of the contest, and the citation issued by the clerk pursuant thereto, were both based upon the second verified statement filed by plaintiff, and not upon the first statement which had been prematurely filed. While in the minutes of the clerk, on the register of actions, the second statement was denominated an "amended complaint," that statement as set out in the bill of exceptions seems not to be so characterized either by title or in substance. So that the superior court, when the matter of contest came on for hearing, was then acting upon a statement of contest sufficient in form, filed by an elector having a right to institute such a contest.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It is not contended that the same person may not file separate statements of contest, nor that, in the event he has filed one statement, either insufficient in form or premature in point of time, that he may not file another. In our opinion, the statement filed by the plaintiff on April 15, 1910, may be disregarded altogether. As before noted, no action of the court was taken based upon this first statement, and when respondent was brought into court to make answer to the contest, it was upon an order made by the court and a citation issued based solely upon the statement as filed on April 26, 1910. To this statement respondent was required to appear and make opposition thereto at the time fixed by the court's order. It was not a case authorizing the court to enter a judgment of dismissal by reason of the causes of contest being insufficient, as is provided may be done by section 1122 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and it is not pretended that the action was dismissed because of any defects of that kind.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

15 Cal. App. 353

NAYLOR v. ADAMS. (Civ. 775.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 11, 1911.)

1. COSTS (§ 220*)—TAXATION—MOTION TO RETAX—NOTICE—SERVICE—WAIVER OF DEFECTS.

Where a party entitled by statute to 18 days notice of a motion to retax costs receives but 14 days notice, but addresses a letter to the court opposing the motion both on technical grounds and on the merits, he cannot object to the consideration of the motion on the merits on the ground of the want of statutory notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Dec. Dig. § 220.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 10*)—JUDICIAL NOTICE—DISTANCES BETWEEN PLACES.

The Court of Appeal for the Third District will take judicial notice that the distance between Oakland and Red Bluff is about 200 miles.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 14; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

3. COSTS (§ 185*)—WITNESSES' COSTS—FEES—STATUTES—"LEGALLY REQUIRED."

Code Civ. Proc. § 1989, provides that a witness is not obliged to attend as witness before any court out of the county in which he resides, unless the distance be less than 30 miles from his residence to the place of trial, and by Pol. Code, § 4300g, witnesses, when "legally required" to attend the superior court in civil cases, are entitled to mileage actually traveled. Witnesses for the plaintiff residing 200 miles from the place of trial, without subpoena, and on the request of the plaintiff, voluntarily went from their residence to the place of trial and testified. Held, that they were not "legally required" to attend, and hence were not entitled to the mileage allowed by section 4300g, and that an allowance for mileage could not be taxed in plaintiff's cost bill.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. §§ 739-743; Dec. Dig. § 185.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, p. 4084.]

4. COSTS (§ 3*)—WITNESSES—WITNESS FEES—RIGHT TO FEES—STATUTORY.

The right of a witness to mileage and other fees in civil cases being solely of statutory creation, a court cannot tax witness fees as costs which are not strictly authorized by statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. §§ 1, 4, 5; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

5. COSTS (§ 184*)—WITNESS FEES—PER DIEM—ALLOWANCE.

Where witnesses living over 30 miles from the place of trial, and whose attendance could not therefore be compelled by subpoena, attend the trial and testify for plaintiff, they place themselves "under and subject to the order of the court," and the court may make such per diem allowance as the facts warrant, which allowance may be taxed as part of plaintiff's cost bill.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. § 717; Dec. Dig. § 184.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Action by Charles E. Naylor, Jr., against Frank P. Adams. From an order disallowing certain costs, plaintiff appeals. Order modified, and, as modified, affirmed.

Naylor & Riggins, for appellant. M. J. Cheatham, for respondent.

HART, J. On the motion of defendant to retax the costs in the above-entitled action, the court disallowed and ordered stricken from plaintiff's cost bill the witness fees and mileage claimed for the witnesses Stanley and Runnels, aggregating in amount the sum of $39.50.

[1] It is first objected by plaintiff that the trial court should not have considered the motion for the alleged reason that he was not given the notice thereof prescribed by the statute; the claim being that he was entitled to 18 days notice, whereas he received but 14 days notice. Since it transpires that plaintiff did, in fact, receive notice of said motion and thereupon made an appearance by addressing to the judge of the trial court a letter which, in fact, constituted nothing less than a brief or argument against the granting of the motion, both for the technical reason we are now considering and upon the merits, we are unable to perceive what material difference it could have made to plaintiff in the court below or could now make whether the notice which it is insisted that the statute prescribes was given or not. The only object of the notice was accomplished, and it would be pressing technicality to the extreme verge of absurdity, in our opinion, to sustain the objection to the consideration of this appeal on the merits.

As to the merits, the facts are these: The witnesses Stanley and Runnels at the time of the trial were residents of the city of Oakland. Without having been subpoenaed, but wholly upon the request of the plaintiff, they went from Oakland to Red Bluff to testify at the trial on behalf of plaintiff. [2] The distance from Oakland to Red Bluff (a fact of which we are authorized to take judicial notice) is approximately 200 miles. [3] By the terms of section 4300g of the Political Code, witnesses when legally required to attend upon the superior court in civil cases are entitled, for each day's attendance at the trial thereof, to a per diem of $2, and for mileage actually traveled, one way only, the sum of 10 cents per mile. Computed on the foregoing basis, Stanley and Runnels would each be entitled, for mileage, to the sum of $20, and, it being alleged in the memorandum of costs that they were in attendance at the trial for two days, each would be entitled on that account to the sum of $4, making the total for the two the sum of $48. But the sum actually paid to these witnesses by plaintiff was according to his memorandum of costs $39.50.

The contention of the respondent is, and such was undoubtedly the theory upon which the court below disallowed the costs in controversy, that Stanley and Runnels, "having come from without the limits within which they could be legally required to attend" the trial as witnesses, were not entitled to have their fees taxed as costs to the defeated party. No case has been cited either from our own courts or from those of other jurisdictions in which this precise question has been considered and adjudicated, and therefore the proposition thus propounded is, so far as we can say to the contrary, res integra, at least in California. Section 1989 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads as follows: "A witness is not obliged to attend as a witness before any court, judge, justice, or any other officer, out of the county in which he resides, unless the distance be less than thirty miles from his place of residence to the place of trial." The language of the foregoing section is certainly not obnoxious to the criticism of ambiguity or want of clearness as to its meaning, and it is therefore very evident therefrom that a subpoena issued in a civil case is absolutely without force out of the county and beyond a distance of 30 miles from the place of trial of the action in which such subpoena has been issued. It therefore of necessity follows that a witness residing out of the county and beyond 30 miles from the place of trial is not "legally required," and cannot be compelled to attend as a witness at such trial, and consequently it is clear that such witness does not come within the description of those witnesses who are entitled to the mileage prescribed by section 4300g of the Political Code. Therefore a witness who cannot be legally required to attend, but who does in fact attend the trial in person, does so voluntarily, and is not entitled to the mileage provided for by said section. This view of the meaning of section 4300g of the Political Code is, we think, strengthened by a consideration of section 2021 of the Code of Civil Procedure, by which provision is made for securing, otherwise than by their personal attendance, the testimony of witnesses upon whom, under the terms of section 1989 of said Code, the service of a subpoena would be a futile act as a means of compelling their attendance at the trial. By the terms of said section the deposition of a witness residing out of the county where the action is to be tried may be taken, and undoubtedly one of the very purposes of this provision is to thus secure at the trial the testimony of a witness who cannot be compelled, by the power of the court or any legal process, to attend in person.

[4] The right of a witness to mileage and other fees in civil cases is purely and solely of statutory creation, and a court is without the power to saddle on the vanquished party in such cases costs which are not thus strictly authorized. If, as is suggested by respondent, the contention of appellant must be sustained, there would be no barrier against the exercise by a court of the power to allow voluntary witnesses residing a thousand or many more miles from the place of trial the mileage prescribed by the statute. The principle upon which such power, if authorized, could be exercised would be the same whatever the distance beyond the 30 miles out of the county from the place of trial, and thus it may easily be imagined how, by calling such power into action, a litigant might impose upon his vanquished adversary a very unjust and even unbearable burden.

[5] But we think the witnesses Stanley and Runnels, having placed themselves "under and subject to the order of the court," are entitled to whatever per diem the facts warrant the court in allowing, and to the extent that plaintiff was disallowed by the trial court proper per diem for said witnesses the order appealed from is erroneous. This is in harmony with the conclusion reached by this court in Linforth v. S. F. Gas & Elec. Co., 9 Cal. App. 434, 99 Pac. 716, cited by counsel for appellant. But that case is not, as appellant seems to suppose, an authority, for the proposition that a witness residing out of the county at a distance of more than 30 miles from the place of trial is entitled to mileage upon his voluntary attendance in person on the court at the trial. The question of mileage was not involved in that case; the only question discussed and decided being whether a witness, not regularly served with a subpoena, who, nevertheless, attended the trial and testified merely by the request of the party desiring his testimony, was entitled to the per diem prescribed for witnesses by the statute. Among other things, the court, per Chipman, P. J., said: "When called and sworn upon attendance by request he has placed himself under and subject to the order of the court as much as if subpoenaed. The only object of the subpoena and its only office when complied with, is to secure his testimony by personal attendance; it issues, of course, by the clerk, and under seal of the court, at the instance of the party and its 'service may be made by any person.' Code Civ. Proc. § 1886. The whole purpose of the subpoena is subserved when a witness attends at the trial by request of the party, quite as effectually as if he had been subpoenaed. No disadvantage or injury can accrue to the losing party if the witness attends by request. On the contrary, he may save the added expense of mileage and per diem as cost of serving the subpoena."

We are in no doubt that, while Stanley and Runnels ought to be allowed whatever per diem they are entitled to, there is no authority for allowing them mileage. Therefore the court below is directed to modify in accordance with the views herein expressed the order striking from plaintiff's cost bill the items representing the per diem to which Stanley and Runnels are justly entitled, and, as so modified, the order is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

15 Cal. App. 378

STEWART v. BIRCHFIELD. (Civ. 912.)
(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Feb. 14, 1911.)

1. ADJOINING LANDOWNERS (§ 7*)—LIABILITIES.

That defendant cleared his land of brush, and wind thereafter blew sand therefrom onto plaintiff's land, which would not have been so carried had the brush been allowed to remain or if the ground had been irrigated, shows no cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adjoining Landowners, Cent. Dig. §§ 53-59; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

2. ADJOINING LANDOWNERS (§ 7*)—LIABILITIES.

Since one may use his land for all lawful purposes to which such lands are usually applied, if he uses ordinary care to prevent unnecessary injury to adjacent landowners, it is not necessarily negligent for one to make use of his land which inevitably produces loss to his neighbor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adjoining Landowners, Cent. Dig. §§ 53-59; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by T. M. Stewart against W. D. Birchfield. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Paul Stewart, for appellant. Shaw, Ross & Dyke, for respondent.

JAMES, J. A demurrer to plaintiff's complaint was sustained by the superior court, and, plaintiff declining to amend, a judgment dismissing the action was thereafter entered, from which plaintiff appeals.

[1] The action was brought to recover the sum of $250 as damages, alleged to have been suffered by plaintiff through the negligent act of defendant. In the complaint it was set out that plaintiff was the owner of certain real property in the county of Imperial, and that defendant was the owner of land contiguous thereto. The plaintiff then proceeded to allege as follows: "That it is a well-known fact that in Imperial county strong winds prevail from a westerly to an easterly direction; that it is a well-known fact that in said Imperial county, and more particularly in the vicinity where said lands of plaintiff and defendant are situated, when land is cleared of brush and leveled and left in that condition without irrigation, sand and soil, because of the action of the winds aforesaid upon the land so cleared, leveled, and exposed and loosened, are blown from land so cleared, leveled, and left unirrigated, to and upon adjacent lands; that the sand and soil so blown is apt to cause, and often does cause, large mounds of sand and soil to form on cultivated portions of land adjoining; that on or about the month of April, 1908, the defendant removed, or caused to be removed, all brush from, and leveled or caused to be leveled, that portion of his said land above described, which lies immediately to the westward of and adjoining the land of the plaintiff; that after said brush had been removed, and said land had been leveled as aforesaid, the defendant did leave his said land wholly unirrigated and uncared for. * * * Defendant left his said land wholly unirrigated and uncared for after the same had been cleared of brush and leveled as aforesaid, and thereby large quantities of sand and soil were permitted to blow over, on, and upon, and did blow over, on, and upon, the said land of the plaintiff, and thus caused large mounds of sand and soil to be erected on and upon the strip of land of the plaintiff aforesaid, all of which is to the great injury of the plaintiff's land, to the damage of the plaintiff."

By the demurrer of defendant it was first objected that the complaint of plaintiff did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Several other grounds of special demurrer were also assigned therein, which it will be unnecessary to take notice of.

We are of the opinion that the facts stated in the complaint were not sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that the demurrer was properly sustained for that reason alone. It is not alleged in the complaint that defendant used his property in any manner other than such as he had a right to use it, and no negligence is charged sufficient to create any responsibility on the part of the defendant for damages which might have resulted from any act committed by him. Briefly stated, it is simply alleged by plaintiff that the defendant cleared his land of the brush which was growing upon it, and that the wind thereafter blew some of the sand or soil therefrom onto the land of plaintiff, which would not have been so carried onto plaintiff's ground had the brush been allowed to there remain, or had defendant after clearing the ground irrigated it. If the defendant had the right to remove brush or trees growing upon his property, which right he undoubtedly possessed as an incident to the ownership of the ground, then, unless he was guilty of some negligent act while removing the same, he would not be responsible in damages to plaintiff. He had the right not only to clear his ground, but to leave it unirrigated, if he saw fit, thereafter, even though his failure to so irrigate it might have produced the damage of which plaintiff complains. [2] "Every man may use his own land for all lawful purposes to which such lands are usually applied, without being answerable for the consequences, provided he exercises ordinary care and skill to prevent any unnecessary injury to the adjacent landowner. It is not, therefore, necessarily negligence on the part of a landowner to make a use of his land which inevitably produces loss to his neighbor; for as he may willfully adopt such a course, and yet not be a wrongdoer, much less is he liable for unintentionally doing that which he has a right to do intentionally." Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, § 700. See, also, Barrows on Negligence, § 115; Phelps v. Nowlen, 72 N. Y. 39, 28 Am. Rep. 93; Middlesex v. McCue, 149 Mass. 103, 21 N. E. 230, 14 Am. St. Rep. 402; Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 113 Pa. 126, 6 Atl. 453, 57 Am. Rep. 445; Brown v. McAllister, 39 Cal. 573; Tiffany on Real Property, § 295.

The point is made by respondent that, as the action is one for damages in the sum of $250, it was not within the jurisdiction of the superior court. It was appellant's contention, however, that an issue was raised involving the question of title or right to the possession of real property, and therefore that the action was properly brought in the superior court. We are of the opinion that the objection of respondent to the jurisdiction of the court is well taken, but as a motion to dismiss this appeal, based on that ground, was heretofore made and denied in the Supreme Court, we have treated the case as having been properly brought in the court in which it was entitled and considered the appeal upon its merits.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

15 Cal. App. 341

BERNOU v. BERNOU. (Civ. 796.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Feb. 10, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1024*)—REVIEW—DISCRETION OF LOWER COURT—CHANGE OF VENUE.

Where an order denying a change of venue is made entirely upon affidavits, and there is a conflict of evidence as to the facts, the decision of the trial court is binding on the appellate court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3836; Dec. Dig. § 1024.*]

2. VENUE (§ 70*)—JURISDICTION—RESIDENCE OF PARTIES—FACTS CONSTITUTING RESIDENCE.

Where a defendant shows by his affidavits on motion for a change of venue that persons residing at the place which he claims as his residence had known him there for many years, and had often seen him and met him during that time, the facts shown are not conclusive proof of the residence claimed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. §§ 122-126; Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

3. DIVORCE (§ 112*) — JURISDICTION — EVIDENCE—RESIDENCE OF PARTIES.

The fact that defendant, in an action for divorce, had been often seen in the place which he claimed as his residence is admissible as tending to prove residence at that place.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 367; Dec. Dig. § 112.*]

4. VENUE (§ 70*)—AFFIDAVIT FOR CHANGE—STATEMENT OF GROUNDS.

Where defendant, in moving for a change of venue on the ground of nonresidence, filed affidavits which stated that to affiants' personal knowledge he had been a bona fide resident of another place, without stating any facts to indicate on what such knowledge was based, the statements are mere conclusions of law and of no effect in supporting the motion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. §§ 122-126; Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Action for divorce by Fannie M. Bernou against J. B. Bernou. From an order denying defendant's motion for change of venue, he appeals. Affirmed.

W. W. Davidson, for appellant. J. B. Curtin, for respondent.

HART, J. This is an appeal from an order denying the defendant's motion for a change of the place of trial of this action.

The plaintiff, on the 29th day of July, 1909, filed a complaint for a divorce from defendant in the superior court in and for the county of Tuolumne. On the 12th day of November, 1909, the defendant filed a general demurrer to the complaint, and at the same time filed a demand and notice of motion for a change of the place of trial of the action from Tuolumne county to the city and county of San Francisco. Said motion was based upon the ground that the "defendant is now, and was at the time of the commencement of this action, and for a long time immediately prior thereto had been, a bona fide resident of said city and county of San Francisco," etc.

[1] The order appealed from was made entirely upon affidavits filed by the respective parties, and, if said affidavits present a conflict upon the question whether the defendant was a resident of the city of San Francisco at the time of the commencement of this action, the decision of the trial court thereon cannot be disturbed by this court. Doak v. Bruson, 152 Cal. 19, 91 Pac. 1002, and cases therein cited. See, also, Henderson v. Cohen, 10 Cal. App. 585, 102 Pac. 826. In the first-mentioned case, the Supreme Court, per Shaw, J., says: "In the consideration of an appeal from an order made upon affidavits, involving the decision of a question of fact, this court is bound by the same rule that controls it where oral testimony is presented for review. If there is any conflict in the affidavits, those in favor of the prevailing party must be taken as true, and the facts stated therein must be considered as established."

The plaintiff's affidavit discloses that she had known the defendant for about seven years prior to their marriage; that he was then a resident of the city of San Francisco; that, on or about the 22d day of June, 1908, she went to the town of Columbia, in Tuolumne county, "for the purpose of investigating the values of certain mining property near Yankee Hill, in said county, with a view of interesting persons in the purchase thereof, and returned to San Francisco within a few days thereafter and conveyed information regarding the probable value of said properties to the defendant, J. B. Bernou"; that said defendant desired to become interested with affiant in the purchase and operation of said property, and, with that object in view, accompanied affiant to Tuolumne county, arriving in the city of Sonora on July 2, 1908, and stopped at the Hotel Victoria, in said city; that defendant remained at said hotel until July 8, 1908, when he went to the town of Columbia, in said county, where he remained for a period of two weeks, living, while at said town, at the City Hotel; that he then left Columbia in company with affiant, but returned to said town with affiant on the 23d day of October, 1908; that affiant and defendant became interested in a mine situated near said town of Columbia, and in the early part of November, 1908, said defendant and affiant went to San Francisco, for the purpose of forming a corporation to be known as the "Nervy Gold Mining Company," and "in the name of said corporation to operate thereafter the said Nervy mine"; that said corporation was organized, and affiant became president and general manager and the defendant treasurer thereof, and its principal place of business was fixed and is in the said town of Columbia; that "said defendant, J. B. Bernou, concluded and so stated to affiant in the month of November, 1908, that he intended to permanently reside at Columbia, in said Tuolumne county, * * * and informed affiant that he had made all arrangements with his real estate agents, Bernard & Muther, in the city and county of San Francisco, to take care of the rents incoming from the property owned by said J. B. Bernou"; that in the latter part of November, 1908, said defendant purchased from James Carder and John Page a store and saloon business, then conducted by them at Italian Bar, in said county, and that in the early part of December, 1908, said defendant went to San Francisco and purchased a stock of goods, wares, and merchandise and liquors, "for the purpose of thereafter carrying on said store and saloon business at Italian Bar, in Tuolumne county, all of which goods subsequently, and before the 6th day of January, 1909, arrived at Italian Bar"; that on the 6th day of January, 1909, said defendant applied to the license collector of Tuolumne county for a liquor and merchandise license to conduct said saloon and store at Italian Bar, and that the same was granted, and that, accompanying the application for said license, was a bond furnished by said defendant for conducting said saloon business; that defendant carried on said business at Italian Bar until the latter part of June, 1909. Affiant states that she and the defendant were married in the city of Martinez, in Contra Costa county, on the 22d day of March, 1909, and that the defendant, at the time of procuring the license from the county clerk of Contra Costa county authorizing the intermarriage of himself and affiant, made and swore to an affidavit in which he declared that at said time he resided at Columbia, in Tuolumne county. Plaintiff further deposes that defendant left her in the town of Columbia on the 24th day of June, 1909, and that, before so taking his departure, he promised plaintiff that he would return to Columbia on or about the 4th day of July, 1909; that on the 28th day of June defendant addressed to plaintiff a letter, dated at San Francisco, in which he stated that he was "expecting several parties (now absent from the city) who may consider investing in the Nervy Company. I am unable to determine the probability of visiting you on the 4th of July. If, however, they return before Friday, I will spend the holiday in your company." It is further averred by affiant that she brought this action on the 29th day of July, 1909, and that thereafter she undertook to obtain service of summons on defendant, but that, although for several months she diligently sought information as to his whereabouts "through the chief of police and the police department of San Francisco and the sheriff of Los Angeles county, and the sheriff of Alameda county, and the police department of Oakland," she was unable to locate him and therefore unable to cause summons to be served upon him; that his appearance in the action was voluntary, and not because of having been served with process.

In corroboration of her affidavit, plaintiff filed 12 other affidavits by as many residents of Tuolumne county. Some of these affiants, besides repeating much of what is contained in plaintiff's affidavit, declared that Bernou stated to them, just before departing for San Francisco on the 24th day of June, 1909, that he was going to that city for temporary purposes only, and intended to return to Columbia shortly after the 4th day of July, 1909.

The defendant, by affidavit, flatly controverts the statements contained in plaintiff's affidavit, and additionally sets forth certain matters of fact from which, it may be conceded, the court might perhaps have been justified in finding in his favor on the question of residence. He also filed with his moving papers affidavits made by certain citizens of San Francisco. These merely allege that the affiants had known and knew Bernou for a certain number of years prior to and at the time of the commencement of this action, and that during all the times so referred to said defendant, of their "personal knowledge, has been and now is a bona fide resident of the city and county of San Francisco," etc.

Appellant contends that the affidavits filed by plaintiff are wholly lacking in the statement of any positive facts disclosing his residence to have been in Tuolumne county before or at the time of the institution of this action; that the statements contained in said affidavits amount to no more than mere conclusions of law. On the other hand, it is asserted that the affidavits filed by the defendant positively and unequivocally state facts from which it must necessarily be inferred that defendant was, at the time the complaint herein was filed, and had been for many years prior thereto, a resident of the city of San Francisco.

We think counsel for appellant has conceived, to some extent, a mistaken view of the character of the affidavits filed by both sides of the controversy. It is true that the affidavits filed by both plaintiff and defendant contain some statements which involve mere conclusions of the affiants. This is particularly true of all the affidavits filed by the defendant, other than his own. Indeed, the affidavits of Carpy, Godeau, Cailleau, Walsh, and Bernard, filed in support of defendant's motion, do not contain the statement of a single fact in support of their conclusion that the defendant "has been and now is a bona fide resident of the city and county of San Francisco." These affidavits amount to no more than mere bald statements that they had known defendant for many years in San Francisco and that they have "personal knowledge" of his residence in that city. They state nothing to indicate of what such "personal knowledge" is predicated. [2] The fact that they had known defendant for many years, even aided by the fact that they had seen and met him on many occasions in San Francisco during those years, would not constitute conclusive, nor even satisfactory, proof of such residence, unless supported by some other substantial probative facts. [3] Undoubtedly the fact that defendant had often been seen in San Francisco might well be regarded as a circumstance tending to prove residence in said city, but it could be no more than a circumstance. [4] But the mere statement that the defendant "has been and is a bona fide resident of San Francisco" is, taken alone, obviously without the slightest probative value. It is a conclusion, pure and simple, of the affiant. It involves the very issue submitted by the motion; the question thus raised being, of course, for the court and not for the witnesses to decide.

The affidavit of the plaintiff contains the statement of many facts or circumstances from which a court could reasonably conclude that defendant went to Columbia with a view of permanently locating there, and that, in fact, he did go to Tuolumne county with the intention of making it his permanent home. He became an officer of a mining corporation, whose principal place of business was at Columbia; he bought a merchandising and saloon business at Italian Bar, in Tuolumne county, and replenished the same with goods and merchandise purchased in San Francisco; applied to the local authorities for and was granted a license authorizing him to legally carry on and conduct said business; made an affidavit, when applying for his license to wed plaintiff, in which he also declared that he was then a resident of Columbia; declared to a number of persons his intention to locate, and that he had located, in Tuolumne county as a permanent resident thereof; stated to certain persons, when about to depart for San Francisco, after disposing of his business by a sale thereof to another, that he intended to return. All these constitute circumstances tending strongly to support plaintiff's claim that defendant's legal residence was, at and before the time at which she filed her complaint, in the county of Tuolumne. Indeed, they are sufficient to support the court's order refusing to transfer the cause to San Francisco for trial, and conceding that the facts set out in plaintiff's own affidavit are contradictory thereto, then the result is that there thus arises such a conflict in the affidavits upon the question of defendant's residence as to fortify the decision of the court below on the motion against successful challenge on appeal.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

15 Cal. App. 385

IMPERIAL VALLEY MERCANTILE CO. v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. (Civ. 931.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 14, 1911.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 443*)—INJURIES TO ANIMALS—CROSSING ACCIDENT—NEGLIGENCE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

In an action for injuries to and death of a portion of a band of sheep by being run into by one of defendant's trains while crossing the track at a road crossing, evidence held to sustain a finding that defendant was negligent in the operation of the train, and that plaintiff's servants in charge of the sheep were not negligent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 443.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1001*)—REVIEW—VERDICT.

A verdict on matters of fact is conclusive on appeal, where there is any substantial evidence to support it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3928; Dec. Dig. § 1001.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by the Imperial Valley Mercantile Company against the Southern Pacific Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Conkling & Brown, for appellant. Shaw, Ross & Dyke, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff brought this action to recover damages caused by the killing of certain sheep belonging to it, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant. The issues made up were submitted to a jury, and a verdict in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $420 was returned, upon which judgment was entered. An appeal was taken from that judgment, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

It is the contention of defendant, first, that the evidence was insufficient to show any negligence on the part of defendant; and, second, that the evidence did show that plaintiff was negligent in the handling of the sheep, which negligence contributed to the cause of the killing of the animals.

A band of about 2,100 sheep belonging to plaintiff were being driven along a public road in the county of Imperial on the 8th day of July, 1908. They were in charge of an employé of plaintiff. The road along which they were being driven crossed the railway track of defendant at what is known as "Whiting's Crossing." It was nearly dark at the time, and before driving the sheep across the railway tracks the person driving them testified that he went to the track to look for a train, and that he looked up and down to see if there were any lights or any train, and that he did not see anything; that the track at the crossing was straight for several miles each way; that he looked a dozen times up and down the track while he was there, and, neither seeing nor hearing a train approaching, started to drive the sheep across. He was being assisted by a boy, and, when about 600 head of the sheep had crossed, a train approached without the sounding of any whistle or the ringing of a bell, and that before the sheep could be cleared from the track this train struck them, and killed and injured about 84 sheep. The train which did the damage was made up of the engine, tender, caboose, and three water cars. The engine was not placed at the front end of the train, but occupied a position in the middle thereof, with the caboose and one car on one end of it, and the two remaining water cars at the other end. The headlight of the engine did not reflect down the track toward the crossing at the time the train approached, for the interference of the other cars prevented it from so doing. Several eyewitnesses testified that as the train approached the crossing it was traveling backward, the caboose in front, and that no lights of any kind were displayed upon the caboose. The conductor of the train testified that there were red signal lights attached to the caboose, and that he and a brakeman were standing upon the platform of this car with lanterns in their hands. Some of the witnesses had heard, a short while before the accident occurred, the noise of an engine at the station of Heber, a mile and a half away, engaged as they believed from the sounds in switching cars. The train, after striking the sheep, traveled, according to the testimony of the herder, a distance of 110 steps before it was brought to a standstill.

[1] Upon this evidence the jury was fully warranted in making its finding that the defendant had been negligent, and that its negligence was the proximate cause of the killing of the sheep, and, further, that there had been no negligence contributing to cause the damage, committed on the part of plaintiff. It might even be said, upon the facts disclosed by the record, that the undisputed evidence showed both the negligence of the defendant and nonnegligence of the plaintiff. At any rate, the questions were questions of fact, which it was the peculiar province of the jury to determine, and their finding cannot be disturbed. [2] The rule is too well settled to need reiteration that the determination of a jury or a trial court upon matters of fact will be deemed conclusive upon appeal, where there is any substantial evidence to support it.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

15 Cal. App. 393

PEOPLE v. BROWN. (Cr. 274.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Feb. 15, 1911.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 244*)—SELF-DEFENSE—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to warrant a finding that a homicide was not committed in self-defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 244.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 109*)—SELF-DEFENSE.

Acts constituting self-defense by accused depend, primarily, on his own conduct, and, secondarily, upon decedent's conduct.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 138, 139; Dec. Dig. § 109.*]

3. HOMICIDE (§ 179*)—EVIDENCE—MATERIALITY—INSANITY.

Where accused relied solely on self-defense, evidence that at some time in his life he had been in an accident, resulting in mental and physical injury, was immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 380; Dec. Dig. § 179.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 670*)—OFFER OF PROOF—MATERIALITY.

It is not error to exclude prima facie immaterial evidence where counsel refuses to state his purpose in offering it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1593; Dec. Dig. § 670.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1086*)—APPEAL—RECORD—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

The exclusion of testimony will not be reviewed where no ruling on the objection appears in the record, and counsel do not appear to have insisted upon an answer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2794; Dec. Dig. § 1086.*]

6. HOMICIDE (§ 190*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

One accused of murder could not show what decedent did in the presence of, or said to, a third person before the homicide, where accused was not present.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 399-400; Dec. Dig. § 190.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church, Judge.

George W. Brown was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Ernest Klette, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the State.

LENNON, P. J. The defendant appeals from the judgment of conviction and an order denying his motion for a new trial.

He was informed against by the district attorney of Fresno county for the crime of murder, and found guilty of manslaughter. In support of his plea of not guilty the defendant attempted to prove that the homicide was committed by him in self-defense.

The defendant on the 25th day of February, 1910, was employed as a porter in the Palace Saloon at Coalinga, Fresno county. The defendant's statement of the incidents leading up to the shooting was substantially that at about 11 o'clock on the morning of the day just mentioned the deceased, William Miller, very drunk and quarrelsome, entered the saloon where defendant was employed, and, without any real or apparent provocation, commenced in vulgar and vile language to abuse and ridicule the defendant. This conduct continued almost without interruption, and with scarcely a word of protest from the defendant, until the noon hour, when the defendant went to his lunch. He returned to his work behind the bar about 3 o'clock in the afternoon of the same day. Miller also returned to the saloon about this time, and renewed his abuse and vilification of the defendant, adding to it a challenge to fight. Miller left the barroom for a few moments, and went upstairs to a lodging house, where he became engaged in an altercation with the landlady. At the suggestion of Al Johnson, a bartender in the place, who had come on duty while Miller was upstairs, the defendant followed Miller, and requested him to cease his disturbance and go back to the barroom. Miller, in reply and without any other provocation, gave the defendant a vicious kick in the stomach, and then, in an effort to get away from the defendant, stumbled and fell down the stairs into the barroom. When Miller got on his feet he turned about—so defendant claimed—shook his fist at the defendant and said, "I'll fix you." No other witnesses in the case saw this movement or heard the remark quoted. The defendant, without any attempt to retaliate, returned to the barroom and quietly resumed his duties. All of the witnesses for the people are agreed that from this time on until the shooting occurred Miller, with but slight interruption, freely and in filthy language abused and reviled the defendant without any apparent cause or provocation, and at one time attempted to reach or strike the defendant across the bar, but was intercepted by Johnson, the bartender.

The defendant during all of this time was apparently calm and collected, and never once made reply to the abuse that was being heaped upon him. Finally Johnson urged Miller to cease, and requested him to leave the place. Miller, after inviting the defendant to come outside and fight, said to Johnson that he would go, and started for the street door between two friends and companions, one of whom had him by the arm. Miller was now so drunk that he staggered in his walk. At this time the defendant was at one end of the bar engaged in cracking ice. To reach the street door it was apparently necessary for Miller to go at an angle in the direction of the place where the defendant was working. As Miller was advancing toward the door on his way out with a friend on either side, he half turned and called the defendant a vile and filthy name. Thereupon the defendant came forward from his place at the end of the bar, stepped around behind Johnson, and fired two shots from a revolver at Miller, the second of which proved fatal. While Miller was on his way just before the shooting, and about the time the defendant left his place at the end of the bar, some one said, "Look out for him, Al. He's got a gun." This remark apparently was made by one of the companions of Miller, who was not produced at the trial; but no witness who heard it knew for certain that it was Miller or the defendant that was referred to as having a gun. Miller's body was searched immediately after the shooting, but no weapon of any kind was found upon him. When the witnesses of the shooting closed in upon the defendant he exclaimed: "I'm not going to run away. They may hang me, but I am a ruined man. He kicked me in the stomach."

"I'll get you" was the only remark claimed by the defendant to have been made by Miller at any time which could have been construed as a threat against the defendant, and this, according to the defendant's statement, was said some 20 minutes before the shooting. The defendant claimed that Miller, just before and at the time of the shooting, had one hand in his pocket, and was apparently struggling to draw a weapon. None of the several witnesses for the people who were present prior to and at the time of the shooting saw Miller then or at any other time make even the semblance of an attempt to draw a weapon; and they were certain that no threat to kill or to do the defendant bodily harm was made by Miller when, staggering drunk, he was being escorted from the saloon by his two friends. The defendant, at the time of the shooting, was 53 years old, and Miller was a young man perhaps 18 or 20 years of age. Miller and the defendant were entire strangers until the morning in question. The defendant claimed that he shot to kill, believing at the time that his life was in danger. He insisted that this belief was fully justified by the events of the day, and particularly by the remark, "Look out for him, Al. He's got a gun." His attention, he claimed, was attracted from his work by this remark. He understood it as referring to Miller; and, upon looking up and aside, he saw Miller advancing upon him with one hand in a pocket apparently about to draw a weapon.

[2] It is now claimed that the defendant was justified by all of the circumstances surrounding the killing in honestly believing that an attack was about to be made on his life, or that he was in imminent danger of great bodily harm; and that therefore the verdict of the jury, finding him guilty of manslaughter, was contrary to the evidence. It is difficult for us to take counsel seriously in this contention; and if it were not for the earnestness with which he presents the point we would not give it more than passing notice. [1] "The acts which a defendant may do and justify under a plea of self-defense depend, primarily, upon his own conduct, and, secondarily, upon the conduct of the deceased." People v. Hecker, 109 Cal. 462, 42 Pac. 307, 30 L. R. A. 403. The killing being admitted, and the conduct of the defendant up to the moment of the shooting being free from fault, it only remained for the jury to determine from all of the surrounding circumstances whether the conduct of the deceased preceding and at the time of the killing was sufficient to justify the defendant in an honest belief, as a reasonable man, that his life was in danger, or in the fear of immediate great bodily harm at the hands of the deceased. That the jury carefully and favorably considered the remarkable fortitude and self-restraint of the defendant all during the trying ordeal to which he was subjected prior to the shooting is evident by their verdict reducing the killing from murder to manslaughter. A careful reading of the record, not only shows a substantial conflict on many of the material points in the case, but reveals sufficient evidence from which the jury might properly have inferred that the killing was not done in self-defense, but was rather the result of a natural resentment smoldering in the breast of the defendant, which was suddenly fanned into a flame of passion by the vile name hurled at him by the deceased immediately before the shooting.

[3] The following is a transcript of the proceedings during a portion of the direct examination of the defendant when he was upon the witness stand in his own behalf:

"Mr. Klette: Q. Now, I will ask you, Mr. Brown, did you ever at any time receive an injury, or were you ever in any accident where you received any injury?"

"Mr. Church: We object to that as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial.

"The Court: I do not see that that would have any bearing.

"Mr. Klette: Injury to his head, if the court please.

"The Court: You are not offering it for the purpose of proving irresponsibility?"

"Mr. Klette: I am simply offering it for whatever weight it may have with the jury one way or the other—basing my case largely on self-defense; but I believe it is a fact which the jury is entitled to know, having what weight it may with the jury.

"Mr. Church: It is irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial at the present time unless they propose to prove a defense by insanity.

"Mr. Klette: I don't think we have to state our object."

Thereupon the objection was sustained by the court, and the ruling is now assigned as error.

In view of the claim of self-defense interposed upon behalf of the defendant, the evidence sought to be elicited by the question objected to was wholly immaterial. Whether or not the defendant could properly unite a plea of insanity with a claim of self-defense under the facts of this case need not be here decided. The fact remains that his sole defense was self-defense; and, in the absence of a plea of insanity, evidence that at some time in his life defendant had been in an accident resulting in mental and physical injury was immaterial. People v. Davis, 36 Pac. 96.¹ [4] The proposed evidence was prima facie immaterial to the issue raised by the defendant's plea of not guilty and the special defense of self-defense; and therefore the trial court was entitled to know specifically the purpose of counsel in asking the question. People v. Shaw, 111 Cal. 175, 43 Pac. 593; People v. Schell, 123 Cal. 359, 55 Pac. 1006. It was counsel's duty in fairness to the court and in aid of the due and orderly administration of justice to have stated his purpose fully and completely, and his failure to do so upon the record here presented was sufficient to justify the court in sustaining the objection.

The landlady of the lodging house above the saloon where the killing occurred was called and sworn as a witness in behalf of the defendant. At one point in the examination of this witness counsel for the defendant endeavored to have her tell the jury the details of the altercation which the deceased had with her when the defendant was not present. Following an objection by the district attorney that the question called for immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent testimony, the court and counsel indulged in a general discussion as to the merits of the question and the objection. [5] It nowhere in the record appears that the court ruled upon this particular objection, and, as counsel for the defendant did not insist upon an answer to his question, we do not feel called upon to consider or discuss his assignment of error in this behalf. [6] However, later on in the examination of the witness the record discloses the following question, objection and ruling:

"Mr. Klette: Q. Well, I will ask you, Mrs. Leggett, after Miller was standing by the window there what did he do or say to you?"

"Mr. Church: We object to that unless it is shown it was in the presence of the defendant."

"The Court: At present I will sustain the objection."

The objection was properly sustained. The question called for testimony which could only have been the narrative of a past event not occurring in the presence of the defendant. In no sense could it be considered, as it is claimed by counsel to be, a part of the res gestae. People v. Wong Ark, 96 Cal. 125, 30 Pac. 1115.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; HALL, J.

15 Cal. App. 387

INYO DEVELOPMENT CO. v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF INYO COUNTY. (Civ. 804.) (Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 14, 1911.)

HIGHWAYS (§ 60*)—ESTABLISHMENT—REVIEW.

Where a board of supervisors had jurisdiction to determine the question of damages due petitioner in laying out a road, any error in rulings on the admissibility of evidence before the board, or the competency of witnesses, etc., cannot be corrected by a writ of review; petitioner's remedy being to refuse to accept the award, as authorized by Pol. Code, § 2690, whereupon the district attorney is required to condemn the property according to law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Dec. Dig. § 60.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Inyo County; F. F. Oster, Judge.

Writ of review by the Inyo Development Company against the Board of Supervisors of Inyo County. From an order of dismissal, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

P. W. Forbes, for appellant. Frank C. Scherrer and Ben H. Yandell, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment and order of the superior court of Inyo county dismissing a writ of review. It appears from the record that on April 6, 1909, more than ten persons, representing themselves to be freeholders within the county of Inyo, and representing that more than two of them were at the time residents of the road district wherein the proposed road is situate, and who were taxable therein for road purposes, petitioned the board of supervisors to lay out, open, construct, and maintain in the Fourth road district a public road, whose termini, width, and general route were specified in the petition; that said petition was accompanied by a good and sufficient bond in double the amount of the probable cost of viewing and laying out the proposed road, conditioned as provided by statute, which bond was duly approved. Thereafter, on the 8th of April, the board of supervisors met and said petition was by them considered, and evidence was presented upon the part of the petitioners showing the genuineness of the signatures attached to the petition; that at least ten of the petitioners were freeholders, who would be accommodated by the proposed road; that more than two of them were residents of the road district wherein the proposed road was situate, and who were taxable therein for road purposes. Thereupon the board, after considering the evidence, appointed three viewers, one of whom was a surveyor, to view and survey the proposed new road, and to submit to the board an estimate of the cost of the opening thereof, including the purchase of the right of way, and their views of the necessity for the road. These viewers gave the requisite notice provided by the statute and made a favorable report upon the petition.

¹Reported in full in the Pacific Reporter; reported as a memorandum decision without opinion in 101 Cal. xviii.

Thereafter, at the next meeting of the board, time was fixed for hearing the report, and notice was given, as required by section 2688 of the Political Code, of the hearing of such report. At the time appointed the supervisors took testimony in relation to the public necessity of the road, and by their order declared the amount of damages to the nonconsenting landowner, who was the plaintiff herein, and over whose land the road was to be opened, and declared the report approved and the location of the road established in accordance with the report of said viewers, and further found the damages sustained by plaintiff, over whose land said road was ordered to be opened, to be the sum of $25, and said sum was awarded as damages to plaintiff, and which sum was ordered set apart from the treasury of the county out of the road fund of road district No. 4, to be paid to said nonconsenting landowner. Plaintiff thereupon sought by a writ of review to have the action of said board annulled, claiming that the record disclosed a want of jurisdiction in said board to make its orders opening said road and awarding said damages. Upon the record being certified to the superior court, and upon examination and hearing thereof, it dismissed the writ, from which judgment plaintiff appeals.

There is and can be no contention as to the sufficiency of the petition, or of the bond, or of any proceeding leading up to and culminating in the order appointing the viewers, and that at the time of the appointment of such viewers and preceding the same ample evidence was presented to the board, showing that the petitioners possessed the qualifications required by the statute, and that the road not only accommodated ten or more of the signers, but the public generally. These things being determined, jurisdiction attached to the board for the making of subsequent orders in the premises. While the plaintiff contends that the record discloses a want of jurisdiction, it presents in the record nothing to support such contention.

It is further contended that the award of damages to plaintiff as a nonconsenting landowner was based upon incompetent testimony; that is to say, that the evidence upon which the amount was based was given by a witness not shown to be an expert in values. The board having jurisdiction to hear and determine the question of damages, if any error intervened in rulings upon the admissibility of evidence, or the competency of a witness, the same could not be corrected by a writ of review. In addition to this, however, plaintiff is in no wise precluded in its remedy by the finding of the board as to its damages. Section 2690 of the Political Code insures to it the right, when dissatisfied, to refuse to accept the damages, and thereupon the district attorney of the county is required to proceed under proceedings in condemnation to have the amount ascertained and determined.

We see nothing in the record as suggesting error upon the part of the court below in dismissing the writ of review, and such order and judgment are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

15 Cal. App. 390

WEBSTER v. SUITER. (Civ. 888.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Feb. 14, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1015*)—QUESTIONS OF FACT—REVIEW—GRANT OF NEW TRIAL.

Where a motion for a new trial was granted because of the insufficiency of the evidence, the order cannot be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3860-3876; Dec. Dig. § 1015.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 933*)—PRESUMPTIONS—GRANT OF NEW TRIAL.

Where plaintiff moved for a new trial for insufficiency of the evidence, and for newly discovered evidence, and the trial court granted the motion without specifying the particular ground for the ruling, it must be presumed on appeal that both the grounds alleged were considered in disposing of the motion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3425, 3772-3776; Dec. Dig. § 933.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1015*)—REVIEW—GROUNDS FOR SUSTAINING DECISION—GRANT OF NEW TRIAL.

Under such circumstances, since the ruling must be sustained if either of the grounds alleged is sufficient, and since the ground of the sufficiency of the evidence is not reviewable, the question of the sufficiency of the newly discovered evidence to warrant a new trial will not be considered on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3860-3876; Dec. Dig. § 1015.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by Anna B. Webster against B. F. Sulter. From an order granting a new trial after findings for defendant, he appeals. Affirmed.

George E. Whitaker, for appellant. W. W. Kaye, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Defendant appeals from an order of the superior court granting the motion of plaintiff for a new trial. The action was brought upon a promissory note executed by defendant. It was claimed on the part of the defendant that the note had been paid by the assignment of another promissory note owned by defendant. The latter note defendant had delivered to the Bank of Kern, with the understanding, as he testified, that it was to be received by said bank in extinguishment of the indebtedness owing by him to plaintiff's assignor on the note here sued upon, and also in extinguishment of an indebtedness owing by defendant to said bank. Defendant sought to prove that the Bank of Kern, in receiving the note under the alleged agreement mentioned, was acting on its own behalf, and also as the agent of plaintiff's assignor. These matters were controverted by evidence offered on behalf of the plaintiff, and the trial court made its findings in favor of defendant.

Subsequently thereto plaintiff gave notice of intention to move for a new trial on various statutory grounds, among them specifying that the evidence was insufficient to justify the decision of the court, and also that she had discovered new evidence material to her case, which she could not have produced with reasonable diligence at the trial. The motion for a new trial was thereafter presented, and the court made a general order directing that the same be granted. [1] For aught that appears in the record, the motion for a new trial may have been granted because of the insufficiency of the evidence, and if it was granted for that reason, of course, under the well-established rule governing the review of such matters on appeal, the order cannot be disturbed.

Counsel for appellant in his brief makes the statement that the only showing made by plaintiff in the lower court in support of her motion for a new trial was by submitting affidavits of newly discovered evidence, which he insists were not sufficient to authorize the court to grant said motion. [2] There is nothing in the record, however, which substantiates this contention, and even if it was a fact that all of the argument made at the hearing of the motion for a new trial was directed to the point as to evidence newly discovered by the plaintiff, the plaintiff would still be entitled to have all of the grounds mentioned in her notice of intention to move for a new trial considered by the trial court, and we must presume that they were so considered.

In the case of Sherwood v. Kyle, 125 Cal. 655, 58 Pac. 271, an order had been made granting a motion for a new trial, and in the course of a discussion upon the subject of the right of the appellant there to have the order reviewed on appeal the Supreme Court said: "It is not necessary to discuss the other points made on the motion for a new trial. They are, however, all involved on this appeal; for the court cannot foreclose the defendant as to any of them by granting a new trial upon some one ground. Except where one ground is as to the insufficiency of the evidence, and this only as to the ruling upon that one point, it is utterly immaterial here upon what ground the new trial was granted. The respondent may defend the ruling upon any point involved in his motion." We quote, also, from the case of Harrison v. Sutter St. Ry. Co., 116 Cal. 161, 47 Pac. 1020: "That the granting of a new trial is a thing resting so largely in the discretion of the trial court that its action in that regard will not be disturbed, except upon the disclosure of a manifest and unmistakable abuse, has become axiomatic, and requires no citation of authority in its support. * * * But so long as a case made presents an instance showing a reasonable or even fairly debatable justification, under the law, for the action taken, such action will not be here set aside, even if, as a question of first impression, we might feel inclined to take a different view from that of the court below as to the propriety of its action. More especially is this true where, as here, the question rests largely in fact, and involves the proper deduction to be drawn from the evidence. The opportunities of the trial court in such instances for reaching just conclusions are, as a general thing, so superior to our own, that we will not presume to set our judgment against that of the former, where there appears any reasonable room for difference."

[3] It becomes necessary, then, to consider whether or not the affidavits by which a showing of newly discovered evidence was attempted to be made were sufficient to authorize the granting of the motion. The trial court had the right to consider the matter of the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision and, if it was dissatisfied with its conclusion thereon, to grant the motion for a new trial. If the order as made can be sustained on the ground that the court did not abuse its discretion in granting the new trial for this reason, it must be affirmed. Upon the evidence given at the trial and as shown in the bill of exceptions, it cannot be said that the court improperly exercised its discretion in making the order complained of.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

15 Cal. App. 400

PEOPLE v. WALKER. (Cr. 288.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Feb. 15, 1911. Rehearing Denied
March 15, 1911.)

1. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 21*)—UTTERING FICTITIOUS CHECK—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.

The essentials of the offense denounced by Pen. Code, § 476, punishing the passing with intent to defraud any fictitious check, are the uttering and publishing of a fictitious check with knowledge of its character and an intent to defraud, and the state need not prove that accused drew or attempted to draw on an account which he had established in a bank based on the fictitious check, or that the bank was in fact defrauded by the transaction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. § 25; Dec. Dig. § 21.*]

2. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 21*)—UTTERING FICTITIOUS CHECK—INTENT—QUESTION FOR JURY.

The intent with which a depositor of a bank who had opened a deposit account in a fictitious name deposited a fictitious check in violation of Pen. Code, § 476, and thereby received credit on his account therefor, is for the jury, who need not accept his statement of his intent in making the deposit, but the establishment of the account and the subsequent deposit of the check creating an opportunity to defraud the bank justify a finding of an intent to defraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. § 25; Dec. Dig. § 21.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 552*)—CRIMINAL INTENT—EVIDENCE.

The intent with which a person does a criminal act may be inferred from all the surrounding circumstances.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1257-1262; Dec. Dig. § 552.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1035*)—MISCONDUCT OF TRIAL JUDGE AND PROSECUTING ATTORNEY—OBJECTIONS—EXCEPTIONS.

Accused may not on appeal complain of a discussion between the district attorney and the court on the court ruling on the admissibility of evidence, unless at the time he made an objection thereto, coupled with a specific assignment of misconduct.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2644, 2645; Dec. Dig. § 1035.*]

5. WITNESSES (§ 337*)—CROSS-EXAMINATION OF ACCUSED—IMPEACHMENT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2051, authorizing the impeachment of a witness by proof on his examination of his conviction of a felony, accused testifying in his own behalf may be impeached by proof on his cross-examination of a commission of a felony, though on his arraignment he admitted as alleged in the information a prior conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1147; Dec. Dig. § 337.*]

6. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 21*)—UTTERING FICTITIOUS CHECK—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

On a trial for passing a fictitious check purporting to have been signed and indorsed by a third person on a designated bank, evidence of the nonpayment of the check and of the fact that the third person did not have an account with such bank was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. § 25; Dec. Dig. § 21.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 695*)—EVIDENCE—OBJECTIONS—SUFFICIENCY.

An objection to hearsay evidence which does not specifically state that it is incompetent, or which does not specifically state any other legal ground of objections, is properly overruled.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1633-1638; Dec. Dig. § 695.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 696*)—MOTION TO STRIKE OUT EVIDENCE—GROUNDS.

A motion to strike out evidence must be based on an objection previously stated, where an opportunity to object presented itself, and a failure to specify the grounds of objection is a waiver of the objection, and a motion to strike is without the foundation of a valid objection, and is properly denied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1639-1644; Dec. Dig. § 696.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 693*)—EVIDENCE—OBJECTIONS—TIME TO MAKE.

An objection to the admissibility of evidence not seasonably made need not be ruled on.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1630; Dec. Dig. § 693.*]

10. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 21*)—UTTERING FICTITIOUS CHECK—EVIDENCE.

On a trial for passing a fictitious check purporting to have been drawn by a third person on a designated bank, the testimony of the receiving teller of the bank that, referring to the bank book showing the names of the depositors, the name of the third person did not appear as a depositor was admissible as prima facie evidence that the check was fictitious.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. § 25; Dec. Dig. § 21.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Wm. P. Lawlor, Judge.

John R. Walker was convicted of making and uttering a fictitious check, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Philip C. Boardman and J. K. Ross, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, C. M. Fickert, and Fred L. Berry, for the People.

LENNON, P. J. The defendant was charged with the crime of making, passing, uttering and publishing a fictitious check as defined by section 476 of the Penal Code. Included in the information is a charge of prior conviction of the crime of forgery committed in the state of Missouri. When arraigned upon the information, the defendant pleaded "not guilty," and confessed the prior conviction. Upon his trial he was found guilty, "as charged in the information herein, in having uttered, published, and passed the check set forth in said information in the manner and form alleged therein." The defendant was sentenced to a term of 14 years in the state prison at Folsom, and his appeal is from the judgment of final conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

It is not disputed by counsel for the defendant that the evidence on the whole case supports the finding of the jury that the check was fictitious, and was uttered and published by the defendant; but it is contended that the evidence is insufficient to warrant the finding of a fraudulent intent on the part of the defendant.

From the evidence offered and received at the trial in support of the case for the people, it appears that a few days prior to the 11th day of April, 1910, the defendant opened an account with the Savings & Loan Society of San Francisco in the assumed name of "Harvey Monig"; the defendant representing himself at that time to be Harvey Monig. Thereupon the usual passbook of the bank was issued to the defendant in the name of Harvey Monig. Subsequently, on the 11th day of April, 1910, the defendant again appeared at the place of business of the Savings & Loan Society, and presented to the cashier of that institution for deposit the sum of $2 in silver coin and a check calling for the sum of $43. The check was drawn on the International Banking Corporation of San Francisco, payable to Harvey Monig, and purporting to have been made and signed by one "Robert D. Metcalf." The check and money were received and accepted by the bank for deposit only. The defendant was then credited in his passbook and in the books of the Savings & Loan Society with the sum of $45. The check at the time it was presented and received for deposit was indorsed "Robert D. Metcalf" and "Harvey Monig." In due course the check was presented for payment by the Savings & Loan Society to the bank upon which it was drawn. Robert D. Metcalf did not have an account there, and the check was returned to the Savings & Loan Society unsatisfied, with the notation "Has no funds" inscribed thereon.

To the arresting officers, the defendant freely and voluntarily admitted that he knew the check was fictitious at the time he deposited it with the bank. The defendant did not draw or attempt to draw on the account which he had opened with the Savings & Loan Society; and it is conceded by the people that the bank was not in fact defrauded or injured by the transaction.

The defendant, as a witness on his own behalf, claimed that he had deposited the check with the bank for collection only, and without any intention to defraud. Aside from this his testimony was limited in effect to a denial that he knew, or ever admitted knowing, the check to be fictitious at the time of its utterance. His reason for assuming the name of Harvey Monig was neither clear nor convincing; and the explanation that he gave of how or from whom he received the check was weak and improbable, but, if true, tended strongly to support the inference of knowledge at all times on his part that the check was spurious.

[1] The uttering and publishing of a fictitious check, with knowledge of its character and an intent to defraud, are the essentials of the offense of which the defendant was found guilty. It was not essential for the people to prove that the defendant drew or attempted to draw on the account which he had established, or that the bank was in fact injured or defrauded by the transaction. People v. Turner, 113 Cal. 281, 45 Pac. 331; Arnold v. Cost, 3 Gill & J. (Md.) 219, 22 Am. Dec. 302; 3 Greenleaf on Ev. § 103. [2] The intent with which the check in question was deposited was a question exclusively for the jury; [3] and the intent with which a person does an act may be inferred from all the surrounding circumstances. The jury was not compelled to accept the defendant's statement of his intent and purpose in making the deposit. The establishment of the account and the subsequent deposit of the check created an opportunity for the perpetration of a fraud upon the bank; and we are of the opinion that the facts and circumstances of the case as revealed by the entire evidence fully warranted the jury in finding that the check in question was uttered, published, and passed by the defendant with intent to defraud the bank.

While the defendant was on the witness stand in his own behalf, the district attorney on cross-examination asked him if he had ever been convicted of a felony. The question was answered in the affirmative without any objection being interposed. However, an objection was subsequently made to the question upon the ground, in substance, that, the defendant having confessed a prior conviction upon his arraignment, the people were precluded, by the terms of section 1025 of the Penal Code, from again alluding to the subject in the presence of the jury. The objection was overruled; the court apparently treating the objection as having been made prior to the answer. Complaint is now made of the ruling, and also for the first time of the court's remarks preceding the ruling. The court's remarks and the reply of the district attorney prior to the ruling were pertinent and proper, and seemingly were intended to safeguard the defendant against the evil results of what might have been an unwarranted or, to the defendant, a misleading question. The court, for its guidance in ruling on the question, was privileged to know what was in the mind of the district attorney, and it was the latter's duty to reply. The discussion revealed the fact of another conviction still pending against the defendant in the same court. [4] The possibility of this resulting in injury to the defendant cannot be considered by this court, however, in the absence of an objection, coupled with a specific assignment of misconduct, made at the time of the trial. People v. Shem Ah Fook, 64 Cal. 382, 1 Pac. 347; People v. Abbott, 101 Cal. 646, 36 Pac. 129; People v. Trask, 7 Cal. App. 104, 93 Pac. 891; People v. Osborn, 12 Cal. App. 148, 106 Pac. 891.

The objection itself (assuming it to have been seasonably made) was properly overruled. [5] When the defendant took the witness stand in his own behalf, he subjected himself to possible impeachment in the mode authorized by section 2051 of the Code of Civil Procedure (People v. Hickman, 113 Cal. 80, 45 Pac. 175; People v. Mayes, 113 Cal. 624, 45 Pac. 860); and therefore, notwithstanding defendant's confession of a prior conviction, it was proper on cross-examination, for the purpose of impeachment, to ask him if he had ever been convicted of a felony. People v. Crowley, 100 Cal. 479, 35 Pac. 84; People v. Arnold, 116 Cal. 686, 48 Pac. 803.

The criticism of the trial court's explanation of the phrase "evidence in the case," as used in the usual and approved definition of a reasonable doubt, is hypercritical, and does not require extended notice.

Charles F. Waller, the messenger of the Savings & Loan Society, was called as a witness for the people, and without objection testified that he saw the check in question on the 12th day of April, 1910. At this point the following occurred: "Mr. Berry (for the people): Q. Where did you see it? Mr. Ross (for the defense): We want to interpose an objection now in advance as to anything that was done with this check after the 11th. The Court: The objection is overruled." The witness answered this question, and then, in response to further questions of the district attorney, and without any further objection or attempted objection from the defense, testified in substance that he presented the check to the International Banking Corporation for collection, and that payment was refused. This, and everything else testified to by the witness as having been said and done by him and others in an effort to collect the check, was not said or done in the presence of the defendant. In a word, all of the evidence elicited from the witness was clearly hearsay, and therefore incompetent. When the witness referred to concluded his testimony, a motion was made by the defense to strike out the evidence given, "upon the ground that he was attempting to testify to facts that occurred after the commission of the offense." This motion was eventually denied.

[6] Evidence of the nonpayment of the check, and of the fact that Robert D. Metcalf did not have an account with the International Banking Corporation, was admissible (Williams v. State, 126 Ala. 57, 28 South. 632; People v. Tollefson, 145 Mich. 444, 108 N. W. 751); but hearsay testimony was not competent to establish these facts. However, treating the objection as a timely one, and, conceding the testimony to be hearsay, and therefore incompetent, [7] the court did not err in its ruling, because neither incompetency nor any other legal ground of objection was specifically stated. People v. Chee Kee, 61 Cal. 404. It was not error for the court to refuse to strike out the evidence in question. [8] A motion to strike out evidence must be based upon an objection previously stated. People v. Long, 43 Cal. 444; People v. Rolfe, 61 Cal. 542. This of course assumes that an opportunity to object presented itself, as it did in this case. Failure to specify the grounds of an objection is in effect a waiver of the objection (People v. Baird, 105 Cal. 126, 38 Pac. 633), and therefore in this case the motion to strike out was without the foundation of a valid objection to support it, and was properly denied. People v. Nelson, 85 Cal. 428, 24 Pac. 1006.

James E. Orbison, the receiving teller of the International Banking Corporation, as a witness for the people testified without objection that Robert D. Metcalf "had no account at any time with the bank; there was no such name in the accounts of the corporation, and if the books were produced they would show there was no such account." Upon the suggestion of the court that there was no foundation for the testimony given in reference to the contents of the books, the witness was withdrawn, and his testimony in this particular stricken out. The order striking out did not, as far as we can ascertain from the record, include the testimony of the witness given without objection that Robert D. Metcalf had no account at any time with the bank. Later this witness was recalled, and had with him a book of the bank showing the names of its depositors, beginning with the 25th day of March, 1910, and ending with the 30th day of June, 1910. The sum and substance of the evidence given at this time by the witness is contained in the following question and answer: "Mr. Berry: Q. Referring to that book will you state whether or not the name of Robert D. Metcalf appears as a depositor of the International Banking Corporation during the time covered by that record before you? A. No, sir." After the answer of the witness to the question had been given Mr. Boardman, associate counsel for the defendant, said: "I understand that our objection goes to each question, on the ground it does not tend to prove it was a fictitious check, or the nonexistence of any such person." This was in effect an objection to the question quoted; but the court did not rule upon it. [9] The objection was not seasonably made, and the court was therefore not required to rule upon it. [10] In any event the testimony was admissible as prima facie evidence that the check was fictitious. People v. Eppinger, 105 Cal. 36, 38 Pac. 538; Williams v. State, 126 Ala. 57, 28 South. 632; 3 Greenleaf on Ev. § 109.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; HALL, J.

15 Cal. App. 363.

In re CHADBOURNE'S ESTATE.

CHADBOURNE v. CHADBOURNE.

(Civ. No. 756.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Feb. 11, 1911.)1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 533*)—RECORD—
OPINION OF TRIAL COURT.

The trial judge's opinion is no part of the record on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2339-2400; Dec. Dig. § 533.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 35*)—
REMOVAL—DISCRETION OF COURT—"NEGLECT"—"OMIT."

Code Civ. Proc. § 1511, provides that, "if an executor * * * neglects for two months after his appointment to give notice to creditors as prescribed, * * * the court must revoke his letters" and appoint another executor. Pen. Code, § 7, subd. 2, provides that the term "neglect" imports a want of such attention to the nature or probable consequences of the act or omission as a prudent man ordinarily uses in acting in his own concerns. Held that, construing section 1511 in view of the policy of the law to effectuate testator's expressed will as far as possible, it gave the court a wide discretion in removing executors thereunder, and an executor should not be removed if the failure to publish the notice within the required time is satisfactorily excused; the terms "to neglect" and "to omit" not being synonymous, since to neglect is to omit by carelessness or design, while an omission may be involuntary and inevitable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 227-262; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4740, 4741; vol. 8, p. 7729; vol. 6, p. 4959.]

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 35*)—
REMOVAL.

Courts will reluctantly remove an executor if there is no weighty cause therefor, and it does not clearly appear that the interest of the estate will be prejudiced by not removing him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 227-262; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

4. STATUTES (§ 183*)—CONSTRUCTION—LEGISLATIVE INTENT.

The legislative intent will be effectuated, if possible, though it may appear to be contrary to the letter of the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 261; Dec. Dig. § 183.*]

5. STATUTES (§ 227*)—DIRECTORY STATUTES.

Statutes which when, literally construed, are mandatory, may be held directory, and vice versa, so that the word "shall" or "must" may under some circumstances be construed as "may."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 308, 309; Dec. Dig. § 227.*]

6. EVIDENCE (§ 96*)—BURDEN OF PROOF—
FAILURE TO PERFORM STATUTORY DUTY—EXCUSES.

The burden is upon one who fails to perform a duty imposed by statute to excuse his failure in order to relieve himself from the penalty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 119-121; Dec. Dig. § 96.*]

7. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 91*)—
DUTIES OF EXECUTOR.

An executor must act with such prudence and diligence as are generally observed by prudent men in their own affairs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 397-402; Dec. Dig. § 91.*]

8. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 35*)—
REMOVAL—GROUND FOR REFUSAL—INAD-VERTENCE—VIOLATION OF STATUTE.

An executor obtained an order for publication of notice to creditors, and, on the same day, went to his attorney's office, and the latter's stenographer was instructed to have the notice published, and both the executor and his attorney believed that it had been published, but as an additional precaution the attorney some four weeks thereafter sent his stenographer to the county clerk's office to see if the affidavit of publication was on file, and she mistakenly reported that it was, and the executor did not know that the notice was not published within the statutory period of two months, until a petition was filed for his removal on that ground, though he was a subscriber to the paper in which he had directed the notice to be published. Both the executor and his attorney believed in good faith that the notice had been published. Held, that the executor should not be removed for failure to have the notice published within the statutory period, not being guilty of intentional neglect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 227-262; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

9. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 35*)—
CONSTRUCTION—FORFEITURE STATUTE.

A statute should be construed to avoid a forfeiture if it can be reasonably so interpreted, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1511, requiring the court to revoke an executor's letter if he neglects for two months after appointment to give notice to creditors, should be construed, if possible, so as to prevent unnecessary removal of executors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 227-262; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; A. J. Buckles, Judge.

Application by Dennie May Chadbourne for the removal of F. A. Chadbourne, as executor of Edwin Chadbourne, deceased. From an order of removal, the executor appeals. Reversed.

See, also, 112 Pac. 472.

T. T. C. Gregory, for appellant. Paul C. Harlan, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The appeal is from an order and judgment removing F. A. Chadbourne, a brother of the testator, from the office of executor for failing to publish notice to creditors within the statutory period of two months. The proceeding was based upon section 1511 of the Code of Civil Procedure and was instituted by Dennie May Chadbourne, the widow of deceased, and a co-executor with appellant.

Appellant obtained an order for publication of the notice on the day he was appointed executor, and on the same day he went with his attorney to the office of the latter, and the attorney's stenographer was instructed to have the notice to creditors published in the Solano County Courier, the paper selected by said F. A. Chadbourne. Both appellant and his attorney believed that the notice had been published, but some four weeks after the said order was made, for additional assurance, said attorney sent his stenographer to the office of the county clerk to see if the affidavit of publication of notice to creditors was on file and she reported that it was, mistaking for the one in question the "affidavit of publication of time set for proving the will." Not until the petition of respondent was filed did appellant or his attorney even suspect that said notice to creditors had not been published. There is no kind of doubt that they both acted in the utmost good faith and with a sincere purpose to discharge promptly their legal duty. It may be said, also, that it does not appear that by reason of the delay in the publication of said notice any detriment was caused to said estate. As to that, it was found by the court below "that no damage of any kind has been caused, nor any damage accrued to said estate by reason thereof, other than such as may arise from delay in administering the estate herein."

It is asserted by appellant, and not disputed by respondent, that the trial judge made the order of removal because he felt constrained to hold that he had no discretion in the premises, believing that the said section is mandatory in its nature. From the opinion filed in the cause appellant makes the following quotation: "The provisions of section 1511 seem to me to be mandatory, and leave no discretion whatever in the court as to the revocation of the letters. There is no doubt but what it would have been better if the administration of this estate could have gone on without friction or interruption. There seems to be nothing for the court to do but revoke the letters of both Fred A. Chadbourne and also of Dennie May Chadbourne."

[1] While the opinion of the trial judge is manifestly no part of the record here and is not subject to review, yet counsel seem to concede that it may be accepted as indicative of the court's interpretation of the statute and as suggestive of the vital point involved in the controversy.

[2] It may be admitted at the outset that the provision taken literally rather lends support to the trial court's decision. The section is as follows: "If an executor or administrator neglects for two months after his appointment to give notice to creditors, as prescribed by this chapter, the court must revoke his letters, and appoint some other person in his stead, equally or the next in order entitled to the appointment."

We think, however, that the more reasonable view is that it was not intended by the Legislature that in every case where there is an omission for two months to publish said notice the court is required to revoke the letters. There are certain considerations suggested by appellant, cognate to the main inquiry, which make this contention more readily acceptable, and which point to the conclusion that it was the intention of the Legislature to invest the trial judge with a wise discretion in the removal of executors or administrators, and to confer upon him the power to decline to revoke the letters if it appears that the failure to publish within the statutory period is satisfactorily excused.

In the first place, it should be and is the policy of the law to give effect, as far as it can be legally done, to the expressed will of the deceased. The nomination of the executor is evidence of the confidence reposed in him by the testator, and the deliberate purpose and desire thus solemnly expressed as to the administration should not be thwarted, unless the plain provisions of the law or the interests of justice demand it. In the case at bar, the testator required no bond nor security of any kind for the faithful discharge of the duties of executor, and, as further evidence of his faith in F. A. Chadbourne's fidelity, he constitutes him, in connection with two other brothers, the trustee of a fund of $5,000 for the education of the two sons of the testator. The foregoing is not, of course, a controlling circumstance. It would not justify an interpretation of the law in opposition to the plain will of the Legislature, but it should not be laid out of view where there may be a question as to what the Legislature intended in a provision relating to the removal of an executor. At least, it should rather incline the court to give to the law a construction as favorable as possible to the executor, where he has not shown himself to be incompetent, corrupt, or grossly negligent. It has been declared that "the principle governing the disposition of applications such as this is expressed in the phrase 'whom the testator will trust so will the law.' The executor is the confidential agent solemnly chosen by the testator to execute his wishes as they may be expressed in his will. To this agent the testator confides a most sacred trust. The person who accepts it accepts great obligations to the living and the dead and if he be alive to the binding force of those obligations and determined to discharge them bravely and honestly without partiality or preference, it will rarely if ever happen that he will be called upon to defend himself against a charge of misconduct or personal unfitness. Under the rules so familiar to all, we are not permitted to lightly pass over the wishes of the person who lives but in the memory of possibly the very one chosen to represent him after death and whom it is sought to displace. The reason for taking away the authority of a person so chosen should be well grounded upon undoubted proof of his utter improbvidence and unfitness for the duties of his trust."

[3] But beyond this the courts have generally extended to administrators a similar consideration, and they have manifested a reluctance to remove them unless compelled to do so. It is thus expressed in 18 Cyc. 165: "The courts are reluctant to remove an executor or administrator where no strong cause exists therefor, and it does not clearly appear that retaining the representative in office will jeopardize the interests of the estate." In Haines v. Carpenter, 1 Wood, 262, Fed. Cas. No. 5,905, it is said: "A strong case must be made out to induce the court to take possession of the property from an executor who has qualified and given bond for the faithful discharge of his trust and has taken possession under the will." And the Supreme Court of this state has said in the Estate of Graber, 111 Cal. 434, 44 Pac. 165, that "to revoke or forfeit letters testamentary or of administration, ipso facto, by a statute, is most rigorous treatment and we would not be inclined so to construe the law, unless the intention of the lawmaking power to that effect was plainly manifest." We must assume that the Legislature had before it this policy of the law when it enacted the statute in controversy.

[4] And, while the language upon its face seems to be mandatory, the cardinal canon of interpretation requires, of course, that we give effect to the intention of the lawmakers, though it may seem opposed to the letter of the statute. This is well expressed by Judge Thayer in Chauncey v. Dyke Bros., 119 Fed. 9, 55 C. C. A. 587, as follows: "We are aware that some courts have at times expressed in strong terms the necessity of pleading and enforcing statutes literally without regard to consequences. Some of these utterances have been called to our attention. But this doctrine of literalism which clings to the letter of a statute and ignores its purpose is not well calculated to promote the ends of justice. It is not the duty of a court of justice to perpetuate mistakes inadvertently made by the lawmaker by a blind adherence to the letter of the law, when the purpose of the law is apparent. Legislative bodies are not always fortunate in the use of language, but, if careful attention is paid to all the provisions of a statute as well as to the conditions which led to its enactment, little difficulty will generally be experienced in ascertaining what was intended. When the purpose is disclosed, it should be given effect, since whatever is within the intention of the lawmaker is as much within the statute as if it was within the letter."

[5] In accordance with this primary rule of interpretation, courts have constructed "may" as mandatory, giving it the meaning of "shall" or "must" (Estate of Ballentine, 45 Cal. 699; Hayes v. County of Los Angeles, 99 Cal. 74, 33 Pac. 766; Sutherland on Statutory Construction, 634); and in many cases it is held that "shall" and "must" are directory merely (Wallace v. Feeley, 61 How. Prac. [N. Y.] 225; Merrill v. Shaw, 5 Minn.

148 [Gil. 113]; In re Thurber's Estate, 162 N. Y. 244, 56 N. E. 631; Stone v. Pratt, 90 Hun, 39, 35 N. Y. Supp. 519; First Nat. Bank of Seneca v. Lyman, 59 Kan. 410, 53 Pac. 125; Cook v. Spears, 2 Cal. 409, 56 Am. Dec. 348; People v. Sanitary Dist. of Chicago, 184 Ill. 597, 56 N. E. 953). In Clancy v. McElroy, 30 Wash. 567, 70 Pac. 1095, the Supreme Court of Washington had before it a statute quite similar to the one involved herein, and the decision is directly in point. There section 6201 of the statute provided that "every executor and administrator shall make and return, upon oath, into the court, within one month after his appointment, a true inventory of the real and personal estate of the deceased which shall come into his possession or knowledge," and section 6208 provided that "if any executor or administrator shall neglect or refuse to return an inventory within the time prescribed, or within such further time, not exceeding three months, as the court shall allow, the court shall revoke the letters testamentary or of administration." As stated by appellant, the inventory was not returned within the statutory period, nor was the period extended by the court. It was insisted that the statute was mandatory, it being expressed in mandatory terms, "the court shall revoke," and it was urged by petitioner that the court had no discretion where the executor failed to file the inventory within the statutory time. The court in discussing this claim said: "No such statutory provision in the same terms has been brought to our attention, but it is a familiar rule of construction that the spirit as well as the letter must be considered in determining whether its provisions are mandatory or directory. The words 'may' and 'shall' may be used according to the context and intent found in the statute and are frequently construed interchangeably. From the reading of these two sections in connection with the received construction and nature of probate proceedings and the ordinary discretion of the superior court in such proceedings, it is concluded that the authority of the superior court to remove an executor in this case rests in a sound legal discretion. Considering that the failure of the executor to formally file the inventory was through mere inadvertence and forgetfulness and the further fact that he was the trustee selected by the testator and otherwise competent to manage the estate, no abuse of discretion is perceived in the court's rulings."

Again, the term "neglects" indicates very clearly that the court is clothed with some discretion. It is not the "omission" or "failure" to publish the notice that demands the removal of the executor or administrator, but if he "neglects for two months after his appointment," etc., the court must revoke his letters. Here also the Legislature must have had in mind the well-established significance of the expression. "To neglect" and "to omit" are not synonymous terms. There may be an omission to perform an act or condition which is altogether involuntary and inevitable. To neglect is to omit by carelessness or design." New York Guaranty & Indemnity Co. v. Gleason, 53 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 122.

The Penal Code of this state (section 7, subd. 2) also provides that "the term 'neglect' imports a want of such attention to the nature or probable consequences of the act or omission as a prudent man ordinarily bestows in acting in his own concerns." In this light the provision must be viewed. The section is the same as though it had provided that if the executor or administrator fails to publish the notice for two months, and his failure is the result of carelessness or design, the court must revoke his letters. Under the view of respondent, if the executor had been prevented by some unavoidable circumstances from making the publication, the result would be the same, since the court has no discretion. We think no such drastic penalty was contemplated by the Legislature. Of course, it is plainly the duty of the executor to make the publication within the statutory time. He is commanded to do so, and he should endeavor to comply with the direction of the law. The statute does not complacently leave it to the discretion of the executor as to the time when this notice shall be published, but its language is imperative as to the time, and, if he fails, he must satisfactorily excuse his omission or else his letters will be revoked. It may be said also that he is commanded to file his inventory within a certain time. Section 1443 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "every executor or administrator must make and return to the court within three months after his appointment, a true inventory and appraisal of all the estate of the deceased." Yet if he fails to do so, and has a sufficient excuse, the court will overlook his default. In re Graber, supra. In the admission by respondent that under circumstances rendering it impossible for the executor to give the notice within the prescribed limit his letters should not be revoked, there is, indeed, virtually a concession that the court is vested with some degree of discretion in the premises.

[6] Should this discretion have been exercised in favor of the executor? It is contended by respondent that his violation of the statutory duty per se rendered the executor guilty of negligence, and therefore the decision of the lower court could not have been otherwise. But respondent insists upon a conclusive presumption where only a disputable presumption exists. The rule in such cases is that, where it appears that a party has failed to perform a duty imposed by the law, the burden is cast upon him to excuse his conduct in order to relieve himself from the penalty. He would be required to overcome the prima facie case presented by the omission to do what the statute requires. In the Graber Case, supra, the respondent had not obeyed the mandate of the law, and yet the court below held it was a case of excusable neglect and therein was sustained by the Supreme Court; it being said: "The fact that such revocation can only take place after notice is a clear indication that the executor or administrator is to be given an opportunity to come before the court and show cause why his letters should not be revoked. Whether the cause shown be good or bad is a matter largely within the discretion of the trial court, and, when that court has investigated the question and adjudicated upon it, it will only be when a gross abuse of discretion has occurred that the court will interfere." So in Hubbard v. Smith, 45 Ala. 516, where the administrator had failed to return an inventory in the time required by law, the court said: "He ought to have filed an inventory, as any other administrator is required to do, and to have made annual settlements, but the mere omission to do so when he was not negligent and there has been no detriment to the estate is not ground for reversal." Indeed, the cases are numerous where there has been a technical violation of the law, and yet where the delinquent has been relieved of the penalty on account of inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect.

[7] As to the degree of care required of an administrator or executor, the authorities are uniform that "he must act with such prudence and diligence as are generally observed by prudent men of intelligence and discretion in regard to their own affairs."

[8] The executor here honestly endeavored to have the notice published. He intrusted the matter to his attorney, which is the course ordinarily pursued, and which, we may assume, usually results in a compliance with the law. He had every reason to believe and did believe that the notice had been published. It is true that he was a subscriber to the paper in which he directed the notice to be published, and it may be a little peculiar that he did not examine the paper for the notice, but he had no reason to suspect that the direction of his attorney would not be carried out. There was no designing neglect, but an oversight on the part of the stenographer, regrettable, but scarcely of sufficient gravity to authorize the removal of the executor. In the Estate of Welch, 86 Cal. 183, 24 Pac. 944, it is said: "While it is the duty of courts to protect carefully the interests of estates, the rights of those who are appointed to take charge of and manage them should not be overlooked, and an administrator should not be removed except for good and sufficient cause." In Heisler v. Sharp, 44 N. J. Eq. 167, 14 Atl. 624, it is said that: "No man is infallible. The wisest make mistakes; but the law holds no man responsible for the consequences of his mistakes which are the result of imperfection of human judgment and do not proceed from fraud, gross carelessness, or indifference to duty."

There is also the other consideration of some moment that the forfeiture of an office is involved, and the rule is that such provisions must be strictly construed, and forfeiture is not favored. It is so stated in People v. Perry, 79 Cal. 105, 21 Pac. 423, in this language: "Provisions for forfeiture of vested rights, whether in statutes or contracts, are not favored, and are, as they ought to be, construed as strictly or as liberally as possible against the forfeiture." The burden is upon the party claiming a forfeiture to show that such was the intention of the instrument. [9] If the agreement or statute can be reasonably interpreted so as to avoid a forfeiture, it should be so construed. Quatman v. McCray, 128 Cal. 285, 60 Pac. 855.

Under all the circumstances disclosed, we do not think the court was justified in revoking the letters of Mr. Chadbourne for an honest mistake which was not the result of gross carelessness and which was not productive of any positive injury to the estate.

The order is reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

15 Cal. App. 407

EAST SHORE LUMBER CO. v. HEALY-TIBBITTS CONST. CO. (Civ. 862.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Feb. 15, 1911.)

SALES (§ 358*)—ACTION FOR PRICE—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

A contractor, sued for the price of material bought for several buildings, could not show how much material was required for one of the buildings, without showing what material went into the other buildings, since such evidence in no way tended to contradict plaintiff's case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 358.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by the East Shore Lumber Company against the Healy-Tibbitts Construction Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Alex. G. Eells and H. K. Eells, for appellant. C. L. Colvin, for respondent.

HALL, J. Plaintiff brought suit to recover the sum of $1,626.89 for lumber sold and delivered to defendant by plaintiff, and recovered judgment for the full amount prayed for. Defendant appealed to this court from the judgment, and the only points urged for a reversal arise out of the rulings of the court in sustaining objections to two questions asked by appellant of each of two witnesses called by appellant.

The evidence shows without conflict that the defendant was engaged upon four building jobs in Oakland, and that one Reeder was its foreman and building superintendent, and, to quote from the appellant's brief, "had authority to order lumber for these various jobs." The plaintiff proved that the lumber sued for had all been bought from plaintiff by Mr. Reeder acting for the defendant; that the lumber had been delivered from time to time as ordered by Mr. Reeder, and receipts given therefor. The lumber was delivered at the various jobs as ordered by Reeder. Some of it also was delivered to the Pacific Lumber Company to be cut up in accordance with the orders of defendant, and two loads were delivered at a house in Berkeley, which belonged to Mr. Reeder, but which plaintiff did not know was not being constructed by appellant for Mr. Reeder. After the lumber had been delivered to Reeder's house, however, Reeder himself paid to plaintiff on account thereof $31.97, which was credited on appellant's bill, leaving the amount sued for as the balance unpaid.

Appellant, on its own behalf, placed Mr. Reeder on the witness stand, and he also testified to the purchase and delivery of the lumber, and that plaintiff's account was in all respects correct; that the several jobs being done by defendant at the time were a concrete building at the foot of Fifth avenue for the Western Power Company, a pumping plant for the city of Oakland, a fire engine house for the city of Oakland, and a building for the Western Pacific Company. He further testified that he received all the lumber for the defendant called for by the bills of plaintiff, and that it went into the various jobs, including, however, his own house, but that he had paid $31.97 to plaintiff on account of the lumber used in his residence, and had the same credited to defendant's account, and, in addition, had paid appellant on account of the material that went into his house $212, which he testified was largely in excess of the value of such materials.

Appellant then called one Horton, its secretary, who testified that he had examined the plans and specifications for the building appellant was erecting at the foot of Fifth avenue. He was then asked: "How much lumber would be required in said building as shown by the plans and specifications?" Objection was made to the question and sustained. He then testified that the work being done by appellant on said building was the concrete work, and that the lumber bought was for the forms to hold the concrete, and that after completion he measured the building on the ground to ascertain the amount of lumber it would require to make the forms. He was then asked: "How much lumber would it require?" Objection was made and sustained.

Similar questions were asked of another witness by appellant, and objections made and sustained. It is the rulings upon these questions that are now claimed to be erroneous.

We are unable to discover any error in the rulings. No matter what answer might have been given, such answers could not have tended to disprove the case made by plaintiff and the testimony of defendant's own witness Reeder. The questions were directed only to the lumber used in one building, and no other evidence was offered tending in any way to contradict the evidence given in support of plaintiff's case, and no effort was made to show what lumber went into the other jobs. Lumber had been furnished for five jobs; for, besides the four jobs being done by appellant, lumber had been furnished for the Reeder house in Berkeley, for which appellant had accepted payment from Reeder, and had thus ratified his act in buying the same upon their account. The record before us does not show what amount of lumber was charged to the building at the foot of Fifth avenue, or, indeed, that any of the lumber was charged to any particular job. The evidence in the record simply shows that the total amount sued for was sold and delivered as ordered by Reeder, and the fragmentary evidence offered would not have thrown any light upon the question at issue.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

15 Cal. App. 416

PEOPLE v. MUHLY. (Cr. 137.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Feb. 16, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 784*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

Where the evidence is circumstantial, it is proper to instruct that the evidence must not only be consistent with the hypothesis of guilt, but inconsistent with every other rational hypothesis.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1883-1888; Dec. Dig. § 784.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 741*)—TRIAL—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Where the circumstances justify a reasonable inference of guilt, the question is for the jury, though an inference of innocence might be drawn.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1705, 1713, 1716, 1717, 1727, 1728; Dec. Dig. § 741.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1159*)—APPEAL AND ERROR—VERDICTS.

A verdict in a criminal case based on circumstantial evidence carries the same presumption of correctness on appeal as other verdicts, and will not be reversed, unless wholly unwarranted by the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3074-3083; Dec. Dig. § 1159.*]

4. HOMICIDE (§ 250*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to support a verdict of manslaughter against one accused of homicide.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 515-517; Dec. Dig. § 250.*]

5. HOMICIDE (§ 332*)—APPEAL—REVIEW—VERDICTS.

Where a defendant has twice been convicted of manslaughter, and the trial court has shown his belief in the defendant's guilt by imposing the maximum penalty, the appellate court will be reluctant to reverse for failure of proof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 699-704; Dec. Dig. § 332.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REPETITION.

Instructions covered by instructions already given are properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

7. HOMICIDE (§ 7*)—MOTIVE.

Motive is not indispensable to a conviction of homicide.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 12; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 763, 764*)—INSTRUCTIONS—INVADING PROVINCE OF JURY.

An instruction in a homicide case that the question of motive becomes important, if not controlling, as showing the cogency of the circumstances, and that it is necessary that the facts from which the motive be implied be proved, is an invasion of the province of the jury under Const. art. 6, § 19, providing that judges shall not charge juries on matters of fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1731-1748; Dec. Dig. §§ 763, 764.* Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 579, 603, 631, 648.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; W. M. Conley, Judge.

T. H. Muhly was convicted of manslaughter, and appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 11 Cal. App. 129, 104 Pac. 466.

Frank Kauke and Ernest Klette, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Defendant was charged with the murder of one James H. Bethel, alleged to have been committed on or about February 28, 1908, at the county of Madera. The jury found him guilty of manslaughter and recommended him to the mercy of the court. The sentence of the court was 10 years imprisonment at San Quentin. Defendant appeals from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

1. The principal point upon which a reversal is asked is that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict. At a former trial the defendant was convicted of manslaughter. On appeal the judgment was reversed. 11 Cal. App. 129, 104 Pac. 466. At the last trial the court properly instructed the jury that, if they believed from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was guilty as charged, they must find him guilty of manslaughter. The defendant may deem himself fortunate, if guilty, that at his first conviction the jury by their verdict rendered impossible his conviction upon a subsequent trial of the higher crime, for the evidence tended to show a brutal murder by some one, with no accompanying circumstances pointing to any less crime than murder. While it is concededly true that the homicide, as viewed from the evidence was murder, it is strongly urged that the evidence fails to connect the defendant with it.

[1] The evidence of defendant's guilt is circumstantial. Reliance is placed upon the rule stated in People v. Staples, 149 Cal. 405, 425, 86 Pac. 886, 894. We quote: "Where the evidence is of such a character (circumstantial), it must be not only consistent with the hypothesis of guilt, but inconsistent with any other rational hypothesis. The deduction to be drawn from these circumstances is ordinarily one for the jury, but where, in a case such as this, every circumstance relied on as incriminating is equally compatible with innocence, there is a failure of proof necessary to sustain a conviction, and the question presented is one of law for the court." This statement of the rule suggests a very serious question, arising under the constitutional provision which makes the jury the exclusive judges of the facts. Where there is a series of circumstances from which, as is claimed here, guilt is made to appear, is it not the province of the jury to determine whether or not "every circumstance relied on as incriminating is equally compatible with innocence"? Under what condition in a particular case may the court assume the functions of the jury and determine that each of the numerous circumstances relied on as incriminating is, or that all of them taken together are, equally compatible with innocence, and therefore the verdict is not sustained? In the case now here the defendant presents in numerical order most, if not all, of the circumstances relied on for conviction, and endeavors to show each of these circumstances to be equally compatible with innocence, and hence there is a failure of proof necessary to sustain a conviction. The principle enunciated in the Staples Case is undoubtedly proper to be given as an instruction to the jury, and it was given by the learned trial court in unmistakable terms.

[2] But we do not think it can be accepted, or was intended to be accepted, as a rule of universal application to guide the appellate court in all cases arising out of or dependent upon circumstantial evidence. It rarely happens that circumstances attending the commission of a crime may not, in the opinion of the reviewing court, reasonably be susceptible of an interpretation compatible with the innocence of the person associated with such circumstances; and, if one after another of the alleged incriminatory circumstances may be eliminated, they would necessarily cease to have any probative force considered collectively.

There is always an atmosphere around the circumstances of every case as it is being presented to the jury which is dissipated by the appeal. This atmosphere is not always conducive to impartial action by the jury, but ordinarily it tends to just inferences and conclusions from the evidence adduced, and unless it otherwise appears it must be presumed that such inferences and conclusions were fairly deducible from the circumstances disclosed. Take some of the circumstances shown in this case; for example, the conduct and demeanor of the accused at the coroner's inquest and afterwards, conscious of resting under suspicion; or consider the fact of defendant's opportunity to commit the crime; or that he was the owner of the gun which probably was used in killing the deceased; or that the defendant made some apparently hostile declaration about the deceased some time previous to his death; or that defendant knew of the homicide shortly after it occurred, to wit, about 8 o'clock in the evening, and did not inform his neighbors of the fact until the next morning, but left the body lying on the ground unprotected during a very stormy night—each of these circumstances may be reconciled with innocence. But are not the jury the judges of the inferences to be reasonably drawn from the circumstances? As we understand the Staples Case, the rule there laid down followed an analysis of the evidence from which the court was authorized to conclude that there was no evidence warranting the verdict. We do not understand that case to hold that, where the circumstances are such as to reasonably justify the inference of guilt, the case will be taken from the jury because an inference of innocence might also reasonably have been drawn. Between these two inferences the jury must choose, and it is only where the evidence obviously does not warrant the inference of guilt that the court will interfere. This must be so, or the weight of the circumstantial evidence, and the inferences to be drawn from it in almost every case, must finally be determined by the appellate court, thus making the court the arbiter of both law and fact.

[3] In our judgment a verdict of a jury, and the judgment of conviction based upon circumstantial evidence, come to us as any other verdict and judgment, clothed with like presumption of support; and, unless we can say that the inference of guilt drawn from the evidence was wholly unwarranted, we cannot interfere.

[4] It appears from the evidence that deceased was an old man, unmarried, aged 75 years; he boarded with defendant, who with his wife and children lived in a house about 175 feet from a roadside house in which deceased lodged and kept a saloon and some articles of merchandise. On the evening of February 28, 1908, deceased took supper with defendant's family at about 7 or 7:30 o'clock and went thence to his saloon; a few minutes later, and while defendant was helping in the kitchen, defendant heard a shot. All we know of what happened we learn from witnesses at the trial who were present at the inquest, on February 29th, following the homicide, and heard the defendant testify, and who narrated what he testified to; also from some statements made by defendant to witnesses apart from his testimony at the coroner's inquest.

Witness W. A. Ellis had some conversation with defendant about the homicide on Monday, the 29th day of February, the day of the inquest, and he was present and heard defendant's testimony at that time. Ellis testified:

"Mr. Goucher: Q. Mr. Ellis, were you present on the 29th day of February or on the 1st day of March, 1908, in the Bethel saloon at the time the defendant testified before the coroner's jury? A. Yes, sir. Q. Do you remember any remarks that he made, any conversation, if any such conversation happened between you and this defendant touching a shotgun? A. Yes, sir. Q. Will you state what that conversation was? A. There was some conversation in regard to the gun, and he, turned around to me, and said, he says, 'You know the gun, Will,' he said; 'It is that Benson gun,' and I said, 'Yes; I know the gun.' Q. You knew by that remark, and you answered him accordingly, what kind of a gun he referred to?

"Mr. Kauke: We object to what the witness knew.

"The Court: He said he knew the gun, he has already answered. He said he knew by Benson's gun; he knew what gun it was.

"Mr. Goucher: Do you know whether it had any other besides Muhly and Benson before it came the property of either? A. Yes, sir. Q. Whose gun was it?

"Mr. Kauke: We object, it is immaterial.

"The Court: The objection will be overruled.

"Mr. Goucher: Prior to the time that either Benson or Muhly owned it? A. Charlie Ellis owned it. Q. Is that Charles A. Ellis a brother of yours? A. Yes, sir. Q. Can you describe the character or caliber or gauge and make of the gun? A. Yes, sir; I can. Q. Please do so. A. Well, the gun was a 12-gauge Remington shotgun, and it was a 32-inch barrel gun, pretty good gun for a gun that cost perhaps $35 or $40. Q. Remington make? A. Yes, sir. Q. 23-gauge? A. Yes, sir. Q. Was it hammerless or a hammer gun? A. It was a hammer gun. Q. Did you ever see Mr. Muhly in possession of that gun prior to the day of the inquest? A. I don't remember ever seeing him with the gun. Q. Mr. Ellis, do you remember the testimony in a general way given by Mr. Muhly at the coroner's inquest? A. In a general way; yes, sir. Q. Well, will you state what he said so far as any account of the shooting or alleged shooting of James H. Bethel was concerned, as to his own movements, as to the time, and as to the circumstances? A. Well, he said that the baby had been sick that afternoon, and that they had supper pretty late—I think he said about 7 o'clock; and Mr. Bethel came down to the house and ate supper, and after supper he went into the living room or sitting room and stood by the fireplace a little while, and went up to the saloon where he slept. Q. That is, by 'he' you mean—that is, accounting for the movements of Bethel? A. Yes, sir. Q. According to Mr. Muhly's testimony? A. Yes, sir; and shortly after he went up to the saloon, while Mr. Muhly was in the kitchen washing dishes, and he said that he heard a shot, and he went out the back door of the kitchen and around to the corner of the kitchen, perhaps 20 seconds after the first shot. Why, no; just as he got to the corner of the building he heard some scuffling on the porch, and heard the old man say, 'Don't do that boys, don't,' and then he heard another shot, and he went further over to the chicken house, part way between the barn and house and saloon building, and stood there for a few minutes, perhaps 15 minutes, and went back to the house and stayed there for perhaps an hour, and then he went back to the saloon; and he seen the body of Mr. Bethel lying there on the ground, and he said he did not see him move, nor he could not see him breathe, and he thought he was dead; and he went back to the house and told his wife he guessed the old man was killed, and they went to bed. Q. Do you remember whether he said when, if he did visit at all the scene, the time was that he visited the place where Bethel's body lay? A. He did not say the time; but about one hour after the shooting? Q. No; I am not speaking about that; after he said he went to bed, did he say in that testimony when he next saw Bethel's body? A. Yes, sir. Q. Go ahead. A. The next morning. Q. Well, what did he say about it? A. He said he went up there and seen the body lying there, and I don't just remember whether he said he or his wife took a blanket off of the card table and covered the body up, and he went up to Mr. Blazer's to notify them. Q. Did he inform you or any other hearer there while testifying before that coroner's jury as to seeing anybody else besides Mr. Bethel—seeing anybody engaged in this fight or in the killing? A. I believe that he did see some forms on the porch, but it was too dark; he could not see who they were, nor how many there was; nothing definite. Q. Do you remember whether he represented that he saw any forms prior to the second shot, or was it after the second shot? A. No, sir; he did not. Q. Do you know where the chicken house is with reference to—I mean the dwelling house where Muhly lived? A. Yes, sir. Q. Could you indicate on the map? A. Yes, sir; it is marked 'dwelling.' Q. This is the Muhly house, and the chicken house is where— A. The chicken house—this is the chicken house (showing). Q. Did he indicate in a statement where he was when he went up in that direction after the second shot? A. Well, he said he went up near the chicken house. Q. Near the chicken house? A. He did not say just exactly where—up to the chicken house; I think those are the words he used, to the chicken house. Q. Did he in the course of that testimony make any reference to a shotgun? A. Yes, sir. Q. Just state what he said. A. As I have already stated, he spoke about the gun. Q. That was in a conversation, a side conversation to you; but in his testimony outside of that, did he say anything about having a shotgun, or where the shotgun was that night? A. Yes, sir.

"Mr. Kauke: We object to that, he has answered it.

"The Court: That is when he was on the witness stand; the objection will be overruled.

"The Witness: Shall I be permitted to explain?

"The Court: Yes.

"A. When he turned to me and said, or asked me, or told me, that I knew the gun, that was while he was on the witness stand; while he was being questioned.

"Mr. Goucher: Q. I mean the rest of his testimony outside of what he said to you; I am asking about that. A. Yes; he said he had a gun, and that the gun was down to the house that morning, I believe, and that he said the gun was generally kept down to the house, and that he had taken the gun up that morning to Mr. Bethel's; that Mr. Bethel used the gun to shoot quail with. Q. Did he say anything about the then whereabouts of the gun while he was a witness? A. He said that he looked for the gun and could not find it; did not know where it was. Q. Do you remember whether he stated about what hour it was, or about what time in the day, when the gun was taken up to Bethel's? A. He said in the morning. Q. In the morning? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did he say when he had looked for the gun, whether he had looked for it the night of the shooting or the day after or what time? A. I don't remember as to his saying what time he had looked for it. Q. Did you take any part in the search at Bethel's saloon or store? A. Yes, sir. Q. Do you know whether that shotgun called by you the Benson gun, and which had formerly belonged to your brother, was found up to the time that the coroner's jury finished its investigation? A. It was not found; no, sir."

This is about as full and clear a statement of what was said by defendant at the inquest as appears in the record. Other witnesses also testified as to what defendant testified to. They differ in some respects from the account given by Ellis, but not materially.

The autopsy showed that a part of one charge of bird shot, No. 7 or 8, struck the deceased on the side of his face and head, and that a second charge struck the side of the saloon, and came from the direction of defendant's house, as was indicated by the perforations in the building. Death, however, was caused by the crushing of the skull of deceased with some blunt instrument, leaving parallel marks, which indicated probably that the instrument used was a double-barreled gun. There was evidence of empty No. 12 cartridges being found on the ground near the scene of the homicide similar to cartridges produced by defendant at the inquest, and not unlike some found in the saloon.

Undersheriff Hensley spent some nine days in the neighborhood, before defendant's arrest, investigating the circumstances of the homicide and searching for the gun. He had some conversation with the defendant on the subject. On one occasion he asked defendant to assist him in his search for the gun, and defendant replied: "He said he did not care to do that; that he would not find his own gun if he could. He says, 'Inasmuch as I am suspected anyway,' and of course I said a good deal, urging him to make suggestions to me or my men the probable hiding place and so forth, and give me the benefit, possibly, of his experience as a hunter of hidden things, and finally he said to me—we had walked some little distance—that his idea of hidden things was— Q. Well, go ahead and state what Muhly said. A. He stepped back a little distance at the end of a log. He says, 'For instance, you dig down there. You will find a pot, and in that pot you will find a jar, and in that jar is all the valuable papers I have buried,' and he said my idea would be to bury it; would be the safest way to hide it. That is all he said at that time." Later the witness dug down as suggested by defendant and found the pot and jar.

At a second conversation the witness asked defendant if he (witness) understood defendant to say, when he called for help to search for the gun, that he refused, and defendant answered, "Yes." Witness then asked him what caused him to say he "had been suspected," and defendant replied: "Well, when I saw that tearing off the boards off the saloon, I concluded I was suspected." "Q. Is that all the conversation? A. I asked him why he did not go to the assistance of his partner that night, and he said that he had been taking him out of trouble before, and he got tired of it." He was asked what troubles he referred to, and he spoke of but one, and that as occurring at the store of Charles Ellis. When the undersheriff arrested him, about March 9th, defendant "stepped into the room to change his clothes," and witness testified: "I stepped with him, and he said to me, 'And you think I done it?' I said, 'Yes.' That was all there was said."

One of the persons, Sam Polkenhorn, said by defendant to have been at Ellis' store at the time referred to, and with whom in part the alleged difficulty occurred with deceased, testified that he did not remember to have had any trouble with deceased.

Witness J. H. Peabody testified that he saw the deceased about half past 4 in the afternoon of February 28th, at his saloon, and this is the last time he was seen alive so far as appears otherwise than through the statements of defendant. This witness testified also to having had a conversation with defendant about the 1st day of February, a month before the homicide. "Q. Where did you have that talk with Mr. Muhly? A. Well, it was right alongside the road known as the Bethel garden, a spot where he raised some melons southeast of the house. * * * Q. How far from Bethel's saloon? A. I should judge between two and three hundred yards. * * * Q. Relate the conversation. A. I drove along there with my wagon, and Mr. Muhly was plowing up what is known as the melon patch, and I asked him what Jim was going to do about raising melons there, and he said, 'God damn him; he never will raise any more melons here,' and that's about all there was said about that. We turned it off to something else, and I didn't pay any more attention to it and went on. Q. So far as you remember, was there any further conversation? A. What is that? Q. Was there any conversation than what you have now related? A. Not in regard to Mr. Bethel or anything of that kind. Q. Did you know at that time of your own knowledge whether there had been any melons raised on the particular piece of ground which Mr. Muhly was then engaged in plowing, had it been a melon patch before that? A. Yes, sir. Q. For a long time? A. Off and on, I guess, for several years. Q. Did you recite at any point in that conversation to Mr. Muhly what Bethel's success had been according to his own representations in raising melons as to the value of melons he had raised? A. Yes; he said that Bethel told him he raised a couple of hundred dollars worth of melons off of that patch. Q. And the statement that you have made is what Muhly said on the subject were in the future prospective of raising melons? A. Yes, sir."

There was much testimony by witnesses as to the personal demeanor of the defendant when on the witness stand and at other times, introduced no doubt to furnish a basis for an inference that he showed a guilty conscience. Other witnesses testified that they had observed no unusual conduct or demeanor in the defendant at these times. These witnesses were, of course, not permitted to give their interpretation of defendant's acts, but they described them as they appeared while he was testifying and at other times.

At his first trial the jury disagreed; at the second trial he was found guilty of manslaughter; and at the third trial a like verdict was rendered, with, as stated, a recommendation to the mercy of the court. The trial court seems not to have heeded this recommendation, for it gave defendant the full limit of imprisonment.

We have endeavored to state the principal circumstances upon which the jury reached the verdict of guilty. There were some other circumstances seemingly trifling when considered unaided and alone. Indeed it is contended that there is not a single circumstance which may not be reconciled with defendant's innocence. Consider, for example, that defendant knew, according to his own story, that deceased was in some sort of serious peril; that he heard a shot at the saloon where deceased was, followed by a cry indicating his danger, and then another shot; defendant returned to his home without further inquiry and remained there for nearly an hour; then went to the saloon and found deceased lying dead on the ground; he left the body as he found it, exposed to the storm, returned to his wife, told his wife, and went to bed, and did not inform his nearest neighbor, a quarter of a mile away, until the next morning. Now consider this manifest indifference to the fate of deceased with his previous declaration to witness Peabody, "God damn him, he never will raise any more melons here;" consider this, also, with his statement that it was his own gun with which the shots were fired, and that it has never been found, and that defendant refused to aid in its discovery. Can we say as matter of law that the jury were unauthorized to draw from these and other circumstances any inference of guilt? We think not. Is it reasonable to suppose that the assailants of deceased in some way got possession of defendant's gun at the saloon on the day of the homicide, came back at night, called him out to the porch, fired at deceased, and then beat him on the head with the gun barrel until he was dead? And yet defendant says this is what may have happened, and is entirely consistent with defendant's narrative of the circumstances.

We do not think it necessary to further notice the evidence. Our opinion is that the jury were justified in finding the defendant guilty. Some consideration is due to the fact, also, that the learned trial judge, after sitting at three trials of the case, denied defendant's motion for a new trial, and was so impressed with defendant's guilt as to disregard the recommendation of the jury.

[5] We should be loath to disturb a verdict upon questions of fact alone, buttressed as this is by the evidence we have pointed out, and by two convictions, and by the implied opinion of defendant's guilt, inferable from the sentence imposed.

[6] 2. Error is claimed because of the refusal of the court to give certain instructions. On page 44 is an instruction upon the law where the case rests upon circumstantial evidence. It was refused and properly, for the court had fully and very favorably to defendant instructed the jury in language as strong as used by the Supreme Court in the Staples Case, supra, and as favorably as asked by the defendant.

[7] 3. On pages 46 and 47 are two instructions, which were refused, upon the question of motive as an important factor in cases where reliance is placed "in whole or in part on circumstantial evidence." The court was asked to tell the jury that: "The question of motive becomes important, if not controlling, as showing the cogency of the circumstances, and in such cases it is necessary that the facts be established from which motive may be implied, and that a motive cannot be supplied by mere speculation." Motive is not indispensable to a conviction, and where the court so charged the jury it was held not error. People v. Besold, 154 Cal. 363, 369, 97 Pac. 871.

[8] Furthermore the instruction asked invades the exclusive function of the jury as judges of the facts. The court may not charge the jury upon questions of fact. Article 6, § 19, Constitution; People v. Glaze, 139 Cal. 154, 163, 72 Pac. 965.

4. On pages 36 and 37 and 39 and 40 are instructions given by the court on the subject of reasonable doubt. It is claimed by defendant that they are the same as were given in People v. Verduzco, 13 Cal. App. 789, 110 Pac. 970. Defendant adopts the argument made at that time by counsel for defendant, in his attack upon the instructions. We held that they were not erroneous. Rehearing of that case was denied by the Supreme Court, and we conclude that we may safely dismiss the point without further notice.

5. Some errors of law are assigned as occurring in the admission of certain evidence, but an examination of the record discloses no prejudicial error in any of the particulars pointed out.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

15 Cal. App. 413

AVERY v. CULLEN. (Civ. 921.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Feb. 16, 1911.)

1. SALES (§ 92*)—CONTRACTS—OBLIGATION TO REPURCHASE.

Where a seller agreed to repurchase the goods within a specified time if the buyer became dissatisfied, the seller on the buyer giving notice of his dissatisfaction became immediately liable for the payment of the price he had agreed to pay on a repurchase.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 257, 259; Dec. Dig. § 92.*]

2. SALES (§ 92*)—CONTRACTS—OBLIGATIONS TO REPURCHASE.

Where the failure of a buyer under an agreement of the seller to repurchase within a specified time to insist on the repayment of the price within such time was due to the act of the seller in persuading him not to do so, the seller could not refuse to repurchase on the ground that the tender of the goods had not been made in time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 257, 259; Dec. Dig. § 92.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 117*)—SALE OF STOCK—RESCISSION—TENDER.

Under Civ. Code, § 1691, requiring a party rescinding a contract to restore to the other party everything of value received under the contract, a buyer of valueless corporate stock need not on rescinding the contract of sale tender a return of the stock.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 506; Dec. Dig. § 117.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by Henry W. Avery against J. F. Cullen. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Henry W. Nisbet, for appellant. Watkins & Blodget, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Defendant has appealed from a judgment entered against him for the sum of $2,250 as principal and $630 interest. Three causes of action were alleged in plaintiff's complaint, each of which grew out of the purchase from defendant of shares of stock in a corporation called the Pittsburg Placer Mining & Milling Company. On the 9th day of October, 1906, plaintiff purchased 500 shares of that stock from defendant, and on the 11th of October following he purchased 1,500 additional shares, paying for all of the stock at the rate of 50 cents per share. On September 18, 1906, one Georgiana Avery purchased 2,500 shares of the stock of the same company from the defendant, and she thereafter assigned to the plaintiff her right of action against defendant, which is the subject of the third count of plaintiff's complaint. At the time the sales of the several parcels of stock were made, defendant, in consideration thereof, executed a written contract by the terms of which he agreed to repurchase the stock within 18 months, in the event the plaintiff or Georgiana Avery became dissatisfied therewith, and to repay the amount of the purchase price, together with interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum. It is alleged in the complaint that, before the expiration of 18 months, the plaintiff and his assignor did become dissatisfied with the stock purchased, and gave notice to defendant of that fact. It is further alleged that the stock of the Pittsburg Placer Mining & Milling Company never had any value whatsoever. In the findings of the court these allegations of fact are determined to be true, and judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff as indicated. The record on appeal consists of the judgment roll only, and appellant has filed no brief presenting any of the grounds upon which he relies for reversal. We have examined the findings, however, and are of the opinion that they fully support the judgment as made by the trial court. It is true that it was alleged by plaintiff and found by the court that the stock was not tendered back to defendant by the plaintiff and his assignor and repayment of the money agreed to be paid demanded until the 29th day of October, 1908, which was after the expiration of the 18 months from the date of the several sales.

[1] The agreement of defendant was to repurchase the stock "providing the said H. W. Avery (or Georgiana Avery) becomes dissatisfied with said stock." Upon the giving of the notice to defendant by the purchasers of their dissatisfaction with the stock, defendant became immediately liable for the payment of the money he had agreed to pay in that event. Gay v. Dare, 103 Cal. 454, 37 Pac. 466.

[2] The facts as found by the court show that the failure of plaintiff and his assignor to insist upon the repayment of the purchase price and interest within the 18 months was due to the acts of defendant in persuading them not to do so. This being true, defendant could not refuse to comply with the terms of his agreement to repurchase on the ground that the tender of the stock was not made in time. Pierce v. Lukens, 144 Cal. 397, 77 Pac. 996. If the case is to be viewed as one for rescission, then no tender of the stock by plaintiff to defendant was necessary, as the court found that the stock was valueless, and that it had never had any value.

[3] A party rescinding is only required to tender back those things received by him which are of value. Civ. Code, § 1691.

The judgment as rendered is fully sustained by the findings, and it is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

15 Cal. App. 287

In re SEYMOUR'S ESTATE. (Civ. 779).
(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Feb. 4, 1911.)

1. COURTS (§ 202*)—PROBATE PROCEEDINGS—RIGHT TO APPEAL.

Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 2, conferring a right of appeal from orders after final judgment, does not apply to appeals in probate proceedings which exist only under subdivision 3, authorizing appeals from specified orders in probate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Dec. Dig. § 202.*]

2. COURTS (§ 202*)—PROBATE PROCEEDINGS—APPEAL—ORDERS APPEALABLE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 3, authorizing appeals in probate only from specified orders, did not authorize an appeal from an order directing the manner of disposing of decedent's body and directing the place in which it should be interred, nor did it warrant an appeal from an order refusing to vacate an order fixing such place of interment and setting apart out of the estate a sum to be expended therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Dec. Dig. § 202.*]

3. COURTS (§ 204*)—JURISDICTION.

Where an order is made without jurisdiction and is unappealable, the remedy of objecting parties is by a direct attack by some other mode in an appellate court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Dec. Dig. § 204.*]

4. DEAD BODIES (§ 4*)—DISPOSITION—JURISDICTION.

Where the authorities of a city prior to decedent's death had adopted ordinances prohibiting further interments in a cemetery in which deceased had a mausoleum, the probate court at the instance of decedent's executors had jurisdiction to order the interment of his remains in a cemetery other than that in which he and his wife had orally expressed a wish to be buried, and to provide for such interment out of the funds of decedent's estate against a protest of objectors interested in the estate of decedent's widow, but who were not of kin to him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dead Bodies, Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Simon H. Seymour, deceased. From an order denying the motion of Charles E. Parent, executor of the will of Susan C. Seymour, deceased, to vacate an order directing the executors of Simon H. Seymour to purchase a burial lot in Cypress Lawn Cemetery in the county of San Mateo in which to inter the body of their decedent, and to erect an appropriate monument on the grave at a cost not to exceed $5,000, they appeal. Dismissed.

Charles F. Hanlon, for appellants. Charles W. Slack, for respondents.

HART, J. Simon H. Seymour, deceased, and Susan C. Seymour, deceased, were during their lives husband and wife, having intermarried in the year 1877. In June, 1904, Simon, while spending the summer with his wife at Bartlett Springs, this state, died, leaving no children. Susan was in the same month appointed special administratrix of Simon's estate by the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, and discharged the duties of that office until the purposes of the special administration were fully accomplished and the last will of the deceased was admitted to probate. The last-mentioned proceeding was had in the month of April, 1905, and letters testamentary granted and issued to Reuben H. Lloyd and E. W. Hawkins.

The other facts relating and leading to the order from which this appeal is taken are accurately narrated in his brief by counsel for the executors of Simon's estate, and we will therefore adopt the same here as the statement of said facts:

"The Seymour family having no suitable burial ground, the body of Simon was temporarily deposited in the public vault of the Cypress Lawn Cemetery, in San Mateo county. In April, 1906, the widow, desiring to place the corpse in a permanent grave, and having selected the cemetery agreeable to her, petitioned the court to direct the executors so to inter. On the day set for the hearing of the petition, San Francisco was in flames, thus preventing the hearing of the petition. Nothing was thereafter done about the matter until August 9, 1907, when, in pursuance of a petition of Simon's executors, an order was made authorizing the executors to 'purchase a burial plot in Cypress Lawn Cemetery in which to inter the body of Simon H. Seymour, deceased, and to erect an appropriate monument upon the grave of said decedent, at a cost not to exceed the sum of $5,000.'

'Previously, and on July 16, 1906, Susan died. On October 23, 1907, a notice of motion to vacate the order of August 9th, together with a supporting affidavit, was served and filed by the executor of the will of Susan. On June 4, 1908, the petition of Sarah Harrington and Robert McBryant, sister and brother and next of kin of Susan, was filed, praying the court to set aside the order of August 9th, in relation to the burial of Simon. The petition was supported by an affidavit setting forth that Simon and Susan had in their lifetime desired to be buried together with George Kordmeier and John McBryant, respectively, the brother of Simon and the father of Susan. The two motions were heard from June 14, 1908, to June 16, 1908. On June 19, 1908, the motions were denied on the ground that the moving parties had no interest in the controversy.'

The controversy is brought here by an appeal from the order denying the motion of the executor of Susan's estate and that of Harrington and McBryant to set aside and vacate the order authorizing the executors of Simon's estate to "purchase a burial plot in Cypress Lawn Cemetery in which to inter the body of Simon H. Seymour, deceased, and to erect an appropriate monument upon the grave of said decedent, at a cost not to exceed the sum of $5,000."

[1] The point is made by the respondents that the order appealed from is a nonappealable order, and a motion to dismiss the appeal on that ground is under submission. The point is well taken, and the motion must be granted.

The cases are uniform upon the proposition that authority for an appeal in any probate matter must be found in subdivision 3 of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for said subdivision of said section specifically points out all and the only cases or instances in which an appeal may be taken in probate proceedings. There is no other provision of law in this state which purports to authorize an appeal in any case in probate matters. Subdivision 2 of said section 963, establishing the right of appeal from orders after final judgment, has often been held not to apply to probate proceedings. Therefore any order in probate proceedings that does not come within any of the cases enumerated in subdivision 3 of said section 963 is not appealable, and an attempted appeal from such an order is abortive, and will, of course, be dismissed. See Estate of Calahan, 60 Cal. 232; Estate of Lutz, 67 Cal. 457, 8 Pac. 39; Estate of Wiard, 83 Cal. 619, 24 Pac. 45; Estate of Hathaway, 111 Cal. 270, 43 Pac. 754; Estate of Wittmeier, 118 Cal. 255, 50 Pac. 293; Estate of Hickey, 121 Cal. 378, 53 Pac. 818; Estate of Winslow, 128 Cal. 311, 60 Pac. 931; Estate of Cahill, 142 Cal. 628, 76 Pac. 383; Estate of Edelman, 148 Cal. 233, 82 Pac. 962, 113 Am. St. Rep. 231; Estate of Fretwell, 152 Cal. 573, 93 Pac. 283; Estate of Bouysson, 1 Cal. App. 657, 82 Pac. 1066.

[2] Appeals in probate proceedings are limited by subdivision 3 of section 963 of said Code to the following judgments or orders: "From a judgment or order granting or refusing to grant, revoking or refusing to revoke, letters testamentary, or of administration, or of guardianship; or admitting or refusing to admit a will to probate, or against or in favor of the validity of a will, or revoking or refusing to revoke the probate thereof; or against or in favor of setting apart property, or making an allowance for a widow or child; or against or in favor of directing the partition, sale, or conveyance of real property, or settling an account of an executor, administrator, or guardian; or refusing, allowing, or directing the distribution or partition of an estate, or any part thereof, or the payment of a debt, claim, or legacy, or distributive share; or confirming or refusing to confirm a report of an appraiser or appraisers setting apart a homestead." Manifestly, it will require no argument to demonstrate that the foregoing provisions authorizing appeals in probate cases do not include, even by analogy and much less by express terms, an order of the character of the one from which it is sought to prosecute the appeal in the case before us.

The objection to the order to vacate which the proceedings giving rise to the order appealed from were inaugurated, is not directed against the amount of money thus authorized to be expended for a burial place, but against the manner in which the body of Simon H. Seymour was thus proposed to be disposed of. In truth, the real gravamen of the opposition of the appellants to the order seems to be in its omission to provide for the interment of the remains of Susan and those of her father and Simon's brother in the same plot or vault in which the remains of Simon are to be interred. But, as declared, it is very clear that there is to be found in the language of subdivision 3 of section 963, supra, neither authority for an appeal from an order directing the manner of disposing of the body of the deceased or the particular place in which it shall be interred, nor any warrant for an appeal from an order refusing to vacate and set aside an order providing for the permanent repose of the body of a deceased person and setting apart out of the estate of the deceased a sum of money to be expended for that purpose.

But it is declared by counsel for appellants that the order establishing the place of burial and fixing and allowing the sum to be expended therefor "is in excess of the jurisdiction of the lower court, and null and void, whether there be an appeal or not, so the question of what constitutes an appealable order is immaterial." This position is untenable. It proceeds upon the theory that Simon having in his lifetime expressed the wish (not in his last will) that his remains be interred along with the remains of his wife, on her death, and those of his brother and father-in-law, in what is known as the "Woodlawn Cemetery," and Susan having (not by will) expressed a similar wish and so expressed herself to the executors of Simon's estate, who agreed to comply with said wish, the order of the court with the respect to said matter being, as is the charge, in conflict with the wish so expressed and the agreement so had with said executors, is in excess of the jurisdiction of the court. In other words, the contention is that it was the duty of the court to make an order in the premises in conformity with the wish of Simon and Susan in that regard, and that it was without authority or jurisdiction to make any other order, with reference thereto.

[3] A complete reply to this proposition is that, if the court was without jurisdiction to make an order from which the law has provided for no appeal, the remedy of the parties dissatisfied with such order, assuming that there were such parties having the legal right to complain thereof, would lie in a direct attack upon the court's action in thus usurping jurisdiction or exercising unauthorized power. We do not understand it to be the rule that, where a court makes an order from which no appeal is authorized by the statute, such order nevertheless becomes appealable if it appears that in making it the court exceeded its jurisdiction or that the court's jurisdiction to make it may be inquired into on an appeal therefrom. While, under our view of the case, it is unnecessary to pass upon the question whether the court did or did not exceed its jurisdiction in making the order objected to, we do not hesitate to say that the case of O'Donnell v. Slack, 123 Cal. 285, 55 Pac. 906, 43 L. R. A. 388, cited by appellants, could not, even if the question of jurisdiction of the court were properly submitted here, furnish a great amount of comfort to appellants. In that case, which was before the court on a writ of certiorari, the power or jurisdiction of the court to order the remains of the deceased to be delivered to the custody of a stranger as against the right of the widow of the deceased to the possession and disposition of his remains was directly in question. The court in probate had against opposition interposed by the widow as the next of kin to the deceased made an order directing the delivery of the possession of the remains of her deceased husband to one Martin, a stranger to his blood, to be by said Martin removed to Ireland for burial. The Supreme Court held that the court below "exceeded its jurisdiction in attempting to award the custody of the body of the deceased to one not of kin, to the exclusion of the next of kin."

No such proposition could arise in any proceeding on the facts presented here. As before stated, the attack upon the order to which objection is made is not that the court below had thus attempted to award custody of the remains of the deceased to some one other than the next of kin, but that the manner of disposing of the body and the place of burial provided for by said order were not in accord with the wish of Simon himself and his deceased wife.

[4] It appears from the evidence or affidavits supporting the motion to vacate the order complained of that the body of Simon from the time of his death up to the time at least of the making of said order had reposed in a public vault in one of the cemeteries of San Mateo county, for which vaultage fees were required to be paid, and that it was the intention that it should remain there until provision was made for a place for its permanent repose. It further appears that Simon, during his lifetime, had purchased a plot on which he had erected a mausoleum in the Masonic Cemetery, situated in the city of San Francisco, in which were interred the remains of his brother and father-in-law, and where it was intended his own and his wife's remains should be interred. It seems that before Simon's death the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco "adopted ordinances prohibiting further interment of the remains of deceased persons in said San Francisco cemetery." Thereafter said Simon "made attempts to move the said mausoleum to some cemetery in San Mateo county," but he failed to accomplish that object. After Simon's death, his widow visited all the cemeteries, and finally decided to select Woodlawn Cemetery in San Mateo county in which she desired that the remains of her husband, of herself, and those of his brother and her father should be interred. It is also shown that at the time of the making of said order there was, in fact, living no next of kin to Simon. His widow's share in his estate had been distributed to her before death, and the objectors to the order, other than the executor of her estate, were a brother and a sister of Susan, in no degree or sense next of kin to Simon. It seems to us that, under the facts as thus briefly detailed, there could be no possible question of the power of the court to make provision for the permanent repose of the remains of Simon in accordance with whatever reasonable or proper showing the executors of his estate might make. In fact, it was the absolute duty of the executors, under the circumstances, to initiate and prosecute appropriate proceedings for providing for the final and permanent disposition of the remains of their testator, and, of course, equally the duty of the court, upon a proper showing, which must be presumed to have been made, to make an order authorizing the executors to execute that duty. Whether the course pursued by the executors and the court in the execution of that duty was strictly in harmony with the wish of the deceased and his widow, the latter deceased before the order was made, could not, manifestly, affect or interrupt the court's power or jurisdiction to make the order. For aught that can be said to the contrary, so far as this record shows, it might have been found by the court to be impracticable, for reasons good and sufficient, to make provision for the burial of Simon's remains agreeably to his and his wife's expressed wishes. But, at all events, as declared in the outset, there is no warrant in law for an appeal from an order such as the one from which this appeal is attempted to be prosecuted, and the motion to dismiss will therefore have to be granted.

So ordered.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

15 Cal. App. 373

ZANY v. RAWHIDE GOLD MINING CO.
(Civ. 781.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Feb. 11, 1911.)

1. PLEADING (§ 122*)—ANSWER—FACTS WITHIN DEFENDANT'S KNOWLEDGE.

Where the facts alleged in a complaint are presumptively within the knowledge of the defendant, a denial upon information and belief will be treated as an evasion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 249-252; Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

2. PLEADING (§ 121*)—ANSWER—FACTS WITHIN DEFENDANT'S KNOWLEDGE.

In an action against a mining company for a balance due for boarding defendant's employés and providing teams, material, and services, an answer to a sworn complaint that the defendant has no positive knowledge whether it entered into the contract alleged, or that plaintiff performed his part of the agreement, is not permissible as an answer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 245-248; Dec. Dig. § 121.*]

3. ASSIGNMENTS (§ 131*)—PLEADING—MATERIALITY.

Allegations in a complaint as to assignment and reassignment of the claim sued on are immaterial, as involving mere matter of proof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments, Dec. Dig. § 131.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 907*)—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—EVIDENCE.

In the absence of a bill of exceptions, it cannot be said that there was an abuse of discretion in refusing to set aside a judgment on the pleadings, and allow defendant to file an amended answer; as, assuming that affidavits therefor are sufficiently authenticated, the appellate court cannot say that no other affidavits were read at the hearing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2911-2916; Dec. Dig. § 907.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 960*)—JUDGMENT ON PLEADING—SETTING ASIDE—DISCRETION OF COURT.

In an action against a mining company for services, affidavits filed on a motion to set aside a judgment on the pleadings alleged that the president of defendant corporation declared that he would keep plaintiff out of the money due him just as long as he could; that he would keep the suit pending as long as possible; that he would carry the action to the highest court and would cause plaintiff as much trouble and expense as he could; that he would fight any suit in such a manner that plaintiff should never get a cent, for it would cost him every dollar that he might recover in costs and attorney's fees; and that he would drive plaintiff out of the county a beggar. It further appeared from the affidavits that there was an entire absence of good faith in the defense interposed. Held, that the appellate court will be slow to interfere with the discretion of the trial court in denying the motion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 960.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Action by Charles Zany against the Rawhide Gold Mining Company. From a judgment for plaintiff on the pleadings, and from an order denying defendant's motion to set aside the judgment and for leave to amend the answer, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

S. M. Shortridge and C. M. C. Peters, for appellant. Rowan Hardin and J. B. Curtin, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The plaintiff in a verified complaint sued the defendant for $1,972.88, the balance due for boarding the employés of defendant, and furnishing material and teams and performing certain services for defendant at its special instance and request.

The defendant's verified answer was as follows: "Comes now the defendant above named, and, for answer to the complaint in the above-entitled action, admits, denies, and alleges as follows: First, it admits its incorporation as alleged in paragraph 1 of said complaint; second, upon its information and belief, it denies each, all, and singularly the allegations contained in paragraphs 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 of said complaint; and, third, it alleges that, as to the allegation contained in paragraph 7 of said complaint, it has not sufficient information to enable it to make answer, and for that reason it denies the allegations contained in said paragraph 7 of said complaint. Wherefore said defendant prays to be hence dismissed with its costs." The plaintiff moved for judgment on the pleadings upon the ground that "the complaint filed in said action is verified and that the answer therein does not deny a single material allegation of said complaint." The motion was granted and judgment rendered accordingly for plaintiff on July 5, 1910. Afterward a motion was made by defendant to have said judgment vacated, and to be permitted to file an amended answer. This motion was heard on affidavits and counter affidavits, and was denied by the court on July 18, 1910. The court's action in rendering said judgment and denying said motion is herein assailed.

[1] It is to be observed that not a single allegation of the complaint is denied positively. As is stated in Loveland v. Garner, 74 Cal. 301, 15 Pac. 844, the rule is well settled that, "where the facts alleged in the complaint are presumptively within the knowledge of the defendant, he must answer positively and a denial upon information and belief will be treated as an evasion." Curtis v. Richards, 9 Cal. 38. And in such a case the defendant should, at least, show how it happened that he was without knowledge as to such facts. Brown v. Scott, 25 Cal. 190. And the rule applies as well to corporations as to natural individuals. San Francisco Gas Co. v. San Francisco, 9 Cal. 453. It is further declared, in the Loveland Case, supra, that "for defendants to say (practically) that they do not know whether for seven months a certain person was their superintendent, or whether, during that time, the corporation of which they were directors worked or developed any mine, or extracted any ores or minerals, or incurred any liabilities or disbursed any money or was engaged in conducting the business of mining, or received any money whatever, is to indulge in a playful frivolity not consistent with the solemnity of sworn pleadings in a court of justice."

[2] With equal propriety may it be asserted here that the implication that the defendant has no positive knowledge whether it entered into a certain contract with plaintiff to board its employes and to furnish said defendant with a team at a certain price, etc., and that plaintiff performed his part of the agreement and that a certain amount of money became due thereunder to plaintiff and that no part of it has been paid is not to be tolerated for a moment. The assumption that defendant had no positive knowledge as to all these matters is opposed to common observation and experience. If a defendant does know the facts and lacks the courage or the candor to declare them, he cannot expect any consideration from a court of justice. If, when he is served with the complaint, he is actually ignorant of any material fact which he ought to know, it is his duty to become informed before he files his answer. Mendocino County v. Peters, 2 Cal. App. 28, 82 Pac. 1122. The rules of pleading, under our system, are intended to prevent evasion and to require a denial of every specific aver-

ment in a sworn complaint, in substance and in spirit, and whenever the defendant fails to make such denial he admits the averment. Doll v. Good, 38 Cal. 290. In Hewel v. Hogan, 3 Cal. App. 254, 84 Pac. 1002, it is held that the denial on information and belief by the treasurer of an irrigation district that certain coupons were ever signed by the secretary of said district raised no issue on that point. In Bartlett Estate Co. v. Fraser, 11 Cal. App. 373, 105 Pac. 130, it is held that a denial of the averment of nonpayment of a note for want of information and belief is evasive and raises no issue, "being of matter presumptively within the knowledge of the defendant, which must be positively denied." In San Francisco Gas Co. v. San Francisco, supra, it is said: "A municipal corporation outside of its government capacity is in many respects to be regarded the same as a private corporation, and its officers and agents through whom it acts must be presumed to know the contracts it enters into, the purchases it makes, and the property it uses. Knowledge of such matters must rest with some of its officers and the corporation cannot shield itself under an assertion of ignorance." The same principle is announced and applied to different facts in various decisions of our Supreme Court.

[3] As to the allegations in reference to the assignments, they are entirely immaterial, for, as pointed out by respondent, the assignment and reassignment left the claim as it was originally, and they really involve probative matters that have no place in the pleading. Miles v. McDermott, 31 Cal. 271; McCaughy v. Schuette, 117 Cal. 224, 46 Pac. 666, 48 Pac. 1088, 59 Am. St. Rep. 176. The complaint is sufficient without them, and therefore their immateriality becomes apparent. Whitwell v. Thomas, 9 Cal. 499.

[4] In reference to the appeal from the order denying the motion to set aside the judgment and permit defendant to file an amended answer, it is really sufficient to say that it cannot be determined, in the absence of a bill of exceptions, that there was an abuse of discretion. Even if we assume that the affidavits are sufficiently authenticated, we cannot hold that no others were read and filed at the hearing. Manuel v. Flynn, 5 Cal. App. 319, 90 Pac. 463; Ramsbottom v. Fitzgerald, 128 Cal. 75, 60 Pac. 522; Estate of Dean, 149 Cal. 487, 87 Pac. 13.

[5] But, looking at the showing as it appears in the record, we can readily understand why the court below should look with disfavor upon defendant's application; for, among other things, it appears, apparently without contradiction, that the president of the corporation declared to Mr. Zany that he would keep said plaintiff out of the money due him just as long as he could; that he would keep the suit pending as long as possible; that he would carry said action to the highest court of the land, and would cause said Zany as much trouble and expense as he could; that he would fight any suit in such a manner that Zany should never get a cent, for it would cost him every dollar that he might recover in costs and attorney's fees, and that he would drive Zany out of the county a beggar. There are other statements in the affidavits strongly tending to show the entire absence of good faith and the utter want of any valid defense on the part of appellant; to which statements the trial court had a legal right, of course, to give full credit.

In view of the record, it is perfectly clear that we cannot disturb the judgment or order without doing violence to well-established principles of procedure and exceeding the prescribed limits of appellate jurisdiction.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

15 Cal. App. 429

LE BRETON v. STANLEY CONTRACTING CO. et al. (Civ. 859.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Feb. 17, 1911.)

1. ASSIGNMENTS (§ 49*) — REQUISITES — CHECKS.

An unrepresented and an unaccepted check on a bank is not an assignment of the deposit of the drawer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments, Cent. Dig. §§ 85-98; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

2. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 77*) — CHECKS — LIABILITY OF BANK TO PAYEE.

An unrepresented and unaccepted check gives the holder no right against the bank upon which it is drawn, though the drawer have sufficient funds there to pay it, and hence, in an action by the receiver of an insolvent bank on a note, the defendant cannot set up such a check as a valid counterclaim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 165-176½; Dec. Dig. § 77.*]

3. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 389*) — PRESENTMENT.

That the bank upon which a check is drawn is insolvent, or has closed its doors before the holder has an opportunity to present the same, does not excuse nonpresentment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 1055; Dec. Dig. § 389.*]

4. PLEADING (§ 121*) — EVIDENCE OF DEFENSE — CONSTRUCTION.

In an action by the receiver of an insolvent bank, the defendant denied the allegations of the receivership for lack of information or belief. The truth of these matters could have been ascertained by an inspection of the court records. Held, that such denials are not permissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 245-248; Dec. Dig. § 121.*]

5. PLEADING (§ 343*) — MOTIONS — MOTION FOR JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS.

A motion for judgment on the pleadings is like a demurrer for failure to state a cause of action or defense, and hence, where an answer failed to state a defense, the plaintiff could both demur and move for judgment on the pleadings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 1048-1051; Dec. Dig. § 343.*]

6. PLEADING (§ 343*) — MOTIONS FOR JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS — TIME FOR MOVING — AFTER DEMURRER SUSTAINED.

While an order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend usually disposes of the case, yet that does not preclude the court from also granting a motion for judgment on the pleadings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 1048; Dec. Dig. § 343.*]

7. JUDGMENT (§ 536*) — CONSTRUCTION — INTEREST.

Where a note, providing for 6 per cent. interest, to be computed monthly, was reduced to judgment in 1910, and the judgment prescribed that interest should be paid upon the face of the note at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the making of the note, and to be computed monthly, the allowance of interest must, under the provisions of Civ. Code, § 1918, providing that parties may agree in writing for the payment of any rate of interest, and it shall be allowed until the entry of judgment, be construed to run only to the time of the judgment, and the judgment is not invalid as allowing more than 7 per cent. interest, contrary to Civ. Code, § 1920.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 980; Dec. Dig. § 536.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by Edward J. Le Breton, as receiver of the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company, against the Stanley Contracting Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Thomas C. Huxley, for appellants. J. V. De Laveaga, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, rendered and entered in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants James Stanley and the Stanley Contracting Company.

These defendants, on the 29th day of October, 1907, were indebted, upon their promissory note in the sum of $2,262.35, to the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company, a banking corporation. The note was dated May 15, 1907. It was due in 90 days from its date, and bore interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, payable monthly, and if not so paid to be compounded. On October 30, 1907, the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company suspended, closed its doors, and never resumed business.

The plaintiff, E. J. Le Breton, as the duly appointed, qualified, and acting receiver of the defunct bank, brought suit upon the note, and after an order sustaining his demurrer to the answer of the defendants, without leave to amend, obtained a judgment against them on the pleadings for the full amount of the principal and interest due on the note.

The allegations of the complaint with reference to the court's order adjudicating the bank to be insolvent, and appointing the plaintiff its receiver, are the only allegations attempted to be denied by the answer of the defendants, and the denial in each instance is made and based upon lack of information or belief. There is no denial or attempted denial in the answer of the due execution of the note, or of the amount of the indebtedness due thereon as set out in the plaintiff's complaint.

As a separate defense and by way of counterclaim, the answer of the defendants averred, in substance, that, on October 29, 1907, one Kittie J. McCue, who was then a commercial depositor with the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company in the sum of $2,400 and upwards, made and delivered to defendants her check, drawn thereon in favor of the Stanley Contracting Company, for the sum of $2,400. By reason of the failure of the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company, said check was never paid or presented for acceptance and payment, and has ever since been held by defendants. It was not alleged in the answer that the check had ever been certified or accepted by the bank, or that the check was drawn against a special fund, or for the precise balance on deposit with the bank and to the credit of Kittie J. McCue.

Plaintiff demurred to the allegations of the answer, upon the ground that the same were insufficient to constitute either a defense or an offset to the cause of action stated in the plaintiff's complaint. With the demurrer plaintiff filed a motion for judgment on the pleadings. The demurrer and motion apparently were heard and considered together. On January 17, 1910, the demurrer was sustained without leave to amend, and the motion was granted. On January 20, 1910, judgment on the pleadings was entered in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants James Stanley and the Stanley Contracting Company in the sum of $2,262.35, "together with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the 15th day of May, 1907, said interest to be compounded monthly, together with plaintiff's costs of suit." The court did not err in sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend.

[1] The check in question was never presented to or accepted by the bank, and therefore as to the bank it was not an assignment to the Stanley Contracting Company of the amount called for in the check. Donohue-Kelly Banking Co. v. S. P. Co., 138 Cal. 183, 71 Pac. 93, 94 Am. St. Rep. 28; Pullen v. Placer Co. Bank, 138 Cal. 172, 69 Pac. 740, 71 Pac. 83, 94 Am. St. Rep. 19; Harlan v. Gladding-McBean Co., 7 Cal. App. 52, 93 Pac. 400; Greenebaum v. Am. Trust, etc., Bank, 70 Ill. App. 407.

[2] In the absence of such an assignment, no cause of action on the check existed in favor of the Stanley Contracting Company against the bank (O'Connor v. Mechanics' Bank, 124 N. Y. 324, 26 N. E. 816), and therefore the check could not be properly pleaded as a defense, by way of counterclaim, to the cause of action stated in the plaintiff's complaint. Barber v. Reynolds, 33 Cal. 497; Chase v. Evoy, 58 Cal. 348; Harrison v. McCormick, 69 Cal. 618, 11 Pac. 456; Roberts v. Donovan, 70 Cal. 112, 9 Pac. 180, 11 Pac. 599; Stockton, etc., Society v. Giddings, 96 Cal. 90, 30 Pac. 1016, 21 L. R. A. 406, 31 Am. St. Rep. 181.

[3] That the bank in this case had failed and closed its doors before the defendants had a reasonable or any opportunity to present the check for acceptance and payment is of no consequence, and does not relieve the situation of the defendants, or alter the rule in their favor. The fact remains that the check was never presented or accepted, and therefore the right to claim an appropriation of the fund specified in the check as to the bank was never perfected. Northern Trust Co. v. Rogers, 60 Minn. 208, 62 N. W. 273, 51 Am. St. Rep. 526; Greenebaum v. American Trust, etc., Bank, supra.

In the case of Butterworth v. Peck, 5 Bosw. (N. Y.) 341, the receiver of an insolvent bank, as in the case at bar, brought suit upon a promissory note, and a check, upon which payment had been refused, but which had been presented for payment prior to the failure of the bank, was pleaded as a set-off. The court, in refusing to allow the set-off, held that "the check was not an appropriation of a specific fund. It gave no right of action against the bank without acceptance, and if it gave no right of action, it cannot constitute a right of set-off or counterclaim."

A practical reason for the rule refusing the right of set-off in such cases is found in the case of Northern Trust Company v. Rogers, supra, a case very similar to the case at bar, wherein it was said: "To allow it would be to open the door to the commission of fraud on the great body of the creditors of the insolvent bank, and would practically defeat the great object of the insolvent law, which is the equal distribution of the assets of the insolvent company among the creditors. In every case where a bank failed, having a large number of both creditors and debtors, it would be the easiest matter in the world for a number of each class to collude together, and, by the former giving antedated checks to the latter, to absorb all the assets of the bank to the exclusion of the other creditors."

No right of action on the check existing in favor of the Stanley Contracting Company, no right of counterclaim or set-off could possibly arise out of the facts stated in the answer, and therefore the order of the court sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend was the only proper ruling which could have been made in the premises.

[4] The truth of the allegations of the complaint, with reference to the order adjudicating the bank insolvent and appointing the plaintiff its receiver, could have been readily ascertained by the defendants from an inspection of the court records, and therefore the defendants' denials of these allegations for lack of information or belief were wholly insufficient. Mulcaby v. Buckley, 100 Cal. 487, 35 Pac. 144. Denials in this form, with knowledge or means of knowledge as to the truth or falsity of the allegation attempted to be denied, are never permissible. They may be disregarded by the court (Mullally v. Townsend, 119 Cal. 52, 50 Pac. 1066); and if the answer fails otherwise to put in issue the material allegations of the complaint, judgment may be rendered and entered on the pleadings. Doll v. Good, 38 Cal. 287.

Counsel for appellants suggests that the order sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend practically disposed of the entire case, and thereby precluded the court from entertaining and disposing of the motion for judgment on the pleadings.

[5] A motion for judgment on the pleadings is similar in purpose and effect to a demurrer grounded upon the alleged insufficiency of the facts stated in a pleading. It admits the facts alleged, and challenges their sufficiency to support a cause of action or maintain a valid defense. De Toro v. Robinson, 91 Cal. 371, 27 Pac. 671. The plaintiff in this case was privileged to take advantage of the alleged defect in the defendants' pleading by demurrer or motion for judgment (Kelley v. Kriess, 68 Cal. 210, 9 Pac. 129), either or both of which, if successful, would be sufficient upon which to found a judgment.

[6] An order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend ordinarily disposes of the case, and, in the absence of any directions from the court, it is then the duty of the clerk to enter an appropriate judgment. Gallardo v. Reed, 49 Cal. 346; Mora v. Le Roy, 58 Cal. 8; Lang v. Superior Court, 71 Cal. 492, 12 Pac. 306, 416.

In this instance the motion for judgment on the pleadings was before the court, and it was therefore proper for the court to dispose of it. The judgment was entered by direction of the court after the order sustaining the demurrer and granting the motion was made, and the fact that the order for judgment made reference to the sustaining of the demurrer without leave to amend neither helped nor harmed the judgment as finally entered.

[7] The rate of interest prescribed by the judgment does not, as claimed by counsel for appellant, run on indefinitely. A judgment may be construed in connection with the pleadings in the case. Ex parte Ambrose, 72 Cal. 401, 14 Pac. 33. It is obvious that the rate of interest allowed by the judgment in this case was according to the terms of the note, which by operation of law terminated at the entry of judgment. Civ. Code, § 1918. Thereupon the judgment bore no greater rate of interest than 7 per cent. per annum. Civ. Code, § 1920.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

115 PACIFIC REPORTER

159 Cal. 608

In re ROBINSON'S ESTATE (L. A. 2,528.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 31, 1911.)

1. WILLS (§ 450*)—CONSTRUCTION.

A will should be construed by ascertaining the meaning of the words employed by the testator to disclose his intent; such interpretation being given as will give some effect to every expression rather than one which will render any of the expressions invalid, as provided by Civ. Code, § 1325.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 966; Dec. Dig. § 450.*]

2. WILLS (§ 527*)—CONSTRUCTION—DISTRIBUTION OF RESIDUE—HEIRS.

Testator gave a pecuniary legacy to M., whom he described as his niece, and then bequeathed the residue to his "heirs at law," according to the laws of succession, "including my niece above named, to share in this clause." Held that, though M. sustained no blood relationship to testator, the will should be construed as entitling her to take a share of such residue, as an heir; she being regarded as taking as the sole child of a deceased brother or sister.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 1140; Dec. Dig. § 527.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

Judicial settlement of the estate of Charles A. Robinson, deceased. From an order denying a petition for distribution of a part of the residue to Mrs. Teresa Martin, she appeals. Reversed.

Wal. J. Tuska, for appellant. Stutsman & Stutsman and Hammack & Hammack, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. The will of Charles A. Robinson, deceased, was duly admitted to probate. That will gave "to my niece, Mrs. Teresa Martin of San Francisco, the sum of $1500.00." The residuary clause of the will is as follows: "Fourth, all the remainder of my estate I give, bequeath and devise to my heirs at law as they are entitled by the laws of inheritance and succession, including my niece above named, to share in this clause."

No difficulty arose over the legacy to Mrs. Teresa Martin, which she received in due course of administration. Under pending proceedings for the distribution of the residue of the estate Mrs. Martin petitioned for distribution to her of one-fifth of that residue under the residuary clause above quoted. It was shown at the hearing that Mrs. Teresa Martin sustained no blood relationship to the deceased. She was not in law his niece, but was the niece of his deceased wife. Therefore Mrs. Teresa Martin was not an heir at law of deceased. It further appeared that the heirs at law of the deceased were a surviving sister and the descendants of two deceased sisters and of one deceased brother. The court in probate denied the petition of Mrs. Teresa Martin upon the ground that "the testator's attempt to make said Teresa Martin an heir at law, and therefore entitled to share in said distribution, is void for uncertainty."

The correctness of the court's conclusion in this regard and the right of Teresa Martin to take under the residuary clause of the will above quoted is the question here presented for consideration. The question is a narrow one.

[1] It is to be resolved in the light of the familiar canons of construction that the inquiry of the court will be directed to the meaning of the words employed and the intent of the testator will be derived therefrom (Estate of Anna Young, 123 Cal. 337, 55 Pac. 1011), and that the words of a will are to receive an interpretation which will give to every expression some effect rather than one which will render any of the expressions inoperative (Civ. Code, § 1325).

[2] It is manifest that the testator designed that Mrs. Teresa Martin should share in the distribution of the residue of his estate, and that she should be treated as an heir at law, though not in fact one. The will itself answers the question as to the class or category into which she should go as such heir at law. She is to be considered as a niece of the deceased. But, as a niece would not be an heir at law saving upon the death of the parent related by blood to the deceased, it follows necessarily that the testator meant Mrs. Martin to be regarded as an heir at law standing in the position of the child of a deceased brother or sister. As Mrs. Martin is alone mentioned in this connection, it also necessarily follows that she is to be regarded for the purpose of distribution as the sole child of such deceased brother or sister and that her distributive portion would therefore be one-fifth of the residuum of the estate.

It is therefore ordered that the decree of distribution be modified in conformity herewith.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

159 Cal. 98

In re DAVISON'S ESTATE (L. A. 2,570.)
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1910.)

HOMESTEAD (§§ 84, 151*)—JOINT OWNERSHIP—PROBATE HOMESTEAD.

The court, in the administration of the estate of a decedent, cannot set apart land as a probate homestead, unless a homestead could have been impressed upon such land in decedent's lifetime, and since neither the husband nor wife, jointly or severally, could, during the husband's lifetime have made a valid homestead declaration upon his undivided interest in land held by them as tenants in common and jointly occupied by them, St. 1867-68, c. 138, providing that a homestead may be declared upon land of a cotenancy where the declarant is in the exclusive occupancy thereof, and resides thereon, not applying where the occupation is joint, the widow is not entitled to a homestead in the husband's undivided interest in such property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. §§ 121, 291; Dec. Dig. §§ 84, 151.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

In the matter of John M. Davison, deceased. From an order sustaining a demurrer to the widow's application to have a probate homestead set apart to her, she appeals. Affirmed.

Haines & Haines, for appellant. J. B. Mannix, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. This is an appeal by the widow from an order sustaining an opposition and demurrer to her application to have a probate homestead set apart to her out of the estate of her deceased husband.

The petition stated that decedent died intestate and childless, leaving surviving him his widow, the petitioner; that at his death he was the owner of an undivided half, as his separate property, of two lots in the city of San Diego, the petitioner being the owner in her separate estate of the other undivided one half thereof; that on the premises were erected a dwelling house, barn, and other improvements made during the marriage, the cost thereof being paid, one half from the community funds, the other half out of the separate funds of the petitioner; that the undivided one-half of the realty owned by decedent was worth, without the improvement, $600; that the value of his undivided one-half of the improvements so made from community funds was $900, and that the undivided half of the land and improvements vested in the wife as her separate property was of the same value; that said improvements were placed on the property during the lifetime of the decedent, for the purpose of making the premises a home for himself and petitioner, which they occupied as such up to the time of his death, and which petitioner still occupies; that no written declaration of homestead was made in the lifetime of decedent by himself and petitioner, or either of them.

The prayer was that the interest of the estate of the decedent in the property be set apart by the court to the widow as a homestead—for life as to the realty, and as to the improvements absolutely. The demurrer and opposition to the petition was interposed by certain heirs at law of decedent, on the ground that the court had no power to impose a homestead on the undivided interest of the estate of the decedent in the property.

It will be noted that what the superior court sitting in probate was asked by the widow to do was to select and set apart to her, as a probate homestead, the undivided interest of her husband alone in lands held by them during his lifetime as tenants in common.

It is, of course, well settled that the court in the administration of the estate of a decedent cannot set apart lands of the estate, as a probate homestead, unless they were lands upon which a homestead could have been impressed in the lifetime of the deceased. Estate of Noah, 73 Cal. 590, 15 Pac. 290, 2 Am. St. Rep. 834; Estate of Carraher, 107 Cal. 618, 40 Pac. 1032. So the question presented here is, Could either spouse during the lifetime of the husband impress a homestead solely on his undivided interest in property held in common by both? If this could have been done, the court erred in refusing to make the homestead order asked by petitioner.

It has uniformly been held by this court, commencing with the early cases of Wolf v. Fleischacker, 5 Cal. 244, 63 Am. Dec. 121, and Giblin v. Jordan, 6 Cal. 416, followed by a number of other decisions, including the late cases of Schoonover v. Birnbaum, 148 Cal. 551, 83 Pac. 999, and U. S. Oil, etc., Co. v. Bell, 153 Cal. 781, 96 Pac. 901, that under both the early homestead acts, and the present Code provisions respecting homesteads, a homestead may not be created by one joint tenant in lands held in joint tenancy or as tenants in common, except as authorized by the act of 1868 (Stats. 1867-68, p. 116), which provides that a homestead may be declared upon land of a cotenancy, where the declarant is in the exclusive occupation of it and residing thereon. Under this act it was held in Higgins v. Higgins, 46 Cal. 259, that a wife might impress a valid homestead upon her husband's interest in a cotenancy where these conditions existed.

The cases above cited, and others, including also the pertinent provision of the act of 1868, are considered and discussed in the recent case of Swan v. Walden, 156 Cal. 195, 103 Pac. 931, 134 Am. St. Rep. 118, and it is shown that the right of a cotenant to impress a homestead upon land held in cotenancy (except where the conditions prescribed by the act of 1868 are met) is denied in the earlier decisions because, on account of the nature of the tenancy, there can be no segregation or delimitation of the boundaries of the particular estate, or interest in the property of the cotenancy sought to be impressed, whereby it can be determined as to what particular part of the land the homestead attaches; and that the rule so established by these decisions has been uniformly followed and is still adhered to.

It is insisted, however, by appellant that these cases only have application where a cotenancy exists between the husband or wife and third persons, and do not apply where, as here, the tenancy in common existed between husband and wife solely, and relies upon the decision in this very case of Swan v. Walden, which, she contends, makes this distinction, and upon the authority of which she claims that she is entitled to have the interest of her deceased husband, as cotenant in the property, set apart to her as a probate homestead.

In the case relied on Walden and his wife were the owners in joint tenancy of two lots upon which they resided, and upon both of which Mrs. Walden made a declaration of homestead, and the question presented on the appeal there was whether such a homestead could be legally created by her as joint tenant in the property held in cotenancy. The court in deciding the question, after declaring that the rule denying the right of a cotenant to impress a homestead upon the land of the cotenancy, except under the conditions prescribed by the act of 1868, still obtained as a rule of property in this state, and after referring to the case of Giblin v. Jordan, supra, where it was held that under it the husband could not impress a homestead upon property held in joint tenancy by himself, wife, and daughter because as to the tenancy they were entire strangers to each other, said: "But the case which is here presented is different in this respect. Here the wife seeks to impress the whole land with the homestead characteristic. This she may do as to her own interest, which is her separate property, and this she may do as to her husband's interest, since she has the power to declare a homestead upon the husband's separate property, though he has no such power over hers. The homestead thus attempted to be declared is upon land, all of which is susceptible at the instance of the wife of having the homestead characteristics impressed upon it. There is no occasion for segregation or partition, or delimitation of boundaries, since the homestead attaches to all of the estate and all of the land. The reasons which, in the view of this court, make it legally impossible for the husband to declare such a homestead when there was a cotenancy between himself, his wife, or third persons, does not exist in the peculiar instance of the case at bar."

It will be observed that in this Swan Case the court was dealing with a selected homestead, impressed by the wife upon land held in cotenancy solely by herself and husband, and her right to do so is sustained because, as she had a right to declare a homestead upon her separate property, and also upon the separate property of her husband, the effect of her declarations was to impress the entire land, and the entire interests therein held by them in joint tenancy, with the homestead characteristics; that within the spirit and intent of the act of 1868, authorizing a homestead to be filed where a cotenant was in the exclusive occupation of the land of the cotenancy, Mrs. Walden had such exclusive possession for such purpose. It was her peculiar position under the homestead law which made it possible for her to impress the land in its entirety that took the homestead declared by her out of the general rule denying the right of a cotenant to create a valid homestead on cotenancy property. It is clearly pointed out in that opinion that, in the peculiar instance of the homestead there under consideration, as the entire interest in the tenancy was susceptible to the impress of a homestead upon it by the wife, the reason supporting the general rule denying the right of the husband to declare a homestead upon land held in cotenancy by himself or wife or third parties did not apply.

Here, however, an entirely different question is presented. We are not dealing with a selected homestead which the court is asked to set apart to the surviving wife. What was sought in the matter at bar in the superior court was to have that court select, designate, and set apart as a probate homestead, not the land of the cotenancy in its entirety, but the undivided interest of the deceased cotenant. If the superior court could do this, it could only do it because in the lifetime of the decedent, either he or his wife could have impressed a homestead on this particular cotenancy interest alone. Neither of the spouses, however, could do this. The husband under no circumstances could declare a homestead which would embrace, with his own interest, that of his wife in the cotenancy property, because he is prohibited under the homestead law from declaring a homestead on the separate property of his wife, unless with her consent, manifested by making or joining in the making of the declaration. Such a general declaration, as it would embrace the whole of the land and the entire interest in the cotenancy, would not be affected by the general rule.

But neither the husband nor the wife, jointly or severally, could in the lifetime of the husband have made a valid declaration of homestead upon his undivided interest in the cotenancy property, so as to affect that interest alone with the homestead characteristics, separate and distinct from the undivided interest of the wife therein. The right to do this, as we have seen, is distinctly denied by the decisions, except under certain conditions provided for in the act of 1868. That act, however, permits a valid homestead to be declared upon the undivided interest of a cotenant in the cotenancy property only when he is in the exclusive occupation of the property, having it inclosed, and in Higgins v. Higgins the right of the wife to declare a valid homestead to the extent of the husband's estate therein, though she had no interest in the property, was sustained under the act because the husband was in the actual occupation of the property to the exclusion of the other cotenants having interests therein. But the provisions of the act have no application under the facts recited in the petition at bar. During the lifetime of the husband both spouses were in actual occupation of the property; there was no exclusive occupation within the terms of the act which would have authorized the wife to declare a homestead on her undivided interest, or authorized either of them to declare it upon the undivided interest of the husband.

While it is claimed that the cases recognize a distinction in the application of the general rule precluding a cotenant from impressing a homestead on land held in cotenancy, where the cotenancy exists between the husband and wife, and between the husband and strangers, no such distinction has been pointed out by counsel. In fact, in Giblin v. Jordan, supra, the existence of any such distinction was expressly denied.

Undoubtedly, under the rule in Swan v. Walden, during the lifetime of her husband petitioner might have declared a valid homestead upon the entire cotenancy property, and on the death of her husband the superior court sitting in probate would have set such homestead apart to her. She, however, declared no such homestead, but asks the court now to do what neither she nor her husband could have done in his lifetime, namely, to impress the undivided interest of her husband in the cotenancy with a homestead, while her undivided interest has not been, and cannot be, so impressed. The general rule which made it legally impossible for the homestead to have been impressed upon the undivided interest of the husband alone in his lifetime makes it equally impossible for the superior court to do so, and it properly denied the application of the petitioner.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

159 Cal. 604

McARTHUR v. BLAISDELL. (L. A. 2,033.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 28, 1911.)

1. ACCOUNT (§ 4*)—EQUITY—RIGHT OF PLAINTIFF—TRUST RELATION.

A contract between S. and defendant as to their performance of a contract to erect mining reduction works, etc., (1) stated an agreed valuation of the machinery, etc., contributed by each; (2) provided that each party might contribute half the expenses of the work, but that in default thereof the other party might contribute more than half, and should be credited with the excess with interest; (3) provided that the compensation for the work should be divided in proportion to the amounts advanced during the work, provided for the salary of defendant as manager, and as to his powers as superintendent, and the method of his paying for supplies. Held, that a trust relation was created, rendering defendant liable to account for the interest of S.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Account, Cent. Dig. §§ 13, 14; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 39*)—LIMITATIONS APPLICABLE.

The statutory bar of an action for such an accounting is that provided by Code Civ.

Proc. § 343, for matters not thereinbefore provided for, and not under section 337, providing a four-year limitation for actions on any contract, obligation, or liability founded on a contract in writing, nor under section 339 placing a two-year limitation on contracts, etc., not founded on an instrument in writing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 200; Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by Beauchamp H. Smith, for whom pending appeal his administrator, William T. McArthur, was substituted, against Hiram W. Blaisdell. From a judgment for defendant and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

J. F. Conroy, for appellant. E. A. Meserve, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. An action was brought by Beauchamp H. Smith for an accounting and for certain specific property under an asserted copartnership. Judgment was given in favor of the defendant. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, and this appeal is prosecuted from an order of the superior court denying said motion. After the appeal was taken, the appellant died, and William T. McArthur was duly appointed administrator of the estate of the deceased, and was substituted as appellant.

The amended complaint which appears in the transcript bases the right to the relief demanded upon the alleged existence of a copartnership between defendant and the assignor of plaintiff's intestate created about February 21, 1899, whereby the partners agreed to share equally in all profits and losses of said enterprise, and it is further averred that the contract of copartnership was amended by a certain agreement dated March 1, 1899, a copy of which is made a part of the complaint. It is in evidence, however, that the case was partly tried under plaintiff's theory and pleading that the contract of March 1, 1899, itself created a copartnership, and the amendment to the complaint was made after the court had ruled that the agreement witnessed a joint enterprise not in the nature of a copartnership. The court insisted that proof of the existence of the copartnership must be made before the other evidence might be produced. Such proof was not forthcoming and nearly all of the rulings of which appellant complains were based upon the omission to show partnership. By the contract which as an exhibit is made a part of the complaint, S. Morgan Smith, assignor of plaintiff's intestate and H. W. Blaisdell, the defendant, for the purpose of fixing and determining their mutual obligations, agree upon the proper manner of carrying out the provisions of a certain contract which they are about to make with the "King of Arizona Company" (a corporation) for the erection of a plant and pipe line, and the method by which they shall apportion the 80,000 shares of the capital stock of said corporation to be paid them for their work of construction and for materials to be used. First, there is an agreed valuation of the machinery, lumber, etc., contributed by each of the parties. Next, it is stipulated that each party shall have the right to contribute one-half of the necessary expense of carrying on the work for the "King of Arizona Company"; but, if either fails so to do, the other reserves the right to furnish more than half the amount needed, receiving credit for the excess above his share so advanced, which shall bear interest at the rate of 1 per cent. per month. The agreement next recites that, when the 80,000 shares of stock shall have been issued in payment for the work done and material furnished to the "King of Arizona Company," said shares shall be distributed to the parties in proportion to the amounts advanced by them respectively during the progress of the work. The rest of the contract relates to the salary of Blaisdell as manager, to his powers as superintendent, and to the method whereby he is to spend money for supplies.

The answer denied all of the material allegations of the complaint and pleaded the bar of the statutes—sections 337, 338, and 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Findings of facts and conclusions of law were all practically in favor of the defendant, following closely the averments of the answer. The court found that there was no partnership between Smith and Blaisdell; that pursuant to the contract of March 1, 1899, Smith and Blaisdell entered into an agreement with the "King of Arizona Company" to construct and equip its reduction plant, and that their compensation was to be two-fifths of the stock of said corporation; that defendant was not called upon to furnish one-half of the cost of said reduction plant and equipment; that defendant did not violate any duties toward any copartnership nor did he have any money belonging to said copartnership under his control; that neither the defendant nor his attorney received any stock from the "King of Arizona Company"; that S. Morgan Smith had not advanced any money for any copartnership existing between him and defendant, and that defendant, Hiram W. Blaisdell, was not shown to have received any money, thing of value, or property whatsoever, either from the "King of Arizona Mining & Milling Company" or from the "King of Arizona Company," or from any corporation or person in any manner growing out of or connected with the transactions and enterprises provided for by the contracts referred to and set out in plaintiff's amended complaint.

[1] Appellant asserts that there were trust relations between Smith and Blaisdell, and that the details of the work, the amounts received by Blaisdell, the sums paid to his assignees, and other matters should have been allowed in evidence. We think that this contention is correct. Whenever proof regarding these matters was offered during the trial, it was met with the objection that partnership had not been proven and the court sustained such objection. It is not necessary to examine the assigned errors in detail, as practically all of them are based on the court's theory that no evidence of any other transactions was admissible until satisfactory proof of a copartnership had been produced. In its rulings upon this subject the court was in error. The contract of March 1, 1899, was set out in full in the complaint and an accounting was demanded. Under the contract in question, a trust relationship was created, and, if anything of value had been received by defendant, or in his behalf, pursuant to this agreement, there might, and probably would, arise a necessity for an accounting with the right of S. Morgan Smith, or his representative to demand it. It is true that the court found that Blaisdell had received nothing under the contract in question, but that was after the rulings by which evidence on that subject was excluded.

[2] The court found that the cause of action set out in the amended complaint was barred by the provisions of sections 337 and 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is conceded that the original complaint was filed on July 20, 1903, although the record does not disclose the date. The complaint alleges that the contract was completed on July 21, 1899. This is not denied. Hence, if the action was begun on July 20, 1903, it is not barred. Code Civ. Proc. § 343.

We find no other alleged errors requiring attention.

The order denying defendant's motion for a new trial is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

15 Cal. App. 358

TITLE INS. & TRUST CO. et al. v. LUSK et al. (Civ. 957.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Feb. 11, 1911.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 83*)—PRESUMPTION—PERFORMANCE OF OFFICIAL DUTY.

Where it is not shown when the trial was had in a proceeding to condemn lands for a street, or when the verdict was rendered, it will be presumed, under Street Law (St. 1903, c. 268) § 6, requiring such actions to be governed by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, that the judgment was entered by the clerk within 24 hours after rendition of the verdict as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 664.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 103; Dec. Dig. § 83.*]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 106*)—VESTED RIGHTS—REMEDIES—RIGHT TO DISCONTINUE.

The right given to a city by Street Law 1903 (St. 1903, c. 268) § 14, to discontinue condemnation proceedings without prejudice at any time before payment of compensation, is not a vested right, and Street Law 1909 (St. 1909, c. 684) § 11, providing that proceedings to condemn lands then pending should be thereafter continued under that law, and section 8, providing that condemnation proceedings may be abandoned up to the time of entry of the interlocutory judgment, are not invalid; such sections merely relating to remedies which are always within the control of the Legislature, provided a reasonable remedy is still left.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Dec. Dig. § 106.*]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 42*)—CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS—WHO MAY RAISE.

Only those can question the validity of a statute who would be injured by its enforcement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 39, 40; Dec. Dig. § 42.*]

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 106*)—VESTED RIGHTS—REMEDIES—RIGHT TO DISCONTINUE.

Where a city, which under Act 1903 (St. 1903, c. 268) § 14, had the right to discontinue without prejudice proceedings to condemn land for streets at any time before payment of compensation, had nine months after the passage of Act 1909 (St. 1909, c. 684) § 8, changing the limit for discontinuance to the time of entering interlocutory judgment, in which to discontinue, but entered such judgment without so doing, it cannot subsequently claim that the change in the statute was an unreasonable impairment of its remedy, and hence an unconstitutional interference with its vested rights.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Dec. Dig. § 106.*]

5. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 167*)—STREET WIDENING—STATUTES—EFFECT PENDING PROCEEDINGS.

Act April 21, 1909 (St. 1909, c. 684) § 8, amending Street Law 1903 (St. 1903, c. 268) § 14, by providing that proceedings for the condemnation of land for street purposes could be abandoned without prejudice only before entry of the interlocutory judgment, instead of at any time before payment of compensation, applies, under the express provisions of section 11 of the act of 1909, to proceedings pending when the amendment took effect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Dec. Dig. § 167.*]

6. MANDAMUS (§ 3*)—PUBLIC OFFICERS—STREET IMPROVEMENTS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1085, providing that a writ of mandate may be issued to a corporation, board, etc., to compel performance of an act which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station, such mandate may issue to a city council to compel it to proceed as expressly required by Street Law 1903 (St. 1903, c. 268) § 19, to pass upon and determine, as in their discretion and judgment is proper, the questions involved in the protests as to a street assessment and the orders with reference to its confirmation or modification, or the ordering of a new assessment in lieu of the original assessment filed, such action on the part of the city council being a duty resulting from an office and no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law is open to petitioners.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 8-34; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

7. STATUTES (§ 85*)—GENERAL AND SPECIAL LAWS—REGULATING CIVIL REMEDIES.

Nor is the act of 1909 (St. 1909, c. 684), regarding condemnation proceedings, in contravention of the Constitution, prohibiting special legislation, as the procedure may not be said to be special because it is peculiar to the character of the action with reference to which it is prescribed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Dec. Dig. § 85.*]

8. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 246*)—RIGHT OF PLAINTIFF TO ABANDON PROCEEDINGS—STATUTES.

The right of a city to abandon condemnation proceedings for street purposes is not affected by Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subd. 2, authorizing dismissal of actions by either party on the written consent of the other, since Street Law 1903 (St. 1903, c. 268) § 14, as amended by Street Law 1909 (St. 1909, c. 684) § 8, is applicable to proceedings pending when it was enacted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 638-643; Dec. Dig. § 246.*]

Petition by the Title Insurance & Trust Company and others against R. M. Lusk and others for writ of mandate directing the city council to proceed to confirm, correct, or modify an assessment presented to them or to order a new assessment. On demurrer to the petition. Demurrer overruled.

Thomas C. Ridgway and Hatch, Lloyd & Hurst, for petitioners. John W. Shenk, City Atty., and C. E. Haas, Deputy City Atty., for respondents. Ward Chapman, amicus curiæ.

ALLEN, P. J. It appears from the petition and affidavit filed that heretofore, in 1907, under the provisions of the street improvement act of 1903 (St. 1903, c. 268), the city council of Los Angeles duly adopted an ordinance declaring its intention to order the widening of Eighth street, between Main street and Central avenue; that said ordinance further designated the land necessary and convenient to be taken for such improvement and fixed the boundaries of the assessment district, within which was included the property benefited by such improvement; that this ordinance was approved and published, and was followed by a subsequent ordinance ordering the improvement to be made and directing the city attorney to bring an action in the name of the city of Los Angeles for the condemnation of the property described in said ordinance necessary to be taken for the improvement mentioned. The action was instituted by said city attorney on July 3, 1907, against those whose lands were to be taken for such improvement. It is not shown at what date the trial was had or verdict returned, but it does appear that on January 3, 1910, an interlocutory judgment was entered in favor of the several defendants for the sums determined as damages which should be awarded the various defendants by reason of the taking of the land for the contemplated improvement.

[1] It will be presumed, in view of section 6 of the street law, to the effect that actions for the condemnation of property brought thereunder shall in all respects be subject to and governed by such provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure now existing or that may hereafter be adopted, as may be applicable thereto, except in the particulars otherwise provided for in this act, that the judgment was entered by the clerk within 24 hours after the rendition of the verdict, as provided by section 664 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It further appears that after the entry of said interlocutory judgment, to wit, on the 29th day of July, 1910, a diagram of said improvement and of the property within the assessment district described in the ordinance with the assessment, was filed with the clerk of the city council of the city of Los Angeles; that thereafter protests were filed against such assessment on the ground that the same was inequitable; that upon the hearing of such protests, to wit, on the 15th day of November, 1910, the same were sustained by the city council; but that the city council have ever since failed and refused and now fail and refuse to either confirm, modify, or correct said assessment, or to order a new assessment, or to take any of the proceedings specified in section 19 of the act of 1903 (St. 1903, c. 268), justifying their action upon the claim that they desire to abandon the proceedings, and pursuant thereto have directed that an ordinance be prepared abandoning the proceedings and directing that said ordinance be presented for passage. Respondents interpose a general demurrer to the petition.

[2] The proceedings set forth in the petition were instituted under the provisions of the street law of 1903, under section 14 of which act the right to abandon the proceedings by ordinance and cause a dismissal thereof without prejudice was given at any time prior to the payment of the compensation awarded to the defendants. Section 8 of the act of 1909, approved April 21, 1909 (St. 1909, c. 684), provides that the city council may at any time prior to the entry of interlocutory judgment abandon the proceedings by ordinance and cause said action to be dismissed without prejudice. Section 11 of the act of 1909 provides that any proceeding or action for any improvement, as provided for in the act, already commenced and pending at the time the act takes effect, under and by virtue of any ordinance of intention theretofore passed, shall, from the stage of any such proceeding or action already commenced and in progress at the time of the act taking effect, be continued under the provisions of that act. It was insisted upon oral argument that section 11 is violative of the Constitution in that it impairs a right once vested. This section affects a remedy as distinguished from a right. "Remedies must always be under the control of the Legislature" (Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 381); and where a reasonable remedy is provided it is immaterial that it alters one previously existing.

[3] No one may question the constitutionality of a legislative act unless its enforcement would work an injury to the complaining party.

[4] Whatever may be the effect which should be given this section in cases where the remedy is shown to be unreasonably impaired, the city in the case at bar is not in position to insist upon its unreasonable character, for it is apparent from the record that nearly nine months elapsed between the passage of the act of 1909 and the entry of the interlocutory judgment, during all of which time it had notice of the limitation upon the remedy of abandonment and dismissal imposed by section 14. It cannot, therefore, be said that this section unreasonably impaired the remedy in the case under consideration, and this case is brought within the rule of Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 628, 24 L. Ed. 365, and the other cases cited in Tuttle v. Block, 104 Cal. 449, 38 Pac. 109.

[5] It follows, then, that all proceedings connected with the improvement by the council originally ordered were, after April 21, 1909, controlled by the act of that date, which must be construed as limiting the right of dismissal and abandonment to the time of the entry of the interlocutory judgment. This being established, the city council possessed no right, even though the proceedings were instituted under the act of 1903, to abandon the same or direct a dismissal of the condemnation or other proceedings, after it had procured to be entered the interlocutory judgment.

[6] There remains, then, but one question, which relates to the right of this court to direct a city council to proceed, as by section 19 of the act they are required to do, in passing upon and determining, as in their discretion and judgment is proper, the questions involved in the protests as to the assessment and the orders with reference to its confirmation or modification, or the ordering of a new assessment in lieu of the original assessment filed. We are of opinion that such action upon the part of the city council is a duty resulting from an office, and that under section 1085 of the Code of Civil Procedure a mandate may be issued to compel the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office; and that no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law is open to the petitioners.

[7] We are not in sympathy with the contention of respondents that the act of 1909 is in contravention of the Constitution, which prohibits special legislation. The procedure may not be said to be special because it is peculiar to the character of the action with reference to which it is prescribed. Clute v. Turner, 157 Cal. 73, 106 Pac. 240; People v. Henshaw, 76 Cal. 436, 18 Pac. 413; Hellman v. Shoulters, 114 Cal. 136, 44 Pac. 915, 45 Pac. 1057.

[8] Nor are we of the opinion that subsection 2 of section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure in any wise affects the question here involved. The street law by express terms limits the control of the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure to such cases as are not specially provided for in the act, and we find in the act of 1909 an express provision, which limits the right of dismissal in condemnation proceedings, different from the right accorded the court in the dismissal of actions under section 581. We are of opinion, therefore, that the street act and its various provisions with reference to the procedure connected with the condemnation of property by municipalities for street purposes is constitutional, and that under such act no dismissal of the action or abandonment of the proceedings could be had after the entry of the interlocutory judgment; that the petition here presented presents facts sufficient to entitle petitioners to a writ directing the city council to proceed and confirm, correct, or modify the assessment presented to them, or order a new assessment, as in their judgment is proper in the premises.

We do not desire to be understood as passing upon any questions sought to be raised as to the regularity of the proceedings before the city council anterior to the entry of the interlocutory judgment. We have heretofore by an order denied the right of those affected by the improvement to intervene and raise such questions in this proceeding, upon the theory that, if any irregularities in the proceedings connected with the ordinances or orders as affecting the jurisdiction of the city council to order the improvement in fact exist, a remedy full and complete may be had by appropriate equitable action in the superior court, and that this proceeding is inappropriate for the determination of such questions.

An order will be entered overruling respondents' demurrer to the petition.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

15 Cal. App. 448

RUSHTON et al. v. HANDLEY, City Clerk of City of Los Angeles. (Civ. 929.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 20, 1911.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 108*)—CHARTER—CONSTRUCTION—INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM—PETITION.

City Charter of Los Angeles (Laws 1903, c. 6) § 198a, permitting amendments to an initiative petition after the expiration of a certain number of days, in case the petition is found insufficient, is inapplicable to a petition to invoke a referendum with reference to an ordinance already passed, notwithstanding section 198b, providing therefor, declares that the petition shall be in all respects, etc., in accordance with the provisions of section 198a, and shall be examined and certified by the clerk in all respects as therein provided, since such provision refers solely to the form and substance and certification of the original petition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 108.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 108*)—CITY CHARTER—REFERENDUM PETITION—INSUFFICIENCY.

Under City Charter of Los Angeles (Laws 1903, c. 6) § 198b, providing for a referendum with reference to ordinances passed by the city council on a petition executed in the prescribed manner, where a referendum petition is not properly executed within 30 days after the final passage of the ordinance sought to be referred the ordinance becomes effective, and is not subject to further reference.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 108.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Mandamus, on petition of G. W. Rushton and others, against Lorin A. Handley, substituted for Harry J. Lelande, City Clerk of Los Angeles. From a judgment discharging an alternative writ, relators appeal. Affirmed.

Milton K. Young, and John I. Stafford, for appellants. John W. Shenk, City Atty., and Emmet H. Wilson, Chief Deputy, for respondents.

ALLEN, P. J. [1] The petition, the basis for the issuance of the alternative writ, discloses that the freeholders' charter of Los Angeles city contains certain provisions with reference to the initiative and referendum; the first thereof having reference to the initiative is found in section 198a (Laws 1903, c. 6), which provides: "The signatures to the petition need not all be appended to one paper, but each signer shall add to his signature his place of residence, giving the street and number. *One of the signers of each such paper shall make oath before an officer competent to administer oaths, that the statements therein made are true, and that each signature to the paper appended is the genuine signature of the person whose name purports to be thereunto subscribed. Within ten days from the date of filing such petition the city clerk shall examine and from the great register ascertain whether or not said petition is signed by the requisite number of qualified electors, * * * and he shall attach to said petition his certificate showing the result of said examination. If, by the clerk's certificate, the petition is shown to be insufficient, it may be amended within ten days from the date of such certificate. The clerk shall, within ten days* after such amendment, make like examination of the amended petition, and if his certificate shall show the same to be insufficient, it shall be returned to the person filing the same, without prejudice, however, to the filing of a new petition to the same effect."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Another provision of the charter, section 198b, is with reference to the referendum. This provides, with reference to the character of ordinances under consideration: "No ordinance passed by the city council * * * shall go into effect before thirty days from the time of its final passage and its approval by the mayor, and if during said thirty days a petition signed by electors of the city equal in number to at least seven per cent. of the entire vote cast for all candidates for mayor at the last preceding general election at which a mayor was elected, protesting against the passage of such ordinance, be presented to the council, the same shall thereupon be suspended from going into operation, and it shall be the duty of the council to reconsider such ordinance, and if the same is not entirely repealed, the council shall submit the ordinance, as is provided in section 198a of this charter, to the vote of the electors of the city. * * * Said petition shall be in all respects in accordance with the provisions of said section 198a, except as to the percentage of signers, and be examined and certified by the clerk in all respects as is therein provided."

Further that on April 22, 1910, a certain ordinance, having theretofore been passed by the city council, was approved by the mayor. That on May 20, 1910, plaintiff and others filed with the defendant, city clerk of Los Angeles, certain separate papers, the aggregate thereof constituting a petition, protesting against the passage of such ordinance; that such petition in the aggregate contained the percentage of electors required by section 198b, but the separate papers, or many of them, so filed as a petition, were not verified by one of the signers of such separate paper; that by reason thereof the clerk, on May 26, 1910, certified to the council the insufficiency of the petition. Thereafter, and after the lapse of more than 30 days from the approval of the ordinance, plaintiffs and others who had originally signed said papers asked to amend the same by adding thereto the name of the party verifying each separate paper, so as to make such party a petitioner in the separate paper so by him verified. This was denied, and thereafter, on June 4, 1910, plaintiffs presented to the clerk other papers containing the names of electors, each of which papers was verified by a signer thereof; but upon examination the clerk found that these signatures were in duplicate, that many of the persons verifying what was termed the "amended papers" were signers upon the original papers on file constituting the first petition, and for that reason the clerk declared the amended petition insufficient. Plaintiffs therefore pray for a writ of mandate, directing the city clerk to allow the persons who filed written demands therefor to amend said petition by signing their names, streets, and numbers to the body thereof, and that the clerk be forthwith required to compare the names annexed to all the petitions filed with him with the great register of Los Angeles county, to ascertain whether or not said petition is signed by the requisite number of qualified electors, and, if so found sufficient, that he submit same to the city council without delay.

The proper construction to be given section 198b, and with reference to that portion thereof which provides, "said petition shall be in all respects in accordance with the provisions of said section 198a, * * * and be examined and certified by the clerk in all respects as is therein provided," presents the question for determination upon this appeal. It is insisted by appellants that this last-quoted portion of section 198b authorizes the amendment of a petition under that section in the manner and to the extent provided by section 198a. We are of opinion that such was not the intent of the framers of the charter, or of the electors who adopted the same; that the words "said petition shall be in all respects," etc., "and be examined and certified," etc., refer solely to the original petition provided for by section 198a, and refer solely to the form, substance, and certification of such original petition; that it is obvious that that portion of section 198a permitting amendments after 30 days cannot and does not apply to a petition which seeks to invoke the referendum.

[2] This is apparent from the provision of the section generally, to the effect that the ordinance passed shall not go into effect before 30 days, and that 30 days is the time given within which the electors shall file their protests, and upon the filing of which protests in the manner and form prescribed, and in no other event, is the ordinance suspended from operation beyond the 30 days. It is plain that, if the requisite petition constituting the protests be not filed within 30 days, the ordinance becomes effective, and, being so effective, the referendum no longer applies to it, and if the elector desires relief from its operation such relief must be worked out through the initiative section before referred to by a repeal of such ordinance, brought about by the manner therein provided. Otherwise an insignificant number of voters might present a protest to the passage of an ordinance on the twenty-ninth day after its approval, and the insufficient character thereof being apparent, they could then file other and additional protests, each of which would have to be examined and certified, and, if finally found insufficient, they should be returned to the protestants, without prejudice to the filing of a new petition to the same effect. In other words, by these obstructive methods a small minority of the electors might prevent an ordinance from becoming operative for a long period of time after the expiration of the time provided by the charter when the same should become operative. The same reasons do not apply to the initiative; that provides for the inauguration of new and independent legislation. No rights are affected, and no steps required to be taken, until a petition of the requisite kind and character is on file. Interested parties might indulge in petitions without number, amend without limitation, commence and recommence proceedings under section 198a, without disturbing public affairs in the least. But such would not be the effect, were the clause with reference to amendment to be construed as applying to the referendum.

It is certainly beyond question that the original petition filed in this instance was not in the manner and form prescribed by the charter. Each separate paper was not verified by one of the signers thereof, which being true it was of no effect as a protest under this section of the charter. The demand to amend is a tacit admission of the insufficiency of the original; otherwise no reason suggests itself why a sufficient paper should be amended, or that a court should by its order compel consent thereto. There being, then, on file no protest or petition as by the charter provided, at the expiration of 30 days from the approval of the ordinance, the ordinance became effective and operative, and no amendment and no steps of any kind or character thereafter taken by the electors, under section 198b, could disturb the operative character of this ordinance so in effect. We think the court below properly determined that the original petition was insufficient, and that the clerk was warranted in so certifying. Being so insufficient, the ordinance taking effect 30 days after its approval, the clerk had no duty to perform in connection with so-called amendments of original petitions thereafter filed with reference to such ordinance, and, that the ordinance having taken effect within the time provided by the charter, no authority or jurisdiction reposed in the city council to order an election under section 198b, through which the electors might annul the operative ordinance.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

15 Cal. App. 444

MERCHANTS' NAT. UNION v. BUISSE-
RET et al. (Civ. 918.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Feb. 18, 1911.)

1. PROCESS (§ 96*)—ORDER OF PUBLICATION—
AFFIDAVITS.

Where affidavits for an order for the publication of summons showed that search had been made for defendant within the city of L.

and at and about his last place of residence, that members of his family had informed persons attempting to make service that defendant was not at home, that he was not in the state, and that they would not disclose where he was, they sufficiently showed that defendant after due diligence could not be found within the state, and authorized an order for service by publication.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Process, Cent. Dig. §§ 108-120; Dec. Dig. § 96.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 17*)—PERSONAL JUDGMENT—
NONRESIDENT.

Courts have no jurisdiction to render a money judgment against a nonresident on service by publication, unless property within the jurisdiction is held under a valid attachment at the time of the rendition of the judgment, in which case the judgment is considered valid as a judgment in rem in so far as it may be satisfied out of the property so held.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 25-33; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

3. ATTACHMENT (§ 117*)—AFFIDAVIT—REQUI-SITES.

Where an attachment affidavit recited that the "judgment" was not sought to hinder, delay, or defraud any creditor of the defendant, but did not state that the "attachment" was not sought for that purpose, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 538, it was insufficient to sustain the writ.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attachment, Cent. Dig. § 241; Dec. Dig. § 117.*]

4. ATTACHMENT (§ 141*)—ISSUANCE—DUTY OF CLERK.

While the clerk in issuing an attachment performs but a ministerial duty, he has no authority to issue the writ where the affidavit fails to state the facts required by statute on which the writ exclusively depends.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attachment, Dec. Dig. § 141.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. R. Hervey, Judge.

Action by the Merchants' National Union against A. P. Buisseret and another. From orders denying motions made by defendant Buisseret to vacate a default judgment and to dissolve an attachment, he appeals. Reversed.

Walter J. Horgan, for appellant. D. Joseph Coyne, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Defendant Buisseret appeals from orders of the superior court denying motions made by him to vacate a default judgment, and to dissolve an attachment. The action was brought to recover the sum of $5,241.04 from defendants for goods, wares, and merchandise sold to them. By the bill of exceptions it appears that both of the motions mentioned were presented at the same time. Among the grounds upon which the motions were made it was specified that the court had obtained no jurisdiction over the defendant entitling it to render judgment against him, and that the affidavit upon which the writ of attachment was issued was insufficient to authorize the issuance of such writ. It was specified as a further objection to the validity of the judgment that the service of summons was made by publication thereof, and that the facts stated in the affidavit upon which the order for publication was based did not make out a sufficient case authorizing the summons to be so served. The files and records of the case were used on the hearing of the motions, including the affidavit on attachment, and the writ.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexer

[1] The affidavits, upon which the order for publication of summons was based, showed that search had been made for defendant Buisseret in the city of Los Angeles and at and about his last place of residence, that members of defendant's family had informed persons who were attempting to secure service of summons that Buisseret was not at home, that he was not in the state, and that the informants refused to tell where the said defendant was. As a part of the showing, affidavits of four deputy constables who had attempted to make personal service of summons upon defendant were submitted. The facts shown in the affidavits for publication of summons were sufficient to justify the court in finding, as it did, that defendant could not after due diligence be found within the state, and to support the order that the service of summons be made upon him by publication. Rue v. Quinn, 137 Cal. 652, 66 Pac. 216, 70 Pac. 732; People v. Wrin, 143 Cal. 11, 76 Pac. 646.

[2] The judgment entered against defendant was in form a personal one for the recovery of the amount of money sued for. Assuming that service by publication of summons against a defendant who is a resident of this state may authorize the entry of a personal judgment against him, the affidavits for publication of summons used by plaintiff here, and the order of court based thereon, made it appear that the defendant was not within the state of California at the time the order for publication was made, and that he was a nonresident of the state. De La Montanya v. De La Montanya, 112 Cal. 101, 44 Pac. 345, 32 L. R. A. 82, 53 Am. St. Rep. 165; Boring v. Penniman, 134 Cal. 514, 66 Pac. 739. There was no jurisdiction under the showing made to authorize the entry of a purely personal judgment against Buisseret. Such a judgment could have no vitality or effect at all, except where it appeared that the plaintiff held property under a valid attachment at the time of its rendition. If it was made so to appear, the judgment would be considered as one in rem in so far as it might be satisfied out of the property so held under attachment. There is clearly no authority for the entry of a money judgment against a nonresident upon service of summons by publication, where there is not shown to be property of such nonresident within this state, which the court has jurisdiction to cause its judgment and decrees to operate upon. Anderson v. Goff, 72 Cal. 72, 13 Pac. 73, 1 Am. St. Rep. 34; Bland v. Paymaster Min. Co., 95 Cal. 530, 30 Pac. 765, 29 Am. St. Rep. 149; Brown v. Campbell, 100 Cal. 641, 35 Pac. 433, 38 Am. St. Rep. 314; De La Montanya v. De La Montanya, supra; Boring v. Penniman, supra.

[3] Defendant was entitled to have his motion to vacate the judgment granted if it appeared that no valid attachment had been issued, and property levied upon thereunder, at the time the judgment was entered. The affidavit on attachment furnished by the plaintiff failed to state, as required by the statute, that the "attachment" was not sought to "hinder, delay, or defraud any creditor or creditors of defendant." Code Civ. Proc. § 538. The affidavit did recite that the "judgment was not sought * * * to hinder, delay, or defraud any creditor or creditors of said defendant." The affidavit was, therefore, fatally defective and was wholly insufficient to authorize the issuance of the writ of attachment. "The right to an attachment, and the mode of procedure for obtaining it, are the creatures of statute, depending for their existence and regularity upon the terms of the Code." Kohler v. Agassiz, 99 Cal. 12, 33 Pac. 742.

[4] While it is true that the clerk performs but a ministerial duty in issuing the writ of attachment, he has no authority to issue such writ where there is no statement in the affidavit of the facts plainly required by the statute to be set forth therein. McCusker v. Walker, 77 Cal. 212, 19 Pac. 382.

As no valid attachment had been levied against property of defendant at the time the judgment was entered, and this fact was made to appear by the records and files of the court, defendant Buisseret was entitled to have his motion to set aside the judgment granted; and also his motion to vacate and dissolve the attachment.

The orders are reversed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

15 Cal. App. 347

JOHN M. C. MARBLE CO. v. MERCHANTS'
NAT. BANK OF LOS ANGELES.
(Civ. 868.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Feb. 10, 1911. On Petition for Rehearing,
March 10, 1911.)

1. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 140*)—ASSIGNMENTS (§ 49*)—CHECKS BY DEPOSITOR—RIGHTS OF HOLDER.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 3254, 3255, declaring that a check is a bill of exchange subject to the provisions affecting bills of exchange, the drawing of a check by a depositor in a bank is not an assignment of the deposit or any part thereof, and the holder of the check is a mere bearer of an order drawn by the depositor, so the bank failing to pay the check, though having sufficient funds, is liable only to the depositor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 380-397; Dec. Dig. § 140; * Assignments, Cent. Dig. §§ 89-94; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

2. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 134*)—RIGHTS AS BETWEEN BANK AND DEPOSITOR—COUNTERCLAIM.

Where one suing a depositor in a bank procures the service of an attachment on the bank, the bank must withhold for the satisfaction of plaintiff's demand sufficient money then owed the depositor if there is such money, but in ascertaining the amount it may deduct any matured indebtedness owing to it by the depositor which it could set up by way of counterclaim in case the depositor had sued for his deposit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 353-374; Dec. Dig. § 134.*]

3. GARNISHMENT (§ 105*)—RIGHTS OF PARTIES.

An attaching creditor merely acquires the rights of the debtor, and a plaintiff in garnishment is in relation to the garnishee substituted merely to the rights of his own debtor, and he may enforce no demand against the garnishee which the debtor if suing could not enforce.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Garnishment, Cent. Dig. § 216; Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

4. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 134*)—RELATION OF BANK TO DEPOSITOR—SET-OFF—STATUTES.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 726, providing that there can be but one action for the recovery of any debt secured by mortgage, the right of a bank to set-off a matured indebtedness against the claim of a depositor or his creditor does not permit of an indebtedness secured by a mortgage being so used as an off-set.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 353-374; Dec. Dig. § 134.*]

5. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 134*)—RELATION OF BANK TO DEPOSITOR—SET-OFF—STATUTES—"PERSONAL PROPERTY."

An assignment by one of several purchasers of real estate conveyed to a trustee with directions to sell and divide the proceeds among the several purchasers of his interest in the trust agreement to a bank in which he is depositor as security for a note is an assignment by way of a pledge of a chose in action constituting personal property within Code Civ. Proc. § 17, and the bank notwithstanding section 726 may off-set its matured claim on the note against the deposit without proceeding to collect the security.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 353-374; Dec. Dig. § 134.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5346-5358; vol. 8, p. 7753.]

On Petition for Rehearing.

6. TRUSTS (§ 65*)—RESULTING TRUSTS.

Where several persons contributed to the purchase of real estate, the title to which was conveyed to a trustee with directions to sell and divide the proceeds among the purchasers, a resulting trust arose in favor of the purchasers on the invalidity of the trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 94; Dec. Dig. § 65.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by the John M. C. Marble Company against the Merchants' National Bank of Los Angeles. From a judgment granting insufficient relief, plaintiff appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Oscar A. Trippet, for appellant. O'Melveny, Millikin & Stevens and Horace S. Wilson, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This appeal is taken from a judgment by which plaintiff was awarded certain relief, and which provided that neither party recover costs. The matters sought to be reviewed are presented on the judgment roll alone.

As found by the trial court, the facts are as follows: On February 8, 1909, one John T. Donnell delivered to plaintiff his check drawn upon the defendant bank for the sum of $2,685. The check was presented for payment on the following morning at the bank and payment was refused, the bank giving as a reason for the refusal that there was not sufficient funds to the credit of Donnell to cover the required amount. Thereupon plaintiff brought suit against Donnell, and had a writ of attachment issued therein on February 13, 1909, which writ he caused to be served upon defendant. Judgment was recovered on March 3, 1909, against Donnell in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $2,697.02 and costs. Upon being served with the writ of attachment, defendant answered that it had in its possession the sum of $1,175.92 belonging to Donnell and subsequently delivered this amount of money to the sheriff, who applied it on the execution which had been issued to secure satisfaction of plaintiff's judgment. Under proceedings supplemental to execution, plaintiff caused the defendant to answer further in court respecting the amount of Donnell's deposit as it stood at the time of the presentation of the check and the serving of the writ of attachment. Leave was thereafter obtained to bring suit against defendant to determine whether or not a greater sum should not have been accounted for by the latter. By the further findings of fact it appears that on the morning of February 9, 1909, there was credited to Donnell on general deposit with defendant the sum of $2,839.02; that at that time Donnell was indebted to the bank on a promissory note then due in the sum of $1,573.80; that at about the hour of 8:30 a. m. of February 9th the bank applied enough of Donnell's deposit credit to pay the note indebtedness so that when plaintiff's check was presented later in the day the deposit was insufficient to cover the amount required to cash it; that later, and before the writ of attachment was served, several checks for smaller amounts were drawn against the deposit by Donnell, so that, when the attachment was levied, there remained only the sum of $1,175.92 to Donnell's credit.

Payment of the $1,500 note had been secured by the assignment to defendant by Donnell of an interest in a certain trust agreement, which will be noticed more particularly hereinafter. It is the contention of plaintiff that the application of the credit of Donnell from his general deposit, in extinguishment of the debt due on the promissory note, was unauthorized, and that it did not operate to defeat plaintiff's claim to sufficient of the deposit to satisfy its demand. It seems very clear that, if plaintiff acquired any right of action against the bank, it acquired such right only after service of the writ of attachment.

[1] A check holder is a mere bearer of an order drawn by the depositor. The making and delivery of a check does not work as an assignment of the deposit fund or any part of it, and is not binding on the bank against which it is drawn until accepted by it. The modern authorities are generally to the effect that, even though a bank refuses payment, where the deposit is sufficient to cover the amount of the face of the check, it becomes charged with no liability to the bearer of the check. The bank is in such a case responsible to the depositor only and may be sued by him for damages. In brief, a bank is responsible and accountable to its depositor, and the depositor, in turn, to the persons to whom he issues his checks. In the case of Laclede Bank v. Schuler, 120 U. S. 511, 7 Sup. Ct. 644, 30 L. Ed. 704, the Supreme Court of the United States has said: "The question of how far and under what circumstances a check of a depositor in a bank will be considered an equitable assignment to the payee of the check of all or any portion of the funds or deposits to the credit of the drawer in the bank is one which has been very much considered of late years in the courts, and about which there is not a unanimity of opinion. In this court it is very well settled that such a check, unless accepted by the bank, will not sustain an action at law by the drawee against the bank, as there is no privity of contract between them." See, also, Zane on Banks and Banking, § 146. By Civil Code, § 3254, a check is declared to be a bill of exchange, and by section 3255 of the same Code it is made subject to all of the provisions affecting bills of exchange, with certain exceptions which are immaterial to any question presented in this case. The rights of the holder of a bill of exchange in case of non-payment on presentment are as have just been defined. We conclude, then, preliminarily, that, even though there was sufficient money to pay plaintiff's check to the credit of Donnell at the time the check was presented, no right of action against the bank accrued in favor of plaintiff.

[2] When the writ of attachment was served, however, its effect was to require defendant bank to withhold for satisfaction of plaintiff's demand sufficient, if there was such, of any money it then owed Donnell. In ascertaining this amount, it would be the right of the bank to first deduct any matured indebtedness owing to it by Donnell, which it would have been entitled to set up by way of counterclaim, in the event Donnell had sued to recover the sum of his deposit. Zane on Banks and Banking, § 140; McKean v. German-Am. Savings Bank, 118 Cal. 340, 50 Pac. 656.

[3] An attaching creditor is clothed with no greater rights than the debtor himself. He stands in the shoes of the debtor, and any offset which might be urged against the debtor by the garnishee is equally available against the attaching creditor. "The suing out of a process in garnishment does not in any manner change the rights of the parties to the proceeding further than to transfer the right of the defendant to his creditor to proceed against the garnishee for the collection of the debt due to the principal defendant. It is a rule of universal application that the plaintiff in garnishment is, in his relation to the garnishee, substituted merely to the rights of his own debtor, and can enforce no demand against the garnishee which the debtor himself, if suing, would not be entitled to recover. * * * Another effect of this rule is that the plaintiff is liable to be met by the garnishee on his own behalf with the same set-offs and other defenses that the garnishee might have interposed had an action been brought against him by his own creditor, the principal defendant in the garnishment proceedings." Shinn on Attachment, § 487; Drake on Attachment, § 536; Bolles on Modern Law of Banking, p. 741; Schuler v. Israel, 120 U. S. 506, 7 Sup. Ct. 648, 30 L. Ed. 707.

[4] The right of a bank to set off a matured indebtedness against the claim of its depositor or his creditor does not, however, permit of an indebtedness secured by a mortgage being so used as an offset. Section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "There can be but one action for the recovery of any debt, or the enforcement of any right, secured by mortgage upon real or personal property."

[5] It is the contention of appellant that the assignment to defendant by Donnell of his interest in the trust agreement was an assignment of an interest in real property and constituted a mortgaging thereof. Certain real property had been transferred to a trustee by Donnell and eight others who had all contributed toward its purchase. The trustee took title with directions to sell and dispose of the property and divide the proceeds among the several purchasers, including Donnell, who was to be awarded an eleven one-hundredths share of such proceeds. Donnell when he assigned to the bank as security for the payment of the $1,500 note his interest in this agreement assigned merely a chose in action, an interest in a fund of money to be realized in the future by the sale of real property. By the making of the trust agreement he had converted any undivided interest in the real property which he possessed into a right only to receive money in lieu thereof, and this right was undoubtedly personal property. "The words 'personal property' include money, goods, chattels, things in action, and evidences of debt." Section 17, Code Civ. Proc. This property was given as security by Donnell to the bank was by way of a pledge and not as a mortgage. As a pledgee, defendant would have the right to offset its matured claim on the $1,500 note against Donnell's deposit without proceeding to collect on the security. "The pledgee may recover the amount of his debt from the debtor by an independent suit without foreclosing the pledge, whereas the mortgagee can maintain but one action for the recovery of the debt, and that must be an action of foreclosure." Commercial Savings Bank v. Hornberger, 140 Cal. 19, 73 Pac. 625. After applying sufficient money from Donnell's deposit to satisfy the $1,500 note, the defendant had in its possession the trust agreement and assignment thereof. These documents the trial court by its judgment directed should be delivered to plaintiff, when its judgment should have become final. Plaintiff sought by its action to recover a money judgment against defendant, and, while it may be that the judgment as entered awards more and different relief than plaintiff was entitled to under its complaint, plaintiff can scarcely complain of this fact. Assuming that the judgment was a proper one to be entered, there would seem, however, to be no authority for the condition placed upon it, to wit, that the recovery be had of the documents mentioned only when the judgment should have become final.

It is ordered that the judgment be modified by striking therefrom the words "upon this judgment becoming final." As so modified, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition of appellant for a rehearing is denied. The question as to whether or not the trust attempted to be created by Donnell and others was valid, we did not deem material to a decision of this case. [6] Of course, if the declaration of trust was invalid under the conveyance to the trustee, a resulting trust would have arisen in favor of Donnell and his associates who had contributed the purchase price of the real property; and, in that event, they might have demanded a reconveyance of their respective interests. The assignment to the bank did not purport to convey any interest in real property; it was not appropriate in form so to do, and the intent was clearly to the contrary; it was plainly an assignment of the right to share in the proceeds of the sale of the property, if the same was sold, and nothing more; the bank made no other claim; there was no attempt to mortgage the interest of Donnell in the real property. As was said in the opinion filed, the assignment was an assignment of an interest in personal property given by way of a pledge and not as a mortgage.

15 Cal. App. 459

PATTON v. KLEMMER. (Civ. 809.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 23, 1911.)

1. ASSAULT AND BATTERY (§ 35*)—CIVIL LIABILITY — ACTIONS — EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action to recover damages for an assault, evidence held to sustain a verdict for plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Cent. Dig. § 51; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 699*)—RECORD—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS FOR INSTRUCTIONS.

The refusal of the trial court to give requested instructions will not be considered where the record, while showing that some instructions were given, does not show how many, or on what subjects, or upon what phases of the case they were given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2928-2930; Dec. Dig. § 699.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Glenn County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Action by John A. Patton against Lenus J. Klemmer. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Seth Millington and W. T. Belieu, for appellant. F. H. Dam, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action to recover damages for an assault by defendant upon the person of plaintiff. The cause was tried by a jury and plaintiff had the verdict. Defendant appeals from the judgment entered upon the verdict, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

There is abundant evidence of the assault and of its permanent and injurious effects upon plaintiff's physical condition and to some extent upon his mental faculties. Defendant does not now contend that he did not assault plaintiff. He alleged in his answer and attempted to prove at the trial that plaintiff insulted him, "and by language and immediate demonstrations of force threatened an assault upon defendant," and that "for his proper protection and defense, and for no other reason, used such force and means as was necessary, and no more, to repel the assault which he reasonably apprehended was imminent and about to be made upon him by plaintiff." Defendant also alleged in his answer that he "delivered unto plaintiff certain sums of money, the same being for disputed rent, medical services, and all and singular the matters and things in controversy between plaintiff and defendant; that defendant [doubtless meaning plaintiff] accepted said payments in full satisfaction and discharge of all claims and demands whatsoever against defendant, and particularly of the demand set up in the complaint herein."

[1] The evidence, without conflict, showed that defendant assaulted plaintiff without himself being assaulted. Upon the issue presented by the answer, that plaintiff used vile language towards defendant and threatened an assault upon him, the evidence is conflicting, as was also the evidence upon the issue, presented by the answer, that plaintiff accepted payments from defendant in satisfaction of any demands arising out of the assault. These issues having been fairly resolved by the jury and there having been evidence sufficient to justify their conclusion, this court is without power to interfere.

[2] Defendant complains that certain three instructions, requested by him to be given the jury, were refused. It appears from the record that instructions were given the jury by the court, but how many or upon what subjects, or upon what phases of the case does not appear, for they are not in the record. All that the record shows is that the court refused to give the instructions requested by plaintiff.

It is well settled that the refusal of the trial court to give certain instructions will not be considered by this court where the record fails to give all the instructions submitted to the jury, or does not show that the instructions refused were not substantially embodied in those given. Buelna v. Ryan, 139 Cal. 630, 634, 73 Pac. 466.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

15 Cal. App. 440

GODDARD et al. v. EMERSON, Sheriff.
(Civ. 813.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Feb. 18, 1911. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court April 19, 1911.)

PUBLIC LANDS (§ 144*)—SCHOOL LANDS—REDEMPTION FROM JUDGMENT OF FORECLOSURE.

The right to redeem a certificate of purchase of school land from a judgment of foreclosure for default in interest is governed by St. 1881, c. 55, giving 12 months after the foreclosure in which to redeem, and not by Pol. Code, §§ 3550, 3551, requiring the district attorney to file copies of the judgment 20 days after the entry thereof, and authorizing the holder of the certificate of purchase to pay, at any time before the filing, the amount due and the costs, and, whether the district attorney discharges his duty before or after the expiration of 20 days from entry of judgment, the purchaser has 12 months from the entry within which to redeem.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Dec. Dig. § 144.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; F. D. Burroughs, Judge.

Action by Louise B. Goddard and others against C. E. Emerson, as Sheriff of Lassen County. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Pardee & Pardee, for appellants. Rankin & Julian, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action to compel the defendant, by the writ of mandamus, to receive payment, by way of redemption, of the amount necessary to redeem a certain certificate of purchase for school land from a judgment of foreclosure. The trial court sustained a general demurrer to the complaint, and entered judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal from said judgment.

It appears from the complaint that plaintiffs are heirs at law of one Clark L. Goddard, to whom, on July 15, 1904, the state issued a certificate of purchase of certain school land, situated in Lassen county, which certificate showed payment of 20 per cent. of the purchase price and legal interest to January 1, 1905; that in the month of —, 1907, the state, by the district attorney of said county, commenced an action to foreclose and annul the said certificate of purchase because of default in the payment of interest then due for the years 1905, 1906, and 1907, upon the unpaid balance of the said purchase price of said land; that on June 9, 1908, a judgment was given and made in said action against said Clark L. Goddard, of which a copy was filed in the office of the county recorder of said county on June 10, 1908, and another copy thereof was filed in the office of the register of the state land office on or about June 17, 1908; that no other or any certified copies of said judgment were ever or at any time filed in said recorder's or said register's office; that on December 29, 1909, plaintiffs tendered and offered to pay to defendant, by way of redemption of said certificate of purchase, under the provision of section 3551 of the Political Code, the sum of $66.05, being the amount of said judgment and costs in said action and interest accruing thereon, and "then offered to pay said sheriff the full amount of all interest, costs, penalties, and claims of every kind which were then payable for the purpose of redeeming said certificate of purchase, and restoring and having said judgment vacated and said action dismissed, but said defendant refused to accept said payment, or to accept any payment by way of redemption, or to allow said certificate of purchase to be redeemed."

The validity of the judgment, as entered June 9, 1908, is not disputed. The question now presented arises out of what is claimed to have been a premature filing of the copies of the judgment in the recorder's and register's office. The filing was made in the recorder's office one day after the entry of the judgment and in the register's office eight days after the judgment was entered. The statute law, as found in the Political Code, is as follows:

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

"Sec. 3550. Twenty days after the entry of judgment the district attorney must file in the office of the register, and in the recorder's office of the county in which the land is situated, certified copies thereof.

"Sec. 3551. The holder of the certificate of purchase may, at any time before such filing, pay to the sheriff the amount due the state, and the costs of suit that have accrued up to the time of payment; whereupon the district attorney must dismiss the suit or vacate the judgment, and the purchaser or holder of the certificate of purchase is restored to his rights in the premises."

The provisions relating to proceedings against delinquent purchasers of state land are found in title 8, c. 1, art. 6, §§ 3546 to 3556, of the Political Code, and appear to be a codification of parts of the act of March 28, 1868. St. 1868, p. 507. Section 66 of that act provided that: "When a decree shall have been obtained, and within twenty days after the entering up of said decree, the district attorney shall cause a certified copy of said decree to be filed in the office of the register of the state land office and another certified copy in the recorder's office of the county in which the land is situate. The holder of the certificate of purchase may, at any time before the expiration of the twenty days provided for filing a certified copy * * * pay to the sheriff," etc.; the provision being much the same as in section 3551 of the Political Code, supra. Section 66 of the act of 1868 is carried into the Political Code and made the subject of the two sections, supra.

On March 7, 1881 (St. 1881, p. 65), the Legislature passed an "act to enable purchasers of state lands to redeem the same, where their title has been or may hereafter be foreclosed for nonpayment of interest." It reads:

"Section 1. In all cases where the title of purchasers of land from the state has been foreclosed, or attempted to be foreclosed, for non-payment of interest, said purchasers, their executors, administrators, or successors in interest shall have, twelve months after said foreclosures are or have been completed, within which to redeem such land by paying to the county treasurer, for the benefit of the fund, or parties entitled thereto, all delinquent interest, and interest that would have accrued in case there had been no foreclosure; also all costs of foreclosure to be paid to the fund, or the parties who paid said costs. When said payments are made, and indorsed on the certificate of purchase, specifying the amount paid as interest and for costs, and duly reported to the register of the land office, the annulments shall be canceled by said officer, and the rights of the purchasers shall thereby be fully restored."

The act of 1881 seems not to interfere with or change the duty of the district attorney in the requirement of section 3550 to file copies of the decree as there directed, but it does appear to change and enlarge the right of redemption by the holder of the certificate of purchase. The right under the act of 1881 may be exercised at any time within 12 months "after said foreclosures are or have been completed," which would be upon the entry of judgment. In the case of Marshall et al. v. Farmers' Bank of Fresno, 115 Cal. 330, 42 Pac. 418, 47 Pac. 52, the copies "were filed within 20 days after the entry of the judgment" (Pol. Code, § 3550), and redemption was "before the expiration of a year from the entry of the judgment," under the act of 1881. The case, however, turned upon the conclusiveness of the patent thereupon issued, and did not determine the question here. It does, inferentially, nevertheless, seem to recognize the force of the act of 1881, as superseding the provisions of section 3551 of the Political Code. It seems to us that, in view of the later act, the right to redeem is no longer restricted to the time or conditions mentioned in section 3551, but is derived from the act of 1881, and is no longer to be governed by the filing or failure to file copies of the decree as provided in section 3550. A duty is by that section still cast upon the district attorney, and, whether he discharges it before or after the expiration of 20 days from the entry of the decree, the purchaser has 12 months, and no longer, from the completion of the foreclosure—i. e., the entry of the decree—within which to redeem. The act of 1881 changes the rule which would govern if the right of redemption depended wholly upon the two Code sections cited. Appellant did not offer to redeem until 18 months after the entry of the decree. This was too late. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

15 Cal. App. 433

SCOTT v. MONTE CRISTO OIL & DEVELOPMENT CO. (Civ. 889.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 23, 1911.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 406*)—AUTHORITY OF PRESIDENT.

Where the president of a corporation had general charge of the corporation's business in a county other than that in which its office was located, and, on a servant being injured, the president directed that medical treatment and nursing be furnished him at the expense of the corporation, which paid the expense of taking him from the corporation's works to a private hospital, where he was cared for, such facts, in the absence of anything to the contrary, were sufficient to justify an inference that the president acted within the scope of his authority.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1611-1614; Dec. Dig. § 406.*]

2. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS (§ 13*)—EMPLOYMENT—CONTRACT—CONSIDERATION.

The moral obligation resting on an employer to furnish assistance and care to an injured employé, though the employer was not responsible for the injury, constituted a sufficient consideration for the agreement of the employer's president to pay a physician for professional services rendered such servant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Physicians and Surgeons, Cent. Dig. §§ 18-20; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

3. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS (§ 13*)—EMPLOYMENT.

Where the president of a corporation employed a physician to care for an injured employé, the fact that the injury was not received while the servant was performing the duties of his employment did not prevent a recovery for the physician's services.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Physicians and Surgeons, Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by W. P. Scott against the Monte Cristo Oil & Development Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Henry Ach, Geo. E. Whitaker, and G. E. Lawrence, for appellant. Matthew S. Platz, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Plaintiff is a physician and surgeon and brought this action, both in his own behalf and as assignee of other claims, to recover for professional services rendered and medicines furnished to an employé of defendant, which services and medicines are alleged to have been rendered and furnished at defendant's request. Defendant is a corporation having its principal place of business at San Francisco, but at the times mentioned in the complaint was engaged in mining oil and the development of oil lands in Kern county. No question is made as to the rendition or value of the services alleged to have been performed, but defendant denies that the same were rendered at its request. The chief question therefore presented is whether defendant authorized plaintiff to render the services.

It appears from the findings that on or about the 22d day of February, 1908, one Leslie Ingalls was in the employ of defendant as a laborer upon certain oil lands which defendant was then engaged in developing; that while so in the employ of defendant, and while performing the duties of his said employment, said Ingalls received great bodily injury and was so dangerously hurt that he lost all consciousness and was absolutely helpless and unable to do or act for himself by reason thereof; that on said date defendant requested plaintiff, in his capacity of physician and surgeon, to attend said Ingalls and to care for and furnish all medical aid necessary in the treatment of his said illness caused by the injuries so received while in the employ of defendant; that the president of the corporation, in the presence of the field superintendent thereof, promised and agreed on behalf of said corporation that it would pay him for such services so rendered and to be rendered on behalf of said Ingalls, who was totally unable to act for himself and in a helpless condition; that plaintiff did attend said Ingalls and gave him medical aid and surgical assistance during the period extending from February 22d to and including April 5th, which services were of the reasonable value of $500; that one Anderson was the proprietor of a sanatorium, known as the Bakersfield Sanatorium, to which the president of the corporation, in the presence of the field superintendent, ordered the said Leslie Ingalls to be taken and to be there nursed and cared for during his said illness, and the president of said corporation did promise and agree on its behalf that it would pay to said Anderson the expense and cost of the care and nursing of said Ingalls during his said illness; that from said 22d day of February to and including the 5th day of April the said Anderson did care for, shelter, attend, and nurse said Ingalls during his said illness, the reasonable value of which service was the sum of $456, which claim was duly assigned to this plaintiff. A like finding is made with reference to the claim of the drug company which is alleged to have furnished medicines and drugs for the use of said Ingalls during his said illness. It is further found that the corporation partially ratified the acts of its president in ordering medical aid, care, and nursing of said Ingalls, by paying part of the expense that was incurred, in that the corporation paid the bill for the hire of the wagon wherein said Ingalls was conveyed from its property in the oil fields to the Bakersfield Sanatorium.

Judgment went for plaintiff for the sum of $966.90, from which, and an order denying its motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

Defendant offered no evidence, but at the close of plaintiff's case moved for a nonsuit upon the ground that the evidence failed to show that Henry Ach, the president of the company, had authority to make contracts on its behalf. This motion was denied.

As disclosed by the record, the evidence tended to establish the following facts: Jones was superintendent of the company in charge of its local affairs. Ach was president of the company, and Jones received his orders and instructions pertaining to the management of the local affairs of the company from Ach as president acting for and on its behalf. All of the business transacted in the community, other than that attended to by the superintendent, was transacted through Ach, its president. "What the superintendent said generally went." On February 22d, Ingalls, then in the employ of the company, in some manner not disclosed by the record, was seriously injured; his skull being fractured, necessitating an operation of trephining. In response to a telephone message, plaintiff went to the plant of defendant, located in the Kern county oil fields, where he found Ingalls in an unconscious condition in the bunkhouse, at which time Ach, for and on behalf of the corporation, as its president, ordered Ingalls transferred to the private sanatorium of Louise Anderson, the expense of making such transfer being paid by defendant, and then stated to plaintiff, in the presence of the superintendent, that defendant would pay the bills. Thereafter, Ach, in his capacity as president, authorized the employing of nurses to attend Ingalls, and ordered the superintendent to see that everything possible was done for him. During the period from February 22d to April 5th Ingalls remained at the hospital, where he was attended by nurses employed for that purpose, and was treated by plaintiff, who procured drugs and medicines required for his use, all of which was done in reliance upon the promises made by the president of the corporation for and on its behalf, and by the superintendent of the corporation pursuant to instructions given him by the president of the corporation.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The contention of appellant is that the evidence fails to show any authority, either express or implied, on the part of the president or superintendent of the corporation to act for it in making such agreement or incurring such liability.

[1] No question of ultra vires is involved. The superintendent received his orders and instructions on behalf of the corporation from Mr. Ach. Jones, the superintendent, testifies that Ach instructed him "to put on an extra nurse." "That was his instruction, to do all that I could for the boy. That was his instruction always." "That was the drift of the whole thing at all times, even to the letters. If any mention was made of the boy in any letter, it was to see that everything possible was to be done for the boy." There is also evidence to the effect that plaintiff, after dressing the wounds of Ingalls at the bunkhouse, asked whether they would send him to the hospital as a county charge, or to the private sanatorium, where the hospital charges would be $25 per week. If the injury to Ingalls was due to the negligence of the corporation, then, in the absence of contributory negligence on his part, the corporation would be liable to him for these claims and he might recover therefor. Such circumstances would constitute a sufficient consideration for the making of the agreement and raise a presumption that it was in the interest of the corporation to do what it could to reduce its liability for damages on account of such injury. It could not be said that an agreement of this character made under such conditions would not be within the scope of authority vested in one charged with the general power shown to have been exercised by Ach as president of the corporation. The directors did not meet in Kern county, all of its business there was transacted through Ach, its president, and, since he was held out by the corporation as possessing full power to act in its behalf in all matters arising and transacted in that vicinity, then, in the absence of anything to the contrary, the evidence was sufficient to raise a presumption that he was vested with the authority which he purported to exercise in making the agreement. Under the circumstances disclosed by the record, we deem it but a reasonable inference to conclude that the making of this agreement by Ach as president of the company was within the scope of the powers vested in him by the corporation. Toledo, W. & W. Ry. Co. v. Rodrigues, 47 Ill. 188, 95 Am. Dec. 484; Mt. Wilson Gold & Silver Min. Co. v. Burbidge, 11 Colo. App. 487, 53 Pac. 826; Railroad Co. v. Taft, 28 Mich. 294; Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Winterbotham, 52 Kan. 433, 34 Pac. 1052; Scott v. Oil Co., 144 Cal. 140, 77 Pac. 817; Crowley v. Genesee M. Co., 55 Cal. 273.

Conceding that defendant was not responsible for the injuries received by Ingalls and might have refused to assist or care for him in any way, nevertheless the company recognized an obligation to do something towards relieving his suffering and assisting him and did send him to the sanatorium and paid for the services rendered in such transportation, which, however small, constituted some ratification of the acts of its president. In the case of Railway Company v. McVay, 98 Ind. 391, 49 Am. Rep. 770, it is said: "There is no evidence as to how Barnett was injured; but inasmuch as the general manager ratified contracts for taking care of him, and the company paid for such service (except the claim of appellee), it should be presumed—there being no evidence to the contrary—that the injury was so inflicted as that the contract for his care was not ultra vires."

[2] The case at bar is not unlike that of Fraser v. San Francisco Bridge Co., 103 Cal. 79, 36 Pac. 1037, where it was held under the circumstances of that case that the moral obligation resting on the defendant to furnish assistance and care to an injured employé, for which the corporation was in no wise responsible, constituted a sufficient consideration for the agreement made by the president of the company to pay a physician for professional services rendered such employé.

[3] The finding to the effect that the injury was received by Ingalls while performing the duties of his employment finds no support in the evidence; but, under our view of the case, the error is not prejudicial and hence should be disregarded as immaterial.

We find no merit in appellant's contention as to the commission of other alleged errors. The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

15 Cal. App. 435

RUTZ v. OBEAR et al. (Civ. 863.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California, Feb. 17, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 18, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 193*)—QUESTION RAISED FOR FIRST TIME ON APPEAL—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

Defendants cannot object for the first time on appeal that the complaint does not state a cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1232; Dec. Dig. § 193;* Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 1348.]

2. BROKERS (§ 85*)—ACTION FOR COMPENSATION—EVIDENCE.

In an action to recover for services in securing a tenant for hotel property and in procuring a bond from such tenant to secure the payment of the rent, evidence offered by defendant tending to show that, after the lease was procured, plaintiff loaned the tenant money to inaugurate and carry on his business was properly excluded, as it related to a matter arising after the execution of the lease and the completion of the contract involved in the action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Dec. Dig. § 85.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—HARMLESS ERROR—SUSTAINING GENERAL OBJECTION TO EVIDENCE.

The sustaining of a general objection to evidence is not prejudicial error, where the immateriality of the proffered testimony is apparent from its subject-matter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

4. BROKERS (§ 65*)—RIGHT TO COMPENSATION—INDIVIDUAL INTEREST.

That a broker, after procuring a tenant, and causing him to furnish a bond to secure the rent, advanced money to the tenant either before or after the execution of the lease, in order that the tenant might procure fixtures used in the leased premises, does not show bad faith on the part of the broker, or tend to establish an interest inconsistent with his duty to his principal; the broker having in fact no interest in the lease.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. §§ 48-50; Dec. Dig. § 65.*]

5. BROKERS (§ 74*)—COMPENSATION.

Where defendant, who employed a broker to procure a tenant for corporate property, owned all the stock of the corporation, and stated to the broker that he individually owned the property and that the execution of the lease in the corporate name was for the purpose of affording protection against personal liability, defendant was personally liable to the broker for his commission.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Dec. Dig. § 74.*]

6. EVIDENCE (§ 222*)—ADMISSIONS—STOCKHOLDER OF CORPORATION.

Where defendant, on employing a broker to procure a tenant for property held in the name of a corporation, stated to the broker that he individually owned the property and that the execution of the lease in the corporate name was to avoid personal liability, defendant's admissions were competent to bind himself personally.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 768-808; Dec. Dig. § 222.*]

7. ESTOPPEL (§ 65*)—REPRESENTATIONS AS TO OWNERSHIP OF PROPERTY.

Where one procured services to be performed in connection with property based upon a belief of ownership from representations of the party sought to be charged, such party is estopped, after such services have been performed, to deny ownership.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. §§ 155-158; Dec. Dig. § 65.*]

8. ESTOPPEL (§ 98*)—PERSONS AFFECTED.

Where one person owns all the stock of a corporation, the separate entity of the corporation is destroyed, and statements and admissions by such owner may be received as establishing facts from which an estoppel might arise as to the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. § 290; Dec. Dig. § 98.*]

9. BROKERS (§ 87*)—COMPENSATION—EXTENT OF RECOVERY.

In an action to recover compensation for procuring a tenant and securing the execution of a bond to secure the rent, which amounted to $96,000 for the term of the lease, judgment for $960 held, under the evidence, not excessive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 131; Dec. Dig. § 87.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon F. Moss, Judge.

Action by George A. Rutz against W. H. Obear and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Obear appeals. Affirmed.

Archibald Barnard (Crittenden Thornton, of counsel), for appellant. W. W. Butler, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. The action was one to recover for the value of certain services rendered by plaintiff to defendants in securing a tenant for a certain hotel, and in procuring a bond from such tenant to secure the rents during the life of the lease. The complaint alleged "that within two years last past defendants became indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $1,920 for the reasonable value of services rendered to the defendants at their special instance and request; that such services consisted of securing a tenant for the Hotel Savoy, Santa Monica, Cal., and a bond to secure the rents of the same"; demand and nonpayment being alleged. The defendants answered jointly denying the indebtedness within the two years last past, or at any other time, or at all, of either of them to plaintiff, either in the sum demanded, or in any other sum, on account of the reasonable value of services rendered. No demurrer was interposed to the complaint, nor was there any objection made at the trial to the receipt of evidence in support thereof. The parties seem to have assumed that the issues were properly presented. Evidence was received, without objection, and the court finds that within two years preceding the commencement of the action the services were performed for defendant Obear; that they were of the character stated in the complaint and their reasonable value was $1,200; that no payments had been made thereon; and that demand had been made as alleged in the complaint. Judgment was ordered in plaintiff's favor against defendant Obear; plaintiff having dismissed the action as to the corporation.

[1] Defendant upon this appeal for the first time raises a question as to the sufficiency of the complaint to state a cause of action, and this upon the authority of Fairchild v. King, 102 Cal. 323, 36 Pac. 649. It is unnecessary for us here to determine whether the case last cited is an existing authority, or whether a different rule is recognized in later cases, notably McDonald v. Pacific Debenture Co., 146 Cal. 667, 80 Pac. 1090, and Salinas Valley Lumber Co. v. Magne-Silica Co., 112 Pac. 1089, in which last case it is said, in referring to a complaint employing a common-law count: "Whatever may be thought of the sufficiency of such a pleading, we will not undertake to overthrow it at this late day." Irrespective of the effect of such decisions, we are of opinion that another well-established rule may be invoked, namely, that where the parties have proceeded to trial upon a pleading, without objection to its sufficiency to raise a particular issue, and evidence has been received as to the facts and the issue found upon, the party whose duty it was to object will not be heard in this court to say that the finding is not within the issue. Illinois T. & S. Bank v. Pac. Ry. Co., 115 Cal. 297, 47 Pac. 60; Wilkins v. Stidger, 22 Cal. 232, 83 Am. Dec. 64.

[2] Appellant next claims that error intervened by reason of the action of the trial court in sustaining an objection to evidence tending to show that after the lease was procured plaintiff loaned the tenant money to inaugurate and carry on his business. We see no error in this ruling. It related solely to matters arising after the execution of the lease and the completion of the contract involved in this action.

[3] The fact that the objection to this evidence was general and did not specify the particulars wherein the same was incompetent could not prejudice the appellant, when, as in this case, its immateriality was apparent from the question itself.

[4] The mere fact that plaintiff advanced money to the tenant, either before or after the execution of the lease, in order that he might procure fixtures to be used in leased premises, would not evince bad faith upon the part of the plaintiff, or even tend to establish an interest inconsistent with the duty he owed defendant, more especially when the uncontradicted evidence is to the effect that plaintiff had and owned no interest in the lease so procured to be executed.

[5] It is further contended that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding that the services were performed for appellant Obear, but, on the contrary, that the same were shown to have been performed for the corporation alone. The record discloses evidence tending to show that appellant owned all of the stock of the corporation, that he represented that he individually owned the property, and that the execution of the lease in the corporate name was done for the purpose of affording some personal protection to appellant. The evidence further tends to show that the whole contract was between appellant and plaintiff as individuals; that the promise to pay on the part of appellant was a personal one.

[6] Appellant's admissions were competent to bind himself personally.

[7] Relley v. Campbell, 134 Cal. 175, 66 Pac. 220, is authority for the statement that where one individual owns all the stock of a corporation the same is but the corporate double of the owner of the stock, and such proof destroys the separate entity of the corporation, and in such event the statements and admissions of the sole owner of the stock may be received as establishing facts from which an estoppel might arise as to the corporation.

[8] It must be the rule that where one procures services to be performed in connection with property, based upon a belief of ownership from representations of the party sought to be charged, that such party is estopped, after such services have been performed, to deny ownership.

[9] Appellant finally contends that the judgment is excessive. The action was to recover the reasonable value of services in procuring a tenant and a bond securing the rental. There is evidence in the record to the effect that $960 is the usual and ordinary charge for procuring a tenant alone for a like term at a similar rental, and other evidence to the effect that the sum found by the court was the reasonable value for services in procuring a tenant and a bond securing the rental. There is evidence in the record to the effect that after the tenant had been procured and a bond executed securing the rental, afterwards accepted by appellant as satisfactory, appellant offered plaintiff a thousand dollars if he would procure a brewing company to guarantee the entire $96,000 of rental. It is obvious from the fact that services had already been performed of the value of $1,200 that, if this offer of a thousand dollars was made, it was intended to be and was in addition to the reasonable value of the services theretofore rendered; but such particular surety was not furnished, nor was there any contract made in connection with the offer of a thousand dollars, and the same is in no sense material.

We find no prejudicial error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

(159 Cal. 420)

KING v. CHASE. (L. A. 2,332.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 25, 1911.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 468*)—
SETTLEMENTS OF ACCOUNTS OF A DECEASED EXECUTOR—REMEDY.

Since the enactment of Code Civ. Proc. § 1639, in 1905 (St. 1905, c. 235), a bill in equity to compel the representative of an executor or administrator to settle the accounts of decedent will not be the only procedure, as such statute provides another remedy by authorizing the superior court, sitting in probate, to settle such accounts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 1999; Dec. Dig. § 468.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 469*)—
COURTS OF PROBATE JURISDICTION—CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS — "MATTERS OF PROBATE."

Code Civ. Proc. § 1639, providing that on the death of an executor his accounts may be presented to and settled by the court in which the estate of which he was executor is being administered, and that upon petition of his successor such court may compel the personal representatives of the deceased executor to render an account of the administrator of their testa-

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

tor, and to settle such account as in other cases, is a "matter of probate," jurisdiction of which may, under Const. art. 6, § 5, be conferred upon the superior court, sitting in probate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 469.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, p. 4417.]

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 468*)
—ACCOUNTING BY REPRESENTATIVE OF DECEASED EXECUTOR—NATURE OF REMEDY.

The jurisdiction conferred by Code Civ. Proc. § 1639, on the superior court, to compel an accounting by the representatives of a deceased executor in settlement of the accounts of such executor, excludes the equity powers of such court to compel such accounting.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 1999; Dec. Dig. § 468.*]

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 468*)
—ACCOUNTING—NATURE AND FORM OF REMEDY—PROCEEDING IN REM.

As a probate proceeding in the superior court, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1639, to compel an accounting by the representatives of a deceased executor, with notice to all persons interested, as required by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1626, 1633, is a proceeding in rem, binding upon all persons, a bill in equity to compel such accounting, though brought in the same court, is not the equivalent of such probate proceeding, and hence does not confer jurisdiction to compel such accounting.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 1999; Dec. Dig. § 468.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; N. H. Conklin, Judge.

Action by Charles W. King, administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Cornelia R. Chase, deceased, against Charles A. Chase, executor of the estate of Levi Chase, deceased, and individually. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed, with directions to dismiss the action.

James E. Wadham and Stearns & Sweet, for appellant. Davis, Kemp & Post and Paterson Sprigg, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Cornelia A. Chase died on January 23, 1896, leaving a will wherein her husband, Levi Chase, was appointed executor. The will was admitted to probate in the superior court of San Diego county, and letters testamentary issued to the executor named. Levi Chase entered upon the performance of his duties as executor, and continued to act as such until his death, which occurred on May 30, 1906. Thereafter the defendant, Charles A. Chase, offered for probate the will of Levi Chase. The will was duly admitted to probate, and letters testamentary thereon issued to said Charles A. Chase. In August, 1906, the court in which the administration of Cornelia A. Chase's estate was pending, appointed Charles W. King administrator with the will annexed of said estate.

This action was begun by King, as such administrator, against Charles A. Chase, as executor of the will of Levi Chase, and individually, to obtain an accounting of the property belonging to the estate of Cornelia A. Chase, which came to the possession of defendant as executor of the will of Levi Chase, and for the recovery of such property when ascertained and determined.

The complaint alleges that the estate of Cornelia A. Chase consisted of a large amount of money, real estate, and personal property, which was, prior to the death of the said Levi Chase, in his possession, as executor of said Cornelia A. Chase, and that upon the death of Levi Chase said money, real estate, and personal property passed into the possession and control of Charles A. Chase, executor of the will of Levi Chase. These allegations, denied by the answer, were found to be true by the court, which thereupon made an interlocutory order, requiring the defendant executor to make, within 30 days, an accounting of the executorship of Levi Chase, as executor of the last will of Cornelia A. Chase. An account was filed accordingly, and the court made further findings, to the effect that at the time of the death of Levi Chase there was in his possession as executor of his wife's will the sum of $17,599.02, which sum passed into the possession and control of Charles A. Chase, as executor of the will of Levi Chase. There are similar findings concerning certain items of specific personal property, consisting of jewels and securities. A judgment was entered, requiring the defendant, Charles A. Chase, as executor, to turn over and deliver to plaintiff, as administrator, the specific personal property remaining in his hands, and that plaintiff have and recover judgment against defendant (executor) for the sum found to be in his possession. The defendant, as executor, appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

This action was commenced after the enactment of section 1639 of the Code of Civil Procedure in its present form. It is in the nature of a bill in equity to compel a rendition and settlement of the accounts of a deceased executor. Prior to 1905, when section 1639 was adopted (St. 1905, c. 235), the statutes of this state contained no provision authorizing the superior court, sitting in probate, to settle such accounts. Nor was any such power conferred on the probate court, as that court existed under the Constitution of 1849. For this reason, it was uniformly held that a bill in equity to compel the executor or administrator of an executor or administrator to settle the account of his testator or intestate, with the estate in which the decedent had been acting, was the appropriate, as it was the only, procedure. Bush v. Lindsey, 44 Cal. 121; Chaquette v. Ortet, 60 Cal. 594; In re Thompson, 101 Cal. 349, 35 Pac. 991, 36 Pac. 98, 508; Vance v. Smith, 124 Cal. 219, 56 Pac. 1031; Slater v. McAvoy, 123 Cal. 437, 56 Pac. 49; Zurfluh

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

v. Smith, 135 Cal. 644, 67 Pac. 1089; Guardianship of Wells, 140 Cal. 349, 73 Pac. 1065. The power of a court of equity to entertain a suit of this character is, in these cases, based upon the very ground that there is no other method of compelling the accounting. Thus, in Bush v. Lindsey, supra, the court said: "We are referred to no provision of the probate act which authorizes the probate court to cite the administrator of an intestate with the estate of which he was the administrator, and, after a careful examination of the act, we find none which confers that authority. The power must be lodged in some tribunal to require such an account to be taken and settled; and, if the probate court does not possess it, it must reside in the district court, as a branch of its equitable jurisdiction." So, in Chaquette v. Ortet, supra, the court states that: "There is no provision of the statute providing for the settlement of the account of an administrator who dies before rendering an account. It is because of the absence of such statutory provision, that the right and duty to compel such accounting belongs to a court of equity."

It would seem, therefore, that, upon the enactment of a statute giving to the court, sitting in probate, the power and duty of compelling an accounting in such cases, the occasion and ground for the interposition of a court of equity must have ceased. Such a statute came into being by the adoption, in 1905, of section 1639 of the Code of Civil Procedure, reading as follows: "If any executor or administrator dies, his accounts may be presented by his personal representatives to, and settled by, the court in which the estate of which he was executor or administrator is being administered, and, upon petition of the successor of such deceased executor or administrator, such court may compel the personal representatives of such deceased executor or administrator to render an account of the administration of their testator or intestate, and must settle such account as in other cases." (There had been a prior section of the same number, but this was, at the session of 1905, repealed and reenacted as section 1527 [Stats. 1905, p. 242].) While the power of the court, sitting in probate, was limited, under the pre-existing law, to a settlement of the accounts of a living administrator or executor, this statute extends the authority to cover the entire field of accounting by executors or administrators, so long as the estate itself remains subject to the jurisdiction of the court. That this is a wise and reasonable provision is not to be doubted. The court which has taken charge of the administration of the estate of a decedent is the proper forum for the determination of all questions incidental to that administration. The settlement of the accounts of the personal representative appointed to conduct the administration is one of the principal functions of the probate court. It certainly conduces to simplicity and an orderly direction of the affairs of a decedent if the entire subject of the relations between the estate and the trustee appointed to manage the administration is placed in the hands of a single court, and forms a single proceeding.

The jurisdiction granted by section 1639 is, we have no doubt, a power which may, under article 6, § 5, of the Constitution, be conferred upon the superior court as a "matter of probate." The Constitution does not declare what shall constitute the "matters of probate" which are placed within the jurisdiction of the superior court. The extent of this grant has been defined by the sections of the Code of Civil Procedure, laying down a minute and elaborate system for the settlement and distribution of the estates of decedents. Any provision coming fairly within the scope of such system, as the same has existed in this state before and since the adoption of the present Constitution, is included within the phrase "matters of probate." In Toland v. Earl, 129 Cal. 148, 61 Pac. 914, 79 Am. St. Rep. 100, this court gave extended consideration to the nature of our probate jurisdiction, and reached the conclusion that the creation of a probate proceeding for the settlement of all questions relating to the distribution and settlement of the estate is exclusive of the power of a court of equity to entertain a bill for the adjudication of the very matters committed to the court in probate. There the complainant (administrator) sought a decree "for the purpose of having the probate court instructed as to what distribution shall be made of the estate under the will." It was held that the action should be dismissed, as it sought to control the probate court in the determination of questions placed in its jurisdiction. The same principle applies here. The settlement of the account of the deceased executor is now, by the terms of section 1639, placed in the hands of the court, sitting in probate. The power of the court in equity to require such settlement has been ended. Such power, when it did exist, was based solely on the lack of any statutory method of accomplishing the same end by proceeding in probate. Now that this lack has been remedied, the foundation of the equity jurisdiction is gone.

It is urged that, inasmuch as the equity and the probate jurisdictions are exercised by the same court, it is unimportant that the proceeding is entitled as an original action, rather than as a step in the administration of Cornelia A. Chase's estate. It has been held in this court that, where a bill in equity was the proper practice, a proceeding entitled "in the matter of the estate" would be upheld, where the pleadings contained the necessary allegations to entitle the moving party to relief in equity, more particularly where no objection to the procedure had been raised in the court below. In re Thompson, 101 Cal. 353, 35 Pac. 991, 36 Pac. 98, 508; In re

De Leon, 102 Cal. 537, 36 Pac. 864; In re Clary, 112 Cal. 292, 44 Pac. 569; In re Wells, 140 Cal. 349, 73 Pac. 1065. But, in the first place, the appellant here did not appear and account without objection. The account filed by him expressly declared that it was rendered pursuant to the order of the court, and, "without waiving any of the rights of said defendant to object to the jurisdiction, power and authority of this court to make such order to so account." Furthermore, while a petition bearing the title of a probate proceeding may well contain all the essential averments of a bill in equity, it can hardly be said that this action, binding only the parties to it, is the equivalent of the probate proceeding for the settlement of an account. That is a proceeding in rem, after notice (Code Civ. Proc. § 1633) to all persons interested. Code Civ. Proc. § 1626.

For these reasons, regardless of other points urged by the appellant, it must be held that the court below was without power to entertain this proceeding.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the superior court is directed to dismiss the action.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

(159 Cal. 549)

KING v. PAULY et al. (L. A. 2,409.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 14, 1911. On Rehearing, April 13, 1911.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 710*)—CONCLUSIVENESS—NATURE OF PROCEEDINGS—TITLE TO REAL PROPERTY—SURVIVORSHIP.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1723, declares that, if any person at the time of his death was the owner of a life estate terminable at death, or if such person at the time of his death was one of the spouses holding land as a homestead which, by reason of his death, vested in the surviving spouse, or if such person was a married woman who at the time of her death was the owner of community property which passed on her death to the surviving husband, any person interested might file a petition; and if it appeared that such life estate terminated at decedent's death, or such homestead or community property vested in the survivor, the court should make a decree to that effect, and a certified copy thereof should have the same effect as a final decree of distribution. Held that, where, in a proceeding by a surviving husband to establish his title as survivor of a community, neither the wife's personal representatives nor all her heirs appeared, or were served, a decree for the husband was effective as against those interested, who neither appeared nor were served, only to determine the death of the wife, though it might be conclusive as a determination of title if all those interested in the wife's estate had appeared.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 710.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 743*)—CONCLUSIVENESS—QUESTIONS DETERMINED.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1723, provides that, if any person be dead who is the owner of a life estate in property, or was one of the spouses owning land as a homestead, or held title to community property, any person interested may file a petition to terminate the homestead or community interest, etc. Held, that such proceeding was only intended to determine that the person was dead, on whose death the asserted right of another person depended, and did not contemplate a conclusive adjudication of the validity of the petitioner's claim, and in a suit to quiet title was of no effect as establishing title in the petitioner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 743.*]

3. COURTS (§ 92*)—DECISIONS—DICTUM.

Where an appellate court places its decision on two or more distinct grounds, each is as much an authoritative determination as the other, and neither can be disregarded as obiter dictum.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. § 335; Dec. Dig. § 92.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Action by Charles W. King, as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Cornelia A. Chase, deceased, against Charles W. Pauly and another, as executors of the will of Levi Chase, deceased. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

See, also, 115 Pac. 207.

Davis, Kemp & Post and Patterson Sprigg, for appellant. Stearns & Sweet, James E. Wadham, and Wadham & Pritchard, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an action to quiet plaintiff's title to certain real property in the city of San Diego. Defendants had judgment, and plaintiff appeals.

Plaintiff's claim was that the property in question was the separate property of his intestate, Cornelia A. Chase, at the time of her death, January 23, 1896. Said Cornelia was, at the time the property was acquired (November 12, 1868), the wife of Levi Chase, the executor of whose will is one of the defendants, and was named as the grantee in the deed by which the property was acquired, and the title to said property thenceforth and to the time of her death stood in her name. One of defendants' claims was that the status of such property as community property and the consequent absolute vesting of the same as such community property, in said Levi Chase, her surviving husband, at the time of her death, without administration, was conclusively determined by the decree made and given in a certain proceeding instituted by the surviving husband in the year 1903, under the provisions of section 1723, Code of Civil Procedure. This action was determined in the trial court, solely upon this claim; it being held, in accord with defendants' contention, that the effect of such decree was to foreclose inquiry of the question whether this property was, in fact, separate property of said Cornelia, and to vest the same as community property in the surviving husband. The question is thus squarely presented as to the effect of the proceedings had by such surviving husband under section 1723, Code of Civil Procedure.

That section provides: "If any person has died or shall hereafter die who at the time of his death was the owner of a life estate which terminates by reason of the death of such person, or if such person at the time of his death was one of the spouses owning lands as a homestead, which lands by reason of the death of such person, vest in the surviving spouse, or if such person was a married woman who at the time of her death was the owner of community property which passed upon her death to the surviving husband, any person interested in the property, or in the title thereto, in which such estates or interests were held, may file in the superior court of the county in which the property is situated, his verified petition setting forth such facts, and thereupon and after such notice by publication or otherwise as the court may order, the court shall hear such petition and the evidence offered in support thereof, and if upon such hearing it shall appear that such life estate of such deceased person absolutely terminated by reason of his death, or such homestead or community property vested in the survivor of such marriage, the court shall make a decree to that effect, and thereupon a certified copy of such decree may be recorded in the office of the county recorder, and thereafter shall have the same effect as a final decree of distribution so recorded."

In the proceedings instituted in the superior court of San Diego county by the surviving husband under this section, the matter was entitled "In the matter of the title to certain real estate, being community property, and standing of record in the name of Cornelia A. Chase, deceased." His verified petition alleged the death of his wife and other facts showing that the property was community property. It alleged the names and residences of the heirs of deceased, 12 in number, and all except one being nonresidents of the state. It asked for a decree adjudging that said property was community property, and that the same vested absolutely in petitioner upon the death of his wife. The court, on February 12, 1903, made its order, reciting the filing of said petition, with a statement describing the property and showing the relief asked by petitioner, fixing March 13, 1903, at 2 o'clock p. m. and the courtroom of the court as the time and place for hearing the petition, "at which time and place any person interested may appear and show cause, if any they have, why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted," and directing that a copy of the order be forthwith mailed to the heirs named in said petition at their respective places of residence, and published in the "San Diego Union and Daily Bee" at least once a week for four consecutive weeks. The judgment given June 24, 1903, establishes that notice was given in the manner and for the time fixed by this order, and also that "certain heirs" answered, and by their counsel appeared at the hearing. The answer is not set forth, and which or how many of the heirs thus subjected themselves to the jurisdiction of the court does not appear; but it is clear that all the heirs did not do so, and there is no claim that any legal representative of the deceased appeared in the proceedings. The court found in accord with the allegations of the verified petition, and decreed that the property was community property of said Levi and Cornelia A. Chase at the time of the death of the latter, and at such death vested absolutely in Levi Chase as the surviving husband. A certified copy of this decree was recorded in the office of the county recorder of San Diego county on June 28, 1903.

We have no doubt that, if all of the persons interested in the estate of Cornelia A. Chase had actually appeared and submitted themselves to the jurisdiction of the court in the proceeding brought by Levi Chase, the decree would have the effect claimed for it by defendants. As in the Matter of the Estate of De Leon, 102 Cal. 537, 36 Pac. 864, the facts stated in the petition filed in the superior court were such as to entitle the petition to be treated as an ordinary complaint in equity, and the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of an action in equity to determine the title to real property in the county, and of such parties as personally appeared and submitted themselves to its jurisdiction, as well as of such parties as were regularly brought within its jurisdiction by service of process in the manner and form prescribed by such actions. See Estate of De Leon, supra. But, in view of what we have heretofore said, this cannot avail here, as neither any legal representative of the deceased Cornelia A. Chase nor all of her heirs were shown to have appeared, or to have been so served with process. And we are therefore bound to consider the decree relied on solely as one given in the special proceeding provided by section 1723, Code of Civil Procedure, and to give to it, in the event that the proceedings had were all in strict accord with the requirement of the section, only such effect as upon a proper construction of the section, must be given to a decree made under its provisions.

It was squarely decided by Department 2 of this court, in the case of Hansen v. Union Savings Bank, 148 Cal. 157, 82 Pac. 768, that the proceeding provided by section 1723, Code of Civil Procedure, was only intended as a proceeding to have it determined that a certain person is dead, upon whose death the asserted right of another person depends, and not one to have the validity of the right conclusively adjudicated. The court further said: "The decree in the proceeding merely determines that, if the party petitioning has any asserted right or title accruing on the death of another person, such asserted right or title has accrued," and also: "Of course, it is often convenient and important to those interested in or examining a title to have some record evidence of the death of a life tenant, a homestead claimant, or other person upon whose death some right or estate vests."

It is urged that what was here said as to the construction of the section and the effect of the decree was mere dictum, but clearly this is not so. It was one of two grounds upon which the court held that a decree given under this section, adjudicating the validity of a homestead right asserted by the petitioner to have existed as to the lands involved at the time of the death of her husband, did not establish the validity of the asserted right, and that a court in a subsequent action to quiet title was free to pass upon the question of the validity of the alleged homestead right, and declare it invalid, which it did. The first ground was, it is true, that proper notice had not been given of the hearing of the petition presented under section 1723, Code of Civil Procedure, and that the court therein had therefore not acquired jurisdiction to make the decree. The second ground was, assuming proper notice to have been given, the ground we first stated. There is no more reason for saying that what was said therein as to the first ground constitutes the real decision, and that what was said as to the second was mere dictum, than there is for saying that what was said as to the second ground is the vital part, and what was said as to the first obiter dictum. While it is not "necessary" to the decision of a question by an appellate court that there should be more than one good ground or reason, there may be more than one, and, where the court bases its decision on two or more distinct grounds, each ground so specified is, as much as any of the others, one of the grounds, a ruling upon questions involved in the case, and not "mere dictum."

To hold here in accord with the contention of defendants as to the conclusive effect of the decree on the question of the validity of the asserted right would be, therefore, to repudiate the doctrine of Hansen v. Union Savings Bank, supra, on that question for there is no material distinction in this regard between an asserted homestead right and an asserted community property right. This, of course, the court in bank would not hesitate to do if satisfied that the doctrine was wrong and that property rights had not been acquired in reliance on the former decision which could be affected by the repudiation thereof. We are, however, not satisfied that the views expressed in this decision as to the proper construction of section 1723, Code of Civil Procedure, are erroneous. It is true that the question is by no means free from doubt in view of some of the language used; but the construction adopted is not necessarily inconsistent with the language used, and, when we consider the method of procedure provided, appears much more reasonable. A proceeding, the decree in which would have the effect of conclusively determining that certain real property standing in the name of a deceased married woman was community property of herself and her husband at the time of her death, and not her separate property, is practically nothing more than a proceeding to quiet an alleged title of one claiming property as or under the survivor of the community against others claiming, or who may claim, the same property under the deceased wife, on the theory that it was her separate property. If it was, in fact, her separate property, it vested upon her death subject to administration, in her heirs or devisees, and if community property it vested in her surviving husband, without administration, and never constituted any part of her estate. The proceeding by or under the survivor of the community would practically be one against those who succeed to or are interested in the wife's estate, to have it determined that by reason of certain alleged facts they have no interest in the particular property described.

It is not to be supposed that the Legislature contemplated that a conclusive adjudication as to these alleged facts might be made against those claiming under the wife without such notice to them and opportunity to defend as would comply with the requirements of our federal and state Constitutions as to due process of law. Yet section 1723, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that the court may hear the petition and make the decree contemplated by its terms "after such notice by publication or otherwise, as the court may order." A publication of a notice in proper form in one issue of a local newspaper on the day before the time fixed for hearing, or a posting of such notice at the courthouse door one day before the time fixed for hearing, would apparently conform to the requirements of this section, if such was the notice prescribed by the court. We do not believe that it can seriously be claimed that such notice would constitute due process in a proceeding of the character this is claimed by defendants to be, especially as against nonresident defendants. In any action against known defendants, personal service of summons is essential under the statutes of this state whenever it can be had, and publication of summons where personal service cannot be had, and where it is sought to obtain jurisdiction as to a defendant residing out of the state or absent therefrom the publication must not be less than two months. In the light of these statutory requirements as to ordinary actions, it appears almost incredible that the Legislature could have contemplated that a proceeding which in its whole effect and scope would be nothing less than an ordinary action to quiet title could be had and conclusively determined upon such notice to those interested in the property as is authorized by the section. It is much more reasonable to conclude that it merely contemplated a proceeding having for its object, as said in the Hansen Case, the establishment of some record evidence "of the death of a life tenant, a homestead claimant, or other person upon whose death some right or estate vests." The importance of such evidence is as apparent in the case of the death of a wife, where there is community property, as in the other cases included in section 1723, in view of the restrictions imposed by section 172 of the Civil Code upon the husband in the matter of the conveyance of community property during the life of his wife.

As originally adopted in the year 1881, section 1723 was confined to the determination of the question of the termination of a life estate held by a deceased, which life estate terminated by reason of his death. The section then provided, as it does now, that, if on the hearing it shall appear "that such life estate of such deceased person absolutely terminated by reason of his death, the court shall make a decree to that effect," and contained a provision as to the filing of a certified copy of the decree in the office of the county recorder, and that the same shall thereafter "have the same effect as a final decree of distribution so recorded." It was held, in the Matter of Tracey, 136 Cal. 390, 69 Pac. 20, that under the provisions relating to life estates a court had no power "to declare in whom upon termination of a life estate title is vested absolutely," and that it was empowered simply to make a decree that such life estate of a deceased person has absolutely terminated. As to such a case, it may very reasonably be said that the only thing intended to be determined was the fact of death of the owner of such life estate, so that some record evidence might exist of a death upon which the rights of other parties depended, and that it was not intended to provide thereby for a conclusive adjudication of the question whether the deceased had only such a life estate in the property. The provision as to the effect of the decree means no more, of course, than that it shall have such effect simply in regard to the matters intended to be determined by the proceedings. The provisions as to the contents of the petition and the findings of the court thereon may be accounted for on the theory that it was intended that the petitioner must allege and establish such an interest in the matter as would give him a right to have the fact of death established of record. The provisions as to homestead and community property were inserted by amendment in the year 1897, and it is not unreasonable to assume that they were intended solely for the same purpose as the provision in regard to life estates.

As we have said, the question as to the true meaning of section 1723, Code of Civil Procedure, is not free from doubt, and were it a new question in this court a different conclusion might reasonably be reached. But we consider it one definitely determined by a prior decision, and are not satisfied that the doctrine established thereby is erroneous.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur. Considered by itself, section 1723 of the Code of Civil Procedure would seem to demand the construction contended for by the respondents. But that construction, in my opinion, would bring it in conflict with the Constitution, and therefore I think we are bound to confine its operation within the more restricted limits indicated by our former rulings.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. In denying the petition for modification of the judgment, it is proper to say that the question whether the decree had in the proceeding under section 1723, Code of Civil Procedure, is conclusive against such of the persons interested in the estate of Cornelia A. Chase, deceased, as actually appeared in that proceeding and submitted themselves to the jurisdiction of the court, while not conclusive against other persons interested who did not appear, has not been argued by counsel for any party, or considered by the court. There is nothing in the opinion that can be taken as foreclosing this question in future proceedings in this cause.

The petition for a modification of the opinion is denied.

159 Cal. 623

SHAW v. TOWN OF SEBASTOPOL et al.
(S. F. 5,394.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 4, 1911.
Rehearing Denied May 4, 1911.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§§ 118, 119*) —SURFACE WATER—OBSTRUCTION.

An owner of land over which surface water is accustomed to flow may not obstruct the flow to the injury of the owner of the land from which it comes, and the owner of the upper land may not change the flow of the water, to the injury of the lower land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 128-134; Dec. Dig. §§ 118, 119.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 835*)—OBSTRUCTING SURFACE WATER—LIABILITY.

A municipal corporation may not collect surface water and discharge it on private premises to the injury thereof, and, where it by repairing a street alters the natural conditions and discharges on the land of an individual a larger volume of water than would naturally flow there, he may enjoin the continuance thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1785; Dec. Dig. § 835.*]

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 150*)—DISCHARGE OF SURFACE WATER—ACQUISITION OF RIGHTS—PRESCRIPTION.

One may not acquire by prescription any right to divert from his land surface water, and discharge it on a public road.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 153; Dec. Dig. § 150.*]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 846*)—ALTERING CONDITIONS IN STREETS—CHANGE OF FLOW OF SURFACE WATER—LIABILITY—EVIDENCE.

In a suit to restrain a city from improving a street and thereby diverting surface water and discharging it on the land of an individual, evidence held to support a finding that the work done by the city did not materially increase the flow of the surface water, so that the individual could not complain.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 846.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmet Seawell, Judge.

Action by Mary Jane Shaw against the Town of Sebastopol and others. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. F. Cowan, for appellant. L. G. Scott, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. The town of Sebastopol, one of the defendants herein, was incorporated as a town of the sixth class in 1902. One of its streets is Petaluma avenue, which runs southerly from the center of the town to the corporate limits and then continues as a county road in a general southerly direction to the city of Petaluma. Prior to the incorporation of Sebastopol, Petaluma avenue had existed as "Petaluma road" for a period of many years.

The plaintiff is the owner of a tract of land lying on the easterly line of Petaluma avenue and extending along said avenue, within the town limits, for about 800 feet northerly from the southerly boundary of the city. Shortly prior to the commencement of this action, Petaluma avenue was improved by a macadam pavement. The plaintiff, contending that the effect of this work, if carried to completion according to the plans made therefor, would cause a large quantity of surface waters to be collected and discharged upon her land, brought this action against the town, its trustees, and the contractor who had charge of the work to obtain an injunction restraining the defendants from maintaining a culvert constructed across the road, or from filling up, or closing a trench and conduit by means of which the plaintiff had theretofore diverted water from her land. The defendants had judgment, and from this judgment, as well as from an order denying a motion for new trial, the plaintiff appeals.

[1] There is no substantial difference between the parties regarding the law governing the case. It is the well-settled law of this state that the owner of land over which surface water is accustomed to flow may not obstruct such flow to the injury of the owner of the land from which it comes, and that the owner of the upper land has not the right to change the flow of the water to the injury of the lower owner. Ogburn v. Connor, 46 Cal. 346, 13 Am. Rep. 213; Cushing v. Pires, 124 Cal. 663, 57 Pac. 572.

[2] A municipal corporation has no more right than has an individual to collect surface water and precipitate it upon private premises to the injury of the owner. Stanford v. San Francisco, 111 Cal. 198, 43 Pac. 605. If, then, the effect of the repairing of Petaluma avenue was to alter the natural conditions and discharge upon the land of the plaintiff a larger volume of water than would naturally have flowed there, the plaintiff is in a position to complain of the injury so done and to enjoin its continuance. (We are assuming in this discussion that the work was, in effect, done by or for the city.) But, while the complaint states a cause of action for an injunction under this theory, the court has found a state of facts contrary to the plaintiff's allegations. For over 20 years there has been across the road, at a point near plaintiff's house, a culvert which carried the water from the westerly side of the road to the easterly side adjoining plaintiff's premises. In 1904 the Petaluma and Santa Rosa Railway Company, acting under a franchise from the city, constructed an electric railroad along Petaluma avenue. By agreement with the plaintiff it constructed its road along the easterly line of said avenue instead of the center thereof, encroaching in part upon the land of plaintiff. One of the terms of the agreement between plaintiff and the railway company was that the latter should construct a ditch and conduit from the mouth of the aforesaid culvert northerly along the line of plaintiff's property in order to carry away the water which would go through the culvert. The plaintiff had theretofore maintained a ditch for the same purpose. The work was accordingly done, and the water so crossing from the westerly to the easterly side was carried northerly for a distance of some 800 feet, and was there discharged, a large quantity thereof flowing onto Petaluma avenue. In the paving of the street, the west end of the culvert was extended to, and perhaps somewhat beyond, the property line on that side. The defendants were about to fill up or cut through the ditch theretofore constructed by the railroad company along plaintiff's land to permit the water going through the culvert to flow onto plaintiff's land instead of following the course of such ditch.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

To the extent of the foregoing statement, the facts are not in any material degree disputed. The court, however, made further findings that the changes in the construction of the culvert did not cause it to take or discharge more water than it had theretofore taken and discharged; that the grading and macadamizing of Petaluma avenue did not change the flow of water on said avenue or the land adjoining the same, and did not cause more water at any time to flow over the land of plaintiff than flowed over her land before the said grading and macadamizing was done; that all of the water flowing prior to said grading and macadamizing found its way to said culvert; that the ditch and conduit running along the easterly line of the road northerly from the mouth of the culvert is in the sidewalk laid between the roadbed of the railroad company and the lands of the plaintiff except a small portion thereof; that there is no ancient waterway or natural water course along Petaluma avenue except through said culvert; that the waterways that have heretofore existed in and along said avenue as claimed by said plaintiff, are temporary and artificial, and that the natural course of all of the water which passes through the culvert in question is onto and across plaintiff's land to a lagoon which is a tributary of the Russian river.

If these findings correctly state the facts, the plaintiff clearly has no cause of complaint. The court has found that the culvert takes no more water than would naturally cross the road at the point where the culvert is situated, and that all of such water would, in the absence of any obstruction or improvement, naturally flow onto and across plaintiff's land in the same course which it will follow if the ditch constructed by the railway company be closed.

[3] It is not claimed, nor can it be, that the plaintiff has acquired by prescription any right to divert from her land water which would naturally flow there, and to discharge it upon the public road. Indeed, no such right can be acquired in property set apart for public use. People v. Kerber, 152 Cal. 731, 93 Pac. 878, 125 Am. St. Rep. 93; Visalia v. Jacob, 65 Cal. 434, 4 Pac. 433, 52 Am. Rep. 303; Cloverdale v. Smith, 128 Cal. 230, 60 Pac. 851; Southern Pacific Co. v. Hyatt, 132 Cal. 240, 64 Pac. 272, 54 L. R. A. 522.

[4] The contention on this appeal is that the findings to the effect that the culvert does not discharge more water than naturally flowed onto plaintiff's land are contrary to the evidence. The testimony in the case is quite voluminous, and we shall not undertake to state it in detail. There is no doubt considerable testimony tending to support the plaintiff's claim that the culvert in question is the only one now remaining to conduct water from the westerly to the easterly line of the road; that originally there were two other points at which, by means of culverts or natural depressions, water crossed the road from the westerly to the easterly side and passed thence onto lands bordering the road south of the mouth of the culvert here in question. There is also ample evidence from which the court might have found that all of the water flowing on the westerly side of the road now finds its way to the culvert in question and that the volume of water discharged through this culvert is considerably in excess of the flow that naturally came there before the grading or paving was undertaken. But, as against this, there is evidence which would support the contrary conclusion. This evidence was evidently believed by the trial court and with its conclusion in determining the conflict presented to it we cannot interfere. For example, one of the witnesses for defendant testified that there is no more water now coming through the culvert than there ever was, and explained this by the further statement that Green's Hill, which lies to the south of Sebastopol and forms a part of the watershed from which the water ran down upon the road, had now, by grading, been brought "nearer to town," so that the amount of water flowing from the northerly side of said hill was less than it had formerly been. It was shown that the trend of all the land to the west of the road was towards the intake end of the culvert, and that, in the absence of any improvement, the great bulk of the water would cross at this place and run through plaintiff's land. There was also testimony to the effect that all the culverts and other waterways crossing the street at points south of the culvert of which plaintiff complains had naturally filled with sand and had carried no water for 25 years or more, and that during all this time the culvert in question had afforded the only method for carrying water from the west to the east side of the road. All of this testimony, taken together, fully warranted the finding that the work done on the road had not materially increased the flow of water through the culvert. If this be so, the plaintiff is really seeking to divert from her land the waters which would naturally flow thereon and turn them through an artificial channel back upon the road at a point north of her premises. As we have seen, she could not, by so diverting the water for any length of time, gain the right to continue to do so.

The appellant raises no points that are not sufficiently covered by what we have said.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.

159 Cal. 639

HAMMOND v. McCOLLOUGH. (L. A. 2,324, 52,998, 52,999.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 7, 1911.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 131*)—WIFE'S SEPARATE PROPERTY—PRESUMPTIONS.

Under the express terms of Civ. Code, § 164, a conveyance in writing to a married woman is presumed to vest a separate estate in her.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 478; Dec. Dig. § 131.*]

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 264*)—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to show that property left on death of a husband and wife was community property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 916; Dec. Dig. § 264.*]

3. DEEDS (§ 66*)—DELIVERY—QUESTION OF FACT.

Whether a deed was delivered is a question of fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 127, 633; Dec. Dig. § 66.*]

4. DEEDS (§ 108*)—TIME OF TAKING EFFECT—DELIVERY.

Delivery of a deed to one's husband immediately vests title in him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 294-308; Dec. Dig. § 108.*]

5. DEEDS (§ 108*)—TIME OF TAKING EFFECT—DELIVERY.

Since delivery of a deed from one spouse to another, with understanding that it is not to be recorded, but is to be destroyed on the grantee dying first, tends to fraud, the transaction will be given its strict legal effect as absolutely vesting title in the grantee, regardless of lack of fraudulent intent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 294-308; Dec. Dig. § 108.*]

6. FRAUD (§ 41*)—PLEADING.

To constitute a defense, fraud must be pleaded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 36, 37; Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

7. DEEDS (§ 178*)—RELINQUISHMENT OF RIGHTS—DECLARATIONS OF GRANTEE.

The legal effect of a conveyance from a wife to her husband is not affected by his declaring before dying that a will was unnecessary, since he had left everything to her.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 550; Dec. Dig. § 178.*]

8. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 262*)—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—PRESUMPTIONS.

Blocks of stock issued to husband and wife separately and indorsed generally by them, respectively, notes payable to the order of either, and gold found secreted in the residence after their death are presumed to constitute community property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 913, 914; Dec. Dig. § 262.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Actions by W. T. S. Hammond, Merrill A. Weir's administrator, against A. M. F. McCollough, Nancy Weir's administrator. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Valentine & Newby, for appellant. Hunsaker & Britt, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. In case numbered 52,998, W. T. S. Hammond, administrator of the estate of Merrill A. Weir, deceased, brought action against A. M. F. McCollough, administrator of the estate of Nancy A. Weir, deceased (wife of Merrill A. Weir), to quiet title to real property situated in the city of Los Angeles, claimed by plaintiff administrator to be a part of the estate of his intestate and by the defendant administrator to be a part of the estate of his intestate. In case numbered 52,999, the action was between the same parties to recover possession of certain personal property under the same contention of plaintiff and against the same answer thereto by defendant. The cases were tried together. Judgment in both passed for plaintiff and defendant appeals.

They will be considered in one opinion.

Case No. 52,998. Certain evidentiary facts and considerations are applicable to both cases, and may thus be summarized. Merrill A. and Nancy A. Weir married in Indiana when he was 22 years of age and she 18. They "started on nothing." The husband engaged actively in business and was successful. They came to San Diego, Cal., in 1892, and there resided for four or five years, when they moved to Los Angeles. They there lived together until Mr. Weir died intestate on November 14, 1905. His wife survived him but a few months, and died also intestate on the 7th of March, 1906. Thus their marriage relationship had existed for over 50 years. During this long period they had acquired property, real and personal, of much value. It does not appear that either succeeded to any property by gift, devise, or descent, and, presumptively, therefore, all their property was community property. They died childless. Mr. Weir transacted all business, and, except in the particulars hereinafter to be considered, retained title, dominion, ownership, and control over all the property. Mrs. Weir was quite ignorant of business, and transacted none except as hereinafter noted. The whole controversy between the representatives of the estates of the husband and of the wife arises over the fact that during their lifetime they formulated a plan and attempted to put it in operation whereby upon the death of either the other should succeed to all of the property without probate. Their effort was the not uncommon one of attempting to avoid the delay and expense of probate by the execution of papers, the one to the other, which were either to be destroyed or placed of record, according as the one or the other should happen to die first. Such attempts are sometimes successful by the suppression of one form of evidence and the destruction of another. The law never favors them; nor can it do so since they are in the nature of a fraud upon it which may and sometimes does lead to great wrong. When such transactions are brought to light and subjected to the dissecting knife and probe of the law, the transactions themselves must stand or fall, not in accordance with the intention of the parties, not in contemplation of the innocence of their purpose, but solely in consideration of what by their acts they legally accomplished.

The land which is in controversy in the case under consideration was purchased from Rachel Elliott who made her deed on September 14, 1901, to Nancy A. Weir, the wife. This deed was placed of record, and at the time of the husband's death, and later, at the time of the wife's death, the record title remained in the latter. On this land in the following year a dwelling house was erected, and this dwelling house was the home of the Weirs until their death. The court found relative to this property that it was community property; that the title to it was taken in the name of the wife with the intent on the part of herself and husband that it should be and remain community property; and that previous to the death of the husband, namely, on the 21st day of June, 1905, the wife executed and delivered her deed of grant to the husband of the premises, conveying to him the land in controversy.

[1] Appellant insists that under section 164 of the Civil Code here was a conveyance to the wife of property by an instrument in writing; that the presumption is therefore that title to this property vested in her as her separate property. This is quite true. It is further argued that if it be shown, or if it is admitted, that the property was paid for out of the community funds, there must follow the added presumption to support the presumption of separate property, that the husband intended it as a gift. Alferitz v. Arrivillaga, 143 Cal. 646, 77 Pac. 657. The evidence touching the purchase establishes clearly that the property was purchased and paid for out of community funds, that it was purchased for and used as the family home, and that there was no surrender of exclusive possession to the wife. Nilson v. Sarment, 153 Cal. 524, 96 Pac. 315, 126 Am. St. Rep. 91. There was evidence in abundance showing that all business was transacted by Mr. Weir and none by his wife; that in the case of other lands, title to which stood also in the name of Mrs. Weir, the husband made the contracts for their sale, and that the wife made deeds pursuant to his contracts; that in other instances where promissory notes were taken in the name of Mrs. Weir the moneys for which the notes were given were paid over by Mr. Weir out of the community funds, and, when payments were made on the notes they were made to Mr. Weir and receipted for by him.

[2] Without further exposition of the evidence, it is sufficient to say that under the rule and doctrine of Fanning v. Green, 156 Cal. 279, 104 Pac. 308, the finding that the property was community property is fully supported. But, if any doubt could be entertained upon this, there can be none over the fact that Mrs. Weir subsequently executed to her husband a deed of this same property. It is said by appellant that, if this be so, then the property became the separate property of the husband. For this respondent does not contend, and appellant cannot be injured by the finding that it continued to be community property after the conveyance from Mrs. Weir to her husband. Respondent's position in this regard is throughout consistent. His position is that the property was community property, and, when conveyed to Mrs. Weir, continued as community property while the title stood in her name and did not change its character as community property by the transfer of that title to the husband in whom the general control over community property resides. The facts establishing the conveyance are in evidence, principally from the testimony of Miss Hammond, a daughter of a niece of Mr. Weir, who from time to time resided with the Weirs. At the time of the making of the deed she was about 20 years of age, was a student at Stanford University, and had been financially assisted by Mr. Weir in maintaining herself at that university. She testifies that she was present at a conversation between her uncle and his wife, when, taking advantage of the fact that she would remain at the Weir home, Mrs. Weir proposed to visit some friends in San Diego and to execute a deed to her husband before a Mr. Mouser (a notary public of San Diego whom the Weirs knew well) of the Westlake residence. Miss Hammond testifies: "She said to him that she was going to San Diego and execute this deed before Mr. Mouser of the Westlake residence. That was the last piece of property that was not deeded back to Mr. Weir." Mr. Mouser testifies that Mrs. Weir came to his office on June 21, 1905, to execute this deed. His notarial record establishes the execution of a deed from Nancy A. Weir to Merrill A. Weir, her husband, granting the property in controversy. Mr. Mouser testified that Mrs. Weir signed the deed in his presence, and acknowledged it, that the deed was in the handwriting of her husband, and that he "instructed her, and talked the matter over with her, that it would be necessary to deliver the deed to him in order to vest title. I further told her that, in the event of his death prior to hers, the deed need not be recorded, if delivered, and would vest the title in him, and, should he die first, that she could destroy the deed and nobody would be injured by it, and the record of the title to the property would stand in her name." Mrs. Weir, Mr. Mouser testified, left with the intention of delivering the deed to Mr. Weir, and then, if he died first, to destroy it. Upon her return from San Diego Miss Hammond testifies that Mrs. Weir said: "Uncle Merrill has the paper that I brought back from San Diego with me, and he is looking it over now, and I hope that it is all right, for it is the first time that I ever executed anything of the sort alone." Miss Hammond saw her uncle looking over the paper. He folded it up, put it in his pocket, and, in answer to Mrs. Weir's question if it was all right, said: "Nan, you did just as I told you. It is all right." Mrs. Weir told Miss Hammond that she had executed the deed, and that the paper which Mr. Weir had and was reading was that deed. The deed was not placed of record, but possession of it was retained by Mr. Weir, and it was probably placed by him in the tin box which was the receptacle of his private papers and other cherished personal effects. The deed was not found after his death, but the evidence leaves no doubt but that Mrs. Weir in furtherance of the understanding between herself and her husband took it from his papers after his death and destroyed it, thus leaving the record title to the property still in herself. The method and plan of the Weirs to avoid probate in the event that either of them should die is thus outlined in the testimony of their confidential friend Mr. Mouser: "He (Mr. Weir) said that he intended to keep control of the ownership of his property so long as he lived. He only wanted this instrument (referring to a bill of sale) so that his wife, in case that he died first, might be in condition to claim the property, and make such disposition of it as they had mutually agreed upon. He further stated in the same conversation that he did not propose to have his property in shape that, in case of her death before his, he would have to go through court and probate to get it back. He proposed to keep control of it while he lived. * * * He said that he proposed to keep it himself as long as he lived, and keep control of it and the interest of it as long as he lived. He did not propose to have to go into probate court to get back his own property."

Appellant, however, earnestly contends that there was a failure of evidence to show a delivery by Mrs. Weir to her husband of the deed with an intent to divest herself of her dominion and control over the property beyond power of recall, or immediately to vest him with title to it.

[3] Whether the delivery of an instrument has actually been made or not is a question of fact. The finding in this case is that the delivery was so made. If that finding receives substantial support from the evidence, our inquiry here is at an end. What that evidence does disclose, epitomized, is this: That Mrs. Weir took a deed drawn by her husband to the property in question from herself, as grantor, to him, as grantee, and went to an intimate friend, a notary in San Diego, for the purpose of acknowledging it before him. She did acknowledge it, and she was instructed by the notary that, in order to vest title in her husband, it would be necessary for her to deliver the deed to him. She was further told that the deed, if delivered, would vest title in him without the need of recordation, but if so delivered and not recorded, and her husband died first, she could destroy the deed, and "nobody would be injured by it, and the record title would stand in her name." Mrs. Weir with this knowledge comes back to her husband with the instrument and gives it to him. She desires to know if she has correctly obeyed his instructions, and is informed that she has done so. Mr. Weir retains possession of the deed, does not place it of record, and upon his death it is destroyed by his wife.

In support of the contention of non-delivery, appellant relies on Kenney v. Parks, 125 Cal. 146, 57 Pac. 772; Id., 137 Cal. 527, 70 Pac. 556, and Elliott v. Murray, 225 Ill. 107, 80 N. E. 77. In Kenney v. Parks, the court found that an intent to deliver and thus presently to vest title was absent for several reasons: (1) That both parties believed that the deeds could have no effect to transfer title until recorded; (2) that the deeds "were placed in the possession of her husband upon the understanding that they were to have effect only and upon the contingency of her death before that of her husband." In Elliott v. Murray there was a like situation. Says the Supreme Court of Illinois: "The deed was made, not with the intention that it should immediately take effect and pass title to said farm, but that it should only take effect in case he survived his wife, and, in the event that his wife should survive him, it was never to take effect, but was to be destroyed. * * * We think it clear that the parties to this deed intended it to operate as a will, and that the possession of the deed by the grantee did not have the effect to vest the title to said farm in him." In the case at bar, however, no such mistake of fact or misunderstanding of the law is disclosed.

[4] The wife was correctly informed that the delivery by her of the deed to her husband would immediately vest title to the property in him; that, if the husband should die while her deed to him remained unrecorded, she could by destroying the deed destroy all evidence of the transfer of title, and the record title to the property would thus stand in her name, and "nobody would be injured by it." It was under these circumstances that the delivery was made. It was a delivery designed to effect a present transfer of title. There is not here even shown the not uncommon mistake of supposing that by a destruction of the unrecorded instrument title would revest. It was the typical case above adverted to whereby by the destruction of evidence, namely, the unrecorded deed, and by the suppression of other evidence, namely, by the silence of the wife, title would apparently stand of record in the wife, and, as under such circumstances an innocent purchaser would be protected, therefore, "nobody would be injured."

[5] But, as has been said, such transactions as this which are in their essence frauds upon the law, and may operate to work great wrong upon creditors and other parties in interest, when subjected to analysis before a court of law will be given only their legal force and value without consideration of the innocence of the design or the absence of an actual fraudulent intent. Kenney v. Parks rests, and must rest, for the soundness of its decision upon the elements of fraud and upon the mutual mistake of the parties whereby neither believed that even a delivered deed operated to transfer title until recordation, a mutual mistake which conclusively established the absence of an intent to create a present and a new vestiture of title. Elliott v. Murray is in conflict with our own uniform rule of decision. Thus in Mowry v. Heney, 86 Cal. 471, 25 Pac. 17, the trial court found that the intent of the grantor was that the deed should not take effect at all except in case of her death, and that in such case it should operate in lieu of a will and take effect after her death, and, further, that it was executed "to avoid an administration of her estate in the event of her death and for no other purpose," the very facts and circumstances which, to the minds of the supreme court of Illinois, established nondelivery. Yet by this court in bank it was said: "Here was an absolute deed to the property, delivered to the grantee. Its legal effect was to vest in the plaintiff the title to the property, free from any conditions. The effect of the finding, if upheld, is to vary the terms of the deed and render it one upon condition, and defeat its operation by parol proof on the part of the grantor that it should have an effect different from that apparent on its face. This cannot be done. Mr. Devlin, in his work on Deeds, says: 'Whether a deed passes a title or not must be determined by its legal effect. If it has been executed and delivered, its effect is determined by its language. When so executed and delivered, its legal effect as to the passing of the title is not altered by the fact that one objection to the transaction was to save the expense and trouble of administration upon the grantor's estate after his death. And, where a grantor executed a deed for this purpose to his wife, the fact that she placed the deed after delivery where her husband, equally with herself, could have access to it, does not change its legal effect as a conveyance.' Devlin on Deeds, § 234."

In Dimmick v. Dimmick, 95 Cal. 323, 30 Pac. 547, the controversy was over the effect of a deed delivered by a husband to the wife. This court said: "Conceding he believed that, if she should die first, he could conceal or destroy the deed and thereby re-vest the title in himself, still such fact does not militate against the sufficiency of the delivery at the date of the conveyance, or destroy his clear intention to part with the title and vest the same in her." In Tyler v. Currier, 147 Cal. 31, 81 Pac. 319, the wife executed a deed in favor of her husband, the defendant, and afterwards died. The plaintiff, an heir at law of the wife, sued to have the deed annulled on the ground, among others, that it was not delivered in the lifetime of the wife. It was shown that the deed had been placed in the possession of the husband. He gave testimony that he had not recorded the deed "for fear that he might die first," and that his "idea was that if it was not recorded his wife could destroy the deed and re-vest herself with the title." Upon this evidence the plaintiff insisted, as here, that the delivery was not made with intent to pass title, but this court said: "There is no merit in this contention. The fact that respondent had the erroneous notion that if he should die before his wife, and that after his death she should get possession of the deed and destroy it, the title would revest in her, has no pertinency to the issue of the delivery of the deed."

Thus it is plain that, even if Mrs. Weir had mistakenly supposed that by the destruction of her deed to her husband after its delivery she could reinvest herself with title, nevertheless, her mistake could not be permitted to impair the legal effect of such delivery. But this case is weaker than those cited, in that it is made to appear that Mrs. Weir was not laboring under any mistake, that she was correctly informed as to the law, and thus knew that the destruction of the deed would only accomplish an apparent re-establishment in her of the title.

[6] Some consequence is attached by appellant to the declaration of a witness that in 1894 he heard a statement by Mr. Weir to Mrs. Weir to the effect "that he was transferring his property in her name in order to protect himself against the liabilities that might occur in the banks in the East." The only significance that could pertain to this testimony is that it was designed to show that the deed taken by Mrs. Weir to the property at the instance of her husband was so taken in fraud of the rights of eastern creditors. But no such defense was pleaded, and it is well settled that when fraud is relied on as an element of defense and invoked as conferring a right against the plaintiff it must be alleged. Frink v. Roe, 70 Cal. 297, 11 Pac. 820; Wetherly v. Straus, 93 Cal. 283, 28 Pac. 1045. Moreover, the deed by which

Mrs. Weir obtained title to the property here in controversy was made seven years after. This property could not have been in the mind of Mr. Weir as a part of the property which he proposed to transfer to avoid liabilities, and there being no proof in the case even that the liabilities existed, much less that they continued, there can be no possible ground for saying that Mr. Weir's business transactions years after were influenced by their suppositive existence.

[7] Reliance is placed upon certain death-bed declarations of Mr. Weir to the effect that it was unnecessary that he should make a will, that his wife had everything, and that he had given or had left everything to his wife. Suffice it to say that these were but expressions of the belief of Mr. Weir as to what he had done or accomplished and could exercise no controlling influence in determining what in fact he had or had not done or accomplished.

It is urged that the court erred in overruling defendant's objection to the admission of the notarial record of Notary Mouser, which record, it will be remembered, showed his acknowledgment to the deed by Mrs. Weir to her husband; and also that the court erred in admitting the parol evidence of Mr. Mouser touching the contents of the deed. It is not here contended, as, of course, it could not successfully be, that the evidence was not admissible to show the terms and nature of a written instrument admitted or proved to have been lost or destroyed, but it is said that there is no evidence in the record to identify the "paper" which Miss Hammond testified was handed by Mrs. Weir to her husband on her return from San Diego with the deed of conveyance. But the evidence is abundant to show that she went to San Diego with such a deed, that she executed such a deed before Mr. Mouser, that she told her (the witness) that she had executed the deed, and that that was the paper, "that" referring to the paper which she had handed to her husband which he read, approved and placed in his pocket. It is further in evidence that after the death of her husband she stated that she had destroyed her deed to him. The evidence was, therefore, clearly admissible.

[8] Case numbered 52,999. The personal property in controversy in this case consisted of stock in mining companies, water companies, industrial companies, and banks, certain bonds of the United States government, promissory notes, household furniture and moneys in bank; also $880 in gold coin found secreted in the cellar of the Weirs' residence after the death of both spouses. Of the stock some of it was issued to M. A. Weir and bore his general indorsement. Other shares were issued to Nancy A. Weir and bore her general indorsement. The promissory notes for the most part were made payable to the "order of M. A. Weir or Nancy A. Weir." The court found as to all this that it was community property. No useful purpose, we think, would be subserved by treating the items separately. Under the circumstances shown the presumption of the law is that it was community property. Fennell v. Drinkhouse, 131 Cal. 447, 63 Pac. 734, 82 Am. St. Rep. 361; Freese v. Hibernia, etc., Society, 139 Cal. 394, 73 Pac. 172; Bashore v. Parker, 146 Cal. 525, 80 Pac. 707. The facts of compelling force in support of the finding are those above adverted to; that the property was acquired by the spouses during coverture, and not by gift, devise, or descent; that Mr. Weir attended to all business and maintained to the end the absolute dominion and control of the property in all its phases; that his wife was utterly ignorant of, and unversed in business, so that she did not know the difference between a deed and a mortgage and a promissory note; that, when a promissory note would be taken in the name of Mrs. Weir as payee, the money which the note represented was community money, Mr. Weir would retain the possession of the note, would receive the money on account of it, and indorse the payments in his own hand. In January, 1903, Mr. Weir made and acknowledged before Mr. Mouser an instrument purporting to be a bill of sale to his wife of all the personal property owned by him at the date of the instrument, or which he might thereafter acquire. The circumstances attending the making of this bill of sale were testified to by Mr. Mouser, and his testimony has been previously quoted. The paper was given by Mrs. Weir to the defendant with other papers after Mr. Weir's death. There is no evidence of a delivery of the paper to Mrs. Weir in the lifetime of her husband, and there is the strongest inferential evidence that it was not delivered. This evidence is found both in the testimony of Mr. Mouser and from the fact that Mr. Weir after its execution retained full and complete dominion and control over all his personal property down to the very day of his death. It is apparent that this bill of sale was meant to aid in effectuating the plan of the Weirs whereby upon the death of either the other might succeed to all the property without probate. But it was no part of that plan that Mr. Weir should ever actually part with title, dominion and control of any of his property. It was still to remain community property and the evidences and indicia of a change of ownership were not real, but were feigned to aid the result sought to be accomplished. In the case of the land, the evidence is strong and convincing that Mrs. Weir delivered the deed which transferred the title to her husband. In the case of the personal property, it is equally strong that the husband did not deliver the bill of sale nor any part of the personal property, nor in any way surrender the full rights of dominion and control over it which as community property he was authorized to exercise. The rulings of the court in admitting and rejecting evidence were sound and without prejudice to the appellant.

The judgments and orders appealed from are therefore affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

159 Cal. 663

MOUSNIER v. SUPERIOR COURT OF ALAMEDA COUNTY et al.
(S. F. 5,849.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 7, 1911.)
PROHIBITION (§ 3*)—APPEALABLE ORDER.

Under the express provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1616, an order of court directing a payment of attorney's fees by an executor or administrator out of the estate of the decedent whose will is offered for probate is an order directing the payment of a claim against the estate, and is appealable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. §§ 4-19; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

In Bank. Application by Elise Mousnier, administratrix, for a writ of prohibition against the Superior Court of Alameda County, and F. B. Ogden, Judge thereof. Writ denied.

R. B. Tappan and E. K. Taylor, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. The application for a writ of prohibition is denied. In explanation, we take this occasion to say that if the superior court should make an order directing the payment of attorney's fees incurred by the proponent of the will of Therese Berthol, payable out of the assets of the estate, it would be an order directing the payment of a claim against said estate, and, under subdivision 3 of section 963 or under section 1616 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it would be an appealable order.

The applicant has therefore an adequate remedy by appeal, and prohibition is unnecessary.

159 Cal. 193

BELL et al. v. STAACKE et al. (L. A. 2,530.)
(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 9, 1911.)

1. CONTINUANCE (§ 1*)—SEVERAL DEFENDANTS—CONTINUANCE AS TO PART.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 579, providing that, in an action against several defendants, the court may render judgment against one or more of them, leaving the action to proceed against the others, the court may continue the hearing of an accounting by the foreman of a ranch who made no claim of title or ownership to the land in an action to dispossess persons in possession of the land, and may proceed with the case against the other defendants.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Continuance, Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 415*)—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—SEVERAL DEFENDANTS—NOTICE OF APPEAL.

In an action to dispossess persons occupying a ranch, the foreman of the ranch, against whom an accounting was asked, and who made no claim of title or ownership to the land, was not entitled to notice of appeal from an order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial of the issue of ownership, as under Code Civ. Proc. § 579, the court may in its discretion render judgment against one or more defendants, leaving the action to proceed against the others.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 415.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 394*)—UNDERTAKING—SEVERAL JUDGMENTS.

A single undertaking on appeal is sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the Supreme Court to review a judgment and an order denying a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 394.*]

4. WITNESSES (§ 198*)—EVIDENCE (§ 215*)—PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION.

A letter from an attorney of record in response to a motion for writ of assistance saying that he forwarded the motion to his client, with advice that there was no defense to the motion, is admissible as an admission of the attorney of record, and is not a privileged communication.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Dec. Dig. § 198; Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 754-759; Dec. Dig. § 215.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Action by John S. Bell and another against George Staacke and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, for appellants. T. Z. Blakeman, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This is an appeal by John S. Bell and his wife, Kate M. Bell, from an order made by the superior court of the county of Santa Barbara, directing the issuance of a writ of assistance to dispossess appellants of about twenty acres of land, upon which is a residence and outbuildings connected therewith. It is one phase of protracted litigation between the parties, the full history of which will be found in Bell v. Staacke, 137 Cal. 307, 70 Pac. 171; Bell v. Staacke, 141 Cal. 186, 74 Pac. 774; Bell v. Staacke, 148 Cal. 404, 83 Pac. 245; Bell v. Staacke, 151 Cal. 544, 91 Pac. 322.

Louis Jones was made a party defendant to the litigation. He was foreman in charge of the 10,000-acre ranch of which the 20 acres here in controversy is a part, and was called upon for an accounting of his stewardship. He answered, declaring the nature of his employment, that he had managed the ranch, made leases, collected rents, and expressed his willingness and desire to account. At the commencement of the first trial (Bell v. Staacke, 141 Cal. 186, 74 Pac. 774) plaintiff moved for a continuance on the ground that the defendant Louis Jones was absent, and not represented. The defendants Staacke and Teresa Bell, as administratrix, requested that the case be continued as to defendant Louis Jones, and that the trial proceed as between the other parties. The court so ordered, and this was done. The first trial resulted in a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the 10,000 acres, directing the defendants to convey the same to plaintiff's grantees free from any claim or lien of the estate of Thomas Bell. A judgment in favor of the administratrix on the cross-complaint in the sum of $51,120.15 was given against Bell personally, but it was declared not to be a lien upon the realty. Staacke and the administratrix appealed from the order denying their motion for a new trial upon all issues except those relating to the indebtedness of John S. Bell to Thomas Bell deceased; in other words, as to all issues excepting the finding that plaintiff John S. Bell was indebted to the estate of Thomas Bell in the sum of $51,120.15. On that appeal this court reversed the order denying a new trial except as to the issues relating to the indebtedness of John S. Bell to Thomas Bell. Bell v. Staacke, 141 Cal. 203, 74 Pac. 774. Upon the new trial the cross-complaint of the defendants was dismissed as to the defendant Louis Jones, and the trial of the action between the plaintiff and the defendant Jones was continued. The trial resulted in findings and decree in favor of the administratrix on her cross-complaint to the effect that a lien existed in favor of the administratrix upon the land in question for the full amount of the debt of plaintiff John S. Bell to Thomas Bell, deceased, that Staacke held the title to the land in trust, first, as security for the payment of the indebtedness; and, second, in trust for the use and benefit of John S. Bell, the plaintiff. The judgment further decreed that the defendants have and recover of the plaintiff their costs. The plaintiff appealed from the judgment and the appeal was dismissed. Bell v. Staacke, 148 Cal. 404, 83 Pac. 245. He also appealed from the order denying his motion for a new trial and the order was affirmed. Bell v. Staacke, 151 Cal. 544, 91 Pac. 322. The land in controversy was sold under the last judgment and purchased by the administratrix Teresa Bell, the respondent herein. In due course she received a commissioner's deed of conveyance. John S. Bell and Kate M. Bell, his wife, having refused to deliver possession of the land in controversy after demand properly made, or to recognize in any way the title so purchased by the administratrix, the latter finally moved for a writ of assistance, and from the order of court directing its issuance this appeal is taken.

The principal contention of the defense upon this appeal is that the judgment of the superior court of Santa Barbara county made and given upon the first trial in July, 1901, was and is a final and conclusive determination of the rights of all the parties hereto. This is based upon the argument that because of the failure to serve Louis Jones with notice of appeal from the order refusing their motion for a new trial this court was without jurisdiction to entertain the appeal and to render the judgment which, in fact, it did render in the 141 Cal., 74 Pac. Necessarily this, in turn, is founded upon the contention that Louis Jones was such an essential party to the controversy that this court could do nothing with the appeal from the order denying the new trial unless jurisdiction over him had been attained by service. But Louis Jones had been but the foreman and to that extent custodian of the property and the collector of its rents. He made no claim to any title or ownership or interest therein and stood in the position of a mere stakeholder, willing and anxious to render his account and to pay over any money found due to the person whom the court should designate. The trial as to him was continued, and properly continued, under section 579, Code Civ. Proc., which provides that in an action against several defendants the court may, in its discretion, render judgment against one or more of them, leaving the action to proceed against the others whenever a several judgment is proper. The court therefore had ample authority to do as it did—continue the hearing so far as Jones' account was concerned, and proceed to a trial of the issues between the principal parties litigant. It was not necessary, therefore, that Jones should have been served with a notice of appeal, and nothing which was decided upon the appeal could or did affect in any way any of Jones' rights.

It is next contended that defendants undertaking on the appeal reported in 141 Cal., 74 Pac., was insufficient to confer jurisdiction upon this court to entertain and decide it, in that after reciting the appeal from the judgment and from the order the single undertaking declared that appellants would pay damages awarded against them on the appeal or on a dismissal thereof, not exceeding $300. This precise point upon this precise undertaking was passed upon and decided by this court adversely to appellants' contention in Bell v. Staacke, 137 Cal. 307, 70 Pac. 171. It is in legal effect exactly the undertaking considered and held sufficient also in Granger v. Robinson, 114 Cal. 631, 46 Pac. 604, and Buchner v. Malloy, 152 Cal. 486, 92 Pac. 1029.

Mr. Thomas has been acting as attorney for plaintiffs and notice of the motion for a writ of assistance was served upon him. In response, he wrote to the attorney for the moving party (respondent herein), saying that he had "forwarded the notice to Mr. Bell at Las Alamos, with my statement that there was no defense to the motion, and suggested that perhaps the most you people wanted was them to sign a written agreement of title of the Bell estate to the land referred to in the notice. I gave this advice months ago to Mr. and Mrs. Bell." It is contended that it was error to admit in evidence at the hearing this letter. But at the hearing it was admitted that "Mr. B. F. Thomas is and for some time has been the attorney of record for the plaintiff herein." The letter was admissible in evidence as an admission of the attorney of record of the appellant made while he was such attorney. It could not be regarded as a private communication. It does not purport to be a private communication, and there is nothing in the circumstances attending its writing which would estop opposing counsel from having it admitted in evidence wherever the matter of it became pertinent.

The order appealed from is therefore affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

159 Cal. 628

SMITH v. GOETHE et al. (Sac. 1,686.)
(Supreme Court of California. April 4, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 637*)—FAILURE TO SERVE BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—EFFECT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 650, as amended in 1907 (St. 1907, c. 379), and as repealed by St. 1909, c. 657, which required service of a bill of exceptions on the adverse party after certification, an appeal will not be stricken from the record for want of such service, where it does not appear that the bill as printed in the record is incorrect, unfair, or incomplete.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2784; Dec. Dig. § 637.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1097*)—LAW OF CASE.

Decisions on appeal are binding on a subsequent appeal in the same case so far as the facts are the same.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4358-4368; Dec. Dig. § 1097.*]

3. TRUSTS (§ 89*)—RESULTING TRUSTS—EVIDENCE—WEIGHT.

Evidence in an action to establish a resulting trust held insufficient to show that notes and mortgages were purchased by defendants' predecessor before the transaction under which the trust arose, or that the predecessor did not make a loan.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 134-137; Dec. Dig. § 89.*]

4. EVIDENCE (§ 424*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY TO VARY WRITING.

The prohibition against admitting parol evidence to vary a writing applies only to controversies between parties to the instrument and those claiming under them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1966-1968; Dec. Dig. § 424.*]

5. EVIDENCE (§ 596*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—VARYING WRITING—WEIGHT.

Uncertain testimony given years after a transaction evidenced in writing should not prevail against recitals in the writing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2448; Dec. Dig. § 596.*]

6. TENANCY IN COMMON (§ 19*)—PURCHASES BY COTENANT—RIGHT TO BENEFIT.

The right of one cotenant to claim the benefit of a purchase by another depends upon his election and an offer within a reasonable time to pay his share of the purchase money.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Tenancy in Common, Cent. Dig. §§ 55-59; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

7. EVIDENCE (§ 231*) — DECLARATIONS BY GRANTOR OF PERSONALTY—ADMISSIBILITY.

An admission or declaration by the grantor of personalty, while owning it, is admissible against the successors of the parties, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1848-1853, 1870, relating to the admissibility of declarations by persons not parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 835-839, 852-859; Dec. Dig. § 231.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by S. B. Smith, administrator, against H. J. Goethe and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

A. L. Shinn and P. S. Driver, for appellant. Devlin & Devlin, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Upon the former submission of this appeal the judgment was reversed for reasons stated in an opinion which, except for some minor alterations, reads as follows:

"This is an appeal taken from a judgment within 60 days after its rendition. The transcript contains a bill of exceptions setting forth the evidence and proceedings on the trial.

"In support of his appeal the appellant assigns errors of law occurring at the trial and the insufficiency of the evidence to support the decision. This makes it necessary to consider the motion of the respondents, made to this court, to strike the bill of exceptions from the record on appeal. At the time the bill was proposed, settled and certified, the amendment of 1907 to section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure was in force. It provided that when a proposed bill of exceptions, with proposed amendments, was settled by the judge, it should be engrossed and certified 'and upon being certified must within five days thereafter be served upon the adverse party.' St. 1907, p. 715. The clause quoted was stricken from the section in the subsequent amendment of 1909. St. 1909, p. 993. But as it was in force, in 1908, when this bill was certified, it is necessary to consider the effect of the provision quoted. The bill in question was duly proposed, amendments thereto were proposed, the bill and amendments were settled, and the bill, after being engrossed, was certified by the judge. It was not thereafter served upon the respondents, and for the failure to serve it the respondents now move to have it stricken from the record and excluded from consideration in the decision of the appeal. The purpose intended to be accomplished by the requirement that the certified bill be served on the adverse party is not clearly apparent. It may have been intended to give such party a check against accidental or fraudulent alterations in the bill as printed in the transcript on appeal. Its short life indicates that it did not prove useful.

[1] "Inasmuch as no penalty is imposed by the section for a failure to make the service required, we feel justified in holding that in a case such as that now before the court, where there is no claim or suggestion that the bill, as settled and certified by the judge and printed in the transcript on appeal, is in any respect incorrect, unfair, or incomplete, the party in fault should not be visited with a punishment so severe as that of striking the bill from the record and practically defeating his appeal. The motion is denied.

"The case comes to this court for the second time. The first trial resulted in a judgment in favor of the estate of Ann Thomas. That judgment and an order denying a new trial were reversed. Smith v. Goethe, 147 Cal. 725, 82 Pac. 384. The facts are somewhat complicated, and will, in a general way, sufficiently appear from the opinion filed on the former appeal. When the case was again in the superior court, amended pleadings were filed, and a second trial was followed, as has been said, by a judgment in favor of the defendants. The present appeal is taken by plaintiff from this judgment.

"Of the amendments to the pleadings we shall say merely that the essential character of the action was not changed from that presented by the original complaint and answer. Many of the facts found on the first trial are again found (or admitted) here. The one important difference is connected with the transaction of April 5, 1900, between Frank Thomas and Curtis, Carmichael & Brand, referred to in the former opinion at page 728 of 147 Cal., page 385 of 82 Pac. That opinion describes the transaction thus: 'On April 5, 1900, for the purpose of discharging part of the indebtedness of himself and the estate of Ann Thomas, Frank Thomas borrowed from Curtis, Carmichael & Brand, a corporation, the sum of $8,400, and as security therefor executed to Brand, as trustee for said corporation, a deed absolute in form to all his interest in the said seven parcels of land, and at the same time, and as part of the same transaction, executed a written contract with Carmichael, who was acting in behalf of and for said corporation, so far as his duty under the contract was concerned.' Basing its reasoning upon the premise that the $8,400 (which was used to purchase the Cadwallader and other mortgages) was loaned by Curtis, Carmichael & Brand to Frank Thomas, the court concluded that the mortgages were, in equity, bought by Thomas, so far as they affected the property of the estate. We need not here retrace the steps by which the conclusion was reached that on the facts stated the defendants, if they purchased at the foreclosure sale with knowledge of the relations between Frank Thomas, as administrator, and Curtis, Carmichael &

Brand, took the legal title to the property of the Ann Thomas estate in trust for the estate. The opinion to which we have referred contains a careful and complete analysis of the legal status of the parties as affected by their various dealings.

"[2] Under the doctrine of the 'law of the case' the legal propositions declared on the first appeal would, so far as the facts are the same, be binding now, even if their correctness were open to question, of which there is no suggestion. But the basis upon which the entire argument of a trust relation rested was the fact that the $8,400 was loaned to Frank Thomas, and that the purchase of the Cadwallader mortgage was, therefore, made with his money. At the first trial the finding was in favor of plaintiff on this issue. On the second trial, however, the court made findings in support of defendants' denial of the averment that the money was so loaned and found that the purchase of the Cadwallader and other mortgages was made by the corporation of Curtis, Carmichael & Brand with its own funds and for its own account. It found that on April 5, 1900, Frank Thomas executed a written agreement with Carmichael, whereby Carmichael was appointed Thomas' agent for certain purposes connected with the property. This writing, which is mentioned on page 728 of 147 Cal., page 385 of 82 Pac., the former opinion, recites that Carmichael has loaned to Thomas upon certain securities the sum of $8,400. The court finds that the Cadwallader and other notes and mortgages had been purchased by Carmichael for his corporation with its moneys on March 30, 1900; that these purchases had been fully consummated before the execution of the instrument of April 5th; that 'Frank Thomas did not borrow either from said Carmichael, or the corporation of Curtis, Carmichael & Brand, directly or indirectly, the sum of $8,400, or any other sum, and that the recital in the said instrument to that effect was untrue'; that the said recital was inserted therein through and by inadvertence and mistake.

[3] "Of course, if these findings state the facts, there is an end of plaintiff's case, so far as it depends upon the theory that the purchase of the mortgages was made with the money of Frank Thomas and for his account. But the appellant contends with much vigor that the evidence wholly fails to sustain the findings. This contention, we think, must be upheld.

"At the time of the trial Frank Thomas was dead. The only witness who could testify to the facts of the transaction was Carmichael. The writing was prepared in the office of Curtis, Carmichael & Brand, and was signed by Thomas in the form in which it was presented to him. Its recitals unquestionably made out a prima facie showing in support of plaintiff's averment that the $8,400 had been loaned to Thomas. The respondents must look to Carmichael's testimony to find support for the finding to the contrary.

[4] "We may here note briefly plaintiff's claim that this testimony was incompetent under the rule prohibiting the admission of oral evidence to vary the terms of a writing. We think, however, that the case comes within at least one of the exceptions to the rule. It is well settled that the prohibition applies only to controversies between parties to the instrument, and those claiming under them. Smith v. Moynihan, 44 Cal. 53; Hussman v. Wilke, 50 Cal. 250; Dunn v. Price, 112 Cal. 46, 44 Pac. 354. If the respondents are not strangers to the contract between Frank Thomas and Carmichael, the estate of Ann Thomas certainly is such stranger. But, even though it was open to the defendants to contradict the recitals of the writing, we are satisfied that Carmichael's testimony was insufficient to raise such a substantial conflict as to put the finding of the trial court beyond the power of review here. It amounted, at most, to vague statements, in answer to leading questions put by counsel for the respondents, that the recital of a loan was a mistake. For example, there were questions and answers as follows: 'Q. I notice in this contract the statement, Mr. Carmichael, that it recites that you had loaned to Frank Thomas $8,400. Now, in view of what you have said, that statement in this contract is incorrect to that extent? Ans. Yes, sir. Q. You mean by that statement that the statement you loaned Frank Thomas $8,400 is incorrect? Ans. Well it is incorrect so far as I remember. * * * And, further: 'Q. Now, Mr. Carmichael, did you ever loan any money to the estate of Ann Thomas for the purpose of buying these mortgages from Goethe? Ans. No, sir.' (This, it will be observed, is not a statement that the money was not loaned to Frank Thomas individually.) Preceding this the witness had stated that the deed from Thomas to Brand was taken 'so as to secure us for money we had advanced and that he was owing us at the time I purchased these other mortgages' and that he had bought the mortgages for Curtis, Carmichael & Brand. Standing alone, this statement was entitled to little weight. It did not purport to recite the terms of any conversation or agreement between the witness and Thomas, but merely the conclusion or opinion of the former regarding the effect of the transaction. And that this was the meaning in the mind of the witness is shown by his later answers on redirect examination. Upon the court asking 'Was the money you paid to Goethe, was it a loan?' Carmichael replied, 'No, sir; it was not. I never considered it was.' He then went on to say that his agreement with Thomas was that 'at any time he paid me my money I was to return him all that property, all the papers. * * * Mr. Thomas told me that he was making arrangements at that time with a building and loan in San Francisco to advance him all the money that was necessary to take up all of those claims, and I agreed with him he could take them up at any time he wanted to by paying me my money and interest on it. That is about the understanding as I understood it. * * * I never intended it as a loan to Thomas.' So far as this testimony shows an agreement—a meeting of minds—it is in no way inconsistent with an agreement for a loan. Nothing really points to the contrary except Carmichael's statements that he 'understood' or 'intended' that there should be no loan. There is no intimation that Thomas 'understood' that it was not a loan. His written agreement, with its recitals, shows that he understood the contrary.

[5] "The uncertain statements of Carmichael, made years after the event under examination, should not be permitted to prevail against the formal written declaration of the parties, made at the time of the transaction and as a part of it. In re Irvine, 102 Cal. 606, 36 Pac. 1013; Moore v. Grayson, 132 Cal. 602, 64 Pac. 1074. In saying this we are not unmindful of the finding that the payment of the money was completed before the signing of the contract of April 5th. But a reading of Carmichael's testimony makes it entirely clear that the payment of the $8,400 and the contract of agency were parts of a single transaction between Thomas and Carmichael, and that the finding to the contrary has no support in the record. Add to these considerations the fact that on the first trial Carmichael had testified that he paid for the mortgages with money he loaned to Thomas, that he kept them as security for this money owed by Thomas, and took an assignment of them to himself for the purpose of getting such security, and also the far greater probability, under all the circumstances, of this arrangement than of the one found by the court, and we may well say that the case is one of an apparent, rather than a real conflict of evidence.

"The holding that the findings on this subject are not sustained by the evidence makes a new trial necessary. Of the respondents' contention that the foreclosure judgment constitutes an estoppel against the present claim of plaintiff it is enough to say that the contrary was distinctly laid down by this court in deciding the former appeal. This declaration is the law of the case.

"There is, we think, no occasion to discuss any of the points made by the appellant in attacking rulings on evidence with the exception of the one permitting oral testimony to contradict the recitals of the writing of April 5, 1900, and this has already been disposed of.

"One of plaintiff's assignments of error is the failure of the trial court to find on the issue whether the defendants had notice of the relations between Frank Thomas and Carmichael. If the finding that the $8,400 was not a loan had stood, the question of notice would be immaterial, but, if it should on another trial be found that plaintiff's claim regarding the transaction between Thomas and Carmichael was correct, a finding on the issue of notice would be highly important.

"The appellant contends that the facts alleged and found entitle him to judgment, and that this court should order such judgment in his favor, instead of directing a new trial. He bases this claim on the theory that the estate of Ann Thomas and the defendants were tenants in common of part of the property, and that the estate was entitled to share in the benefits of any purchase by its cotenants of an outstanding title or incumbrance. 'A cotenant cannot take advantage of any defect in the common title by purchasing an outstanding title or incumbrance and assert it against his companions in interest. The purchase is, notwithstanding his design to the contrary, for the common benefit of all the cotenants. The legal title acquired by him is held in trust for the others if they choose within a reasonable time to claim the benefit of the purchase by contributing or offering to contribute their proportion of the purchase money.' Freem. on Cotenancy and Partition (2d Ed.) § 154. Whether or not this rule is applicable where (as here) the cotenants acquired their interests at different times and under different instruments is a question concerning which there has been some diversity of opinion in the courts. It has, however, never been decided in this state (see Stevenson v. Boyd, 153 Cal. 630, 96 Pac. 284, 19 L. R. A. [N. S.] 525), and we prefer to leave it open, since the case at bar may be disposed of on other grounds.

[6] "As is said in the above quotation from Mr. Freeman's work, the right of one cotenant to claim the benefit of a purchase by another is conditional upon his election and tender, within a reasonable time, to pay his share of the purchase money. Mandeville v. Solomon, 39 Cal. 125; Stevenson v. Boyd, supra. The complaint alleges the making of an offer of payment by plaintiff to defendants. If we assume that this was an allegation of a tender sufficient for the purpose under discussion, the plaintiff is met by the difficulty that his allegation is denied, and that the finding of the court is against him. We find nothing in the answer which in our judgment obviated the necessity of proving a reasonably prompt tender as a condition of claiming the benefit of the purchase made by the cotenant. The appellant's contention that he is entitled to judgment on the findings cannot, therefore, prevail.

"The judgment appealed from is reversed."

Upon motion of the respondents, a rehearing was granted. One of the grounds advanced was that this court had erred in holding that the recitals in the paper signed by Frank Thomas under date of April 5, 1900, "unquestionably made out a prima facie showing in support of plaintiff's averment that the $8,400 had been loaned to Thomas." In the briefs preceding the former decision, there had been considerable discussion over the question whether these recitals were or were not conclusive against the defendants. Their effect as prima facie evidence had not been challenged. In the petition for rehearing it was, however, strenuously urged that these recitals were not evidence at all against the defendants. The rehearing was ordered for the purpose, principally, of considering this point which, if sustained, would have a decisive effect upon the appeal.

[7] The instrument of April 5th was prepared in the office of Curtis, Carmichael & Brand, the then owners of the legal title to the notes and mortgages over which this controversy arose. Such notes and mortgages (which were personal property) were afterwards transferred to the H. J. Goethe Company, one of the defendants herein. Treating the recitals as an admission or declaration by Carmichael on behalf of Curtis, Carmichael & Brand, the question is whether such declarations or admissions made by the grantor of personal property while he is the owner thereof may be given in evidence against the grantee. That such declarations are proper evidence if made by one holding the title to real estate is not questioned. Code Civ. Proc. § 1849. It is argued, however, that the rule permitting declarations to be used against a grantee of the declarant is not applicable to statements made by one holding title to personal property.

The respondents cite a number of cases in support of this distinction. But an examination of further authorities shows that the rule limiting the admissibility of such declarations to cases affecting real property has not of late been generally followed in either England or the United States. It has, indeed, been repudiated in some jurisdictions in which it had formerly been applied. With but one or two exceptions, the recent decisions supporting the respondents' contention have been rendered in the state of New York. In that jurisdiction the doctrine urged has undoubtedly received consistent recognition ever since the case of Paige v. Cagwin, 7 Hill, 361. Truax v. Slater, 86 N. Y. 630; Merkle v. Beidleman, 165 N. Y. 21, 58 N. E. 757; Flannery v. Van Tassel, 127 N. Y. 631, 27 N. E. 393. An isolated decision of the Supreme Court of the United States (Dodge v. Freedman's Sav. & Trust Co., 93 U. S. 379, 23 L. Ed. 920) follows the rule in Paige v. Cagwin, but in Fourth Nat. Bank v. Albaugh, 188 U. S. 734, 23 Sup. Ct. 450, 47 L. Ed. 673, the same court reached a conclusion which cannot easily be harmonized with the rule declared in Dodge v. Company, although the earlier case is not mentioned in the opinion. Of the cases cited by respondents from other jurisdictions only one—Shober v. Jack, 3 Mont. 351—seems to be clearly in point. That case was decided while Montana was still under the territorial form of government. The court followed the Dodge Case, deeming itself bound by the precedent established by the Supreme Court, but did so reluctantly, declaring the holding to be contrary to the weight of authority.

"The English courts and most of the American courts * * * receive without question all admissions by the vendor of personality made while title was in him." 2 Wigmore on Ev. § 1083; Ivat v. Finch, 1 Taunt. 141; Jennings v. Blocker, 25 Ala. 415, 422; Randegger v. Ehrhardt, 51 Ill. 101; King v. Wilkins, 11 Ind. 347; Forsyth v. Kreakbaum, 7 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 97; Holt v. Walker, 26 Me. 107, 45 Am. Dec. 98; Magee v. Raiguel, 64 Pa. 110; Hayward Rubber Co. v. Duncklee, 30 Vt. 29; Alger v. Andrews, 47 Vt. 238.

Some of the decisions hereinbefore cited on either side of the question are cases of declarations made by a prior holder of negotiable paper. In this class of cases a distinction is to be drawn between the effect of these declarations as against subsequent holders who have taken before and those who have taken after maturity. In the case of the former the subsequent holder takes the negotiable instrument free of equities affecting prior parties. His title is not identical with that of the first holder. Admissions of the holder are therefore not receivable against him. "But wherever the element of negotiability is wanting—as where the transfer was made after maturity—this distinction ceases; identity of title is found; and the admissions are receivable." 2 Wigmore, § 1084, and cases cited. As in the case of admissions by the owners of personality generally, admissions by holders of negotiable paper as against subsequent holders taking after maturity (as in the case at bar) are now, except in New York, generally recognized as proper to be given in evidence.

On the main question here discussed there appears to be no direct authority in this state except in two or three cases in which, a transfer of personality having been attacked as made with intent to defraud creditors, it was held that the acts or declarations of the transferor while in possession and tending to show a fraudulent intent on his part were admissible, although not brought home to the knowledge of the transferee. Landecker v. Houghtaling, 7 Cal. 391; Visher v. Webster, 8 Cal. 109, 113. See, also, Eppinger v. Scott, 112 Cal. 369, 42 Pac. 301, 44 Pac. 723, 53 Am. St. Rep. 220. It would be difficult to reconcile these decisions with a rule of exclusion as rigid as that contended for by the respondents. The subject of the admissibility of acts or declarations of persons not parties to the action is covered by various sections of the Code of Civil Procedure. (1848-1853, 1870.) Without reviewing these sections in detail, we believe that, read in their entirety, they do not require us to hold that the recitals of the instrument in question (which was admitted without objection) did not constitute evidence as against the successors in interest of the parties.

Upon the whole case, we think the former opinion was correct in its declaration that these recitals made out a prima facie showing that the $8,400 had been loaned to Thomas. We have also re-examined the record in the light of the criticisms made by respondents upon other portions of the opinion, and, with such modification as has been made in the copy hereinbefore set forth, are satisfied with the views expressed in that opinion.

The judgment is reversed.

BEATTY, C. J., does not participate in the foregoing.

(159 Cal. 610)

CORDANO v. WRIGHT et al. (SONOMA COUNTY, Intervener). (S. F. 5,205.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 3, 1911.)

1. PLEADING (§ 291*)—ADMISSIONS.

Where defendants filed an answer setting up a deed, failure of plaintiff to file an affidavit of denial as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 448, constituted an admission of the genuineness and due execution of the deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 864-879; Dec. Dig. § 291.*]

2. PLEADING (§ 291*)—ADMISSIONS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 448, providing that when a copy of a written instrument on which a defense is founded is contained in the answer, etc., the genuineness and due execution of such instrument are deemed admitted, unless plaintiff file an affidavit denying the same, etc., an admission of the due execution of a conveyance by a married woman amounts to an admission that it was acknowledged as required, though the certificate attached to the deed appears to be defective.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 864-879; Dec. Dig. § 291.*]

3. PLEADING (§ 291*)—EXECUTION—ADMISSIONS.

The effect of the failure to file an affidavit under Code Civ. Proc. § 448, is merely to admit the genuineness and due execution of the conveyance pleaded, and, notwithstanding such admission, it may be shown that the instrument was executed under undue influence and by mistake, that there was no consideration for it, or that, though absolute in form, it was in fact a mortgage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 864-879; Dec. Dig. § 291.*]

4. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 15*)—DEEDS—REQUISITES—PARTIES.

A conveyance, to be effective, must contain, not only the names of the parties, but also words indicative of an intent to transfer an interest in the property from one to another, and a deed, signed and acknowledged by persons named therein as grantors and by others, is not the deed of those not named in the body of the instrument, and hence, where a husband and wife each owned an undivided half interest in land, the wife's interest could not be transferred by her by her mere signature to a deed purporting to convey the property of the husband alone.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

5. HOMESTEAD (§ 118*)—CONVEYANCES.

Since, under Civ. Code, § 1242, as construed by the courts, neither spouse may transfer the homestead, except in the mode provided by the homestead law—that is, by a joint and concurrent execution of an instrument—where both husband and wife own the property declared on as a homestead, an instrument conveying it cannot be effective, unless by its terms it purports to convey the interest of each of the owners.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. §§ 203–209, 216, 217; Dec. Dig. § 118.*]

6. DEDICATION (§ 16*)—FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§ 63*)—FORM.

In dedication no particular formality is necessary; it is not affected by the statute of frauds, and may be made, either with or without writing, by any act of the owner indicating a clear intention to dedicate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dedication, Dec. Dig. § 16; * Frauds, Statute of, Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

7. HOMESTEAD (§ 110*)—CONVEYANCES—DEDICATION OF STREET.

A dedication of property as a public street creates an incumbrance, and, where the property is covered by a homestead, cannot be made by the husband alone.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. § 176; Dec. Dig. § 110.*]

8. DEDICATION (§ 41*)—EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTIONS.

Dedication must be made by the owner of the land, and exists only when he has manifested some intention to make the dedication; it being never presumed without evidence of unequivocal intention.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dedication, Cent. Dig. §§ 80–82; Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

9. HOMESTEAD (§ 118*)—INCUMBRANCE—EVIDENCE.

Where a husband gave a county a deed granting a strip for highway purposes over land owned by the husband and wife as a homestead, which deed on its face purported to affect the property of the husband alone, that the wife signed the deed could not be said to manifest a clear intent to subject her property to the burden of the road.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. §§ 203–209, 216, 217; Dec. Dig. § 118.*]

10. HIGHWAYS (§ 88*)—RIGHT TO USE.

A temporary deposit of part of a load of wood on the top of a hill in a road, for the purpose of enabling the teamster to bring up the remainder, and then reload the whole for further carriage, is not necessarily an invasion of the rights of the owner of the fee; such use being in furtherance of the purpose for which the public has an easement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Dec. Dig. § 88.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thos. O. Denny, Judge.

Action by G. Cordano against John Wright and others, wherein Sonoma County intervened. From the judgment, both plaintiff and defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

T. J. Butts, W. F. Cowan, and James W. Oates, for appellants. Clarence F. Lea, Dist. Atty., and Geo. W. Hayes, Asst. Dist. Atty., for respondent.

SLOSS, J. This action was commenced by G. Cordano against John Wright and four others to recover damages for trespasses alleged to have been committed on plaintiff's land, and to enjoin the defendants from entering upon said land and committing further trespasses thereon. The allegation is that the defendants erected wire fences on the northerly and southerly sides of a 60-foot strip running over plaintiff's land from east to west. The defendants answered, denying the allegations of damage, and alleging as an affirmative defense that the strip described in the complaint was and for many years had been a public highway of Sonoma county. They further averred that, on August 16, 1879, John McDonald and Catherine McDonald were the owners in fee of the tract of land now owned by plaintiff, and that on said day they made and executed a deed conveying said 60-foot strip to the county of Sonoma as and for a public highway. A copy of the deed is attached to the answer. Answering an allegation of the complaint that they had torn down gates maintained by plaintiff across said strip, the defendants justified the removal of said gates by virtue of an order of the board of supervisors, authorizing such removal.

The plaintiff did not file any affidavit, denying the genuineness and due execution of the deed set up in the answer. Code Civ. Proc. § 448.

After the issues had been thus framed as between the plaintiff and the defendants, the county of Sonoma filed a complaint in intervention in which it averred that the said strip of land constituted a public highway, and relied, among other things, upon the conveyance by John and Catherine McDonald which had been set up by the defendants in their answer. A copy of said conveyance was made a part of the complaint in intervention. The plaintiff filed a verified answer, denying the execution of the deed, averring that at the date of said alleged deed the property was the separate property of Catherine McDonald, and denying that the public had ever used said strip of land 60 feet in width, or had used for purposes of travel across plaintiff's land any road exceeding 15 feet in width.

The court found: "That on the 16th day of August, 1879, John McDonald and Catherine McDonald, the predecessors in interest of the plaintiff in said premises, and who were then and there the owners of said premises, dedicated by a good and sufficient instrument in writing to the county of Sonoma, state of California, which instrument was duly executed, acknowledged, delivered, and accepted a strip of land over the said premises now so owned by the plaintiff 60 feet wide, * * * for highway purposes; that the said instrument was entitled to be recorded and was duly recorded on the 8th day of October, 1879; * * * that said

Sonoma county immediately accepted such dedication and used the same henceforth and up to the present time as and for a public highway. * * * That the said strip has been used continuously by said county and the public for such highway uses and purposes from the making of said dedication to the present time, under said instrument, and by and with the knowledge and acquiescence of said McDonalds, and each and every successor in interest to them, down to the commencement of this action, including the plaintiff herein."

Upon these and other findings the court gave judgment, decreeing that the strip of land which had been fenced by the defendants, with the exception of a length of about two chains at the westerly end thereof, is a public road; that the plaintiff be enjoined from maintaining gates across said road; that the defendants be enjoined from using the aforesaid westerly end of the strip, and that plaintiff recover from the defendants the sum of $200 as damages for injuries to his trees, vines, and hay. From this judgment, both the plaintiff and the defendants appeal; the appeal of the defendants being limited to that part of the judgment which allows a recovery of $200 against them.

The principal point arises upon the plaintiff's attack on the findings above quoted that John and Catherine McDonald, owners of the land, dedicated the strip in question as a highway by a good and sufficient instrument in writing, executed and delivered to and accepted by the county of Sonoma.

It was shown that John and Catherine were husband and wife. Prior to the execution of the deed in question, they had made, acknowledged, and recorded a declaration of homestead covering the property described in the complaint. The deed set up by the defendants and by the county of Sonoma, as set forth in the respective pleadings, appears to be signed by both John and Catherine, and has attached to it a certificate of acknowledgment in the following form: "State of California, County of Sonoma--ss.: On this 16th day of August in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-nine, before me, Thos. McQuiston, a Justice of the Peace in and for said county of Sonoma, personally appeared John McDonald, Catherine McDonald, known to me to be the persons whose names are subscribed to the within instrument, and acknowledged to me that he executed the same. In witness whereof," etc. Under the provisions of sections 1093, 1186, and 1191 of the Civil Code, as they read at the date of this instrument, no estate in real property of a married woman passed by any grant, unless the grant or instrument was acknowledged by her after an examination, without the hearing of her husband. Joseph v. Dougherty, 60 Cal. 358; Tolman v. Smith, 74 Cal. 345, 16 Pac. 189; Bollinger v. Manning, 79 Cal. 7, 21 Pac. 375. A form of certificate of acknowledgment showing such separate examination was prescribed. Civ. Code, § 1191. The certificate above quoted fails to comply with these requirements.

No proof of the execution of the instrument, other than such as was afforded by its production, was offered by either the defendants or the intervener. If the execution of the instrument by Catherine McDonald was in issue, there was, therefore, no evidence to sustain the finding of the court that it had been executed, or that it had been so acknowledged as to be entitled to record.

[1] It appears, however, as above stated, that, after the defendants had filed their answer setting up the conveyance, the plaintiff failed to file an affidavit of denial as provided by section 448 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The result of such failure was to admit the genuineness and due execution of the instrument. This does not apply to the averments concerning the deed contained in the complaint in intervention; these averments being denied by an answer under oath. As to such intervener, it must be held that the findings of the execution and record of the deed are unsustained by the evidence, and that the judgment in favor of the intervener, in so far as it depends upon such findings, cannot stand.

[2] So far, however, as the defendants are concerned, the plaintiff must be treated as having admitted the genuineness and due execution of the deed. During the time when the law required a special form of acknowledgment as one of the elements necessary to a conveyance by a married woman of an interest in her real property, such acknowledgment was treated by this court as a part of the execution of her conveyance. Wedel v. Herman, 59 Cal. 507; Joseph v. Dougherty, 60 Cal. 358; Danglarde v. Elias, 80 Cal. 65, 22 Pac. 69. If the acknowledgment was in fact made as required by the statute, the certificate of the officer was not necessary to the validity of the deed. Banbury v. Arnold, 91 Cal. 606, 27 Pac. 934. An averment that a married woman executed the instrument was therefore a sufficient averment that she acknowledged the execution as required. Joseph v. Dougherty, supra. Upon the same reasoning it must be held that an admission, under section 448 of the Code of Civil Procedure, of the due execution of a conveyance by a married woman amounts to an admission that it was acknowledged as required, and this, notwithstanding the fact that the certificate attached to the deed appears to be defective. In support of the admission of the pleadings, it must be presumed that there was some further acknowledgment than that recited in the certificate.

[3] But the effect of the failure to file an affidavit under section 448 is merely to admit the genuineness and the due execution of the instrument. Notwithstanding such admission, it may be shown that the instrument was executed under undue influence and by mistake (Moore v. Copp, 119 Cal. 429, 51 Pac. 630), or that there was no consideration for it (Brooks v. Johnson, 122 Cal. 569, 55 Pac. 423), or that the transfer, although absolute in form, was in fact a mortgage, Clarke v. Fast, 128 Cal. 422, 61 Pac. 72. "The effect of an admission of the genuineness and due execution of an instrument pleaded by a defendant, and not denied, as provided by section 448 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is to avoid the necessity of proof of its genuineness and due execution, and nothing more; and whether it is proven or its due execution is admitted, its terms and legal effect are to be determined by an inspection of the instrument. It stands as an exponent of the facts therein set out, to be construed by the court, and the conclusions of law are to be deduced therefrom." Carpenter v. Shinnors, 108 Cal. 359, 362, 41 Pac. 473, 474.

It is therefore still open to the plaintiff to claim that, for any cause not going to the question of genuineness or due execution, the instrument was ineffectual to convey any interest. Two such grounds are here urged. First, it is claimed that the deed on its face does not purport to transfer or bind any interest of Catherine McDonald. The further contention is made that the description of the strip of land purporting to be granted as a highway is so indefinite that it is impossible to locate the same upon the ground.

[4] We think the first of these contentions is well founded. The deed reads as follows:

"This indenture made the 16th day of August, A. D. 1879, by John McDonald, of the first part, and the county of Sonoma, state of California, of the second part, witnesseth:

"That the said party of the first part, for and in consideration of the sum of two hundred dollars to me in hand paid by the said party of the second part, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, for their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, has covenanted and granted, and by these presents do covenant and grant, with and unto the said party of the second part, that from and after the date of these presents the said party, of the second part shall, without let, hindrance or molestation by said party of the first part, perpetually to have, use and enjoy as, and for a public road, and highway of said county and for that purpose to be laid out and opened by said party of the second part, and that it shall be lawful for the inhabitants of said county and all other persons at any time therein being from time to time, and at all times hereafter, and for all purposes to go, return, pass and repass, * * * and in any manner otherwise used as and for a public way:

"All that certain piece and belt of land (here follows the description).

"In witness whereof, the said party of the first part has hereunto set his hand and seal the day and year first above written."

Following these words appear the names of John McDonald, Winfield S. Jones, C. Q. McCoy, and Catherine McDonald, and attached is the certificate of acknowledgment hereinabove quoted, and a second certificate, witnessing the acknowledgment of Winfield S. Jones and C. Q. McCoy. In the body of the deed the name of Catherine McDonald does not appear as a grantor. The only grantor named is John McDonald, and the instrument purports to be a grant from him alone. The only connection of Catherine McDonald with the instrument appears from the fact of her signature and the certificate showing an acknowledgment by her. But this certificate declares merely that John and Catherine McDonald acknowledged that "he executed the same." The clear weight of authority is to the effect that a deed signed and acknowledged by persons named therein as grantors, and by others as well, is not the deed of those not named in the body of the instrument. 13 Cyc. p. 621; Agricultural Bank v. Rice, 4 How. 225, 11 L. Ed. 949; Batchelor v. Brereton, 112 U. S. 396, 5 Sup. Ct. 150, 28 L. Ed. 743; Adams v. Medsker, 25 W. Va. 127; Harrison v. Simons, 55 Ala. 510; Gaston v. Weir, 84 Ala. 193, 4 South. 258; Johnson v. Goff, 116 Ala. 648, 22 South. 995; Penbody v. Hewitt, 52 Me. 33, 83 Am. Dec. 486; Cox v. Wells, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 410, 43 Am. Dec. 98; Catlin v. Ware, 9 Mass. 218, 6 Am. Dec. 56; Lufkin v. Curtis, 13 Mass. 223; Merrill v. Nelson, 18 Minn. 366 (Gil. 335); Stone v. Sledge, 87 Tex. 49, 26 S. W. 1068, 47 Am. St. Rep. 65; McFarland v. Febiger's Heirs, 7 Ohio, 194, pt. 1, 28 Am. Dec. 632; Bankston v. Crabtree Min. Co., 95 Ky. 455, 25 S. W. 1105.

The rule is supported by reason, as well as authority. A conveyance to be effective must contain not only the names of the parties, but also words indicative of an intent to transfer an interest in the described property from one to another. A deed which declares that A. thereby grants certain property to B. is the deed of A. alone. If, in addition to the signature of A., there is affixed that of C., C. does not thereby bind himself to anything more than is declared on the face of the instrument, which is that A. transfers his interest. As was said in Batchelor v. Brereton, supra, referring to the holding in Agricultural Bank v. Rice, supra, "in order to convey by grant, the party passing the right must be the grantor, and use apt and proper words to convey to the grantee."

These views are not inconsistent with the decisions in Ingoldsby v. Juan, 12 Cal. 564, and Dentzel v. Waldie, 30 Cal. 138. In the first of these cases it was held that, under a statute providing that the separate property of a married woman might be conveyed by an instrument in writing signed by the husband and wife, a deed purporting to convey the wife's interest, and properly signed and acknowledged by her, was sufficiently executed, if signed and acknowledged also by the husband, although the name of the latter was not mentioned in the body of the deed as grantor or otherwise. In Dentzel v. Waldie, supra, the holding was similar. In each of these cases the wife was the sole owner of the property sought to be conveyed. The husband had no interest therein, and his concurrence in the instrument was required merely "as a precaution against imposition, or to afford her his protection, or similar reasons of policy, or to evidence his renunciation of the right to manage or control it." Ingoldsby v. Juan, supra. No words purporting to convey his estate were required, because he was conveying no estate. Here, however, the question is a different one. On the findings of the court, which declared that John and Catherine McDonald were the owners of the property, an undivided one-half interest belonged to Catherine, and the question is whether this interest could be transferred by her by her mere signature to an instrument purporting to convey the property of John alone. On the authorities above quoted, this question must be answered in the negative.

[5] If we look beyond the findings to the evidence, the reasons for this view become even stronger. As has been stated, a homestead had been declared upon this property by John and Catherine McDonald. The husband and wife thereby acquired a common interest in the property, an interest which was, during the life of both, somewhat akin to a joint tenancy of husband and wife (Civ. Code, § 1265; Barber v. Babel, 36 Cal. 14; Burkett v. Burkett, 78 Cal. 310, 20 Pac. 715, 3 L. R. A. 781, 12 Am. St. Rep. 58; Gleason v. Spray, 81 Cal. 217, 22 Pac. 551, 15 Am. St. Rep. 47; Hannon v. S., P. R. R. Co., 12 Cal. App. 350, 107 Pac. 335), and after such declaration the homestead could not be conveyed or incumbered, except by an instrument executed and acknowledged by both husband and wife (Civ. Code, § 1242; Barber v. Babel, supra; Flege v. Garvey, 47 Cal. 375; Tipton v. Martin, 71 Cal. 325, 12 Pac. 244). The effect of the provisions of sections 1242 of the Civil Code, as that section has been construed by this court, is to make it impossible for either spouse to transfer or incumber the homestead, "except by the joint act of both in the mode provided by the homestead law"; that is, by means of a joint and concurrent execution of an instrument. Hart v. Church, 126 Cal. 472, 58 Pac. 910, 59 Pac. 296, 77 Am. St. Rep. 195. If the property covered by the homestead were the separate property of either of the spouses, it might, on the reasoning of Ingoldsby v. Juan, supra, be said that the requirement of the law would be complied with if the one owning the property executed a conveyance purporting to carry his or her interest, and the other spouse manifested assent to the conveyance by signing and acknowledging it. But where both husband and wife are owners of the property an instrument conveying or incumbering it cannot be effective, unless by its terms it purports to convey or incumber the interest of each of the owners.

[6] The defendants argue that, even if the instrument was ineffectual as a conveyance, it was still good as evidencing the intent of the owners of the land to dedicate a road. "In dedication no particular formality is necessary; it is not affected by the statute of frauds; it may be made, either with or without writing, by any act of the owner * * * indicating a clear intention to dedicate." Harding v. Jasper, 14 Cal. 642, 647. It may be questioned whether there can be a dedication of land selected as a homestead by a married person in any manner other than by an instrument executed and acknowledged by both spouses.

[7] A dedication of property as a public street creates an incumbrance, and, where the property is covered by a homestead, cannot be made by the husband alone. San Francisco v. Grote, 120 Cal. 59, 52 Pac. 127, 41 L. R. A. 335, 65 Am. St. Rep. 155. But we need not here decide whether this incumbrance can be created by any act short of the jointly executed and acknowledged instrument described by section 1242 of the Civil Code. The court does not find any dedication or any attempt to dedicate, other than "by a good and sufficient instrument in writing," executed by John and Catherine McDonald. That writing, as we have shown, does not purport to transfer or incumber any interest of Catherine McDonald. If it is ineffectual as a conveyance of her interest, it is not good as a dedication by her, and for the same reason, viz., that the instrument does not indicate such intent on her part.

[8] "Dedication must be made by the owner of the land, and exists only when he has manifested some intention to make the dedication. 'It is never to be presumed without evidence of unequivocal intention on the part of the owner.'" Quinn v. Anderson, 70 Cal. 456 [11 Pac. 746]. Huffman v. Hall, 102 Cal. 26, 30, 36 Pac. 417, 418.

[9] The signature by the wife to a deed, which, on its face, purports to affect the property of the husband alone, cannot be said to manifest a clear intent to subject her property to the burden of a public road.

Whether the defendants might show or have shown a state of facts estopping Catherine McDonald and her successors from denying the existence of the road as claimed is a question not now before us. The court below has not undertaken to find such estoppel, but has based its conclusion solely upon a dedication declared by the deed set up in the answer; that is to say, upon an express dedication. The same consideration furnishes an answer to the claim that the existence of the road is established by proof of user. Whatever may be the extent of a right so acquired (see People v. County of Marin, 103 Cal. 223, 231, 37 Pac. 203, 26 L. R. A. 659), the findings made limit us to a review of the evidence for the purpose of determining whether the execution and acceptance of the deed of 1879 constituted a dedication. It may, however, be remarked in this connection that the plaintiff does not question the right of the public to travel over his land upon the road that has heretofore existed. The dispute is over the claim of the county that it has a right to extend such road to a width of 60 feet.

In view of these conclusions, it will be unnecessary to consider at length the contention of the plaintiff that the description contained in the deed was insufficient to identify any property. By reason of the necessity for another trial, it may be said, briefly, that the description, read literally, certainly shows serious inaccuracies and uncertainties. As against this, however, we have the fact, admitted by stipulation of the parties, that the defendants employed a surveyor to locate the strip referred to in the deed, and that the surveyor, using the description in said deed, did locate such strip along the center of a roadway which was actually in use across plaintiff's premises, and had been so used prior to the date of the deed. In so doing he was, no doubt, compelled to vary some of the distances contained in the description by inserting decimal points where no such points appeared in the original deed. In view, however, of all the surrounding circumstances and of the fact that the deed may, without any undue stretch of construction, be interpreted as intended to describe a strip following the line of an existing road, we think that it cannot be said that the court was without justification in its conclusion that the deed described a strip of land 60 feet wide, extending 30 feet in either direction from the center line of the traveled road across plaintiff's premises.

The foregoing covers the principal points arising on plaintiff's appeal. Upon a new trial the question of the right of the plaintiff to maintain gates will be determined by the findings relative to the road. If a highway exists by dedication or abandonment to the public (Pol. Code, § 2618) the supervisors are vested with power to permit gates or to order their removal (Pol. Code, §§ 2643, 2736). If the right of the public is one derived from user alone (prior to the enactment of section 2621 of the Political Code in 1883) the right is no broader than the use. Such use over a road with gates would not authorize the removal of the gates.

[10] Concerning the plaintiff's complaint that the defendants piled wood on the road, we think a limited and temporary deposit of part of a load on the top of a hill, for the purpose of enabling a teamster to bring up the remainder, and then reload the whole for further carriage (a practice that is said to have been followed here) is not necessarily an invasion of the rights of the owner of the fee. Such use of the road is in furtherance of the purposes for which the public has an easement. If the defendants did more than this, their acts would constitute an invasion of plaintiff's rights. The facts in this regard can be determined by the trial court. The foregoing sufficiently covers the points made upon the plaintiff's appeal.

The defendants' appeal is from the parts of the judgment allowing plaintiff $200 damages. The findings apportion the damages as follows: For destroying 45 prune trees, $45; for damage by sheep to hay, $80; for damage to 150 grape vines, $75. But there are further findings that the defendants did not destroy any grape vines, but merely built a fence which inclosed such vines within the 60-foot strip, and that the defendants had no connection with the damage caused by sheep to plaintiff's hay. There seems to be, therefore, no support for these two elements of damage.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial, without costs to either party.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

153 Cal. 390

SACRAMENTO BANK et al. v. MURPHY.

(Sac. 1,738.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 20, 1910.)

1. MORTGAGES (§ 113*)—TRUSTEES—APPOINTMENT.

Under a trust deed to secure a note to a bank providing that the bank may from time to time appoint other trustees to execute the trust, it may appoint other trustees on the death of those named in the deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Dec. Dig. § 113.*]

2. MORTGAGES (§ 113*)—TRUSTEES—APPOINTMENT—ACTION TO CONFIRM.

A trust deed to secure a note to a bank having provided that the bank might from time to time appoint other trustees to execute the trust, and that on such appointment and a conveyance to the appointees by the trustees named in the deed the new trustees shall be vested with the title and powers of the old trustees, the bank having appointed new trustees after the death of the old trustees, so that a conveyance from them was impossible, it was proper to apply to the court to confirm the appointment, to obtain a decree that they were invested with the title and powers of their predecessors, and to authorize them to proceed with the execution of the trust according to its terms.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Dec. Dig. § 113.*]

3. MORTGAGES (§ 113*)—TRUSTEES—ACTION FOR APPOINTMENT—COMPLAINT.

Even if under a trust deed to secure a note to a bank providing that the bank might from time to time appoint other trustees to execute the trust, and that, on a conveyance to them by the original trustees, they shall be vested with all the title and powers of their predecessors, the bank has no power to appoint trustees on the death of those named in the deed, but such power must be exercised by the court; yet the allegation of such appointment, in a complaint setting forth the trust deed and all the facts, and praying that such appointment be ratified and adopted by the court, and that such appointees or such other trustees as the court may appoint be directed to sell, does not detract from the sufficiency of the complaint as one for appointment of trustees, in doing which the court can either select its own trustees or choose those appointed by the bank; the other facts alleged showing a case for interposition of the court under Civ. Code, §§ 2287, 2289, to appoint trustees.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Dec. Dig. § 113.*]

4. MORTGAGES (§ 113*)—TRUSTEES—ACTION TO APPOINT AND HAVE TITLE AND POWERS DECREED.

It is not necessary in case of death of the trustees named in a trust deed to bring an action to have trustees appointed, or the appointment by the beneficiary confirmed, and then a separate action to have it decreed that they were invested with all the title and powers of the original trustees; but all such matters being of equitable cognizance may properly be embraced in one action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Dec. Dig. § 113.*]

5. MORTGAGES (§ 138*)—TRUST DEED—VESTING TITLE—LIEN.

A trust deed vests the legal title to the property in the trustees for the purpose of the execution of the trust; so that it is impossible for them in their fiduciary capacity to have a lien on the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 277; Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

6. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 36*)—TRUST DEED—ACTION TO FORECLOSE.

The action by a bank whose debt is secured by a deed of trust is not rendered one for foreclosure of the deed as a mortgage, and so subject to the statute of limitations, by the complaint, which alleges the death of the original trustees, and the appointment of successors by the bank, and prays that such appointment be ratified, or other trustees be appointed, that it be adjudged that they have succeeded to the title and powers of the original trustees and that an accounting be had, also praying that the amount found due be adjudged a lien on the property, and that the trustees be directed to sell the property to pay the bank's claim, and by a decree being made as prayed; the prayer not asking, and the decree not directing, the sale of the property as in actions for foreclosure, but in the manner and in accordance with the terms of the deed of trust, and the prayer and decree for the lien, while technically incorrect, being a matter which may be disregarded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 178; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

7. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 36*)—CONSTRUCTION OF TRUST DEED.

An action being one to construe a trust deed, to have trustees appointed in place of the original trustees who have died, and to have enforcement of the deed directed according to its terms is not subject to the statute of limitations; a trust deed conveying the title to the trustees for the purpose of the trust, and it remaining there till the debt is paid or the property is sold under the trust deed for that purpose, and the power of sale to enforce the debt being enforceable, when the statute might be interposed to defeat an action on the debt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 171; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; L. W. Fulkerth, Judge.

Action by the Sacramento Bank and others against J. W. Murphy, administrator of Ellen M. Murphy, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiffs and an order denying a motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

P. H. Griffin, for appellant. A. A. De Ligne, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. On August 27, 1887, Ellen M. Murphy borrowed from the plaintiff bank $13,400, giving to it her promissory note. The note provided for the payment of the principal four years after date, or on August 27, 1891, but it was provided also therein that, if the note was not paid at maturity, the loan might be renewed from year to year at the option of the holder of the note. A trust deed in the ordinary form was given by Ellen M. Murphy to secure the payment of the note, and W. P. Coleman and E. R. Hamilton were designated in the instrument as trustees. The trust deed provided as to trustees that "it is expressly covenanted that the party of the third part (the bank) may by resolution of its board of directors from time to time appoint other trustee or trustees to execute the trust hereby created; and upon such appointment and a conveyance to them by the parties of the second part, the survivor of them, their successors or assigns, the new trustees shall be vested with all the title, interest, powers, duties and trusts in the premises hereby vested in or conferred upon the parties of the second part." Ellen M. Murphy died in 1893, and the defendant was appointed administrator of her estate. In due time thereafter, no part of the principal of the note having been paid, the bank presented its claim thereon to the administrator, and it was regularly allowed and approved by him and the judge of the superior court in which the proceedings in the estate were pending. One of the trustees appointed by the trust deed—Coleman—died in 1901, and, as the trust deed provided that the title to the trust property should vest in his successor, said trustee Hamilton thereafter solely exercised all the duties and powers of trustee. Hamilton died in 1904. By his death a vacancy in the trusteeship was created, and thereafter the bank, as was provided in the trust deed, by resolution of its board of directors, appointed the plaintiffs Gordon and Henderson to fill such vacancy.

The complaint set forth the above facts, and alleged, further, that on account of no conveyance having been made by the original trustees to those subsequently selected by the bank, as provided for in the deed of trust, a doubt had arisen as to the authority of the substituted trustees to make a valid sale of the property, the existence of which doubt would retard purchasers from bidding freely and for the full value of the property. The prayer was that the appointment by the bank of the plaintiffs Gordon and Henderson, as trustees in place of the original trustees, be ratified, approved, made, and adopted by the court; that it be adjudged that they had succeeded to the title and powers of the original trustees under said trust deed; that an accounting be had, and that the sum found due be adjudged a lien upon the lands described in the trust deed; and that Gordon and Henderson, as trustees, or such other trustees as the court might appoint, be directed to sell the land to pay the claims of the bank. A demurrer to the complaint was overruled, and defendant answered, interposing as a sole defense to the action the plea of the statute of limitations. Plaintiffs were awarded a decree in terms as prayed for, and defendant appeals from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial.

It is insisted that the complaint stated no cause of action, and that the demurrer thereto should have been sustained. The principal claim in this regard is that, before the action could be maintained, it was necessary that the plaintiff bank should have applied to the superior court and obtained an order appointing trustees in place of the original trustees who had died; that the bank had no power by a resolution of its board of directors to substitute trustees under the terms of the original deed of trust.

We do not think this point well taken. By reference to the provisions of the trust deed heretofore quoted, general power was given the board of directors of the bank to substitute at any time other trustees for those specially named in the deed of trust. The original trustees having died, and hence a conveyance from them impossible, it was eminently proper to apply to the superior court having jurisdiction in such matters, to confirm the appointment of the trustees selected, to obtain a decree that they were invested as successors to the original trustees of all the title in the trust property, and clothed with all the powers conferred on their predecessors, and to authorize them to proceed with the execution of the trust in conformity to its terms. That the superior court had such power cannot be questioned.

But if it be conceded that the bank had no power to appoint the trustees selected by it, but that such power must be exercised by the court, still the demurrer did not lie. The complaint set forth the trust deed in full, alleged the death of the original trustees, a vacancy in the trusteeship, and asked for the appointment of other trustees to execute the trust, and requested the appointment of Gordon and Henderson as the selection of the bank. Assuming that the bank had no right to appoint trustees, the allegation that it had, in view of all the other allegations in the complaint, did not detract from the sufficiency of that pleading. The other facts alleged show a case for the interposition of the superior court, under sections 2287 and 2289 of the Civil Code, to appoint trustees. All parties in interest were before the court, and in the exercise of that power it could either select its own trustees or choose those appointed by the bank.

It was not necessary to bring an action for the purpose of having trustees appointed or their appointment confirmed, and then a separate action to have it decreed that they were invested with all the title and powers of the original trustees to whom they were successors, and to be afforded the other relief prayed for in the complaint. All these matters, which were of equitable cognizance, could be determined in one action, and it was proper to embrace them all in the action brought and to apply for full and equitable relief, as was done.

On the merits it is insisted by appellant that while this action, on the theory of the respondents, was brought to confirm the appointment of the trustees selected by the bank and to have it decreed that the legal title to the trust property was vested in them, and that they should proceed to execute the terms of the trust, the action, in effect, was one brought to foreclose the deed of trust as a mortgage, and that, as the debt to secure which the trust deed was given was barred when the action was brought, the right to enforce the trust deed as a mortgage was also barred. This claim of appellant is based on the fact that the complaint prayed, among other things, that the amount found due the bank be adjudged a lien on the land and for a sale of the premises described in the trust deed, and the application of the proceeds to the payment of the amount due the bank and costs.

In our judgment this is a forced and unwarranted construction of the pleading and the decree of the court. The action was plainly one to confirm or appoint trustees where there was a vacancy in the trusteeship, and to establish the legal title in those trustees and authorize them to proceed to enforce the trust under the terms of the trust deed. Undoubtedly, under a trust deed legal title to the property is vested in the trustees for the purposes of the execution of the trust, and it is therefore legally impossible for such trustees in their fiduciary capacity to have a lien on the property. Weber v. McCleverty, 149 Cal. 316, 86 Pac. 706. Under a deed of trust, the land is charged with the payment of the debt, but technically the debt is not a lien upon the land. So that, when the plaintiff asked to have it decreed that the title to the trust property was vested in the substituted trustees and the court so decreed, it fully confirmed what the trust deed was intended to effect, and which it was one of the main purposes sought to have decreed in bringing the action, and while it was not technically correct for the plaintiff to ask or the court to decree, in addition, that the debt should constitute a lien on the land, yet, considering that the main and obvious purpose of the suit was to construe and enforce a trust deed, which was properly done, the additional matter of the lien may be disregarded. Certainly the fact that a lien was decreed in addition to construing the trust and providing for its enforcement according to its terms did not determine the nature of the action so as to make what is clearly an action relative to a trust deed one to foreclose such deed as a mortgage, under which the plea of the statute of limitations by the defendant may be successfully invoked. Neither does the complaint ask nor the decree direct the sale of the property, as in actions for foreclosure, but in the manner and in accordance with the terms of the deed of trust.

This claim of the defendant that the action was in foreclosure being baseless, there is no room for the plea that the debt secured by the deed of trust is barred by the statute of limitations. As the action was not to foreclose a trust deed as a mortgage, it is unimportant to determine whether the bank could toll the statute of limitations by extending payment of the note yearly, as it provided might be done, and as the court found, at the request of the administrator, the bank did; or the effect on the statute of the allowance and approval of the claim of the bank against the estate of Ellen M. Murphy, deceased.

The action having been brought to construe a trust deed and direct its enforcement according to its terms, the plea of the statute of limitations has no place. It is well settled that a trust deed conveys the title to the trustees for the purposes of the trust, and the title remains there until the debt is paid or the property sold under the trust deed for that purpose, and the power of sale to pay the debt given to the trustees may be enforced, when otherwise the statute might be interposed to defeat an action on the debt due under it. Grant v. Burr, 54 Cal. 298; Savings & Loan Society v. Burnett, 106 Cal. 528, 39 Pac. 922; Weber v. McCleverty, 149 Cal. 316, 86 Pac. 706; Travelli v. Bowman, 150 Cal. 587, 89 Pac. 347.

We have examined the other points made by appellant and deem them of no force.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

(159 Cal. 664)

In re DWYER'S ESTATE. (L. A. 2,569.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 7, 1911.)

1. WILLS (§ 484*)—TRUSTS—PROPERTY PASSING TO TRUSTEE—PROCEEDS OF REAL ESTATE SOLD IN TESTATOR'S LIFETIME.

Testatrix bequeathed to her husband, who predeceased her, the residue of her personal estate, without a remainder, and then declared that all her real estate, with certain exceptions, should be sold by her executors, and, after the payment of certain legacies charged thereon, should be paid to trustees to maintain a home. Held that, since every testator is presumed to know that his will only operates from the date of his death, such provision did not include real estate concerning which testatrix had made an enforceable contract of sale prior to her death, of which specific performance was decreed against her executors, but only the proceeds of sales of real estate which testatrix owned at her death on which the executors' power of sale could operate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 1015; Dec. Dig. § 484.*]

2. WILLS (§ 194*)—CONSTRUCTION—DEVISE—REVOCATION—STATUTES.

Civ. Code, § 1301, declares that an agreement made by testator for the sale of property disposed of by will previously made does not revoke such disposal, but the property passes by the will subject to the same remedies on the testator's agreement, for specific performance or otherwise, against the devisees or legatees as might be had against the testator's successors if the property had passed by succession. Section 1303 declares that a conveyance, settlement, or other act of a testator, by which his interest in a thing previously disposed of by his will is altered, but not wholly divested, is not a revocation; but the will passes the property which would otherwise devolve by succession. Held, that where a will created a naked power of sale in the executors to dispose of testatrix' real estate, with certain exceptions, and devote the proceeds to a particular charity, the trustees could not invoke such sections to sustain an alleged right to the proceeds of property concerning which testatrix had made an enforceable contract of sale prior to her death.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 481-489; Dec. Dig. § 194.*]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 53*)—CONTRACT OF SALE—EXECUTORY OR EXECUTED CONTRACT.

Where testatrix executed an enforceable contract for the sale of certain real estate and agreed to convey the same on a specified date on payment of a certain sum and the tender of notes secured by a mortgage for the balance, the contract, after tender of the purchase price by the vendee, was executed, so far as the ownership of the land by the vendee and the right of testatrix to the purchase price was concerned.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 84; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

4. CONVERSION (§ 12*)—EQUITABLE CONVERSION—SALE OF REAL ESTATE.

Where a contract for the sale of land binding on the parties is executed, there is an equitable conversion of realty into personalty, the purchaser being deemed the equitable owner of the land, and the seller the owner of the price; whether the conversion is absolute depending on whether the terms of the contract are subsequently complied with.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Conversion, Cent. Dig. § 17; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 54*)—CONTRACT PARTLY EXECUTED—EFFECT.

Where a purchaser under a contract for the sale of real estate has performed or offered to perform his covenants at the date provided for a conveyance, equity considers the property as belonging to him as of that date, and that the owner is a mere holder of the legal title in trust for him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 85; Dec. Dig. § 54.*]

6. TRUSTS (§ 191*)—POWERS OF SALE—EX-TENT.

A power of sale in a will, authorizing executors to sell testator's real estate, does not embrace lands sold by the testator under a contract, the purchase money remaining unpaid and the legal title in the testator, since testator's interest under such circumstances is personality and not real estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Dec. Dig. § 191.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

Judicial settlement of the estate of Lelia Bonner Dwyer, deceased. From so much of a decree of distribution as awarded to Emma J. Bonner and others, heirs of the decedent, the proceeds of a sale of a certain lot in the city of Los Angeles, the trustees of the J. M. Bonner Memorial Home appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 115 Pac. 242.

Geo. J. Leovy and Hunsaker & Britt, for appellants. A. H. Van Cott, Benjamin E. Page, and E. W. Camp, for respondents. Denis & Loewenthal, H. W. O'Melveny, and O'Melveny, Stevens & Millikin, for administrator, etc.

LORIGAN, J. This is an appeal by the trustees of the J. M. Bonner Memorial Home from so much of the decree of distribution in the above estate as awarded to Emma J. Bonner and others, the heirs at law of deceased, the proceeds of the sale of a certain lot in the city and county of Los Angeles known as the "Broadway" property.

Testatrix was a resident of and domiciled in the city of New Orleans, La., where she died in June, 1905, leaving a last will and an estate consisting of real and personal property in the states of Louisiana and California and real property in other states. Her will dated July 16, 1901, was duly admitted to probate, and letters testamentary issued at New Orleans on September 5, 1906.

The will of the testatrix, in as far as its provisions are involved here, after declaring that she had no descendants or ascendants, provided for the payment of certain special pecuniary legacies, and then further provided: "Third. I desire all my real estate, except the residence and lots situated in the square bounded by First, Second, Coliseum and Chestnut streets in the city of New Orleans, to be sold by my executors to the best advantage and after the payment of the foregoing special pecuniary legacies, which are expressly charged upon said real estate so to be sold, and are not to bear upon any other portion of my estate, I will and bequeath all the rest and residue of the proceeds of said real estate so to be sold (to certain persons named), as trustees in trust to found and maintain in New Orleans a home for aged and infirm men, to be called The John M. Bonner Memorial Home." By subsequent clause she named her husband, Alexander J. Dwyer, her universal residuary legatee, bequeathing him all property of whatever nature she might die possessed, other than that theretofore specially bequeathed, and expressly including therein the residence and lots owned by her in the square bounded by First, Second, Coliseum, and Chestnut streets in the city of New Orleans. The husband of testatrix predeceased her in April, 1904, but she made no change in her will respecting the residuary bequest to him. The administration of the estate of deceased had in Louisiana was completed, distribution made, and the estate closed there in 1906. All special legacies were paid, the J. M. Bonner Memorial Home was incorporated, and something over the sum of $126,000 was received by the trustees thereof under the administration of the estate in Louisiana. In August, 1905, the will of testatrix was admitted to probate here as a foreign will, and the only administration now pending is in this state.

At the time of making her will the testatrix owned in California, in the county of Los Angeles, certain parcels of real estate consisting of what was called the Broadway property, property known as the "Farm" and other real property near the city of Pasadena and in the city of Los Angeles of large value. The only property, however, administered on in this state, were proceeds of the sale of the Broadway property, the Farm property, and some personal effects. The other property owned by testatrix in Los Angeles county at the date her will was made was sold by her in her lifetime; she receiving full payment of the Pasadena property herself. Part of the purchase price of the other real estate (not including the proceeds of the sale of the Broadway property) had been received by testatrix in her lifetime, the balance was collected by the testamentary dative executor of her will, under the administration of her estate in Louisiana, and such proceeds from the sale of the Pasadena property and the other Los Angeles lots were distributed to the heirs at law of the deceased, under the administration of the estate in Louisiana.

At the time her will was made, as we have said, the testatrix was the owner of the Broadway property. In March, 1905, three months prior to her death, Mrs. Dwyer contracted in writing to sell this property to one J. E. Carr for $100,000, she to make a conveyance thereof to Carr on or before May 13, 1905, upon the latter making certain cash payments and executing notes and a mortgage for the balance of the purchase price. Prior to April 27, 1905, Carr tendered her the money, notes, and mortgage and demanded a conveyance of the property which Mrs. Dwyer refused to make, whereupon Carr immediately brought an action against her for specific enforcement of the contract. On June 25, 1905, while this action was pending, Mrs. Dwyer died. Carr then dismissed the first action and brought a similar suit against the administrator with the will annexed of her estate in which, on August 20, 1906, a judgment was rendered in favor of Carr for specific performance of the contract; the court determining the respective rights of the parties as of May 13, 1905, the date provided in the contract for the delivery of the deed by Mrs. Dwyer to Carr. On appeal to this court by the administrator with the will annexed, the judgment was affirmed (Carr v. Howell, 154 Cal. 372, 97 Pac. 885), whereupon said administrator made a deed to Carr; the latter making the cash payment and delivering the notes and mortgage to the administrator as the contract provided and the decree of the court required.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

In due course thereafter the administrator filed his final account, together with his petition for the distribution of the estate, asking in the latter that the court determine who were entitled thereto and to make a decree accordingly. Cross-petitions were filed by both the heirs at law of testatrix and the trustees of the J. M. Bonner Memorial Home, and as addressed to the proceeds of the sale of the Broadway property, consisting of cash and the notes and mortgage securing the deferred purchase price thereof, each asked for distribution thereof in their favor. The court distributed the entire proceeds to the heirs at law, and the trustees of the J. M. Bonner Memorial Home (hereafter to be referred to as the trustees of the Home) appeal.

The view of the superior court was that under the will of testatrix the only proceeds of her real property given to the trustees of the Home were proceeds of such real property as she owned at her death and which her executor was empowered to sell; that at her death she did not own the Broadway property, having sold it in her lifetime to Carr; that the proceeds of such sale to which she was entitled when she died were personal property which would have gone to her husband as universal residuary legatee had he lived; that, by his death prior to testatrix, such residuary legacy to him lapsed, and no disposition over on such event being provided for, and no change in her will having been subsequently made by testatrix, the heirs at law of testatrix (and respondents are conceded to be such) took all property which otherwise would have gone to the husband as residuary legatee, including the proceeds of the sale of the Broadway property.

This conclusion of the trial court appellants insist was erroneous when the intention of the testatrix as disclosed by her will and the circumstances surrounding its execution are taken into consideration; that further the court failed to correctly apply the general principles of law when a gift, such as is made to the trustees of the Home, is to be considered, and ignored certain provisions of the Civil Code of the state under which the trustees claim they were entitled to have these proceeds distributed to them.

Now as to these claims: Starting with the cardinal rule for guidance in the interpretation of wills—that the intention of the testator must be sought for and carried out—it is insisted by the trustees of the Home that the will under consideration and the circumstances surrounding its execution disclose an intention on the part of Mrs. Dwyer that the proceeds of all of the real property which she owned when her will was made (excepting of course the lots in New Orleans) should be applied to the establishment and endowment of the J. M. Bonner Memorial Home, and that the sale of the Broadway property made by her was made simply to facilitate in her lifetime the creation of the fund which she intended at her death should be devoted to the creation of the Home. It is insisted in this regard that courts look with favor on endowments for charitable or philanthropic purposes; that testatrix had a warm regard for her deceased uncle J. M. Bonner, from whom she had derived the California property, and in whose memory she desired to establish the Home; that it was only a natural and reasonable desire on her part that the proceeds of this property which she had derived from him should be devoted to that purpose; that her estate outside of California amounted to almost $500,000 a large portion of which was left to her husband as residuary legatee; that by specific legacies she had provided for these respondents who as her heirs at law are here contesting the right of the trustees to these proceeds; and that it is evident from the will that she did not intend they should have anything more than she had specifically bequeathed to them, and certainly none of her real property. Under these considerations it is insisted that an intention of the testatrix is disclosed to devote the proceeds of all property owned by her when her will was made to the establishment and endowment of the Memorial Home, and the appellants cite Littig v. Hance, 81 Md. 46, 32 Atl. 343; Kenady v. Sinnott, 179 U. S. 606, 21 Sup. Ct. 233, 45 L. Ed. 339; Conn. T. & T. Dep. Co. v. Chase, 75 Conn. 683, 55 Atl. 171; Miller v. Malone, 109 Ky. 133, 58 S. W. 708, 95 Am. St. Rep. 338; and Nooe v. Vannoy, 59 N. C. 185—in support of their contention.

Without just now discussing the cases cited, but giving consideration to the other mat ters suggested, we do not perceive how in any particular they support the claim made by appellants.

[1] Every testator knows that his will only takes effect upon his death, and only operates upon such property as he then owns, and that in the meantime his freedom to deal with his property is not in any respect curtailed, and there is nothing in the will of the testatrix here to indicate that she intended to limit her right to deal, in her lifetime, with any of her property just as she pleased, to transfer her real property into personalty or vice versa, and to have the provisions of her will as to the disposition of her estate apply at her death to the character of the property as she then owned it. In fact, the provisions of this will could bear no other construction. There is no force in the assertion that the paramount intention of the testatrix as to her real estate was that the proceeds of all that she owned at the execution of her will, particularly the California property which she derived from her uncle, should be devoted to the establishment of the Memorial Home. Certainly the will expressly declares no such intent. It says nothing about California real property, or about any specific real property or its proceeds. Besides, as to all her property the paramount intention of the testatrix was that her husband should be abundantly provided for; she was particularly solicitous that his comfort should be assured by having in her estate at her death ample property of such a character—personal property—as would fall into her residuary estate and go to him as her residuary legatee. So solicitous was she in this respect that in the clause bequeathing the proceeds of her real estate to the trustees she expressly charges the real estate to be sold for that purpose, with the payment of the special pecuniary legacies, and declares that they are not to bear upon the residuary bequest to her husband. If the claim of counsel for the trustees could prevail, testatrix on making her will, no matter what the changed condition of her estate might be thereafter, could not sell any real estate, the proceeds of which could go into the residuary fund for the benefit of her husband; no matter to what extent the vicissitudes of fortune might deplete her personal estate, all of which was to go to him, she could not replenish or increase the residuary fund by selling any of her real property unless by making a change in her will. But it is unnecessary to proceed further with any general discussion of the intention of testatrix as to these trustees of the Home because her intention as to what portion of her estate they shall take is plainly and clearly stated in the only clause of her will which gives them anything. There is nothing inartificial about the will of testatrix in any respect. It expresses with accuracy just what disposition of her estate is to be made among her beneficiaries thereunder, and when the clause in favor of the trustees of the Home is examined, and the language used there is given its natural and ordinary import, the testatrix clearly declares what proceeds of her real estate the trustees shall take and from the sale of what real estate itself the proceeds for the benefit of the Memorial Home shall be derived. The only gift to the trustees is in clause 3 of the will, and the language used there leaves no room for any question as to what proceeds and the proceeds of what property owned by the testatrix should be devoted to establish the Memorial Home. Her declared intention is that all her real estate (except the lots in New Orleans) is "to be sold by my executor to the best advantage" and after payment of the specific pecuniary legacies which are expressly charged upon the real estate "so to be sold" she gives the residue of the proceeds of said real estate "so to be sold" to the trustees in trust to found the Memorial Home. Under this clause, and for the purposes declared in it, a general power of sale is given by the testatrix to her executor to sell her real estate, pay the special pecuniary legacies, and turn the remainder over to the trustees of the Home. By the very terms of the clause this power of sale, under the execution of which alone her executor was to derive the funds for the Memorial Home, could only be exercised after her death, and could only apply to real property which she owned at the time of her death. Certainly this language cannot by any process of construction be held to mean anything other than that the proceeds of the sale of real estate which were to go to the trustees of the Home were the proceeds of such real estate as the testatrix owned at her death, and upon which the power of sale given him could operate, and clearly and expressly negatives the claim of the trustees that it was the intention of the testatrix that the proceeds of all real property which she owned at the time her will was made was intended by her to go to the trustees of the Home, and that any sale made by her thereafter was to facilitate that purpose. She undoubtedly intended to leave real estate at her death which, in her judgment, would be sufficient to establish the Home. This she did, and it is evident from the clause of her will referred to that it was all she intended to do.

It will be observed, too, that after making her will testatrix sold her Pasadena and other real property in Los Angeles county, receiving for the former at least $60,000, and after her death her dative testamentary executor collected some $4,000 as a balance due her from the sale of the other real property here. No claim was made by the trustees of the Home on distribution in the Louisiana court that they were entitled to these funds as proceeds of real estate which testatrix had intended, when she made her will, should be devoted to the establishment of the Home, and which real estate she sold to facilitate in her lifetime the creation of a fund for that purpose. On the contrary, these proceeds were distributed to the heirs at law. Obviously, all the interested parties, and the Louisiana court, were of the opinion that the bequest to the Memorial Home was only of the proceeds of real estate owned by testatrix at her death, and which property the executor was expressly empowered to sell, which were to go to found the Memorial Home—a view, the correctness of which we are satisfied there can be no doubt.

As to the authorities relied on by counsel for appellants and referred to above, they have no application under the bequest in question. Those cases hold that where a testator by his will directs the sale of specific property after his death and payment of the proceeds to designated legatees, if the testator makes a sale of the specific property in his lifetime, and the proceeds are held intact, they pass to the legatees; that a sale by the testator will be held to have been made simply to facilitate the creation of the fund designed for the legatees. In all these cases it will be noted, however, that the property directed to be sold or disposed of was specifically designated—either particular lots or tracts of land or personal property consisting of mortgages, bonds, or other described securities—the proceeds of which the legatees were given. There the clear intention of the testator was to make the legatees—either the wife, children, or near relatives of the testator—the recipients of the proceeds of specific property after his death. It was held that the sale by the testator in his lifetime of the specific property devised or bequeathed and retention by him intact of the proceeds was for the purpose of facilitating his intention that the legatees should have the avails of the specific property; that an intention to benefit the legatees is presumed to continue even after the changes in the form of the property made by the testator in his lifetime, and where, particularly, as in the cases cited, any other construction would have defeated the intention of the testator to provide for the legatees.

Here, however, there was no devise of the proceeds of the Broadway street property as such, or a devise of any specific real property, or the proceeds, to the trustees of the Home. The power of sale to the executor applied only to such property as the testatrix owned at her death.

The bequest of the proceeds of her real estate to the trustees, it is true, was a specific bequest; but it was in no particular a bequest of the proceeds of the Broadway or any other specific property. On the contrary, there was a declared intention that the trustees should take only the proceeds of the real property she owned at her death and upon which the power of sale given her executor could alone operate. Hence, as there was no specific bequest to them of the proceeds of the Broadway property which she had sold in her lifetime, the cases relied on can have no application.

[2] Appellants, however, insist that if their position, just discussed, is untenable, still they are entitled to the proceeds of the Broadway property by virtue of sections 1301 and 1303 of the Civil Code, applied to the provisions of the will and to the contract for the sale of the property to Carr by the testatrix before her death.

The first section relied on (1301) provides: "An agreement made by a testator for the sale or transfer of property disposed of by will previously made, does not revoke such disposal; but the property passes by the will, subject to the same remedies on the testator's agreement, for a specific performance or otherwise against the devisees or legatees, as might be had against the testator's successors, if the same had passed by succession." The other (1303) declares that: "A conveyance, settlement or other act of a testator, by which his interest in a thing previously disposed of by his will is altered, but not wholly divested, is not a revocation; but the will passes the property which would otherwise devolve by succession."

But appellants are in no position to invoke these provisions of the Code. While at common law the general rule is that a sale, or an executory contract of sale of property devised, is a revocation of the devise, and our Code provisions have modified the common-law rule as to an executory contract of sale, still there is no disposition of property to appellants which could bring them within the benefit of the modification of the common-law doctrine. While the sections apply to either real or personal property which a testator has disposed of by his will and subsequently contracts to sell, we are only concerned with them here as far as appellants claim they apply to the Broadway property. But here there was no devise, specific or general, of the Broadway property, or of any real property whatever, either to the trustees of the Home or to the executor for their benefit. The latter was given simply a naked power of sale, not directed to any specific real property, but in terms operating solely upon such real property as the testatrix owned at her death, and the bequest to the trustees was only of the proceeds of such real estate as the power of sale could operate upon. On no possible theory can it be said that either the power of sale or the bequest to the trustees of the proceeds of real property was a devise of any real property or could have any application to real property which the testatrix contracted to sell in her lifetime, as the power to be exercised by the executor and the benefits accruing to the trustees relate by the precise terms of the will to real estate which is owned by the testatrix at her death. And, as neither the power of sale nor the bequest could apply to any real estate except that which the testatrix owned at her death, there is no room for the claim that there was in the will any disposition in favor of the trustees of any specific real property relative to which, as the testatrix had entered into an executory contract of sale of it during her lifetime, brought the appellants—trustees—within the benefit of the sections of the Code which they rely on as entitling them to the proceeds of such sale.

[3] Nor can these sections be invoked by appellants on the theory that the contract between the testatrix and Carr with respect to the sale and purchase of the Broadway property was simply executory at the time of her death; that the ownership of the property was in testatrix when she died, and hence, as a portion of her real property owned by her at her death, the trustees of the Home were entitled to its proceeds.

The contract of sale between Carr and testatrix was not executory merely at her death; but in equitable contemplation, as far as ownership of the land in Carr and the right of Mrs. Dwyer to the purchase price only are concerned, the contract had become an executed one some time before her death.

[4] When a contract for sale of real property binding on the parties is executed, an equitable conversion is worked; the purchaser of the land is deemed the equitable owner thereof, and the seller is considered the owner of the purchase price. The equitable conversion thus deemed to exist from the time a valid contract of sale is entered into may or may not be absolute. Whether it is, or not, will depend upon whether the terms of the contract of sale are subsequently complied with. If there is no default in that respect, but, on the contrary (and dealing now with the contract involved here), the purchaser performs all the conditions precedent which under the contract entitle him to a conveyance on a given day, he will be deemed on that day to be the owner of the land and the seller to be the owner of the purchase money. The fact that the contracting owner of the land refuses to perform his part of the agreement and make the conveyance to which the purchaser is entitled, on compliance with the contract, cannot affect the status or rights of the parties as to the property.

[5] The purchaser having performed or offered to perform his covenants at the date when the contract called for a conveyance to him, equity considers the property as belonging to him as of that date, and the owner as simply holding the legal title in trust for him. To make a concrete application of the principle: Mrs. Dwyer contracted to sell the Broadway property and make a deed to Carr, if by May 13, 1905, the latter should pay a certain sum in cash and execute notes and a mortgage for the balance of the purchase price. On the deed day—May 13, 1905—Carr tendered payment as the contract required, and Mrs. Dwyer refused to accept it and make the deed, and, as the record shows, not because she did not want to sell the property, but because she wanted to get more money for it. On her refusal, Carr brought an action for specific performance. The superior court decided he was entitled to such performance as of May 13, 1905, and to a deed as of that date, and, as that carried with it the right to possession as of that date, awarded him the rents and profits of the property therefrom, and charged against him the taxes imposed on the property from that date. This decision was on appeal affirmed in all respects by this court (Carr v. Howell, 154 Cal. 372, 97 Pac. 885), and the only theory on which the reciprocal rights of the parties as fixed by the trial court could be sustained was: That those rights were to be measured as of the date when Carr was entitled to the deed. The contract was to be deemed performed on the deed day; the purchaser being entitled to the property as owner at that time, acquiring all rights as such, and subject to all obligations proceeding from such ownership. That, although the refusal on the part of Mrs. Dwyer to transfer the title by actual conveyance necessitated an action for specific performance to accomplish it, still, when the decree was entered, as far as the title was concerned, the transfer thereof was by relation as to the 13th of May, 1905. That what Mrs. Dwyer should have done on that day, in legal contemplation, was done, and the legal title passed as of that date. This being true, it necessarily follows that Mrs. Dwyer had sold all her interest in the Broadway property on the 13th of May, 1905, and her only right was to the balance of the purchase price in cash and the notes and mortgages. She had no interest in the Broadway property after that date. That interest had, by the performance of the contract on his part and under the doctrine of relation, completely vested in Carr. The only right which Mrs. Dwyer had under the sale was a right to the proceeds thereof which were at her death a portion of her personal estate and fell into the residuary clause of her will, and to which the respondents as her heirs at law were entitled.

These sections of our Civil Code upon which appellants rely were adopted from the New York Code and Revised Statutes. Our section 1301 corresponds with section 569 of the New York Code and section 45 of the New York Revised Statutes (2 Rev. St. [1st Ed.] p. 64), and our section 1303 to section 571 and section 47 of the New York Code and Revised Statutes, respectively, and, under the general rule, are assumed to have been adopted here with the construction placed on them by the courts of New York.

In Roome, Adm'r, etc., v. Phillips, 27 N. Y. 357, the original plaintiff in the action there contracted with defendant for the sale of certain real property in the city of New York; payment by defendant of the purchase price to be made on a date specified and delivery of a deed to him by plaintiff vendor on that date. The vendor, at the date fixed for consummation of the contract, attended at the place agreed on to receive the purchase price and deliver the deed, but defendant did not appear. The vendor commenced an action for specific performance of the contract and shortly afterwards died, leaving a will, made before the contract for the sale of the property was entered into, whereby he directed his executor to sell off all his real property and pay over the proceeds to his mother and aunt in certain proportions. The administrator with the will annexed proceeded with the suit. One of the questions arising in the case was whether a naked power of sale given to an executor to sell real estate was applicable to land, for the sale of which testator had made a contract and tendered performance in his lifetime. It was held that it was not; the court saying: "But there is a further difficulty in this case. The power of sale conferred upon the executor by the will had become inapplicable to this land by the sale of it which the testator had made in his lifetime. The will directs the executor to sell and convey all the testator's real estate, either at public or private sale, upon such terms as he may think proper and most beneficial to his estate. But the manner of sale and the terms had all been conclusively determined by the testator before the will took effect by his death, and a sale had actually been made; and the power does not look to the conveyance of the naked title to lands, of the beneficial interest in which the testator has divested himself in his lifetime. The sale was not a revocation of that part of the will, express or implied, so as to require an attested instrument to satisfy the statute, nor was the case within the provision which declares that a contract by the testator for the sale of land devised shall not revoke the devise incidentally made (2 R. S. p. 64, § 45); for the land in this case was not devised, though the proceeds of the sale were. Simply, the duty which the executor was appointed to perform respecting this land could not be performed by him, because, at the death of the testator, there was no such land to be sold."

[6] In Lewis v. Smith, 9 N. Y. 502, 61 Am. Dec. 706, an action was brought by the widow of testator to recover dower in a tract of land which testator had contracted to sell in his lifetime. The power of sale contained in the will authorized the executor to sell all the testator's "fast estate." This excerpt from the syllabi embraces the gist of the opinion of the court: "A power of sale contained in a will authorizing executors to sell all the testator's 'fast estate' does not embrace lands which have been sold by contract by the testator; the purchase money being unpaid, and the title still remaining in him. The interest remaining in the vendor in such case is a right to the money due on the contract, which is not real, but personal, estate." See, also, McNaughton v. McNaughton, 34 N. Y. 201, and Williams v. Haddock, 145 N. Y. 144, 39 N. E. 825.

While additional authorities from other states might be cited, we refer to the New York cases only, on account of the similarity of our Code provisions and the construction placed on them prior to their adoption here by the New York courts; particularly in the earlier decisions quoted from.

There is nothing in Mott v. Ackerman, 92 N. Y. 539, cited by appellants, which in any respect disturbs the rule announced in Roome v. Phillips and in Lewis v. Smith.

Nor do the several New York cases relied on by appellant support their position. These New York cases are Knight v. Weatherwax, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 182; McCarthy v. Meyers, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 83; Hopkins v. Gourand, 23 N. Y. Supp. 189;¹ Wagstaff v. Marcy, 25 Misc. Rep. 121, 54 N. Y. Supp. 1021; Nutzhorn v. Sittig, 34 Misc. Rep. 486, 70 N. Y. Supp. 287; Van Tassel v. Burger, 119 App. Div. 509, 104 N. Y. Supp. 273.

These cases all involve the application of these similar New York sections to devises made by testators and the effect thereon of contracts for the sale of the devised property subsisting at their death. In two essential and vital particulars, however, these cases differ from the case at bar. In each of them—save one where the testamentary disposition applied to the proceeds of a specified mortgage—there was a devise of specific real property, or the testamentary disposition related to specific real property, and in each case the contract for the sale of the property specifically devised was clearly executory at the time of the death of the testator, because either the time fixed by the contract for performance—the deed day—was subsequent to the death of testator or had been postponed by mutual consent to a date which was subsequent thereto. Clearly, under such conditions and by virtue of the Code provisions, the property specifically devised passed to the specific beneficiaries, subject to the rights of the vendee under the contract. But neither of the conditions which in the cases cited made the rule applicable exist in the case at bar. Here there is no devise of any real property; only a naked power of sale is given to the executor to sell such real property as the testatrix owned at her death.

The Broadway property could not fall under this general power of sale because testatrix had become completely divested of her ownership therein under a contract of sale which, in equitable contemplation, was fully executed a month prior to her death. The only right which Mrs. Dwyer then had relative to that property was solely a right to the purchase price thereof which, as personal property, fell into the residuum of her estate, and was properly distributed by the superior court to the respondents, her heirs at law.

¹ Reported in full in the New York Supplement; reported as a memorandum decision without opinion in 3 Misc. Rep. 619.

We have examined other points made by appellants against the correctness of the decree of distribution, but deem them neither tenable nor requiring discussion.

The portion of the decree of distribution appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

159 Cal. 680

In re DWYER'S ESTATE. (L. A. 2,562.)
(Supreme Court of California. April 7, 1911.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 2*)—
FOREIGN ASSETS—DISTRIBUTION—WHAT LAW GOVERNS.

Where testatrix, a resident of Louisiana, had contracted to sell certain real estate in California, and the proceeds were not collected until after the close of the domiciliary administration, the proceeds, when collected, being personal property, were distributable according to the law of Louisiana, and, except for the fact that the administration there had been closed, would have been transmitted to the Louisiana administration for distribution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

2. WILLS (§ 15*)—BEQUEST TO CHARITY—STATUTORY LIMITATION—"ESTATE OF TESTATOR."

Civ. Code, § 1313, declares that no devise or bequest of any estate, real or personal, to any charitable or benevolent society or corporation, or to any person or persons, in trust for charitable uses, shall collectively exceed one-third of the estate of the testator, leaving legal heirs. Held, that such section was intended not to fix a state polity, but for the protection of heirs at law, and that, in determining whether a bequest to charity exceeds one-third of the testator's estate, the court is not limited to the property bequeathed to charity within its jurisdiction, but should consider all the property bequeathed by testator to charity wherever situated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 36; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

3. WILLS (§ 13*)—CHARITABLE BEQUEST—LIMITATION OF RIGHT.

Aside from Civ. Code, § 1313, prohibiting a testator, leaving heirs, from leaving more than one-third of his estate to charity, there is no limitation on the right of a person to dispose of his property in favor of charitable purposes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 32-39; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

4. WILLS (§ 15*)—BEQUEST—PROCEEDS OF SALE OF LAND—AMOUNT—DEDUCTION OF EXPENSES.

Where trustees were entitled to the proceeds of a sale of certain real estate in California belonging to testatrix for the benefit of a charity, the trustees, under Civ. Code, § 1313, providing that a testator leaving heirs may only devise one-third of his estate to charity, being entitled only to one-third of the distributable assets after payment of debts and charges of administration, were only entitled to the proceeds of such property after deducting therefrom the costs and expenses of the sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 36; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

Judicial settlement of the estate of Lelia Bonner Dwyer, deceased. From a portion of the decree of distribution distributing to the trustees of the J. M. Bonner Memorial Home the gross proceeds of the sale of a tract of land in Los Angeles county, testatrix' heirs appeal. Reversed, with directions.

A. H. Van Cott, Benjamin E. Page, and E. W. Camp, for appellants. Geo. J. Leovy and Hunsaker & Britt, for respondents. Henry W. O'Melveny, O'Melveny, Stevens & Milikin, and Denis & Loewenthal, for administrator, etc.

LORIGAN, J. This appeal is taken by the heirs at law of the deceased from a portion of the decree of distribution in her estate which distributes to the trustees of the "J. M. Bonner Memorial Home" the gross proceeds of the sale of a certain tract of land in Los Angeles county.

The principal provisions of the will of testatrix, and the various matters pertaining to the administration of her estate, are set forth in the opinion this day filed on the appeal of the trustees of the Memorial Home from another portion of this same decree (Estate of Dwyer [L. A. No. 2,569] 115 Pac. 235); but for the purpose of considering the points made on this present appeal some of them will be briefly recited.

The testatrix died in New Orleans in June, 1905, a citizen of and domiciled in Louisiana, and leaving a will which was duly admitted to probate in New Orleans in the year mentioned and letters thereon issued. She left real and personal estate in Louisiana and in Los Angeles in this state, and real property in Alabama and Texas. Her will, after providing for the payment of certain specific legacies, directed that all her real estate (except some lots in New Orleans) should be sold by her executor, the special legacies, which were expressly charged upon said real estate, paid therefrom, and bequeathed "the rest and residue of the proceeds of said real estate so to be sold to certain persons (named as trustees and hereafter to be referred to as the trustees of the home) in trust to found and maintain in New Orleans a home for aged and infirm men to be called the "J. M. Bonner Memorial Home." Her husband, Alexander J. Dwyer, was made her "universal residuary legatee." He predeceased her about a year; but she made no change in her will as to the residuary bequest, so that appellants here, who are conceded to be her heirs at law, were entitled to have distributed to them any property which should fall into the residuum of her estate.

In August, 1905, the will of the testatrix, theretofore admitted to probate in New Orleans, was admitted to probate in the superior court of Los Angeles county, Cal., as a foreign will, and letters of administration with the will annexed were issued. Administration of the estate in Louisiana was closed and the administrator discharged in 1906, since which time there has been no administration of the estate pending anywhere except in this state.

The only real property in this state of which the testatrix died possessed was a ranch in Los Angeles county consisting of 170 acres of land. By an order of court this land was sold by the administrator for $20,250 and the sale confirmed in 1907; there being allowed and paid as a part of the expenses of the administration of the estate, and not charged against the purchase price of the ranch, a commission of $1,012.50 for effecting the sale and $100 for a certificate of title.

In 1909 the administrator with the will annexed filed his petition for distribution asking that the estate be distributed to such persons as the court should deem entitled thereto.

[1] While the estate to be distributed amounted, including the $20,250 gross proceeds of the sale of the ranch, to $135,296.64, practically all in money and securities, the only portion thereof subject to distribution under the laws of this state was the proceeds of the real estate which had been sold by order of the probate court. The rest of the estate consisted of the purchase price of land in this state which testatrix had contracted to sell in her lifetime, but which, on account of protracted litigation involving the validity of the contract of sale (see Estate of Dwyer [L. A. No. 2,569] supra), was not collected until after the close of the domiciliary administration of her estate in Louisiana. It was collected by the administrator here; but, being personal property, the distribution of which was governed by the law of the domicile of the testator, and which would have been transmitted to the administrator in Louisiana to be distributed there had that administration not been closed, the court here in the ancillary administration properly distributed it to the heirs at law of the testatrix in accordance with the law of Louisiana. Estate of Apple, 66 Cal. 433, 6 Pac. 7; Collins v. Maude, 144 Cal. 289, 77 Pac. 945.

[2] As to the proceeds of the sale of the ranch which, as we have said, was the only portion of the estate of the testatrix subject to administration under the laws of this state, cross-petitions for the distribution thereof were presented to the superior court by the heirs at law and the trustees of the Home. The heirs at law claimed that they were entitled to distribution to them of two-thirds of the proceeds under section 1313 of the Civil Code limiting the disposition which a testator may make of his estate in favor of charity to one-third thereof. The trustees claimed to be entitled to the entire gross proceeds of the sale, which claim the court sustained and ordered distributed to them that entire amount. This appeal involves the correctness of that order of distribution.

Upon the hearing of the petition for distribution in the superior court it was shown that there is no limitation in Louisiana upon the amount of property which a testator may leave to charity, except where he leaves a father, mother, or children. The testatrix here left none, and under her situation, in that respect, by the law of Louisiana she might have left her entire estate to charity. It was further in evidence that, under the administration of the estate of testatrix in Louisiana and the other states, there was distributed to the heirs at law $234,778.43 aside from the amount distributed to them here, to the legatees $40,000, and to the trustees of the Memorial Home $126,165.92, and it was conceded that the sum distributed as aforesaid to the trustees of the Memorial Home, together with the $20,250, the proceeds of the ranch distributed by the superior court of Los Angeles, and which is in question here, amounted to less than one-third of the whole distributable estate of the testatrix considered as an entirety.

Proceeding now to the merits of the appeal: The principal question involved therein is as to the construction which is to be given to section 1313 of our Civil Code, which declares that no devise or bequest of any estate, real or personal, to any charitable or benevolent society or corporation or to any person or persons, in trust for charitable uses, shall collectively exceed "one-third of the estate of the testator leaving legal heirs," and further declaring that all disposition of property contrary thereto shall be void and go to the residuary legatees, devisees, next of kin, or heirs according to law.

In distributing to the trustees the entire proceeds of the sale of the ranch, the superior court construed the term "one-third of the estate of the testator," as used in section 1313 with reference to the proportion thereof of which was disposable to charity, as meaning one-third of the entire distributable estate of the testator wherever located; that although the testatrix died domiciled without the state, and the larger proportion of her estate was distributed in foreign jurisdictions, still, if the estate distributed elsewhere to charity, and the estate here—the proceeds of the ranch alone—coming within the terms of the charitable bequest distributable here, did not exceed one-third of the entire distributable estate of the testatrix wherever located, the trustees were entitled to the whole proceeds of the sale of the ranch; and as it was not only conceded, but proven, that with distribution here of the proceeds of the sale of the ranch to the trustees of the Home added to the amount elsewhere distributed to them the charitable bequest would receive less than one-third of the entire estate of the testatrix, a proper construction of section 1313 required the en-the proceeds of the ranch to be distributed to the charity.

Appellants insist, on the other hand, that the "estate of the testator" mentioned in section 1313 means the estate located in this state over which the superior court has power and jurisdiction, and none other; that in determining the amount of the estate distributable here under the charitable devise, as the only estate over the testamentary disposition of which the law of this state had control and jurisdiction was the real estate of testatrix situated here or its proceeds and nothing else, the superior court could under section 1313 only distribute one-third of that property considered alone to the charity and should have distributed the remaining two-thirds thereof to appellants as heirs at law of testatrix.

This is the first time this precise question has been presented for consideration to this court, and the correctness of the decree of distribution involved depends upon the meaning which is to be given to the term "estate of the testator" as used in section 1313. Is it the estate here which alone can be taken into consideration in determining the amount which a nonresident testator may devise to charity, or is it the entire estate—that distributed elsewhere together with that distributed here—which shall be made the basis of calculation?

The solution of this question in our judgment is to be determined by a consideration of the legislative intent as disclosed by the entire section; the purpose which the Legislature intended to accomplish by its enactment.

As a general proposition the right of a nonresident testator to dispose of property in this state is recognized and may be exercised under no greater testamentary restrictions than apply to a disposition of it by a domiciliary testator. Our law recognizes the validity in this state of wills made by nonresidents, provides for their probate here and for administration and distribution of property owned in this state by the testator. In the administration of such estates here, as in those of domiciliary testators, we endeavor to carry out the intention of the testator expressed in his will concerning the disposition of his estate and sustain trust provisions of the will, particularly where such provisions are valid both under the law of the domicile of the testator and under the law of this state.

There is, of course, no question as to the validity of the bequest by the testatrix to the trustees of the Home. It is valid, both under the laws of Louisiana and this state. The only question is whether in measuring the one-third of the estate distributable in favor of that charity the court here under section 1313 shall take into consideration the estate of the testator in this state only, or the entire estate wherever distributed.

The general rule undoubtedly is, and is so declared by section 1376 of our Civil Code, that the testamentary disposition of property in this state is governed by the law of this state. Taking this rule into consideration, appellants insist that, when section 1313 speaks of "the estate of the testator" in connection with the inhibition of disposition of more than one-third of it to charity, the estate mentioned must be construed to be the estate of the testator in California only and over which the law of this state has alone control. But this conclusion does not necessarily follow from a consideration of the rule. Giving the rule its full force, it does not answer the inquiry as to what is meant by the "estate of the testator" as used in the section, a proportional part of which alone can be disposed of in favor of charity. The disposition of the estate must, it is true, be governed by the law of this state; but the inquiry is: What is the law in that respect? If the Legislature in the enactment of section 1313 intended to limit the proportion of the estate of a testator which could be disposed of in favor of charity here to the estate alone under distribution in this state, then the trustees of the Home were only entitled to a distribution of one-third of the proceeds of the sale of the real property. If, on the other hand, the words "estate of the testator" used in the section referred to the estate generally, then the distribution of the entire proceeds of the sale of the ranch to the trustees of the Home, as it would not exceed one-third of the entire distributed estate of the testator wherever situated, was properly made. So, as the term "estate of the testator" may have a limited or enlarged significance, it is necessary, in order to determine in what sense the term is used in the section, to examine into the intent and purpose of the Legislature in the enactment of the section so as to apply the law of this state to dispositions in favor of charity as the Legislature intended.

[3] Now, as to such legislative intent: There is no limitation under the laws of this state, except as prescribed by section 1313, upon the right of a person to dispose of his property in favor of charitable purposes. He may by gift in his lifetime devote all his property thereto. He has a legal right to do so. He may with equal legal right dispose by will of all his property in favor of charities provided he leaves no heirs at law. It is only when he leaves such heirs that his power of disposition by will is restricted. But this is not by reason of any public policy of this state against dispositions in favor of charity. In fact, the state has no such public policy. It is well settled here that dispositions to charity are looked upon with favor, and the courts will uphold all such gifts whether made by a donor in his lifetime or by a testator, when it can be done consistently with the rules of law. The theory of section 1313 is not to prevent charities from receiving testamentary gifts of property. It is not a mortmain statute; not an expression of a policy of the state against the accumulation of vast properties or the centralization of wealth in mortu manu. It was not designed to operate upon the capacity of corporations or institutions or individuals to take charitable testamentary gifts, but solely as a limitation on the power of a testator to make them when he had legal heirs. The purpose of the section was remedial; to prevent what was deemed a wrong and injustice to those who should naturally be the recipients of the bounty of a testator—his heirs at law. It was not enacted for the public good or as a matter of state policy, but for the benefit exclusively of those named in it—the heirs at law—and as a protection against hasty and improvident gifts to charity by a testator of his entire estate to the exclusion of those who in the judgment of the Legislature had a better claim to his bounty. As then the section in question was not enacted as declaratory of any public policy of this state relative to charitable dispositions by will, but was enacted exclusively for the protection of the heirs at law of a testator, there is no reason why it should be held that the estate of the testator mentioned therein of which a limited disposition to charity may be made means the estate of the testator distributable alone in this state. On the contrary, as the legislative intent was only to prevent a disposition in excess of one-third of the estate of the testator where he left heirs at law, and was solely to secure their rights in any excess disposed of over that proportion, it was entirely immaterial in the legislative mind where or how the heirs received the proportion of the estate to which they were deemed entitled as long as they obtained it. In requiring ancillary administration in this state, we do so for the benefit of creditors of the decedent and claimants here. When their claims have been satisfied as far as the distribution of the property of the estate located here is concerned, distribution thereof is made in conformity to the terms of the will and the intention of the testator, unless contrary to some provision of the law of this state. In making such distribution, where bequests to charity are involved, there is no principle of construction, or any rule of public policy in this state, or any rule of law, which requires us to hold, in determining the amount of the estate of a nonresident testator distributable to charity under the Code section in question, that the estate of the testator here can alone be taken into consideration. Such a construction would be arbitrary and not in harmony with the legislative intent and purpose. Its effect, too, would be, in many instances at least, to permit the heirs at law, under distribution in foreign jurisdictions and here, to receive an amount largely in excess of two-thirds of the aggregate of the estate of the testator and contrary to his intention.

From these considerations we are of the opinion, therefore, that the term "estate of the testator" employed in the section means, for the purpose of determining the amount of the estate here distributable to charity, not the estate alone over which the court here has control, but has relation to the aggregate estate wherever situated or distributed, and that where it can be shown, as it is shown here, that in the administration of the estate in other jurisdictions the heirs at law have already received two-thirds of the estate of the testator, or that of the estate in this jurisdiction, an amount less than two-thirds of the distributable estate here, added to what has already been received by them in other jurisdictions, will give them two-thirds of the estate of the testator, they will not be allowed to take in this jurisdiction an amount in excess of what is necessary to make up the two-thirds of the estate to which in the legislative judgment and the intention of the testator they are entitled, and which, if it were permitted to do, would give them more than two-thirds of the aggregate estate of the testator.

The only authority to which our attention is directed on either side of this controversy which squarely applies to the question here involved is the case of Paschal v. Acklin, 27 Tex. 173. In that case, Isaac Franklin, a testator domiciled in the state of Tennessee, died leaving a widow and children. By his will, after making bequests to his wife and children, he devised all his "property, real and personal, of whatever kind or nature, that is situated in the states of Tennessee and Mississippi, or any other common-law state, where trust estates can be created, * * * and the rest and residue of my estate wherever situated," to his two brothers in trust to erect, endow, and maintain an academy or seminary of learning on the plantation of the testator in Tennessee. At the time of his death testator left real property in Texas. The law of Texas provided that a testator leaving children him surviving could not dispose of more than one-fourth of his estate to other than the children. The Texas Supreme Court, after deciding that Texas was a "common-law state where trust estates could be created" within the terms of the devise in trust under the will, proceeded to consider, among other questions, whether, in ascertaining the portion of his estate which the testator could leave to charity under the testamentary restrictions of the law of Texas, regard should be had only to such estate as might be in Texas, or did it apply to the whole estate of the testator wherever situated? It was held that the whole estate wherever situated must be considered. The court said: "It is also insisted by the appellees, and was so ruled in the district court, that Isaac Franklin's will is inoperative and void in this state, to the extent of three-fourths of his estate, because, as they allege, it contravenes the provisions of our former statute of wills, which forbid a parent depriving his children by will of more than one-fourth of his estate. * * * On the other hand, the position assumed by appellants, that the court, in applying this statute to the will, can only take into view the property of the testator situated in this state, is equally fallacious. The only limitation upon the right of the owner to dispose of his property by will has reference to the proportional part of the value of his estate. In other respects his discretion is unshackled. The authority to dispose of his property by will is general; the limitation or qualification of this right is special and particular. In the nature of things, it is impossible that a part of each specific article of property should be allotted to the children. To deprive the testator of the privilege of selecting the item of property for bequest would often, if not generally, take from him the incentive for making it. The object of the law was to secure to children a just and reasonable portion of their parents' estate. If they received the portion to which the law declared they were entitled, it was immaterial where or in what they received it. It is not to be understood from this that there may not be cases in which our courts would refuse to send our citizens abroad, to encounter difficulties and uncertainties in obtaining their portion of their parents' estate in a foreign tribunal, to enable the devisees or legatees to secure the full amount of their bequests here. The question presented in this case is: Can the children, or those claiming under them, if they have already received their legitimate portion of the entire estate, claim a like proportional part of the property in this state, simply because the portion which they have received was not within its limits, or within the jurisdiction, or under the control of our courts? To answer in the affirmative would be to give the statute in question a construction altogether foreign to its spirit and purpose, as well as to violate a fundamental principle in this department of jurisprudence."

We make no doubt upon the correctness of the rule as laid down in the above case and that it is applicable to our statute. It seems to be the only construction which will permit the intention of a testator to be carried out as to the portion of his estate which he may devote to charity at the same time that it gives to the heirs at law all that in the judgment of our Legislature they should have and prevents them from taking a proportion in excess of what they are entitled to.

There is nothing in the Estate of Peabody, 154 Cal. 173, 97 Pac. 184, cited by appellants, which decides anything contrary to the conclusion we have reached. There the devise was to charity, and the only two questions involved were as to the validity of the trust clause, tested by the rule of the Estate of Fair, 132 Cal. 523, 60 Pac. 442, 64 Pac. 1000, 84 Am. St. Rep. 70, and subsequent cases, as to trusts to convey, and the application of the doctrine of cy pres to the charitable devise there under consideration. Denying the application of the rule in the Fair Case to the trust in question, this court then proceeded to consider the application of the cy pres doctrine under the claim of appellant that the estate in California devised to charity was so small that it would be inadequate to accomplish the purpose designed by the testatrix, and should be held void on that account. In disposing of this point, the court, among other things, said: "We do not know the value of the house and lot in St. Louis, nor whether, under the law of Missouri, the whole devise is effectual as to that property. The mere fact that one-third, only, of the California property can be devoted to the establishment of 'The House of Rest,' and that hence the establishment may be much smaller than the testatrix intended, does not make the devise invalid." It is on this language used in the quoted portion of the opinion upon which appellants here base their claim that it is a decision of this court to the effect that, in determining the one-third of the property which can be distributed to charity here, the property in this state alone can be taken into consideration. But in this Peabody Estate appeal there was no question presented to this court for consideration as to whether in determining the one-third of the estate of a testator which should be distributed to charity one-third of California property only should be taken into consideration, or one-third of the entire estate wherever situated. The attorney for the appellant in that case conceded that one-third of the California property only could go to charity, so that the question involved here could not arise in that case, nor did the court undertake to determine it. The language there used is referable only to the matter which was under consideration. The court had no data under which it could know anything about the estate of the testator elsewhere than in this state; it did not know the value of the property devoted to charity in Missouri, or whether the devise there was valid, or whether any distribution of the estate had been made there, and, under the concession of counsel for appellant, that only one-third of the property in this state could be devoted to charity, was dealing only with the question presented, namely, whether as the one-third of the estate here was insufficient to carry out the general scheme of the testatrix to establish a "Home of Rest" as she designed it, should the devise for that reason be declared invalid? The court, applying the cy pres doctrine, held that it was not. That was all that was decided, and, as the language of the court was addressed to this sole proposition, it cannot be construed into a declaration that, in determining the amount which shall be available for charitable purposes of property situated in this state, the court shall take into consideration the property here alone, and not the entire estate wherever situated. No such question was involved in the Peabody Case, and nothing respecting it was there decided.

In reaching our conclusion in this matter, we give due consideration to the suggestion of counsel for the appellants as to the difficulties and embarrassments which may attend the distribution of property of the estate here under our construction of the Code provision. These are, to state the principal ones urged, that, where a testator leaves property here and in other states, administration may be pending elsewhere at the same time that it is pending here; that, when the ancillary administration here is ready to be closed, administration elsewhere may still be pending, and the court here cannot know how the estate there will be distributed; that administration here should not be delayed for the sole purpose of ascertaining how and to whom distribution of the estate in other jurisdictions may be made; and that, unless the administration is delayed here until other administrations are closed, the court here will not be able to take into consideration the value of the estate distributed elsewhere and the manner of its distribution, for the purpose of determining what amount of the estate here shall be distributed to charity and what to the heirs at law. But, conceding that such conditions may exist elsewhere when estates are ready for distribution here, this would not affect the correctness of the rule itself as a rule of distribution. They would only render the rule difficult of application. The natural and proper desire and disposition of all beneficiaries under a will, or the heirs at law of a testator, to obtain their share of the estate at the earliest moment they are entitled to it, can be safely relied on to prevent any delays in the speedy distribution of the estate of a testator, in whatever jurisdiction it may be situated. But, if such difficulties may sometimes exist, none of them are presented here. In this particular estate the domiciliary administration in Louisiana and the ancillary administrations in other states were closed, and the only administration pending anywhere was in this state. Here the value of the property distributed elsewhere and how and to whom it was distributed was shown. The rule announced under these circumstances was of ready application. It was a matter of mere mathematical calculation for the court to ascertain the amount of property under its control here, which, together with the amount distributed elsewhere, would give to the heirs at law the two-thirds of the estate of the testatrix to which they were entitled, and allow distribution to charity of the rest, which, in itself, would not bring the bequest to charity up to one-third of the aggregate distributable estate of the testatrix to which it was entitled.

Should, however, the conditions of uncertainty suggested by appellants exist when an estate here is ready for distribution, that at that time the value of the estate elsewhere and the manner in which it has been distributed cannot be ascertained, the court necessarily could only take into consideration in determining the respective amounts of the estate which should be distributed under section 1313 to charity and to the heirs at law the estate under its control here. But this, as we have said, is not because a proper construction of section 1313 does not require the court to take into consideration if it can the amount of the estate of the testatrix wherever distributed in determining the amount distributable to charity of the estate here, but because, in the absence of knowledge as to the value of the estate distributed elsewhere, or how distributed, it is impossible to take the entire estate into consideration in making distribution of the estate here.

[4] Under the construction which, in our opinion, must be given to the term "estate of the testator" as employed in section 1313 with reference to the amount of property which may here be distributed to charity thereunder, the superior court properly distributed to the trustees of the Memorial Home the proceeds of the ranch, and there only remains for consideration the further point made by appellants that, if the trustees were entitled to the proceeds as a whole, the court should not have distributed to them the gross proceeds, but only the net proceeds thereof. This point is based on the fact that the court allowed, for effecting a sale of the property, under its order, a commission of $1,012.50, and $100 for a certificate of title. These expenses attending the sale were not deducted from its proceeds, but were allowed and paid as part of the general expense of administration of the estate, and the gross proceeds of the sale distributed to the trustees of the Home. We think the proceeds of the sale should have been charged with the expense attending the sale and only the net proceeds distributed to the trustees. Several reasons might be assigned in support of this conclusion, but one will suffice. It is the settled law in this state that it is only one-third of the distributable assets of the estate of a testator, after payment of debts and charges of administration, which can be distributed to charity. Estate of Hinckley, 58 Cal. 457; Pearson's Estate, 98 Cal. 603, 33 Pac. 451. This being true, it necessarily follows that it is only the proceeds of the sale of the ranch, after deducting the expenses of effecting its sale—the net proceeds thereof—which can be distributed to charity.

For this error in distributing to the trustees of the Home the gross instead of the net proceeds of the sale of the ranch, that portion of the order appealed from is reversed, with directions to the superior court to modify that portion of the decree appealed from, by distributing to the trustees of the Home the net proceeds of the sale, amounting to $19,137.50, and as it appears that the heirs at law would be entitled to have distributed to them the $1,112.50, representing the amount in excess of what should have properly been distributed to the trustees of the Home, the court shall further modify the decree of distribution so as to distribute to them that amount, and, as so modified in the particulars stated, the decree, as far as it is affected by this appeal, will stand affirmed. Appellants are entitled to their costs on appeal.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.

15 Cal. App. 515

TIMES-MIRROR CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 956.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 1, 1911.)

CERTIORARI (§ 28*)—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—JURISDICTION.

Where the issue whether there was pending another action between the same parties for the same cause was a question within the jurisdiction of the trial court, its judgment was not reviewable on certiorari, which, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1068, 1074, can be called into use only to review judgments made without or in excess of jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Certiorari, Cent. Dig. § 41; Dec. Dig. § 28.*]

Petition for writ of review by the Times-Mirror Company against the Superior Court of Los Angeles County and W. R. Hervey, a judge thereof. Writ discharged.

John Beardsley, for petitioner. A. W. Sorenson, for respondents.

JAMES, J. Petitioner herein seeks to have reviewed a judgment of the superior court rendered in an action on appeal from a judgment of the justice's court of Los Angeles township. It appears that W. S. Booher and Ella B. Booher brought an action against the petitioner in said justice's court to recover damages in the sum of $299.99, alleged to have been suffered by reason of a wrongful levy, under process of attachment, upon personal property belonging to them. In its answer to the complaint of the plaintiffs therein, petitioner interposed the defense that there was then pending another action for the same cause between the same parties. In the justice's court judgment was awarded the plaintiffs, and petitioner, being the defendant in that action, appealed to the superior court. The superior court in due time proceeded to retry the action on appeal, and again judgment was rendered against petitioner. At the commencement of the trial in the superior court, petitioner first offered evidence in support of its plea in abatement, or, as phrased in the language of its answer, "that there was another action pending between the same parties for the same cause," and then made a motion that the action be dismissed, which motion was denied by the court and the trial proceeded with.

It does not appear that the superior court exceeded its jurisdiction in making the order denying the motion of petitioner, and proceeding with the trial of the action, and rendering judgment therein. The matter as to whether or not there was pending another action between the same parties for the same cause was a matter presented as an issue to be tried by the court, and one which the court had jurisdiction to determine either in favor of the plaintiffs or defendant in that action; and its judgment, when rendered, became final and conclusive between the parties. The writ of certiorari can be called into use only for the purpose of reviewing judgments or orders made without or in excess of jurisdiction, and cannot be made to serve the office of an appeal. Muir v. Superior Court, 58 Cal. 361; White v. Superior Court, 110 Cal. 60, 42 Pac. 471; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1068, 1074.

The writ is discharged.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

15 Cal. App. 512

SPENCER et al. v. CLARKE et al. (Civ. 904.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 28, 1911.)

1. BOUNDARIES (§ 35*)—HEARSAY—DISPUTE AS TO BOUNDARIES.

Hearsay evidence is inadmissible in a case between private parties involving boundaries, where the controlling monuments exist and the lines described in the field notes of an original government survey are susceptible of exact determination by independent surveys.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 154–156; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1011*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS.

A finding on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983–3989; Dec. Dig. § 1011.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 981*)—REVIEW—DISCRETION OF COURT—REFUSAL OF NEW TRIAL.

The trial court, in refusing a motion for a new trial for newly discovered evidence, has discretion as to whether the evidence is cumulative or such as would have changed the finding, and, where no abuse of such discretion is shown, its action will not be reviewed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3876; Dec. Dig. § 981.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

Action by Ernest Spencer and others against Charles N. Clarke and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

O. N. Andrews, for appellants. Ward, Wells & Ward, for respondents.

ALLEN, P. J. The action was one to quiet title; the only matter in controversy being as to the exact location upon the ground of a division line between the lands of the respective parties to the action. The court found in favor of defendants, and judgment went accordingly, from which, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiffs appeal.

[1] The only serious question presented relates to the ruling of the trial court in sustaining an objection to certain testimony. One of the plaintiffs offered himself as a witness, and, after stating that he had no information as to the controlling monuments or true location of the line in question, other than that which was derived from statements made to him by a surveyor named Wheaton, now deceased, who was a few years before the commencement of the action employed by him to run the exterior lines of his premises, was asked to give the location of said lines and monuments. An objection to this testimony was made upon the ground that the witness was not shown to be competent or to have any knowledge as to the accuracy of said survey, and that the same was hearsay. This objection was sustained. It is appellants' contention that the statements of such deceased surveyor were admissible as one of the exceptions to the rule governing the admissibility of hearsay evidence, under the authority of Morton v. Folger, 15 Cal. 275, and Cornwall v. Culver, 16 Cal. 428. The rule recognized in those cases is "that the declarations on a question of boundary of a deceased person who was in a situation to be acquainted with the matter, and who was at the time free from any interest therein, were admissible, even when the controversy was between estates of private persons." It appears from the record that the controlling monuments and lines, including the contested line, were those of an original government survey, the field notes of which were in evidence; that, while Wheaton made a survey upon which his statements were based, neither he nor any other surveyor ever retraced the government lines or re-established the government corners, or the location of said lines as determined by a survey thereof. The trial court by its rejection of Wheaton's statements determined that from the evidence Wheaton was not in a position to be acquainted with the matter involving the true line between the premises of the parties to this action, as fixed by the government survey, and when we consider that by his survey he had not sought to nor attempted to verify the government lines, which control the line in question, it was obvious that he was not so acquainted with the true location thereof as to bring his statements within the rule declared in the cases cited. The reason for the exception in cases of this character is based upon necessity for the protection of the rights of private parties. But in the case under consideration, where the controlling monuments exist, and the lines described in the field notes are susceptible of exact determination by independent surveys, it cannot be said that a condition exists through which an opinion of a previous surveyor should be received as of necessity. We think the court committed no error in sustaining the objection to the witness recounting Wheaton's statements.

[2] The bill of exceptions shows that a material conflict in the evidence existed as to the true location of the disputed line. This being true, the finding of the trial court should not be disturbed.

[3] It is finally claimed that the court abused its discretion in overruling the motion for a new trial based upon newly discovered evidence. From aught that appears in the record, this evidence may have been cumulative merely, or was not of such character as, taken in connection with the other evidence, would have had the effect to change the findings. These matters were for the trial court, and, no abuse of discretion being shown, appellants' contention in this regard cannot be sustained.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

15 Cal. App. 518

O'BRIEN v. GARIBALDI et al. (Civ. 725.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District,
California. March 2, 1911.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 134*)—ACCEPTED ORDER.

An order of a building contractor, directing the owner to pay a specified sum to a subcontractor "on completion when house accepted * * * and deduct same from my payment," and accepted by the owner, must be construed in connection with the building contract, which is completed when the work is finished in accordance with the original plans, and where the contractor failed to complete the building, and no payment subsequent to the date of the order became due to the contractor, the subcontractor having knowledge of the contract could not recover on the order.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Dec. Dig. § 134.*]

2. CONTRACTS (§ 319*)—BUILDING CONTRACTS—RIGHTS OF PARTIES.

Where work on a building is abandoned by the contractor and the owner completes the building pursuant to a right reserved in the contract, the work of completion is, as a general rule, deemed to be done under the contract, but the contractor may receive only the balance of the contract price remaining after the cost of completion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1493-1507; Dec. Dig. § 319.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 419*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—MODIFICATION OF WRITTEN INSTRUMENTS.

An order by a contractor, directing the owner to pay a subcontractor, "on completion when house accepted," a specified sum, and accepted by the owner signing his name thereon below the signature of the contractor, cannot be modified by proof that the consideration of the order and acceptance was the resumption of work by the subcontractor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1912-1928; Dec. Dig. § 419.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Arthur J. O'Brien against A. J. Garibaldi and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant named appeals. Reversed.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, for appellant. Costello & Costello, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. In this action the defendant, A. J. Garibaldi, appeals from the judgment rendered against him and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The judgment is based upon the making and acceptance of the following written order, viz.: "San Francisco, Cal., Jan'y. 19, 1907. Mr. A. J. Garibaldi, San Francisco, Cal.—Dear Sir: Please pay to Mr. A. J. O'Brien on completion when house accepted the sum of $900, and deduct same from my payment, and oblige. Yours respectfully, J. M. Jackson."

As an evidence of his acceptance of this order, the defendant signed his name thereon below the signature of Jackson. The record further discloses that at the time of the presentation and acceptance of the order Jackson, a contractor and builder, was engaged in the erection of a building on certain real property owned by the defendant, in the city and county of San Francisco, pursuant to the covenants of a building contract, in the usual and ordinary form, executed by Jackson and defendant on the 12th day of October, 1906.

The contract price of the building was $7,600, payable as the construction of the building progressed, in four equal installments. Prior to the 19th day of January, 1907, the date of the order in question, Jackson, the contractor, had so far progressed with his work, in accordance with the terms of his contract, as to be entitled to and he was paid the first two installments, amounting to the sum of $3,800. On the 2d day of March, 1907, Jackson ceased work on the building and abandoned his contract, leaving due and unpaid to various persons for labor performed upon and materials used in the construction of the building the sum of $5,927.73. Thereupon the defendant, having fully complied with the requirements of the contract in such a contingency, personally assumed the further construction of the building, and under his immediate control and supervision the building was completed prior to the commencement of this action.

The last two payments which, under the terms of the contract, would have been due and payable to Jackson, had he continued under his contract and completed the building, amounted to the sum of $3,800. The sum of $410.43 was expended by the defendant, Garibaldi, in completing the building. This sum, deducted from the amount of the last two payments, which would have been due to Jackson upon a compliance with the contract, left a balance of $3,389.57 in Garibaldi's hands to be applied in satisfaction of the several liens for labor and materials which, within the time allowed by law, had been filed against the building, and subsequently sued upon. The balance was distributed pro rata among the various lien claimants. O'Brien, the plaintiff, as a subcontractor under Jackson to do the plastering upon the building, was one of the lien claimants. He was paid as his pro rata the sum of $514.63, and, after deducting this amount from the $900 specified in the order referred to, commenced this action and obtained judgment against the defendant in the sum of $385.36.

It is conceded that the plaintiff was fully aware of the contractual relations existing, at the date of the order, between Garibaldi and Jackson; that in satisfying and discharging the liens of the several claimants the defendant, Garibaldi, expended all moneys due or which would have become due to Jackson upon his compliance with the terms of the building contract, and, finally, that no part of the moneys due to the several lien claimants was ever paid by Jackson.

The trial court found as a fact "that on the said 19th day of January, 1907, the said A. J. Garibaldi duly accepted the said order, and promised and agreed to pay this plaintiff said sum of $900 when the said house was accepted." This is a material finding. It is the basis of the judgment in this case. This finding, however, is not wholly supported by the evidence, and it is clearly contrary to the evidence, in so far as it finds that appellant's obligation, under the order, was to pay "the said $900 when the said house was accepted."

[1] The order in question and its acceptance constitute a contract in writing, and, upon its face, is not susceptible of any such narrow and limited construction. Some evidence was offered and received at the trial for the single purpose of showing the circumstances under which the order was made and accepted, but the record does not disclose that the appellant accepted the order in any other way than by writing his name thereon, or that the parties thereto in any way altered, varied, or limited its terms and conditions. This being so, the order, in conjunction with the subsisting contract for the erection of the building, contains and expresses all the promises and agreements of the parties, and therefore, for the purpose of ascertaining what the parties promised and agreed to do, resort must be had solely to the language of the order and the circumstances attending its inception and acceptance.

In the original contract it was in substance provided that Jackson was to "erect and finish" the building, and to furnish all labor and material required in the "construction and completion" thereof; the contract was to be deemed "completed" when the work was "finished in accordance with the original plans"; the third installment of the contract price was to become due and payable when the building was "finished" by Jackson and "accepted" by Garibaldi, and the final payment was due at the expiration of the "usual 35 days" after the completion and acceptance of the building. Manifestly the "completion," "acceptance," and "payment" referred to in the order of January 19, 1907, related to the completion, acceptance, and payment provided for in the original contract.

It is clear, therefore, that in basing its finding as to the promise and agreement of Garibaldi to pay upon the single condition of the acceptance of the building the trial court ignored the remaining and equally controlling conditions of the order with reference to the completion of the building by Jackson, and the existence of a fund from which the amount specified was to be deducted and paid.

Construed in connection with the original contract to which it was related, the order is free from any uncertainty as to its scope and effect. So construed it is clearly conditional, and the manner and form of its acceptance imposed upon the defendant, Garibaldi, no other or greater obligation than to pay to plaintiff whatever money might be due to Jackson upon the happening of all of the conditions of the order.

The order was in effect an assignment to the plaintiff of the sum of $900 out of any moneys due or to become due to Jackson under the terms of the building contract; and the defendant's acceptance of the order was but a promise to pay upon the happening of the contingencies expressed therein. Nothing was due, however, under the contract from defendant, Garibaldi, to Jackson at the time of the execution and acceptance of the order, and no rights as to future payments under that contract, different from or superior to those of Jackson, as the contractor, were by the terms and acceptance of the order conferred upon the plaintiff as assignee.

Jackson having failed to complete the building as required by his contract, and as was clearly contemplated by the very terms of the order, no payment subsequent to the date of the order became due to Jackson from which the sum specified in the order could be deducted. Clark v. Collier, 100 Cal. 256, 34 Pac. 677; Hogan v. Globe Mutual, etc., Ass'n, 140 Cal. 614, 74 Pac. 153. There being nothing due or to become due to Jackson under the building contract, nothing was due or could become due to the plaintiff, O'Brien, under the order. Hogan v. Globe Mutual, etc., Ass'n, supra; Pohlman v. Wilcox, 146 Cal. 441, 80 Pac. 625.

It is contended upon behalf of the respondent that the completion of a building by the owner after abandonment by the contractor confers upon the contractor, and all others claiming under him, all the benefits which ordinarily would have accrued to the contractor or his assigns upon a full performance of the contract by the contractor. This position is untenable, and it is not supported by the authorities cited by counsel for respondent.

[2] It is true, generally, that when work upon a building is abandoned by the contractor, and the building is completed by the owner pursuant to a right reserved in the contract, as was done in this case, the work of completion is deemed to be done under the contract. Boisot on Mechanics' Liens, § 85. The contractor, however, in that event is entitled to receive only the balance of the contract price that may remain over and above the cost of completion. Wiggins v. Bridge, 70 Cal. 437, 11 Pac. 754; Denison v. Burrell, 119 Cal. 182, 51 Pac. 1; White v. Livingston, 69 App. Div. 361, 75 N. Y. Supp. 466. Obviously, in such a contingency, nothing is due the contractor, or those claiming under him, where, as happened in this case, the cost of completion and prior payments, added to the amounts due to bona fide lien claimants, exceeded the contract price.

The plaintiff O'Brien had agreed with Jackson to do the plastering work on the building for $900, and the record shows that at the date of the order in controversy O'Brien's contract was about two-thirds completed. Not having received, up to this time, any payment from Jackson on account of his contract, O'Brien refused to proceed further with his work until he was given the order on Garibaldi for the said sum of $900. In this connection O'Brien's foreman testified that when he presented the order for acceptance he informed Garibaldi that "there was only one way to continue work on his building, and that was by getting some assurance that Mr. O'Brien would get his money." Thereupon Garibaldi signified his acceptance of the order by writing his name thereon below the signature of Jackson, saying at the time, "Yes, I can sign that; I would like to have you go right ahead and finish it."

[3] It is now claimed by counsel for respondent that the consideration for the order and its acceptance was the resumption of work by O'Brien, and not the completion of the building by Jackson, and that therefore, when the house was completed and ready for occupancy by any agency whatsoever, the sum specified in the order became due and payable to O'Brien.

The question as to whether or not there was any consideration for the acceptance of the order was distinctly raised by the pleadings, but the findings of the court are silent upon the subject, and the evidence of plaintiff's foreman was received by the court for the limited purpose of showing the circumstances under which the order was made and accepted. However, even if this evidence had been received for the purpose of showing the consideration for the acceptance of the order, it did not and could not modify or vary the terms and conditions upon which the order was accepted. Guidery v. Green, 95 Cal. 630, 30 Pac. 786; Sivers v. Sivers, 97 Cal. 520, 32 Pac. 571.

Cook v. Wolfendale, 105 Mass. 401, so strongly relied upon by the plaintiff here, is not in point. The order there sued upon is readily distinguishable from the order sued on in the case at bar. "In Cook v. Wolfendale, supra, which is relied upon by plaintiff, the acceptance was given in consideration of lumber furnished to the contractor to be used in building the house for the acceptor. And the terms of the order contained no reference to the building contract, but merely fixed the time of payment as the time when the building should be ready for occupancy." Somers v. Thayer, 115 Mass. 163.

As already shown, the order in the case at bar refers to and is dependent upon the completion and "payment" provided in the original building contract.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; HALL, J.

15 Cal. App. 525

O'BRIEN v. JACKSON et al. (Civ. 736.)
(District Court of Appeal, First District,
California. March 2, 1911.)

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Jas. M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Arthur J. O'Brien against J. M. Jackson and another. From a judgment for defendant Molinari, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Costello & Costello, for appellant. Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment entered in favor of the defendant Molinari, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

The action was brought to recover the amount specified in an order drawn by J. M. Jackson, in favor of the plaintiff, upon and accepted by the defendant P. G. Molinari.

The order and acceptance are as follows:

"San Francisco, Cal. Feby. 1, 1907. Dear Sir: Please pay the bearer, Mr. A. J. O'Brien, the sum of six hundred and ninety-six dollars, the same being for the plastering of your property located on Broadway street, between Kearny and Dupont streets. J. M. Jackson.

"I will accept this order, and deduct the amount from next payment due on my building. P. G. Molinari."

The answer of the defendant Molinari was, substantially, that the order and its acceptance related to and were dependent upon the performance of a building contract existing at the time between Jackson and the defendant Molinari; that Jackson abandoned the building and failed to comply with the terms of the contract; that in consequence of this breach on the part of Jackson no money ever became due to Jackson out of which a payment of the money called for in the order could be made to O'Brien.

The findings of the court upon all of the material issues were in favor of the defendant Molinari; and they are fully sustained by the evidence offered and received upon the trial. This case and the case of O'Brien v. Garibaldi, 115 Pac. 249, numbered 725 in this court, and this day decided, wherein the judgment of the trial court is reversed, were tried and determined together. The parties in both cases, with the exception of the owners, are identical, and the facts of each case, with but slight and immaterial variations, are the same.

The question of law upon this appeal having been disposed of in the case of O'Brien v. Garibaldi, above mentioned, adversely to the contention of the plaintiff, it follows that the judgment and order here appealed from must be affirmed. It is so ordered.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; HALL, J.

15 Cal. App. 509

PARK et al. v. GRUWELL. (Civ. 861.)
(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Feb. 27, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 965*)—VENUE (§ 52*)—RULINGS ON APPLICATION FOR CHANGE OF VENUE—DISCRETION OF COURT.

The granting or refusing of a change of venue for the convenience of witnesses rests in the discretion of the trial court, and its rulings will be disturbed only where there has been an abuse of discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3836; Dec. Dig. § 965; Venue*, Cent. Dig. §§ 76, 77; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

2. VENUE (§ 52*)—CHANGE OF PLACE OF TRIAL FOR CONVENIENCE OF WITNESSES.

Refusal to grant a change of the place of trial of an action for negligent death to the county in which the accident occurred, based on the convenience of witnesses, was an abuse of discretion, where plaintiff and all the witnesses, excepting defendant and his guardian ad litem and a witness, resided in such county, and where its county seat was more accessible to such excepted persons than the county seat in the county in which the action was pending.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. §§ 76, 77; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Lake County; V. S. Sayre, Judge.

Action by Alice L. Park and others against Lewis E. Gruwell. From an order refusing to change the place of trial, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Albert H. Elliott and Herbert V. Keeling, for appellants. C. M. Crawford, for respondent.

HALL, J. Plaintiffs, as the widow and children of Dean W. Park, brought this action in Santa Clara county to recover damages for the death of said Dean W. Park, alleged to have been caused through the negligence of defendant. Defendant is a minor and appeared by his guardian ad litem, Fannie H. Gruwell.

Upon demand of the defendant, before answer filed, the place of trial of said action was changed to Lake county, where defendant resides. After answer had been filed, plaintiffs moved that the place of trial be changed to Santa Clara county, upon the ground that the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be promoted by the change. This motion was denied, and plaintiffs in due time appealed.

It is alleged in substance in the complaint that, while Dean W. Park was riding a bicycle in an easterly direction along a driveway in the grounds of the Leland Stanford, Jr., University, defendant, at the same time and place, was riding a bicycle in a westerly direction at a reckless and dangerous rate of speed, and so carelessly and negligently rode and ran the same that, without fault of said Dean W. Park, defendant ran into and collided with said Park and injured him, so that he died from such injuries about four hours later.

Defendant in his answer denied the allegations of the complaint constituting the gravamen of the action, including the allegation as to the death of said Park. Defendant also affirmatively pleaded that the collision and injury to said Park, if any was received, were caused by the negligence of said Park.

The motion was heard upon the complaint and answer, affidavit of plaintiff Alice L. Park, affidavit of Fannie H. Gruwell, guardian ad litem of defendant, and a certified copy of the testimony taken at the coroner's inquest on the body of Dean W. Park.

[1] Appellants, at the outset, very properly concede that the granting or refusing a change of venue upon the grounds upon which the motion was based rests largely in the discretion of the trial court, and that this court can only interfere when there is plainly an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court disclosed by the record. Appellants, however, contend that the record does show such an abuse of discretion, and, after a careful examination of the record, in the correctness of this position we are constrained to agree.

[2] The accident occurred at Palo Alto, in Santa Clara county, where all the plaintiffs and all the witnesses to the accident reside. Indeed it appears that all the witnesses, whether they saw the accident or not, reside at Palo Alto, except the defendant, his guardian ad litem, and one Borland, who it is shown resides in the city and county of San Francisco. No showing, however, was made as to what either the guardian ad litem or said Borland could or would testify to. It is apparent that a resident of San Francisco could more easily appear as a witness at San Jose, the county seat of Santa Clara county, than at Lakeport, the county seat of Lake county, which, as the record shows, cannot be reached by way of any railroad at all, and which is at a much greater distance from San Francisco than is San Jose.

It is true, likewise, that the affidavit of plaintiff Alice L. Park does not disclose what testimony can or will be given by the witnesses named by her, but she does name as the witnesses that will be produced by plaintiffs at the trial Ledley L. Ware, a teacher at said university, Franklin F. Wolff, Josiah H. Kirk, a practicing physician at Palo Alto, Josiah W. Roller, Alva L. Jewett, and James Stevenson. The certified copy of the testimony taken at the coroner's inquest, however, shows that each of these witnesses gave testimony at such inquest; that Ware and Wolff were present at the scene of the accident when it occurred, and that Jewett and Stevenson, both hackmen, appeared immediately afterward, and each conveyed away one of the participants in the collision. Dr. Kirk was called immediately, and ministered unto the deceased until he died, four hours later.

Ware gave testimony that was not only material and pertinent to the case, but tended to support the essential and controverted allegations of the complaint. While it is not at all clear that the testimony of either Wolff, Jewett or Stevenson will tend to disclose who was at fault in the matter of the collision, each, because of his presence, either at the time of the accident or immediately thereafter, will be a proper and material witness to be examined as to the immediate surroundings of the accident. The testimony of these witnesses fully supplied the deficiencies of plaintiff's affidavit.

It was shown that plaintiffs are possessed of very limited means. The case is of such a character that it manifestly cannot be very satisfactorily tried upon deposition, even if plaintiffs were able to bear the additional expense of so doing. None of the witnesses could be compelled to appear at Lakeport. If they or any of them voluntarily appeared, it would be at considerable expense and loss of time. On the other hand, San Jose is accessible by rail from San Francisco, where Borland resides, at little expense and in less than two hours time, and can be reached from Palo Alto at much less expense, either in time or money.

The case is in its essential features very similar to Thompson v. Brandt, 98 Cal. 155, 32 Pac. 890, in which an order denying a change of venue was reversed, and the court ordered to grant the motion.

We think it clearly appears without substantial conflict that both the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be promoted by a change of the place of trial to Santa Clara county, where the cause of action arose.

The order is reversed, and the court is directed to grant the motion.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

15 Cal. App. 469

BOND v. KARMA-AJAX CONSOL. MINING CO. (Civ. 909.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 24, 1911.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 145*)—DEFAULT—RIGHT TO RELIEF—GROUNDS—MERITS ALONE.

If a party applying to be relieved from a default, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, satisfactorily shows inadvertence or excusable neglect, and files a sufficient affidavit of merits, he cannot be denied relief, because his adversary produces proof by affidavits which overcomes the prima facie showing of merits made by such defendant; but, until the primary question as to excusable inadvertence or neglect has been determined in favor of the moving party, he is not entitled to relief, be his merits ever so strong or satisfactory.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 292-295; Dec. Dig. § 145.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1074*)—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

Where it is rightly decided on motion to vacate a default judgment that excusable negligence or inadvertence by defendant is not shown, any error in admitting or excluding evidence touching the merits is not prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4248, 4249; Dec. Dig. § 1074.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 957*)—REVIEW—MOTIONS TO VACATE DEFAULT.

Before an appellate court can disturb an order made on a motion to set aside a default judgment, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, abuse of discretion must clearly appear.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3823; Dec. Dig. § 957.*]

4. JUDGMENT (§ 143*)—DEFAULT JUDGMENT—VACATION.

It was not an abuse of discretion to refuse to set aside a default judgment, where defendant relied on a showing that its president, believing that the claims sued on were justly due, concealed from the directors information of the pendency of the suit; that when the suit was brought defendant was not actively engaged in the business, and no regular directors' meetings were being held, and that a considerable part of the claim sued on was not owing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 269-291; Dec. Dig. § 143.*]

5. CORPORATIONS (§ 503*)—VENUE.

Const. art. 12, § 16, providing that a corporation may be sued in the county where a contract is made or to be performed, or where the liability occurs, or in the county of the principal place of business of the corporation, subject to change of venue as in other cases, is permissive and entitles plaintiff to choose which of the counties he desires to sue in, and, if the county chosen is not of the principal place of business, the corporation cannot secure a change of venue on that ground.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1943; Dec. Dig. § 503.*]

6. JUDGMENT (§ 99*)—VALIDITY—JURISDICTION.

A default judgment against a corporation is valid, where the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and obtained jurisdiction of the corporation by proper service on its president, though, had it appeared, it might have made a showing entitling it to a change of venue under Code Civ. Proc. § 396.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 161; Dec. Dig. § 99.*]

7. VENUE (§ 3*)—LEGISLATIVE POWER.

Provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, prescribing in what counties actions must be tried, is a proper exercise of legislative power.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. § 2; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by A. D. Bond against Karma-Ajax Consolidated Mining Company. From an order refusing to set aside a default judgment, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. C. Austin (Byron Waters, of counsel), for appellant. Walter R. Leeds, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This action was brought to recover the sum of $9,190.30, alleged to be owing by defendant corporation upon various claims, for merchandise furnished, money advanced, and services rendered, all of which were assigned to plaintiff prior to the bringing of suit. No answer having been filed on the part of defendant, judgment was entered against it by default. Service of summons in the action was made upon John A. Gerner, president of defendant, in the city of Los Angeles, on November 30, 1908. On May 19, 1909, judgment was rendered. A motion was presented on September 13, 1909, by defendant, whereby it asked to be relieved from its default and allowed to answer on the ground of inadvertence and excusable neglect, and that the judgment was entered without jurisdiction. An appeal is taken from the order denying that motion.

From the affidavits used on the hearing of the motion, it appeared that at the time of the service of summons Gerner was the president and a large stockholder of defendant corporation; that his holdings of stock, together with those of relatives and friends, made up a large majority of the shares issued; that, when served with summons as president of the corporation, Gerner believed that the claims sued on were all justly due, and for that reason did not formally call the matter to the attention of the board of directors, and caused no defense to be made in the action. It further appeared that at the time the suit was commenced the corporation was not actively engaged in business, and that no regular directors' meetings were being held.

On the part of defendant, affidavits were submitted in which a considerable portion of the alleged indebtedness was denied to be owing, and it was further set out that Gerner had not only failed to inform the board of directors of the fact of the bringing of the action, but that he had concealed information of the pendency of the same from the board of directors, and that a defense would have been interposed, had the directors been apprised of the fact that the corporation had been sued. An affidavit of merits sufficient in form and substance was filed by defendant and, over its objection, counter affidavits were allowed to be filed thereto. In its order denying the motion to vacate the judgment, the court recited that the motion was denied "on the ground that there appears to the court to be no surprise, excusable negligence, or inadvertence on the part of defendant." The decisions, cited in support of appellant's contention that such error was committed by the court in allowing the counter affidavits on the question of merits to be filed as to require that its order be reversed, are not applicable to this case.

[1] It is unquestionably established that, if a party applying to the court to be relieved from the results of his default, under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, makes out a satisfactory showing of inadvertence or excusable neglect, and files a sufficient affidavit of merits, he cannot be denied relief, because the opposite party produces proof by affidavits which, in the opinion of the court, overcomes the prima facie showing of merits made by such defendant. But, until the primary question as to whether or not there has been excusable inadvertence or neglect has been determined in favor of a moving party, he is not entitled to relief, be his showing of merits ever so strong or satisfactory.

[2] Where it is rightly decided, therefore, that no case is presented of excusable neglect or inadvertence, then any error committed by the court in admitting or refusing to admit proof touching the merits of the controversy cannot be prejudicial. In the decisions to which reference is made by appellant, notably, Douglass v. Todd, 96 Cal. 657, 31 Pac. 623, 31 Am. St. Rep. 247, and Rauer's Law, etc., Co. v. Gilleran, 138 Cal. 354, 71 Pac. 445, where orders of the kind under review here were considered and reversed, it appears in each of the cases that the evidence which was received, contradicting the showing of merits, controlled the court in making the orders appealed from. In this case the court specified in its order that it found that there had been no excusable neglect or inadvertence. Hence the admission of the affidavits in rebuttal of the showing made by appellant that it had a meritorious defense to the action, if error, was not prejudicial.

[3] It is next contended that under the showing of excusable neglect, as made, defendant was entitled to have the judgment vacated and leave granted it to answer. Before an appellate court is authorized to disturb an order, made upon a motion to set aside a judgment under the provisions of section 473, it must clearly appear that the court making the order has abused the discretion committed to it; otherwise stated, that the order is without any evidence whatsoever to sustain it. Moore v. Thompson, 138 Cal. 23, 70 Pac. 930; Nicoll v. Weldon, 130 Cal. 666, 63 Pac. 63.

[4] Only a brief abstract of the substance of a portion of the affidavits as they were presented to the court at the time of the hearing of the motion has been set out herein, but enough is shown to make it clear that the judgment of the court was exercised within the limits of a reasonable discretion, and was supported by competent evidence.

We now reach the third point urged as a reason why the motion to vacate the judgment should have been granted. It is insisted that the superior court of Kern county had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the action, nor of the defendant corporation. Section 16, art. 12, of the Constitution of California, is cited in support of this claim. That section provides as follows: "A corporation may be sued in the county where the contract is made or is to be performed, or where the obligation or liability occurs; or in the county where the principal place of business of such corporation is situated, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial, as in other cases." At the time this action was commenced, defendant had its principal place of business within the city of Los Angeles, and it may further be said, or at least assumed, that the record sufficiently shows that defendant did not agree to satisfy any of the obligations sued upon in the county of Kern, and that it did not there contract for the performance or furnishing of any of the things which were furnished or performed by plaintiff's assignors. If, under the section quoted of the Constitution, the term "may be sued" is to be interpreted as though it read "must be sued," then there would be no escape from the conclusion which defendant's counsel urges, to wit, that this action was wrongly brought in a county where defendant corporation could not be sued, and hence that the judgment was rendered without jurisdiction. This precise question has been before our Supreme Court and very fully considered in several decisions.

[5] In these cases it has been held that section 16, art. 12, is permissive in its effect; that it is intended to give to a plaintiff the right to choose which of the counties he desires to prosecute his action in, and that, having chosen one of the counties enumerated, if it perchance happens to be one within which the principal place of business of the corporation is not located, the corporation sued cannot secure a change of place of trial on the ground that the action is not brought in the county of its residence. It is distinctly held that this constitutional provision does not deprive the superior court of any county of the state of jurisdiction to hear and determine all classes of actions generally, within the limits of its jurisdiction, as defined in another article of the Constitution. Fresno National Bank v. Superior Court, 83 Cal. 491, 24 Pac. 157; Griffin & Skelly Co. v. Magnolia & Healdsburg Fruit Cannery Co., 107 Cal. 378, 40 Pac. 495; Miller & Lux v. Kern County Land Co., 134 Cal. 586, 66 Pac. 856. Section 5 of article 6 of the Constitution defines the jurisdiction of the superior courts; the only limitation as to the place of commencement of any action is expressed in the concluding portion of that section, as follows: "Provided that all actions for the recovery of possession of, quieting the title to, or for the enforcement of liens upon real estate, shall be commenced in the county in which the real estate, or any part thereof, affected by such action or actions, is situated." The causes of action set out in plaintiff's complaint in no way concerned the title or right to the possession of real estate, or the matter of any lien connected therewith.

[6] The superior court of Kern county had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action, and it obtained jurisdiction of defendant corporation by proper service of summons on its president. Herd v. Tuohy, 133 Cal. 55, 65 Pac. 139.

[7] The Legislature has the power, which it has exercised in the enactment of certain sections of the Code of Civil Procedure, to determine in what counties trials of certain actions must be had. Of course, under the provisions of section 16, art. 12, and the decisions construing that section which have been hereinbefore cited, it could not be provided by statute that a change of place of trial could be had on the ground of residence in another county, where the conditions affecting the subject-matter are among those enumerated in said section 16. Had the defendant appeared in this action before judgment was taken and in time, it might have made a showing sufficient to entitle it to a transfer of the action for trial in Los Angeles county. "If the county in which the action is commenced is not the proper county for the trial thereof, the action may, notwithstanding, be tried therein, unless the defendant, at the time he answers or demurs, files an affidavit of merits, and demands, in writing, that the trial be had in the proper county." Code Civ. Proc. § 396. No appearance by answer or demurrer having been made, the judgment as entered against defendant is regular and valid.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

15 Cal. App. 503

EDWARDS v. SWEIGERT et al., Board of Trustees of the Police Relief and Pension Fund. (Civ. 790.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Feb. 27, 1911. Rehearing Denied March 29, 1911. Denied by Supreme Court April 28, 1911.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 187*)—POLICE OFFICERS—PENSIONS—PERSONS ENTITLED.

Under San Francisco Charter, art. 8, c. 10, §§ 2, 3, providing for the retirement and pensioning of police officers during their lives, and, under section 4, allowing a pension to the widow of an officer killed in performing his duty, the widow of one who, before his death, was retired for injuries and received a pension until his death, is not entitled to a pension.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 187.*]

2. STATUTES (§ 206*)—CONSTRUCTION—LANGUAGE.

Some effect must be given to every word and clause in a statute, if possible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 283; Dec. Dig. § 206.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 187*)—POLICE PENSIONS—PERSONS ENTITLED—WIDOWS OF OFFICERS "KILLED."

The word "killed," as used in San Francisco Charter, art. 8, c. 10, § 4, providing a pension for widows of police officers killed while performing duty, applies to death resulting from violence or external force.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 187.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 3930, 3931.]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 187*)—POLICE PENSIONS—PERSONS ENTITLED.

Under San Francisco Charter, art. 8, c. 10, § 4, providing pensions for dependents of police officers killed in performing duty, death need not actually occur during such performance; it being sufficient that injury occurred then, and death soon followed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 187.*]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 187*)—POLICE PENSIONS—PERSONS ENTITLED.

Under San Francisco Charter, art. 8, c. 10, § 4, providing pensions for dependents of police officers killed while performing duty, an officer cannot be held to have been killed in the discharge of his duty, though he was injured in its performance, where he was not thereby disabled until seven years later, and was thereafter on a disability pension for two years before his death.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 187.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by Mabel Edwards against Charles A. Sweigert and others, trustees of the Police Relief and Pension Fund. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed, with directions.

Percy V. Long, City Atty., and John F. English, Asst. City Atty., for appellants. Breen & Kelly, for respondent.

HALL, J. Plaintiff is the widow of one John Clark Edwards, deceased, formerly a member of the police department of the city and county of San Francisco. She presented a petition to the board of police commissioners, who under the law constitute the board of trustees of the police relief and pension fund, praying to be allowed a pension, as the widow of a member of the said police department, killed while in the performance of his duty.

The board, without taking any evidence, denied her petition. She then filed a petition in the superior court for a writ of mandate to compel said board to hear her petition, and to take evidence thereon. To this petition the board filed a general demurrer, which was overruled, and upon the defendants refusing to plead further, judgment went for plaintiff. From this judgment, defendants in due time appealed to this court.

Respondent annexed to and made a part of her complaint in the superior court a copy of her petition to the board of police commissioners. It is the contention of appellants that the statement of facts in her said petition to the board showed that she was not entitled to any pension, and that it was therefore not the duty of said board to receive any testimony thereon, but that they properly disposed of the matter by denying her petition.

From her said petition it clearly appears, among other things, that her late husband, on the 3d day of March, 1900, while in the performance of his duty as a police officer, was injured; that on January 21, 1907, almost seven years after such injury, he was retired by reason of such injury upon a pension of $50 per month, which continued to the day of his death, which occurred January 30, 1909, almost nine years after receiving the injury. And upon her information and belief she alleged in her petition that the "said injuries so received as aforesaid * * * by said John Clark Edwards were the direct and proximate cause of the death of the said John Clark Edwards."

[1] Appellants contend, first, that the widow of one who, prior to his death, is retired from the department for injuries, and receives a pension therefor until his death, is not entitled to a pension as such widow; and, second, that one who does not die for nearly nine years after being injured is not, within the meaning of the language of the charter, "killed while in the performance of his duty."

Provision is made in the charter of the city and county of San Francisco for pensions to members of the police department and certain of their relatives. These provisions are contained in sections 2, 3, 4, and 6 of chapter 10 of article 8. It is under section 4 that plaintiff claims. This section, so far as it is pertinent to this case, provides that: "The commissioners shall, out of the police relief and pension fund, provide for the family of any officer, member or employé of the department who may be killed in the performance of his duty, as follows: First. Should the deceased be married, his widow shall as long as she shall remain unmarried, be paid a monthly pension equal to one-half of the salary attached to the rank of decedent at the time of his death." Then follow provisions for other dependent relatives, in case decedent leaves no widow.

Assuming, for the purpose of discussing the first point made by appellants, that a person may be said to be killed while in the performance of his duty, who does not die for approximately nine years after receiving the injury, it is insisted that the language of the other sections relating to pensions limit the general language of section 4, and make it plain that the widow of an officer who, before his death, has drawn a disability pension, is not within the benefits of section 4.

Section 2 provides for the retirement and pensioning of any infirm or disabled member of the department who has arrived at the age of 65 years, and concludes as follows: "No such pension shall be paid unless such person has been an active member of the department for twenty years continuously next preceding his retirement, and the same shall cease at his death." Section 3 makes provision for the retirement and pensioning of any member of the department disabled by reason of any bodily injury received in the performance of his duty; the pension "to be paid to him during his life and to cease at his death." Section 6 provides for pensions to certain dependent relatives of any member who, after 10 years service, shall die from natural causes, and concludes as follows: "But the provisions of this section shall not apply to any member of the department who shall have received any pension under the terms of this chapter."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The concluding clause of this section, and the language that we have italicized in sections 2 and 3, to the effect that the pensions therein referred to shall cease at the death of the member, indicate a general purpose that relatives of members who have been retired and themselves received pensions shall not be entitled to pensions.

But especially significant are the words in section 3, "to cease at his death." It was under this section that John Clark Edwards became entitled to draw the pension that he received because of his injuries. His right to a pension was entirely the creature of this section, and by the terms of the section it was to be paid to him during his life. It was quite unnecessary to add the words "and to cease at his death," if the only purpose was to terminate his pension at his death. A pension granted to a person necessarily terminates at his death, in the absence of words indicating the contrary; and especially is this so when the pension is "to be paid to him during his life." The only effect the words in section 3 "to cease at his death" can possibly have is to operate in restraint of some general language elsewhere contained, under which some relative might claim a pension upon the death of the disabled member. This general language is found in section 4.

In both sections 3 and 4 the charter makers were providing for conditions growing out of injuries received by a member of the department in the performance of his duty. Such injuries might result in death at once or within a reasonable time. Such condition was provided for in section 4, by allowing a pension to the widow or other dependent relative. On the other hand, such injuries might result in disability for a greater or less time. For this condition they provided in section 3 a pension for the disabled member, "to be paid to him during his life"; and, to prevent the claim of a pension by his widow or other relatives under the claim that such member was "killed while in the performance of his duty," they added the clause, "and to cease at his death." This is the only construction of the law that will give any force or effect to the clause just quoted. It may work an inequality or hardship in some cases, but there are few laws that do not.

[2] It is a cardinal rule of construction of statutes that some effect must be given to every word and clause, if possible. Words in a statute should never be construed as unnecessary and surplusage, if a reasonable construction can be adopted which will give force to and preserve all the words of the statute. Gates v. Salmon, 35 Cal. 576, 95 Am. Dec. 139; Langenour v. French, 34 Cal. 92; Appeal of Houghton, 42 Cal. 35; People v. Perkins, 85 Cal. 509, 26 Pac. 245; Leversee v. Reynolds, 13 Iowa, 310; 36 Cyc. 1128. The addition of the words "to cease at his death" to the clause in section 3, awarding a disability pension to a policeman, "to be paid to him during his life," adds nothing to the meaning of the section, unless it be to cut off just such a claim as is made by plaintiff in this case. We think it must be given just this effect, and for this reason the petition that plaintiff presented to the board of police commissioners showed that she was not entitled to any pension, and it was unnecessary for the board to hear evidence thereon, and it could properly dispose of her application without such hearing.

[3] The views we have come to upon the first point discussed probably make it unnecessary to determine whether or not one who lives for approximately nine years after being injured while in the performance of his duties, and then dies as the result of such injuries, can be said to have been "killed while in the performance of his duties," within the meaning of the police pension provisions of the charter. But, as the point made by the appellant in this regard, if well founded, is decisive of this appeal, it is not improper to pass upon it. The word "killed," as used in the statute, conveys the idea of a death resulting from violence or external force.

[4] The petition of plaintiff nowhere alleges in terms that her late husband was killed while in the performance of his duties. It very properly simply alleges the actual facts, and thus clearly shows that he was injured while in the performance of his duties, and that such injuries resulted in his disability and retirement from service, upon a pension, about seven years later, and his death about two years still later. Do these facts show that he was "killed while in the performance of his duties," within the meaning of the statute? The word "while" as used in the section has relation to the time during which the duties are being performed. Doubtless it is not necessary that both the injuries and the death occur while the officer is performing his duty as such officer, for we think that, both in popular language and legal phraseology, one may be said to have been killed while in the performance of his duty who is injured while thus employed, and soon thereafter dies from such injury. "In popular language and in legal phraseology, for some purposes, a party is said to have killed one on whom he has inflicted a blow of which the wounded person soon dies." Martin v. Copiah County, 71 Miss. 407, 15 South. 73.

But there must be some limit to the time one may survive an injury received while in the performance of his duty, beyond which, if his death result, it cannot be said he was killed while in the performance of his duty.

Looking to the analogy presented by the law of murder, it is the rule both of the statute of this and, we believe, of all the states, as well as by the common law, that a person charged with murder cannot be held responsible for the death of his victim, unless the death occur within a year and a day from the infliction of the injury. However, we are not called upon, by the facts of this case, to determine how soon one must die from injuries received while in the performance of his duty to come within the meaning of the words "killed while in the performance of his duty."

[5] It is sufficient to say that one who is injured while in the performance of his duties, and is not even disabled thereby for approximately seven years, and is then retired on a disability pension, and dies at the expiration of two years more while in retirement on such pension, cannot be said to have been killed while in the performance of his duty. For this reason the board of commissioners properly dismissed plaintiff's petition without taking evidence thereon.

For the reasons above set forth, the judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to sustain defendants' demurrer to plaintiff's complaint.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

15 Cal. App. 475

MURRAY SHOW CASE & FIXTURE CO. v. SULLIVAN et al. (Civ. 870.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 24, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 24, 1911.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 104*)—VALIDITY—DURESS.

That the president of a corporation told defendant manager that, unless a certain shortage was paid, he would rely on the manager's bond to collect the amount due was not a threat of arrest invalidating notes given by defendant in settlement of the shortage, even though defendant believed that failure to pay might result through the bonding company in a prosecution for embezzlement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 242-247; Dec. Dig. § 104.*]

2. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 104*)—VALIDITY—DURESS—EXTORTION.

That the president of a corporation told defendant manager that, unless a certain shortage was paid, he would rely on the manager's bond to collect the amount due did not bring the case within the provisions of Civ. Code, §§ 1569, 1570, relating to duress, etc., or Pen. Code, §§ 518, 519, relating to extortion and threats constituting extortion, so as to invalidate notes given by defendant in settlement of the shortage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 242-247; Dec. Dig. § 104.*]

3. CONTRACTS (§ 68*) — CONSIDERATION — DOUBTFUL CLAIM.

The compromise of a doubtful claim asserted in good faith constitutes a sufficient consideration for a new promise, even though it may ultimately be found that the claimant could not have prevailed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 328-330; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

4. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 94*)—CONSIDERATION.

Where defendant conceded that a certain amount was due plaintiff, but disputed another sum claimed by the latter, the acceptance by plaintiff of defendant's notes for the total amount and the extension of time of payment for the amount conceded to be due, together with the waiver of right of action to recover on defendant's bond, constituted a sufficient consideration for a note covering the disputed amount.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 166-212; Dec. Dig. § 94.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by Murray Show Case & Fixture Company, a corporation, against F. L. Sullivan and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Milton K. Young and John I. Stafford, for appellants. Schweitzer & Hutton, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to recover upon five promissory notes made and delivered by defendants to plaintiff's assignor.

The defense is based upon the alleged fact that in part the notes were without consideration, and that all were procured by fraud and threats to have defendant Sullivan arrested for embezzlement. The notes were duly made and delivered to the Acme Door & Glass Company, which transferred them to plaintiff. On June 21, 1906, one W. E. Little, who was a stockholder and president of the Acme Door & Glass Company, entered into an agreement with defendant Sullivan, whereby the latter was employed as manager of the Acme Door & Glass Company for a period of one year. Under the terms of the agreement, Sullivan's compensation was to be $150 per month and 30 per cent. of the dividends derived from the stock owned by said Little in the corporation, which sum of 30 per cent. was to be due and payable after the stock had been carefully invoiced, and had been figured and rechecked for accuracy. Sullivan entered upon his duties and continued in the employ of the company for the period of one year covered by his contract, drawing his salary of $150 per month, and, in addition thereto, received $311.60 on account of the 30 per cent. of the amount paid Little as dividends upon his stock, which dividends were based upon an inventory of the property made in January, 1907. At the date of the agreement made between Little and Sullivan, whereby the latter was employed as manager of said Acme Door & Glass Company, Sullivan, pursuant to the terms of his contract, procured from the Ætna Indemnity Company a fidelity bond conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties devolving upon him as the manager of said Acme Door & Glass Company. While so engaged as such manager, pursuant to the terms of said contract so made with Little, Sullivan, without right, appropriated goods of said Acme Door & Glass Company to the amount of about $30, and also appropriated the sum of $429.93, to which he was not entitled.

Soon after the expiration of his term of employment, he was called upon to make good the shortage and to adjust his affairs with the company, and also to repay the 30 per cent. of the dividend declared upon the stock of Little, for the alleged reason that the dividend had been wrongfully declared, inasmuch as the company had not made any profits during the year out of which to declare dividends. After this conversation, and nothing being done, the Acme Door & Glass Company, through Little, its president, wrote Sullivan that, unless he arranged to adjust affairs with the company on or before September 3d, that the matter would be placed in the proper channels for collection. Thereupon Sullivan called upon Little, and, as found by the court, denied owing said sum of $311.60, and insisted he should not be required to refund said amount, but he made no denial as to other sums claimed on account of the overdraft and goods taken by him. Little, however, insisted upon the full amount being paid, whereupon Sullivan offered to give his notes, signed by himself alone, for the full amount claimed, which Little refused to accept, insisting that such notes must be signed by a co-maker; and thereupon Sullivan took the notes and left the presence of Little, and on the same day returned and delivered the notes executed by himself and defendant Annie F. Paul.

The court further finds that Little did not accuse the defendant of the crime of embezzlement; nor did he menace or threaten Sullivan with criminal prosecution upon the charge of embezzlement; nor threaten to cause his arrest or imprisonment, unless he would execute the notes set out in the complaint; nor menace or intimidate Sullivan in order to secure the execution and delivery of the notes; nor did he promise defendant that no prosecution or arrest would be made if Sullivan would execute the notes; nor is it true that Sullivan believed or feared that Little would cause his arrest or imprisonment; nor that he presented the notes to his codefendant Annie F. Paul under any menace or threats whatsoever. That upon the execution of the notes Little and the Acme Door & Glass Company surrendered and gave up all right, claim, and interest to indemnity under said fidelity bond so procured by defendant Sullivan, and canceled all claims thereunder.

[1] From these and other findings it clearly appears that the execution and delivery of the notes were not procured by fraud, duress, intimidation, or threats to have Sullivan arrested for embezzlement, or any other offense. While the evidence touching the question is conflicting, the testimony of Little clearly tends to support the court's findings. It is true that when he discovered the shortage, and after being unable to obtain an adjustment from Sullivan, he called upon the agent of the bonding company, told him of Sullivan's shortage, made inquiry as to the company's liability upon the bond, and asked what he should do with reference to the matter. The agent advised him to notify the company, which he did by letter, dated September 6th. When he had the interview with Sullivan on September 7th, he told Sullivan in the course of the conversation that, unless the matter was satisfactorily adjusted, they would bring action to recover against the sum claimed. "He told me," says Sullivan, "that I was under $5,000 bond there, and that he would recover that way"; "that he would rely on the bond to collect the amount due in some way." But this was not a threat of arrest, even though Sullivan believed, as he says he did, that his failure to pay the shortage might result through the bonding company in a prosecution for embezzlement. Little had a right to look to the bond for protection, and his telling Sullivan that he would rely upon the bond, unless the matter was adjusted, was clearly within such right. The case at bar bears no analogy to the cases of Morrill v. Nightingale, 93 Cal. 452, 28 Pac. 1068, 27 Am. St. Rep. 207, and Mitchell v. Finnell, 101 Cal. 618, 36 Pac. 123, in the first of which a criminal prosecution was instituted and dismissed in consideration of the giving of the notes, and in the second a criminal prosecution threatened, to avoid which the note was given without other consideration.

[2] Neither do the facts bring the case within the provisions of sections 1569, 1570, Civil Code, nor 518, 519, Penal Code. The contention of appellant is that merely suggesting procedure upon the bond implied a threat to injure the character of Sullivan, as well as a threat of arrest and imprisonment, and hence the notes given by Sullivan in settlement of his shortage should be held void. The mere statement of the proposition is sufficient answer thereto. Sullivan admitted a large part of the indebtedness. It was his duty to pay it at once. He was unable to do so; whereupon it was agreed that, if he would give his notes for the amount, including the claim in dispute, the payment thereof to be extended over a period of 18 months, with a satisfactory surety, they should be received in full settlement. He left Little, saying he would try to do it. He was under no restraint. There was no threat, other than that the company would, if necessary, invoke the law in aid of enforcing its rights. The contention is wholly without merit. Wolff v. Bluhm, 95 Wis. 257, 70 N. W. 73, 60 Am. St. Rep. 115; Beath v. Chapeton, 115 Mich. 506, 73 N. W. 806, 69 Am. St. Rep. 589; Wolf v. Troxell, 94 Mich. 573, 54 N. W. 383; Cass Co. Bank v. Bricker, 34 Neb. 516, 54 N. W. 575, 33 Am. St. Rep. 649.

[3] Appellant insists that there was no consideration for that portion of the note embracing the dividend of $311.60 paid Sullivan. "The compromise of a doubtful claim asserted and maintained in good faith constitutes a sufficient consideration for a new promise, even though it may ultimately be found that the claimant could not have prevailed." Collection Co. v. Buckman, 150 Cal. 163, 88 Pac. 710 (9 L. R. A. [N. S.] 568, 119 Am. St. Rep. 164). Not only does the claim appear to have been in dispute, but it was asserted in good faith.

[4] Moreover we think the acceptance of notes and extending the time within which to pay the amount conceded to be due, and waiver of right of action to recover upon Sullivan's bond, if such right existed, would constitute a sufficient consideration for the note covering the amount of the dividend.

In his answer Sullivan alleged that Little and other directors of the Acme Door & Glass Company had entered into a conspiracy to defraud him by abstaining from declaring any dividend out of the profits earned during the last half of the year of his employment, and in the prayer of the answer asked that they be made parties to the action, and that he have an accounting. He offered no evidence whatever tending to establish the facts so alleged; nor does it appear that he ever asked for the order prayed for. Hence the absence of a finding upon the issue, or want of action on the part of the court in making the order, constituted no error.

It is unnecessary to discuss other points made by appellant, other than to say that an examination thereof discloses no merit in them.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

15 Cal. App. 480

CARR v. CARR et al. (Civ. 753.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 24, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 25, 1911.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 444*)—ACTIONS—PERSONAL OR REPRESENTATIVE CAPACITY.

The complaint, in an action brought by an administrator to recover money deposited in the defendant bank, set out the death of intestate, that plaintiff was duly appointed and qualified administrator of deceased, that the deposit is the property of the estate, and that plaintiff, "as such administrator," had demanded of defendants a delivery to him, "as such administrator," of the money so on deposit, but in the title to the action the word "as" was not inserted after the name of the plaintiff. Held, that the averments clearly disclosed that plaintiff had brought the action as administrator, and not in his own right.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 1817; Dec. Dig. § 444.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 451*)—TRIAL—FINDINGS—CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION—CONCLUSION OF LAW.

A finding, in an action by an administrator to recover money deposited by deceased in defendant bank, that the deceased opened an account in his own name in the bank and thereafter made deposits on and drew from said account, and while such account remained with defendant bank deceased, in the presence of this son, caused the bank to change the deposit to the names of himself and his son, as "joint owners, payable to either or survivor," and that deceased thereby agreed with the bank that the account could be paid by the bank either to himself or his son during his lifetime and after his death could be paid to the son, does not support a conclusion that the deposit was the property of the deceased, and continued to be his property after such agreement, and at all times until his death.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 1881; Dec. Dig. § 451.*]

3. GIFTS (§ 30*)—INTER VIVOS—DELIVERY—PROPERTY IN POSSESSION AND CONTROL—"VERBAL GIFT."

Under Civ. Code, § 1147, providing that a "verbal gift," which is defined by section 1146 as a transfer of personal property, made voluntarily, and without consideration, "is not valid, unless the means of obtaining possession and control of the thing are given, nor, if it is capable of delivery, unless there an actual or symbolical delivery," a transfer by a bank depositor of an account to his credit in the bank to himself and his son, with the right and power to each to draw on the account during their lives, with a direction to the bank to pay the residue remaining upon the death of either to the survivor, cannot operate as a gift inter vivos, since the donee is not given full and complete dominion of the thing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Cent. Dig. §§ 52-57; Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

4. GIFTS (§ 57*)—"DONATIO CAUSA MORTIS"—EXPECTATION OF DEATH.

Under Civ. Code, § 1149, which defines a "donatio causa mortis" as "one which is made in contemplation, fear or peril of death, and with intent that it should take effect only in case of the death of the giver," a transfer of a bank deposit by a depositor to himself and his son jointly, with the right and power to each to draw on the account during their lives, and a direction to the bank to pay the residue remaining upon the death of either to the survivor, cannot operate as a gift causa mortis, since it was intended that the transfer should take effect immediately and vest and be enjoyed in present.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Cent. Dig. § 106; Dec. Dig. § 57.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3087-3091; vol. 8, p. 7670.]

5. TRUSTS (§ 34*)—CREATION—DEPOSIT OF MONEY IN BANK—INTENTION OF DEPOSITOR.

Under Civ. Code, § 2221, which, subject to section 852, declares a voluntary trust created as to the trustor and the cestui by any words or acts of the trustor indicating with reasonable certainty an intention on his part to create a trust; the subject, purpose, and beneficiary of the trust; and section 2222, defining acts and words by which a voluntary trust is created as to the trustee—a transfer of a bank deposit by a depositor to himself and a son jointly, with the right and power to each to draw on the account during their lives, with a direction to the bank to pay the residue remaining upon the death of either to the survivor, shows an intention to create a trust in the depositor for his son and his son's joint benefit during their joint lives, with the remainder to the son at the depositor's death, or a reversion to himself on the son's death.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 44; Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

6. TRUSTS (§ 25*)—CREATION—LANGUAGE USED.

Where a trust can fairly be implied from the language used, as the intention of the parties, such intention will be executed as a trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 34-37; Dec. Dig. § 25.*]

7. TRUSTS (§ 25*)—CREATION—SUFFICIENCY OF LANGUAGE USED—INTENT.

The use of the words "trust" and "trustee," or any certain form of words, is not indispensable to the creation of a trust, but there must be some words which indicate with reasonable certainty a purpose to create a trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 34-37; Dec. Dig. § 25.*]

8. TRUSTS (§ 59*)—EXPRESS TRUST—LEGALITY OF PROVISIONS.

Under Civ. Code, § 2280, a valid trust in money may be created, with the power reserved by the trustor to practically revoke it by drawing on the trust fund until it is completely exhausted, before the beneficiaries can enjoy the fruits thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 80; Dec. Dig. § 59.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; A. J. Buckles, Judge.

Action by Daniel Carr, administrator of the estate of Michael Carr, deceased, against M. K. Carr and the Vallejo Commercial Bank. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Carr appeals. Reversed, with directions to enter judgment in favor of defendant Carr.

W. H. Morrissey and P. B. Lynch, for appellant. F. W. Hall and L. A. Hilborn, for respondent Vallejo Commercial Bank. Aitken & Aitken, for respondent Carr.

HART, J. This action was brought by plaintiff, as administrator of the estate of one Michael Carr, deceased, to recover from the defendants certain moneys which had been, in his lifetime, deposited by said Michael in the defendant bank.

Judgment passed for plaintiff, and the present appeal is by said M. K. Carr from said judgment, supported by a bill of exceptions.

[1] It is first contended that the omission to insert the word "as" after the name of plaintiff, in the title of the action, necessarily makes the action one prosecuted by plaintiff in his individual right, and not in his representative capacity. There is no merit in this claim, since the averments of the complaint themselves clearly and distinctly disclose that plaintiff brought the action as the administrator of the estate of Michael Carr, deceased, and not in his own right.

The complaint sets out the death of deceased, and that he died intestate; that plaintiff was duly appointed administrator of the estate of said deceased, and that he duly qualified and is acting as such; that the money referred to in said complaint is the property of said estate; that "plaintiff, as such administrator of the estate of Michael Carr, deceased, demanded of said defendants, and each of them, * * * that they and each of them deliver to him, as such administrator, said money so on deposit; that said defendants have, and each of them has, refused, and still refuse, to deliver said money, or any part thereof, to plaintiff, as such administrator." These allegations are sufficient to show, and, as stated, do clearly show, that the action is prosecuted by plaintiff solely in his character as administrator of the estate of the deceased, and nothing more is or ought to be required to make the pleading perfectly safe as against an assault on the ground thus urged against it. Burling v. Thompkins, 77 Cal. 258, 19 Pac. 429, and cases therein cited.

[2] Upon the merits there is no dispute as to the facts. Indeed the facts of the transaction out of which the action arises are admitted by all the parties, and, as admitted, found by the court. The single question presented for solution, as I view the record, is as to their legal effect, or, stated concretely, the question propounded is whether the findings of fact warrant the conclusions of law and support the judgment.

From the pleadings, the evidence, and stipulations of the parties are gleaned the following facts from which the findings are deduced: On the 24th day of May, 1904, said Michael Carr opened a savings account with defendant bank, depositing therein on said day the sum of $730. He continued to add to said deposit from time to time and at other times drew upon the same until the 11th day of September, 1908, on which date he had on deposit and credited to his account in said bank the sum of $996.30. "On said September 11, 1908," so alleges the answer filed by defendant bank, "the said Michael Carr, in the presence of said M. K. Carr (his son), caused said bank to change said deposit, amounting to $996.30, to the names of Michael Carr or M. K. Carr, as 'joint owners, payable to either or survivor,' and said Michael Carr thereby agreed with said bank that said account could be paid by said bank to either Michael Carr or M. K. Carr in the lifetime of Michael Carr, and, after the death of Michael Carr, could be paid by said bank to M. K. Carr." After said deposit or account was so transferred to Michael and M. K. Carr, jointly, the latter, on several different dates, drew on the same in small amounts. Michael Carr died on the 11th day of November, 1908, and thereafter M. K. Carr continued to draw on said deposit or account from time to time until he had withdrawn therefrom the total sum of $255.

The complaint alleges that at the time of Michael's death there remained in the bank, of the deposit so transferred to Michael and M. K., the sum of $976.30, for which judgment is prayed. The answer of the bank alleges that of the sum so deposited there remained at the time of the commencement of this action, but the sum of $656.41. But the difference between the amount sued for and the amount which the bank claims represented the remainder on deposit at the time of the institution of this action is to be accounted for, manifestly, in the withdrawals by M. K. Carr from the account after the death of his father. The bank paid into court the said sum of $656.41, representing the extent of the deposit at the time the action was begun, and asked that "the title to and ownership of the said money may be litigated between said plaintiff, as such administrator, and said M. K. Carr," etc.

The foregoing is a brief but an accurate statement of the admitted facts from which the court derived its findings, of which the following represents the gravamen of the controversy: "(4) That on May 26, 1904, said Michael Carr opened a savings account, in his own name, with said Vallejo Commercial Bank by making a deposit at that time of $730. That thereafter said Michael Carr made deposits on and drew from said account; that the amount on deposit in said account at the beginning of business on September 11, 1908, was the sum of $996.30. That on September 11, 1908, the said Michael Carr, in the presence of said M. K. Carr, caused said bank to change said deposit amounting to $996.30 to the name of Michael Carr or M. K. Carr, as 'joint owners, payable to either or survivor,' and said Michael Carr thereby agreed with said bank that said account could be paid by said bank to either Michael Carr or M. K. Carr in the lifetime of Michael Carr, and, after the death of Michael Carr, could be paid by said bank to M. K. Carr. That said deposit amounting to said sum of $996.30 was the property of said Michael Carr, and continued to be the property of said Michael Carr after said bank had so changed said deposit, and at all times until the death of said Michael Carr."

There is, as must be manifest from the evidence as we have presented it here, absolutely no direct proof, of any kind or character whatsoever, authorizing the finding that after Michael Carr had caused the deposit to be transferred to himself and M. K. Carr, jointly, the title to or ownership of the money so on deposit and transferred remained at all times in said Michael. If any such finding of fact is warranted at all, it must find the source of its support solely in the fact that, originally, the money deposited with the defendant bank was exclusively Michael's own property, supported by the further fact that, after said transfer, he retained, not only an ownership in the money, but the right and the power to withdraw it at any time during his life. Was the court justified from these facts, in finding as a fact, or concluding as a matter of law, that the sole ownership of the deposit in controversy after the transfer thereof, as described by the evidence and found by the court, still remained in Michael? Or, to state the proposition in another form, does the evidence warrant the conclusion, either of fact or of law, that Michael, although transferring the account to his credit in the bank to himself and his son, M. K., jointly, with the right and the unrestricted power in either to draw on said account during their lives, and with an express direction to the bank to pay the residue remaining, upon the death of either, to the survivor, did not intend that, upon his death, the sole ownership of whatever then remained of the deposit should vest in M. K. Carr?

It seems to me that to hold that the court's findings as to the intention of Michael Carr in the consummation of the transaction or its conclusion as to the legal effect thereof are supported by the evidence would involve a positive disregard of language whose meaning could hardly be less ambiguous or palpable. That Michael Carr intended that the bank should, upon his death, pay to M. K. Carr, for his sole benefit, whatever remained of the joint account at the happening of that event, is a proposition which, it appears to me, cannot admit of the remotest doubt or ground for cavil, under the facts as found by the court with respect to the circumstances attending the transfer of the deposit. If the fact of transferring the deposit to the account of himself and the appellant, as joint owners, with directions to the bank to pay the same out on the order of either while both were living and the remainder to the survivor upon the death of the one or the other, does not clearly and distinctly indicate that Michael Carr intended that, upon his death, his son, M. K. Carr, should be paid by the bank, and thus receive as exclusively his own whatever balance there was then remaining in the account, then it must be admitted that the English language is a most treacherous vehicle for the transmission of thought. If Michael did not intend that the appellant should be paid the money on deposit after his death, why did he use the word "survivor"? And, if he intended that, though the money should then be paid to him, he in turn should divide it between himself and other members of the deceased's family, or paid over to the administrator of his estate, why did he not so declare when he made the transfer, or at some time thereafter? There is, as seen, no evidence affirmatively showing or tending to show that he had any intention that the money remaining in the bank on his death should go to or be shared by any person or persons, other than M. K. Carr. And, in the ascertainment of what Michael intended by the employment of the word "survivor," as indicative of the specific thought in his mind at the time the transfer was made, the fact, as found by the court, that in so transferring said deposit he expressly made and declared himself and appellant joint owners of the deposit, with full and unhampered power in the latter to draw on and thus, if he so desired, to exhaust said deposit during the lives of both, cannot be cast aside as possessing no significance. Indeed, this fact, while of itself or taken alone would not necessarily prove Michael's intent to create a trust, or perhaps would carry little or no force as proof of such intent, is, nevertheless, of considerable force as an aid in the ascertainment of what effect the deceased intended the word "survivor," as thus used by him, should have. And I doubt not, as stated, that said fact very clearly discloses that Michael could have intended nothing less by the use of that word than what said word naturally and etymologically means and implies.

If, then, it appears reasonably certain from the evidence, as well as from the findings, as I think it undoubtedly does, that Michael's intention in this transaction was that, upon his death, M. K. Carr should become the sole owner of the residue of the money then remaining in the bank credited to their joint account, is it not the duty of the courts to carry out and execute such intention, if it can be done without impinging upon or doing violence to any rule or principle of law?

[3] It is unquestionably true, as respondent contends, that the transaction is lacking in some of the essential requisites or elements of a gift, either inter vivos or causa mortis, and the intention of Michael Carr cannot, therefore, be supported or effectuated upon the theory of either such methods of transferring personal property. Section 1147 of our Civil Code provides that "a verbal gift," which is a transfer of personal property, made voluntarily, and without consideration (section 1146, Civ. Code), "is not valid, unless the means of obtaining possession and control of the thing are given, nor, if it is capable of delivery, unless there is an actual or symbolical delivery of the thing to be done." In the case here, Michael Carr, while clearly intending that M. K. should share as a joint owner during their lives in the deposit, still retained the power of entirely destroying or exhausting by his own act the subject of the transfer, and, obviously, M. K. was not given full and complete dominion over and control of said deposit, a requisite essential to the perfection of a valid gift.

[4] A "donatio causa mortis" "is one which is made in contemplation, fear, or peril of death, and with intent that it shall take effect only in case of the death of the giver." Section 1149, Civ. Code.

Here it was clearly intended that the transfer of the deposit jointly to Michael and M. K. Carr should take effect immediately—that is, that M. K.'s interest in said deposit should vest and be enjoyed in presenti—which, of course, destroys any ground for supposing an intention in Michael to make a gift of the deposit to M. K. "in contemplation, fear, or peril" of his own death.

[5] But the manifest intention of Michael Carr can be sustained through the agency of a trust, and that such was the mode by which he intended that the appellant should share in the deposit during the life of Michael, and, upon the latter's death, to receive from the bank the remainder in his sole and exclusive right, I think the evidence and the findings beyond all peradventure disclose.

Section 2221 of the Civil Code reads: "Subject to the provisions of section 852, a voluntary trust is created, as to the trustor and beneficiary, by any words or acts of the trustor indicating with reasonable certainty: 1. An intention on the part of the trustor to create a trust; and 2. The subject, purpose, and beneficiary of the trust."

Section 2222 of said Code provides: "Subject to the provisions of section 852, a voluntary trust is created, as to the trustee, by any words or acts of his indicating, with reasonable certainty: 1. His acceptance of the trust, or his acknowledgment, made upon sufficient consideration, of its existence; and 2. The subject, purpose and beneficiary of the trust."

[6] Mr. Perry, in his treatise on Trusts, says: "If a trust can fairly be implied from the language used as the intention of the parties, the intention will be executed through the medium of a trust."

[7] Nor, in order to create a trust, is it indispensable or even necessary to use the words "trust" or "trustees." Estate of Smith, 144 Pa. 428, 22 Atl. 916, 27 Am. St. Rep. 641, and cases therein cited. Under our law Michael Carr was authorized to create a trust for himself and his son, M. K. Carr, in the manner and form disclosed by the evidence. Hellman v. McWilliams, 70 Cal. 452, 11 Pac. 659.

Testing the facts proved and found here by the law as thus briefly stated, I find this situation in the case at bar: One capable of creating a trust; the subject, purpose, and beneficiary thereof clearly manifested; the acceptance of said trust by the trustee (the bank), evidenced by its act of accepting the deposit or the subject of the trust, subject to the conditions and provisions thereof; and the acts and the use of language by the trustor, if he be a trustor, indicating, I think, with reasonable certainty, an intention to create a trust. There are many cases, both in this and other jurisdictions, holding that a trust was the legal effect of substantially the same state of facts as is found here. I shall, however, notice a few California cases only.

In Booth v. Oakland Bank, 122 Cal. 19, 54 Atl. 370, a Mrs. Bell requested, in writing, the teller of the bank to add the names of her two sisters to her savings account, so that she or either of said sisters could draw on the fund. The officer of the bank arranged her account as thus directed by Mrs. Bell, and subsequently she furnished the bank with the signatures of her sisters. She also apprised her sisters, then living in the East, of what she had done. The teller of the bank testified that he stated to Mrs. Bell that, under the new arrangement, her sisters could draw the money in her (Mrs. Bell's) lifetime, and that she replied "that it made no difference; they would not do it." The court, sustaining the claim that there was sufficient evidence before the court to show that a trust had been created by the act of Mrs. Bell, and reversing the judgment of nonsuit from which the appeal was prosecuted, says: "There can be no doubt of the intention of Mrs. Bell in this matter, and that intention should be consummated, if the law will permit it; and if there is any ground upon which the evidence would justify a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs the motion for a nonsuit should have been denied. * * * I do not think it necessary to determine whether the control over the fund reserved by Mrs. Bell is to be regarded as a power of revocation, or whether the whole transaction is to be regarded as a trust in her favor of so much of the fund as she might see proper to withdraw in her lifetime, and of the remainder for her sisters. In either case the practical result is the same, for a power of revocation as to the whole may be exercised as to a part, and, when so exercised, does not affect the remainder."

The only distinction discernible between the Booth Case and the one at bar is that in the former it was clearly not intended that the cestuis que trustent should draw on the fund during the lifetime of the trustor, although having the legal right to do so, while here, as seen, it was expressly declared by the trustor that both the beneficiaries under the trust, Michael and M. K., should receive from the bank trustee whatever either might choose to ask for out of the trust fund during the lives of both, with the remainder to the survivor.

In the case of Sprague v. Walton, 145 Cal. 232, 78 Pac. 646, one Moses Sprague, in whose name there were certain savings bank deposits which were community property, "being at the time sick and confined to his bed, obtained from the banks the form of an authorization which would enable his wife to draw the deposits standing in his name, and he executed and delivered to her two orders in the form prescribed. They were substantially the same in terms, and the one addressed to the Sacramento Bank read as follows: 'January 22, 1900. I hereby authorize the Sacramento Bank to allow my wife, Mrs. N. M. Sprague, to draw any money standing to my credit on Deposit No. 17,097, fol. 825, in said bank and to have the right of survivorship.' On the 30th of January Mrs. Sprague drew out the whole of the several deposits and immediately redeposited them in the same banks, but in her own name. On the 16th of March following Moses Sprague died. Letters testamentary were issued to his wife in July, 1900, and she took possession of his estate, but died in June, 1901, leaving the administration unclosed. Upon her death the plaintiff, Frederick D. Sprague, and the defendant, B. F. Walton, were appointed joint executors in her place. Subsequently her will was proved and letters testamentary were issued to her daughter, the defendant Hattie S. Walton. As executrix of her deceased husband's will, Mrs. Sprague never charged herself with anything on account of said deposits, and what remained of them passed into the hands of her executrix, who claims that they were a gift from her father to her mother and constituted no part of his estate." In an action to recover said money by one of the executors of the estate of Moses Sprague, deceased, against the executrix of the estate of Mrs. Sprague, deceased, the contention of the latter was that the transaction by which Moses transferred said savings deposits to his wife involved a gift, but this contention was not sustained by the trial court, which found that said transaction was devoid of some of the essential elements of a transfer by gift. The Supreme Court, speaking through the Chief Justice, while declaring that the evidence tending to show that Moses Sprague intended a gift of the deposits "was very persuasive," said that it was not in the power of an appellate court to "make a finding nor direct one where the evidence, however persuasive, is opposed to a presumption, as in this case." The court, however, reversed the order for error of the trial court in excluding certain testimony proposed by the defendant, and in view of a retrial, felt constrained to make the following suggestion: "Even if it should be found that it was not the intention of Moses Sprague that his wife should draw out the deposits or change them to her own account in his lifetime, the form of the orders ('with right of survivorship') indicates his intention that she should take them as survivor after his death; and if such was his intention the transaction would be brought within the doctrine of Booth v. Oakland Bank, 122 Cal. 19, 54 Pac. 370, where it was held that an arrangement substantially the same as in this case constituted the bank a trustee of the deposit for the benefit of the parties to whom the depositor desired the money to be paid in case of her death. The fact that Mrs.

Sprague actually drew the money before her husband's death would not defeat the intention to create a trust in her favor."

I am unable to perceive any substantial distinction between the foregoing cases and the one at bar. If the "right of survivorship" in M. K. Carr is not clearly indicated as the intention of Michael Carr by his employment of the word "survivor" in making the transfer of the deposit to himself and M. K. Carr, as joint owners, then, as I have before in effect declared, the word as so used is not only perfectly meaningless, but must have been thus employed by Michael with the deliberate purpose that it should be regarded and treated as superfluously used, or employed without an intention on his part to thereby convey any particular thought in his mind when the act of transferring the deposit took place. But it must be assumed that he meant something or to convey some thought in his mind with regard to the transfer by the use of that word, and I am unable to reconcile its use under the circumstances with any other idea than that it was so employed for the purpose of expressing the extent or scope and nature, in legal effect, of the transfer. If, as I think is clearly true, he intended that M. K. should exercise the right of survivorship in the deposit, then, it seems to me, it becomes very clear that the intent in his mind, at the time of transferring it, was to establish a trust in said deposit for his and appellant's joint benefit during their joint lives, with the remainder to the latter or a reversion to himself on the death of the one or the other, according as that event might happen.

The cases of Denigan v. Hibernia, etc., Society, 127 Cal. 137, 59 Pac. 389, and Denigan v. S. F. Savings Union, 127 Cal. 142, 59 Pac. 390, 78 Am. St. Rep. 35, cited by counsel for respondents in support of the judgment here, are where one Ellen Denigan deposited with said bank certain moneys, which were her separate property, in the names of herself and husband; in the last-mentioned case the deposit being made payable to the individual order of either. Ellen subsequently died, and thereupon James Denigan, her surviving husband, caused the moneys so deposited in both banks to be transferred to a new account entitled "Frank Denigan or James Denigan," with directions to the bank from both Denigans in the last mentioned of the two cases to pay to the individual order of either. James Denigan was a nephew of Frank Denigan, and upon the death of the latter James brought suit against the Hibernia Loan Society for the remainder of the money on deposit in said bank, without any deduction for an amount paid by the bank out of said deposit to one Connolly on the order of Frank Denigan in his lifetime, and after the money had been transferred to himself and James. The action against the San Francisco Savings Union was by said James to recover the amount of the deposit in said bank in the name of Frank Denigan and plaintiff.

In both cases the plaintiff's right to the money rested entirely upon the title or right which Frank Denigan had thereto, and in both cases the contention of the plaintiff was that Frank acquired a perfect title to the money through a gift thereof by his wife, Ellen. The Supreme Court held that the evidence failed to disclose a gift in either case. Like the case here, there was wanting in the transactions, to constitute a completed gift, the element of unqualified dominion over the deposits by Frank Denigan. As the court say: "There is no presumption in favor of a gift (Grey v. Grey, 47 N. Y. 552; White v. Warren, 120 Cal. 322 [49 Pac. 129, 52 Pac. 723]); and in the present case the idea of a gift is inconsistent with the retention by the wife of the right in herself to withdraw the whole of the money from the bank." But, under our theory of the case at bar, it is obvious that these cases are not in point. There are no acts or language connected with the transactions which would furnish the slightest indication of an intention upon the part of Ellen Denigan to create out of the deposits a trust, either in favor of herself and husband or in favor of her husband alone. While, as seen, no certain form of words is required in the creation of a trust, there must, nevertheless, be some words, it matters not what they are, which indicate with reasonable certainty a purpose to create a trust. Civ. Code, § 2221; Estate of Smith, supra; Egerton v. Brownlow, 4 H. L. Cas. 210; Cushing v. Blake, 30 N. J. Eq. 689; Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. § 1001.

[8] Nor is there anything decided in the Denigan Cases at cross purposes with the proposition that a valid trust in money may be created, with the power reserved by the trustor to practically revoke it by drawing on the trust fund until it is completely exhausted, before the beneficiaries can enjoy the fruits thereof. Section 2280, Civ. Code; Hellman v. McWilliams, 70 Cal. 452, 11 Pac. 659; Nichols v. Emery, 109 Cal. 325, 41 Pac. 1089, 50 Am. St. Rep. 43.

But respondent contends that the case of Booth v. Bank, supra, is not in point here, for, he insists, all that is decided in that case is that the trial court erred in granting a motion for a nonsuit, and that it was the duty of said court to review and consider the evidence upon its merits, to determine whether a valid trust had been established by the act and words of Mrs. Bell; and he declares that this case is to be differentiated from that, in that the court here did pass upon the evidence and decide the questions of fact upon the merits of the controversy, and that its findings are conclusive upon this court. But the court went further in the Booth Case than merely to review the ruling of the trial court upon the motion for a nonsuit. It very clearly laid down the rule that, where the intention to create a trust is indicated with reasonable certainty by any words or acts of the party having the right to create a trust of the particular personal property involved in the transaction, it is the duty of the courts to so construe such transaction as to execute such intention, and it is further shown that the facts developed in that case up to the point where the non-suit was ordered, if true, or if believed, were enough to establish a trust, or beneficial interest in the deposit, in favor of the sisters of Mrs. Bell, enforceable after the latter's death. Moreover, in the case at bar, it is to be observed that there does not, and, indeed, there could not, arise, as in Noble v. Learned, 153 Cal. 247, 94 Pac. 1047, any question of conflict in the evidence. The findings themselves, as we have pointed out, disclose with "reasonable certainty" that, when Michael transferred the deposit to himself and M. K. Carr, his intention was that, after his death, the sole and exclusive right and title to the remainder should vest in and be enjoyed by the latter. The language following that finding, italicized herein, "that said deposit amounting to said sum of $996.30 was the property of said Michael Carr, and continued to be the property of said Michael Carr after said bank had so changed said deposit, and at all times until the death of said Michael Carr," involves the statement of a mere legal conclusion, unsupported by the finding of fact immediately preceding it, or by any other finding, or by any evidence produced.

If (I may repeat) any meaning is to be given to the word "survivor," as employed by Michael Carr in the transfer of the deposit to himself and appellant, it must be accorded that signification which ordinarily and naturally it would have when used in connection with the disposal of one's estate to take effect after the death of the owner, and, giving to it such meaning, it seems to me that there is no escape from the proposition that Michael adopted the means disclosed by the evidence as (to him) the most satisfactory manner and form of making his son, the appellant here, a joint beneficiary during their joint lives and the sole beneficiary after his death of so much of his estate as is involved in the deposit with which this litigation is concerned, or, in case he survived M. K., the same to revert to him. This being so, it is, as I have shown, the duty of the courts to respect and execute his intention through the medium of a trust which, as I think clearly appears from this record, can be done in perfect harmony with the facts proved and found. No argument in answer to this construction of the transaction involved here can be erected around the proposition that, in disposing of the deposit in the manner shown here, Michael thus displayed partiality to one son as against the respondent and the other members of his family, if there be others. A man, as is said in Johnson v. Hubbell, 10 N. J. Eq. 332, 66 Am. Dec. 773, "is the disposer by law of his own fortune, and the sole and best judge as to the time and manner of disposing it."

There are, doubtless, many cases where persons, in the testamentary disposition of their property, have omitted to make provision for certain heirs or persons standing in the same degree of relationship to them as those upon whom they have bestowed by testament or otherwise a liberal share of their bounty, and in which there does not appear any well-founded, natural or moral reason why such partiality by the ancestor should thus have been evinced. Such cases often present circumstances which appeal strongly to one's sense of justice, and which, if the law permitted, would no doubt frequently lead judges to interpose their power and adjust the matter of the distribution of such estates in accordance with the principles of what may be termed natural justice. This may be one of such cases. But the courts cannot, in the determination of questions like those submitted here, be influenced or controlled by the fact that the ancestor has excluded from his bounty certain of his heirs, in the absence of a showing of fraud, mental incompetency, or that his act has been superinduced by undue influence practiced upon him. Whatever might have been Michael Carr's specific reason for displaying partiality, if in truth any was shown, it was certainly satisfactory to him, and, as it is not shown, nor claimed, that he was, when he transferred the deposit, mentally incompetent to transact business, or that he was fraudulently imposed upon or unduly influenced by M. K., or any other person, and thus induced to transfer said deposit, no reason can be suggested why his intention as to the disposition of that money should not be made effective, so long as it can be done without offending any rule or principle of law.

As stated, the alleged finding that the deposit was at all times the sole property of Michael Carr is not a finding of fact, but obviously an unsupported conclusion of law. The defendant was and is entitled to a judgment on the findings of the court, and, in accordance with this view, the judgment appealed from is reversed, with directions to the court below to cause to be entered judgment on the findings in favor of the defendant, M. K. Carr.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

15 Cal. App. 461

CARPENTER v. ASHLEY et al. (Civ. 800.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 23, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 24, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1024*)—REVIEW—CHANGE OF VENUE.

An order refusing a change of venue, based on conflicting evidence, will not be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4028; Dec. Dig. § 1024.*]

2. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 56*)—BURDEN OF PROOF.

One suing for malicious prosecution has the burden of proving malice and want of probable cause.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Cent. Dig. §§ 112-116; Dec. Dig. § 56.*]

3. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 20*)—"PROBABLE CAUSE."

"Probable cause" for a prosecution is a suspicion founded upon circumstances warranting a reasonable man to believe that the charge is true.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Cent. Dig. §§ 26-28; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5618-5620; vol. 8, p. 7765.]

4. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 71*)—PROBABLE CAUSE—NATURE OF QUESTION.

In a suit for malicious prosecution, what facts and circumstances amount to probable cause is a question of law for the court, and whether they exist in a particular case is a question of fact for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Cent. Dig. §§ 161, 162; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

5. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 64*)—PROBABLE CAUSE—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In a suit for malicious prosecution, evidence held to show probable cause.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Cent. Dig. § 152; Dec. Dig. § 64.*]

6. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 38*)—RIGHT TO RECOVER.

Actions for malicious prosecution are not favored, since they tend to discourage punishment of offenders.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Cent. Dig. § 79; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

7. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 24*)—LIABILITY—EFFECT OF ACQUITTAL.

One is not liable for malicious prosecution, if he had reasonable grounds for his belief of accused's guilt, and acted thereon in good faith, though accused was not convicted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Cent. Dig. § 50; Dec. Dig. § 24.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1057*)—ADMISSIBILITY—MATTERS ADMITTED.

In an action for malicious prosecution, it was not prejudicial error to exclude the record in another criminal case in which plaintiff was convicted, offered merely to show that on account of imprisonment limitations had not run, where defendants did not deny plaintiff's allegation of such imprisonment, and admitted it in open court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4194-4199; Dec. Dig. § 1057.*]

9. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 58*)—EVIDENCE—MATERIALITY.

In an action for malicious prosecution for perjury in a civil suit, the judgment roll in that suit was admissible to show that under the issues therein made plaintiff's alleged false testimony was immaterial, since, if his testimony was immaterial, it could not be a proper basis for a perjury charge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Cent. Dig. §§ 117-124; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

10. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1057*)—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for malicious prosecution for perjury in a civil suit, error in excluding the judgment roll in that suit, offered to show want of probable cause, was harmless, where the matter was shown on cross-examination of plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4194-4199; Dec. Dig. § 1057.*]

11. WITNESSES (§ 269*)—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Where, in an action for malicious prosecution, a witness testified that defendants acted as attorneys for the people in a prosecution, it was proper to ask him, on cross-examination, whether they were district attorney and assistant, respectively.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 949-954; Dec. Dig. § 269.*]

12. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 58*)—EVIDENCE—MATERIALITY.

In an action for malicious prosecution for perjury in a civil suit, evidence as to facts leading to the bringing of that suit was properly excluded, as being immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Cent. Dig. §§ 117-124; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

13. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 59*)—EVIDENCE—MATERIALITY.

In an action for malicious prosecution for perjury in a civil suit, it was proper to receive testimony given on the trial of that suit and presented to the grand jury, as bearing on the question of probable cause.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Cent. Dig. §§ 125-137; Dec. Dig. § 59.*]

14. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 206*)—REVIEW—OBJECTIONS NOT MADE BELOW.

An objection to testimony as being "not cross-examination" cannot be made for the first time on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1288; Dec. Dig. § 206.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; F. H. Smith, Judge.

Action by A. H. Carpenter against A. H. Ashley and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. H. Carpenter, for appellant. Nicol & Orr, C. L. Neumiller, and A. H. Ashley, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought by an attorney at law against two other attorneys for malicious prosecution and conspiracy, whereby, it is alleged in the complaint, said defendants "corruptly, maliciously, and without probable, or any, cause, prosecuted plaintiff before the grand jury and before a trial jury in the superior court for the crime of perjury," securing an indictment for said offense, and subjecting the defendant therein to the expense, annoyance, and ignominy of a public trial lasting five days and resulting in his acquittal.

Every allegation in the complaint impugning the motive, or challenging the good faith of defendants, or charging the want or probable cause for said prosecution is denied in the answer. There was a demand and motion for a change of venue on the part of plaintiff, supported by his affidavit, in which some startling and rather grotesque accusations are made against the defendants, to the effect that "they are and were skilled in the art of securing verdicts and manipulating the members of the panel, and, aside from such skilled manipulations, they exercised such influence and power over the citizens who were or might be called to pass upon their conduct as to make it impossible for plaintiff or any one else to get a fair trial where they were parties to the action." But, conceding that plaintiff's strange averments are not inherently improbable, and that his affidavit should be accorded the same consideration as that of any other person, it is sufficient to say that every suggestion therein of improper influence is positively denied, and every implication of bias or prejudice on the part of the citizens of the county is expressly negated in the counter affidavits filed by defendants and used at the hearing of the motion.

[1] Under the familiar rule of conflicting evidence, therefore, it is unquestionable that the order denying the application for a change of the place of trial cannot be disturbed.

It is stated by appellant that "after the denial of said motion the plaintiff, having had the personal experience of the defendants' skill in securing verdicts, waived a jury, and the case was tried by the court, who promptly gave judgment to the defendants on their motion for a nonsuit." Appellant does not complain, apparently, so much that the judgment was given "promptly," as he deplores the mistake he made in assuming that the great skill of defendants could not influence the court to decide at all against the law and the evidence.

[2-4] Be that as it may, the legal principles involved are well established and may be stated in the language of the Supreme Court, as they have been thoroughly considered and clearly enunciated in the three following cases: Ball v. Rawles, 93 Cal. 222, 28 Pac. 937, 27 Am. St. Rep. 174; Davis v. Pacific Teleph., etc., Co., 127 Cal. 312, 57 Pac. 764, 59 Pac. 698; and Booraem v. Potter Hotel Co., 154 Cal. 99, 97 Pac. 65. "It is incumbent upon the plaintiff, and the burden of proof is upon him in an action of this kind, to prove both malice and want of probable cause." "Probable cause is a suspicion founded upon circumstances sufficiently strong to warrant a reasonable man in the belief that the charge is true."

"What facts and circumstances amount to probable cause is a pure question of law. Whether they exist or not in any particular case is a pure question of fact. The former is exclusively for the court, the latter for the jury."

With these elementary principles in view, we deem it unnecessary to go beyond an examination of the question of probable cause for said prosecution.

[5] The evidence introduced by plaintiff included his indictment by the grand jury, on June 10, 1901, for perjury alleged to have been committed on May 31, 1900, and the record of his trial thereon, resulting in a verdict of not guilty. The indictment was based upon the testimony of plaintiff given at the trial of the cause of McGorray v. Robinson in the superior court of San Joaquin county, to the effect that "he, the said A. H. Carpenter, on or about the blank day of January, 1892, sent by mail to Bernard McGorray at Rochester, New York, the deed, meaning thereby a certain deed," describing a deed to the property, the title to which was involved in the said suit of McGorray v. Robinson, said deed purporting to convey said property to Bernard McGorray by Stephen W. McGorray, and "signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of A. H. Carpenter" and acknowledged before J. H. Tam, a notary public, on the 29th day of December, 1891. The pleadings in said cause of McGorray v. Robinson, consisting of the complaint, answer, and cross-complaint, and answer to the cross-complaint, were then offered by plaintiff and received in evidence. The verified complaint therein was filed, it appears, on November 15, 1899, and therein it was alleged that "plaintiff is now and for more than seven years last past has been the owner in fee" of the land described.

The verified answer and cross-complaint was filed December 21, 1899, in which, among other things, it was denied that plaintiff ever had been the owner of any of the property described in the complaint. To the cross-complaint the plaintiff, on January 20, 1900, filed an answer in which he alleged that "he is now and always has been since the 29th day of December, 1891, the owner in fee of all the real property described in the complaint." It was further shown herein by the evidence that at the trial of the said McGorray case, H. T. Fee, a deputy county recorder of San Joaquin county, produced and read in evidence, from volume 72 of Deeds of said county, the record of the deed set out in the indictment; that Bernard McGorray, who was plaintiff in that case and grantee in said deed, and who was a client of plaintiff herein, testified that the recorded deed had been sent by its grantor (Stephen McGorray) to and received by him (Bernard) through the mail, at Rochester, N. Y., in 1892; that he then and there saw upon it the recorder's marks or certificate and the acknowledgment certificate of the notary; "that he knew the deed was made in December, 1891, and his only manual receipt thereof was so by mail;" that thereafter, at the said McGorray trial, Carpenter (plaintiff herein) testified that he drew the deed and witnessed it; that he had it recorded; that furthermore he testified: "I am sure of this, that the envelope—it was enclosed in a long envelope and it was my envelope—and I am sure that I backed it, and Mr. McGorray may have put it in a letter, in with the deed; I don't know; it is so long ago; have forgotten"; and he was sure that it was sent to McGorray at Rochester; that thereafter the cross-complainants called Deputy Recorder Eschback, who brought with him said deed and testified that it had not been out of the recorder's possession after it was filed for record. Afterwards Mr. Carpenter had himself recalled, and he testified that the deed he sent might have been a prior deed, executed in 1883, but it appeared that the said deed of 1891 was the only one that had ever been recorded. It is true that Mr. Carpenter, in one portion of his testimony, declared it to be his impression that he had sent the deed; in another portion that such was his recollection; but it is a fair inference from all his testimony that he intended to have the court understand that he had mailed this identical deed to Bernard McGorray at Rochester, N. Y.

From the foregoing it follows that Mr. Ashley had probable cause for believing: (1) That the testimony of Mr. Carpenter in the trial of said cause of McGorray v. Robinson was material to the issue involved in said action. This is indeed clear, since the litigation directly concerned the ownership of a certain tract of land, and plaintiff claimed under said deed of 1891, and the testimony of Carpenter related to the delivery of said deed. It is true that, in a separate defense to the action, it was averred that the said deed was executed and delivered in trust; but inconsistent defenses are permitted under our practice, and it is manifest that the denial of ownership hereinbefore quoted raised an issue as to the delivery of the deed. (2) That the testimony of said Carpenter was false, being contradicted by the testimony of said deputy recorder Eschback, and of Bernard McGorray, who testified that he received the said deed through the mail in an envelope addressed in the handwriting of his brother Stephen. There are other inconsistencies also revealed in the testimony at said trial, which we deem unnecessary to notice specifically, tending to discredit said testimony of Carpenter.

Mr. Ashley then having probable cause to believe that false testimony was given by Carpenter on a material matter in the trial of an action, it is reasonable to conclude that said Ashley actually did believe that such testimony was given, that it was willful, and that perjury was therefore committed. Being district attorney of the county, it is reasonable and just, therefore, to conclude that Ashley considered it his duty—and, so believing, it was his duty—to present the matter to the grand jury, and, in case of indictment, to prosecute Carpenter for the crime of perjury. It was accordingly presented to the grand jury with a transcript of the testimony taken at the said trial of McGorray v. Robinson, and it appears, also, that Mr. Carpenter testified before the grand jury, going over, as he says, "the entire ground," and, furthermore, that Mr. Ashley advised the grand jury that the evidence was sufficient to constitute the crime of perjury on the part of Carpenter, and therefore to indict him.

Without intimating in the slightest degree an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of Mr. Carpenter of the charge against him, we have no hesitation in saying that the showing made by plaintiff at the trial herein not only failed to disclose the want of probable cause for his prosecution by the district attorney and his codefendant, George F. McNoble, who was the assistant district attorney, but, to the contrary, in the attempt to establish his case, plaintiff's evidence revealed sufficient facts and circumstances, known to the defendants, to constitute, so we must hold, reasonable grounds for believing that the charge made against the plaintiff was true.

[6] It is well to remember, also, that the evidence against the plaintiff must be viewed here in the light of the following familiar principles, that "actions for malicious prosecution have never been favored in law, although they have been readily upheld when the proper elements therefor have been presented. It is for the best interests of society that those who offend against the laws shall be promptly punished, and that every citizen who has good reason to believe that the law has been violated shall have the right to cause the arrest of the offender.

[7] For the purpose of protecting him in so doing, it is the established rule that if he have reasonable grounds for his belief, and act thereon in good faith in causing the arrest, he shall not be subjected to damages, merely because the accused is not convicted." Ball v. Rawles, supra.

[8] There was no error in the court's ruling sustaining an objection to the introduction in evidence of the record in the case of People v. A. H. Carpenter on a charge of subornation of perjury. It was offered only for the purpose of showing, on account of the imprisonment of plaintiff, that the statute of limitations had not run against the present action. The evidence was unnecessary by reason of the failure of defendants in their answer to deny the allegation as to the imprisonment, and in addition it may be said the incarceration was admitted in open court.

[9] Plaintiff offered in evidence the judgment roll in the said case of Bernard McGorray v. Kate Robinson, for the purpose of showing that, under the issues therein made, his alleged false testimony was entirely immaterial. Manifestly this was a circumstance of importance. If the testimony was entirely immaterial, it could not be made the basis for a charge of perjury. Upon the hypothesis that it was immaterial, since the evidence upon a motion for a nonsuit must be construed as favorably for the plaintiff as possible, the inference would have to be indulged that the district attorney knew or believed it was immaterial. Hence it would be evidence that the prosecution was instituted without probable cause. The court, therefore, committed a technical error in admitting the judgment roll only for the purpose of showing that there was such a case.

[10] The error, however, was without prejudice, for the reason that on the cross-examination of plaintiff the pleadings were read into the record without restriction, and besides the pleadings show, as we have already seen, that the testimony of plaintiff was material.

[11] Appellant complains because the court overruled his objection to the two following questions asked on cross-examination of the witness J. A. Plummer: "Mr. Ashley was then district attorney of this county?" and "Mr. George F. McNoble was assistant district attorney?" The witness, who was counsel for the defendant in the trial of the perjury charge, had testified in his direct examination that "Mr. Ashley and Mr. McNoble acted as attorneys for the people in that case." Hence said questions were proper cross-examination. But the contention is little short of frivolous, because plaintiff alleges in his complaint that Arthur H. Ashley was the district attorney and George F. McNoble, the assistant district attorney of the county.

[12] The court was clearly right in sustaining defendants' objection to the question asked of Bernard McGorray: "You may state the facts that led to the institution of that suit that is entitled Bernard McGorray v. Kate Robinson." The answer to the question could have no bearing whatever upon the materiality of plaintiff's testimony in the cause, and the facts that induced McGorray to bring the suit would not be evidence of the motives of these defendants in the prosecution of plaintiff.

[13] To the offer of the testimony of F. Eschbach, given upon the trial of McGorray v. Robinson, which was presented to the consideration of the grand jury, plaintiff objected upon the ground that it was "incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial, and cannot be proven in that way." Reliance is had upon the cases of Reid v. Reid, 73 Cal. 206, 14 Pac. 781, and Thomas v. Black, 84 Cal. 221, 23 Pac. 1037. In the former it was held that, "under section 273 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the stenographer's transcript of the testimony, in a civil case, given by a party in a prior action, although certified to by the stenographer as being correct, is not admissible in a subsequent action as evidence of what he said on the former trial." In the Thomas Case, supra, the deposition sought to be introduced was not certified or authenticated in any way whatever, and the witness had no opportunity to correct it. The cases are not in point here, however, for the reason that appellant admitted that the transcript contained a correct statement of the testimony of the witness. It required no further authentication. It was proper to introduce it in evidence as the testimony of the witness in the trial of the McGorray Case, and, as read before the grand jury, constituted an important circumstance in the consideration of the question of probable cause.

[14] Appellant also urges in his brief that it was "not cross-examination," but no such objection was made at the trial.

We have endeavored to notice all the points made by appellant, but we are convinced that there is no ground for interfering with the action of the court below.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

(159 Cal. 651)

HIGGINS v. LOS ANGELES GAS & ELECTRIC CO. (L. A. 2,587.)(Supreme Court of California. April 7, 1911.
Rehearing Denied May 5, 1911.)1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 867*)—REVIEW—EXTENT OF REVIEW ON GRANTING OF NEW TRIAL—REVIEW OF VERDICT.

Where a motion for a new trial is denied on all grounds save one and is granted on the sole ground that the court erred in sending an exhibit to the jury in their consultation room, the terms of the order eliminate the question of the sufficiency or insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3477; Dec. Dig. § 867.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 307*)—DELIBERATIONS OF JURY—TAKING ARTICLES TO JURY ROOM—STATUTES.

Code Civ. Proc. § 612, being the one express provision of the law bearing upon the right of juries to use exhibits or upon the right of the court to permit juries to use exhibits in their deliberations, and relating solely to the "papers" which have been introduced in evidence, is to be construed in view of the fact that the restrictive rule of the common law extended only to papers containing printing or writing and of the obsolete distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments, not as a limitation of the power of the court in the matter of other exhibits, but as a modification and extension of the common-law rule touching exhibits containing writings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 307.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 307*)—CUSTODY AND DELIBERATION OF JURY—TAKING ARTICLES TO JURY ROOM—INSTRUCTIONS AS TO USE.

The rule which should guide the court and govern the jury in the use of exhibits is that the court may permit the jury to take with them and use in their deliberations any exhibit where the circumstances call for it, with a cautionary instruction as to the nature and use they may make of the exhibit, and the jury may use the exhibit according to its nature to aid in weighing the evidence which has been given and in reaching a decision upon a controverted issue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 307.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 310*)—CUSTODY AND DELIBERATION OF JURY—EXPERIMENT BY JURORS.

The jury may carry out experiments with the articles and exhibits taken to the jury room within the lines of the evidence that has been offered; but, if their experiments do not fall fairly within the scope and purview of the evidence and influence their verdict, they are reversible error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 310.*]

5. TRIAL (§ 344*)—VERDICT—IMPEACHING VERDICT BY JURORS.

A jury is not allowed to impeach its verdict by showing what improper methods it employed to arrive at it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 813; Dec. Dig. § 344.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1069*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—CONDUCT AND DELIBERATIONS OF JURY.

Where the jury, in an action by a landlord for damages to his property by an explosion, have been permitted to take to the jury room an electric flash light similar to the one which it was contended had caused the explosion, after the court had stopped an experiment in court intended to show how the light would produce a spark, and in an answer to a special interrogatory declared that the explosion was caused by a spark from the flash light, the special verdict, if erroneously arrived at, is immaterial to the case and harmless, where, had it been shown that the explosion was caused by a fire in the stove by plaintiff's tenant as contended by defendant, its liability would not have been lessened.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4136, 4138, 4139; Dec. Dig. § 1069.*]

7. NEGLIGENCE (§ 89*)—IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE OF TENANT.

The right of a landlord to recover for injuries to his property by a third person cannot be defeated by proof of the contributory negligence of his tenant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 130-137; Dec. Dig. § 89.*]

8. NEW TRIAL (§ 50*)—CONDUCT OF JURY—CUSTODY.

Where the jury, in an action to recover for damages to plaintiff's building from an explosion alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence, were conducted by the sheriff on their way to lunch in an ordinary and convenient route which happened to pass the building, and it is not shown that they knew the building in passing or that their attention was directed to it, and where it is shown that the building itself had been repaired at the time of the jury's passing it, it is not ground for setting aside the verdict for plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

9. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 55*)—INJURIES BY TENANT—EVIDENCE.

In an action by a landlord against his tenant for damages to the leased building from an explosion alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence, evidence held to support a verdict for the plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

10. EVIDENCE (§ 543½*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—COMPETENCY OF EXPERT WITNESSES.

Where a witness, called in an action to recover damages to plaintiff's building from an explosion alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence, testified that he knew the building before the explosion and had examined it afterwards, and further testified as an expert with over 20 years' experience as a builder as to the cost of repairing the building and the length of time it would take, held, that the witness' knowledge of the building was sufficient upon which to predicate his expert testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2359; Dec. Dig. § 543½.*]

11. DAMAGES (§ 111*) — DESTRUCTION OF BUILDING—LOSS OF RENTAL.

In an action by a landlord against his tenant for damages to plaintiff's building from an explosion caused by defendant, the measure of damages is what the plaintiff really lost in rents by reason of the premises being destroyed by the explosion during such time as it would take with reasonable diligence to repair such building, and this is so whether plaintiff restored the building or not.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 274-278; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

Department 2. Appeal from the Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Thomas Higgins against the Los Angeles Gas & Electric Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and, from an order granting defendant's motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Order granting new trial reversed.

J. Wiseman Macdonald and Thomas P. Higgins, for appellant. Wm. A. Cheney, Gibson, Trask, Dunn & Crutcher, and Le Roy M. Edwards, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This action was brought to recover damages from defendant for injuries caused to a building, the property of plaintiff. The damage was caused by an explosion of gas. This explosion occurred in a restaurant of a tenant of the plaintiff, Cressaty by name. The facts attending the explosion have recently been set forth by this court in its consideration of the case of Merrill v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Company, 111 Pac. 534. It is sufficient to refer to that case; but it is to be borne in mind that that action was for personal injuries occasioned to a patron of Cressaty's restaurant, while the present action is to recover damages occasioned to plaintiff's building while in the possession of a tenant.

Trial was had before a jury. The defendant, as part of its evidence, showed that, the gas leak being in a dark and obscure place, its employés approached the leak with an electric flash light, and while the man holding the flash light was in close proximity to the leak the explosion occurred. The flash light used to inspect the leak was never recovered. It was probably destroyed by the explosion. But a similar flash light was introduced in evidence by the defendant, and the contention was made that it was impossible for this flash light as used to give out any spark which would cause the ignition and explosion of the gas. It was also in evidence that an oil stove in the restaurant was burning at the time of the explosion, and that this oil stove was some 44 feet from the place where the gas was escaping. It was contended by plaintiff that the explosion was probably occasioned by a spark from the electric flash light, and he introduced evidence to establish the fact that a flash light such as that before the jury could produce a spark. It was contended by defendant that the explosion was occasioned by the flame of the oil stove, and that Cressaty, plaintiff's tenant, was negligent in not having extinguished the light of the stove after demand by defendant's employés that he do so. To demonstrate that the flash light could give out, and might have given out, a spark sufficient to cause the explosion, plaintiff, in rebuttal of the evidence of defendant's experts to the contrary, put an expert witness on the stand who so testified. Asked to demonstrate before the jury how the spark could be produced and to produce it, he proceeded to unscrew the cap of the flash light and undertook to make a spark by the use of a pair of pliers. Under objection the court stopped this experiment, manifestly for the reason that, to be of value to the jury, a spark should be produced from the flash light under conditions of use like those attending the explosion. Argument was indulged in before the jury pro and con over the possibility of so producing a spark, and the flash light was passed from hand to hand and inspected by the jury. While deliberating over their verdict, the jury requested to have with them in the jury room the flash light. The court permitted them to do so. Special interrogatories were submitted to the jury, amongst them one in answer to which it declared that the explosion was caused by a spark from the flash light and not from the flame of the oil stove. The general verdict was for plaintiff. Defendant moved for a new trial.

[1] The court denied the motion as to all grounds save one, and granted the new trial "on the sole ground that the court erred in sending into the jury in their consultation room the flash light." The terms of this order eliminate from consideration the question of the sufficiency or insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict. Kauffman v. Maier, 94 Cal. 270, 29 Pac. 481, 18 L. R. A. 124; Siemens v. Oakland, etc., Ry., 134 Cal. 496, 66 Pac. 672. There are left for consideration two matters: First, was it error calling for a new trial for the court to have permitted the jury to take with them to their room and to have with them during their deliberations the flash light introduced in evidence by respondent? Second, alleged errors of the court arising in the trial of the case.

[2] The only express provision of the law bearing upon the right of juries to use exhibits or upon the right of the court to permit juries to use exhibits in their deliberations is found in section 612 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and this has to do solely with "papers" which have been introduced in evidence. One curious in such matters can learn from the common law why this section of the Code was adopted and why also it is confined to papers. The common-law rule was that jurors were allowed to take with them in their deliberations only such instruments as were under seal, and that they were not permitted to take with them any unsealed papers excepting by consent of the parties. The reason for this, according to Lord Hale and Lord Gilbert, was that jurors were supposed to be, and for the most part were, unlettered men. They could not read. A writing conveyed to them nothing. But in the case of sealed instruments, as these jurors were drawn from the vicinage, they were quite apt to be familiar with the armorial bearings of their neighborhood great from which the seals were derived. An instrument under seal, therefore, spoke for itself, and the jurors were permitted to take such instruments with them, not for the purpose of reading the instrument itself, but rather for the purpose of verifying their recollection of the seal and testing its genuineness. The curious inquirer will also find that it was not uncommon for one who had not risen to the dignity of possessing an armorial bearing to set the stamp of his teeth as his seal upon the instrument, and hence the old time phrase of "proving it to (by) his teeth." But, in the case of other exhibits not involving a knowledge of reading or writing, it seems to have been a matter of discretion with the court to allow the jury to take them into the jury room in aid of their deliberations. This rule, as to papers, however, was in force at a time when learning in letters was so rare and the premium upon such learning so high that a felon could save his neck by proving his ability to read a verse of scripture. It was to save the possibility of the question arising in this state as in 1812 it arose in the state of Pennsylvania (Alexander et al. v. Jameson et al., 5 Bin. 238) that the section of the Code was adopted. All distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments had been abolished, and, as the restrictive rule of the common law upon the power of the court had gone only to papers containing printing or writing, it was necessary only to modify that rule as was done by section 612. Therefore section 612 is not to be construed as a limitation of the power of the court in the matter of other exhibits, but as a modification and extension of the common-law rule touching exhibits containing writings.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It will be noted that depositions are excluded by the section. This is for the very obvious reason that depositions may, and usually do, contain matters not admissible in evidence which matters have been eliminated from the consideration of the jury. To permit the jury to take depositions with them would be to put them in possession of this excluded evidence.

[3] In this lies the suggestion of the true rule guiding the court and governing the jury in the use of exhibits. The court may permit the jury to take with them and use in their deliberations any exhibit where the circumstances call for it, observing the proper precaution of instructing the jury in the nature of the use which they shall make of the exhibit. It is a fundamental rule that all evidence shall be taken in open court, and that each party to a controversy shall have knowledge of, and thus be enabled to meet and answer, any evidence brought against him. It is this fundamental rule which is to govern the use of such exhibits by the jury. They may use the exhibit according to its nature to aid them in weighing the evidence which has been given and in reaching a conclusion upon a controverted matter.

[4] They may carry out experiments within the lines of offered evidence; but if their experiments shall invade new fields, and they shall be influenced in their verdict by discoveries from such experiments which will not fall fairly within the scope and purview of the evidence, then, manifestly, the jury has been itself taking evidence without the knowledge of either party, evidence which it is not possible for the party injured to meet, answer, or explain.

Typical instances of the improper and proper experimental use of exhibits by a jury are found, respectively, in Wilson v. United States, 116 Fed. 484, 53 C. C. A. 652, and Taylor v. Commonwealth, 90 Va. 109, 17 S. E. 812. In the first of these cases the indictment charged the defendant with smuggling opium "prepared for smoking purposes." A sealed can had been introduced in evidence by the prosecution and asserted to contain a sample of the smuggled opium. No testimony was given tending to show that the can contained opium prepared for smoking purposes, and yet it was conceded that it was essential to a conviction (since the offense was so laid) to show not only that the can contained opium, and that it was smuggled opium, but also that it was opium "prepared for smoking purposes." In this condition of the evidence the court instructed the jury that it might take the can to the jury room, open it, and extract some of the contents; that they would not be permitted to make a chemical examination of the contents; but that they could in the jury room test the extracted samples and learn to their satisfaction whether or not it would burn, and use the information so obtained in determining whether the can contained "opium prepared for smoking purposes." The Circuit Court of Appeals, in holding this instruction to be erroneous, said: "Surely, if the attorney for the government, as was his duty, had offered evidence going to show that the can in question contained opium for smoking purposes, the defendants would have been legally and justly entitled to have proved, if they could, that it contained no such thing; in which latter event there must have been a verdict of not guilty, for there was nothing else offered tending to show that there was any opium prepared for smoking purposes in the case. Yet the jury was left to determine that essential fact for themselves, by experiment, and in the absence of the defendants, who were thus wholly deprived of the opportunity to contest the correctness of the jury's experiments, and of the possibility of giving any evidence upon one of the essential facts involved in the prosecution." Taylor v. Commonwealth was a case of murder. It was the assassination from ambush at midday of six or seven innocent and unsuspecting people. By the Supreme Court of Virginia it is described as "an inhuman and wholesale massacre of innocent and unsuspecting men, women, and children traveling peaceably upon the public highway." In the ambushade of the assassins were found certain cartridge shells which had been discharged from a 45-75 Winchester rifle. Defendant was charged with this murder. It was shown by the prosecution that he carried a rifle of this description and caliber. The defendant introduced his rifle in evidence and with it four empty shells which he proved were fired from his rifle. It was contended that the marks of the firing pin upon the cartridge shells found in the ambushade were so different from the marks of the firing pin upon the shells introduced by the defendant in evidence as to establish to a certainty that the shells found in the ambushade were not fired from defendant's rifle. During the trial the rifle admitted in evidence was inspected by the jury but was not taken to pieces. After retiring to deliberate the jury asked if the gun could be sent to them. This was done without objection from either side. After verdict of guilty defendant moved in arrest of judgment, contending that the jury had improperly taken the gun to pieces and examined the plunger or firing pin. It was shown in support of the motion that the jury had actually done this thing, and that from their examination had concluded that the plunger or firing pin had been tampered with. The Supreme Court of Virginia very properly upheld the verdict, the conduct, and the experiment of the jury. The purpose of the introduction of the gun in evidence was to show that its firing pin did not strike the cartridge in a particular way. The gun was offered by the defendant to establish his contention in this regard. A more acute prosecuting attorney might have caused the examination to have been made in open court, and thus have demonstrated the trick and fraud; but his failure to do so afforded no ground for overthrowing the verdict of an intelligent and scrutinizing jury, which, making its own examination of the evidence admitted to prove or disprove the very fact, discovered that the plunger "had been recently tampered with and fixed for the occasion of the trial." These cases, we have said, are typical. In the one the jury was permitted to make an experiment without knowledge to the parties of the method or process which was employed. It was an experiment addressed to evidence necessary to the prosecution's case which should have been offered in court. To permit the jury to gather this evidence without the presence of the defendant and without the possibility of knowledge upon his part as to the method by which their conclusion was reached and without the possibility of contesting the correctness of their experiment was, as the court justly held, the equivalent of the taking by the jury of evidence out of court, and a deprivation of the constitutional right of the defendant to be present at the taking of all evidence in his case. Upon the other hand, in the Virginia case the jury was not experimenting along lines without the evidence. It merely subjected an exhibit to a more critical examination than had been made of it in court, and by such examination reached a conclusion upon a contested fact by a more careful scrutiny of an exhibit introduced for the very purpose of affording evidence of the fact.

In this state it was held, in People v. Conkling, 111 Cal. 616, 44 Pac. 314, that it was error demanding a new trial, when certain of the jurors, to satisfy themselves at what distance a rifle discharged would powder-mark cloth, procured a rifle out of the courtroom and experimented with it. Here was a clear case of the jury's obtaining evidence by unauthorized experiments made without the presence and knowledge of the defendant. But, on the other hand, in People v. Mahoney, 77 Cal. 530, 20 Pac. 73, clothing worn by the deceased at the time of the homicide was, upon the jury's request, sent to the jury room, and in the matter of the Thomas Estate, 155 Cal. 488, 101 Pac. 798, it was held that a memorandum book admitted in evidence was properly allowed in the jury room in aid of the jury's deliberations.

In most of the cases, because of the very nature of the exhibit and of all the possible uses to which it may be put in the jury room, there is no occasion for the court to admonish the jury or to caution and limit it as to the nature of the use or experiment which shall be made. But where, from its nature, it may be susceptible to improper use, as in the case of the can of opium, it is the duty of the court, by instruction to the jury, to limit and restrict that use.

Coming to the case at bar, it is certain that the trial judge conceived that he had fallen into error in allowing the jury to take with them and to experiment with an exhibit which they might subject to an improper use, without limiting the scope of their experiments by proper instruction. It will be remembered that the court checked one experiment in the courtroom during its progress, and it is probable that the judge thought that by delivering the exhibit to the jury he had prepared the way for them to perform the very experiment which he had forbidden.

[5] Since a jury is not allowed to impeach its verdict by showing what improper methods it employed to reach it, the need of such cautionary instructions in a proper case becomes imperative, and we would by no means disturb the ruling of a trial court granting a new trial if it appeared that injury resulted from its failure to give such instructions.

But if, on the other hand, it could not have resulted in injury to the defendant even if the jury did perform an improper experiment and from it reached its conclusion that the explosion of gas was caused by a spark from the flash light, then clearly no new trial should be granted for an error which could not have resulted in injury. To this consideration we now come.

[6] The special verdict that the explosion was caused by a spark from the flash light was not material to the case, and defendant's position would not have been bettered if the jury had found that the cause of the explosion was not the spark from the flash light, but the fire from Cressaty's stove. It is to be remembered that this is not Cressaty's action to recover, which might be defeated by proof of his own contributory negligence. It is the action of his landlord, and, unless it can be said that the landlord was responsible for the negligent act of the tenant so as to defeat the landlord's recovery, the statement just made is unanswerable.

[7] Upon this proposition something of what was said by this court in Merrill v. Los Angeles G. & E. Co., supra, is applicable. We are not cited to any authority supporting respondent's position that a landlord would be responsible for the tenant's negligence, and, indeed, the rule is directly to the contrary. "Deplorable, indeed, would be the situation of landlords if they were liable to be harassed by actions for the culpable negligence of their tenants." Cheetham v. Hampson, 4 D. & East. 319. See, also, Kalis v. Shattuck, 69 Cal. 594, 11 Pac. 346, 48 Am. Rep. 568; White v. Montgomery, 58 Ga. 204; Batterman v. Finn, 32 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 502. Since the landlord is not responsible for the negligence of the tenant, proof of that negligence could not be used to defeat his recovery for injuries to his property, and thus, if it were established that the negligence of the gas company, running concurrently with the negligence of the tenant, united to produce the injury to the property, the landlord would have his recourse against both or either for the reasons given in Merrill v. Los Angeles G. & E. Co., supra. Therefore, in this case, the finding that the spark from the flash light caused the explosion, even if erroneous, or if erroneously arrived at, could not have worked injury to the defendant.

[8] It is next urged that the court erred "in taking the jury during their deliberations, and without the consent of the defendant or its attorneys, pass the building which was damaged, and thereby affording said jury an opportunity of viewing said premises." The evidence upon this point discloses merely that the sheriff in charge of the jury, conducting the members to lunch, led them by an ordinary, natural, and convenient route, which happened to pass plaintiff's building. This was the only way in which the court "took the jury." The jury was not conducted past the building for the purpose of inspection. It does not even appear that they knew they were passing the building, much less that their attention was directed to it. The building itself had been repaired at the time, and the circumstance was of so trifling a character that even if the case had been criminal it would not be a ground for disturbing the verdict. Thus Wharton lays it down that a mere casual visit of the jury to the scene of the res gestæ, as where the jury when taking exercise under the custody of an officer walked by such scene is no ground for setting aside the verdict. Wharton, Crim. Pl. & Pr. (9th Ed.) § 834. The proposition is fully supported by authority, and, certainly, the rule would be no more rigid in a civil case than in a criminal.

The measure of damages touching loss of rents was accurately given to the jury. Linthorpe v. San Francisco G. & E. Co., 156 Cal. 62, 103 Pac. 320.

[9] It was in evidence that it would take from 60 to 75 days to restore the building to its condition before the explosion. It was shown that the rental value of the destroyed building amounted to $700 a month. The jury's award for loss of rents was $1,264.75, and it was within the evidence.

[10] Mr. Rebman qualified as an expert of 22 years' experience as a contractor and builder. He testified that he "knew the building known as Nos. 114-116-118 West Second street prior to February 13, 1907, and had examined the building after the explosion." His testimony as to the cost of repairing the building and the length of time it would take to restore it, it is said, was inadmissible, in that it was not shown that he had sufficient knowledge of the character of the building before the explosion. He did, however, testify that he knew the building before the explosion and examined it afterward. Here was sufficient upon which to predicate his expert testimony, and, if defendant desired more elaborate information as to the extent of his knowledge, he should have been examined to that end.

[11] The court instructed that the plaintiff was entitled to recover such an amount as the jury might find that "he really lost in rents by reason of the premises being destroyed by the explosion during such time as it would take with reasonable diligence to repair such building." It is urged that as the building was originally two stories in height, and that the plaintiff had rebuilt it to but one story in height, and, "as plaintiff never intended to restore the second story," it was error for the court to allow the plaintiff to recover as damages the rent lost during such time as it would take with reasonable diligence to restore it. We think respondent herein misconstrues the true meaning of the rule of damages. Plaintiff is not entitled to recover only in the event that he proposes to restore the building to its former condition. He had a two-story building with a certain rental value until it was injured through the negligence of the defendant, and he was entitled to recover his loss of rents occasioned by that negligence up to the time when he could with diligence have restored the building, whether in fact he ever restored it or not.

This answers all of the grounds urged by respondent in support of the court's order granting a new trial.

None of them, as we have undertaken to show, is tenable, and for the reasons given the order granting a new trial is reversed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

159 Cal. 694

COOK v. W. S. RAY MFG. CO.

(S. F. 5,151.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 10, 1911.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 503*)—VENUE—PRINCIPAL PLACE OF BUSINESS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 395, provides that all actions must be tried in the county in which some of the defendants reside. Const. art. 12, § 16, provides that a corporation may be sued in the county where the contract is made or is to be performed, or where the obligation or liability arises, or the breach occurs, or in the county of the principal place of business of the corporation subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial. Held, that an action against a corporation may at the option of the plaintiff be commenced in any of the counties designated in the constitutional provision other than the one in which the corporation has its principal place of business, and prosecuted to final judgment where commenced, unless the corporation can show sufficient ground for a change other than its residence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1935, 1936, 1943; Dec. Dig. § 503.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 513*)—ACTION—VENUE—ALLEGATIONS OF COMPLAINT.

In an action against a domestic corporation to recover damages for breach of warranty of the quality of goods sold, an allegation in the complaint that the goods were sold and delivered by the defendant to plaintiff in S. county was sufficient to show that the venue of the action was properly laid in S. county under Const. art. 12, § 16, providing that a corporation may be sued in the county where the contract is made or is to be performed, or where the obligation or liability arises, or the breach occurs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 513.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 503*)—ACTION—VENUE—CONSTRUCTION OF CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISION.

Const. art. 12, § 16, provides that "a corporation or association may be sued in the county where the contract is made or is to be performed, or where the obligation or liability arises, or the breach occurs; or in the county where the principal place of business of the corporation is situated, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial as in other cases." Held, that the punctuation of this section of the Constitution does not require the construction that it allows a corporation to move for a change of the place of trial only when the action has been commenced in the county of its principal place of business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 503.*]

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 249*)—EQUAL PROTECTION OF LAWS—VENUE OF ACTIONS AGAINST CORPORATIONS.

Const. art. 12, § 16, provides that a corporation or association may be sued in the county where the contract is made or is to be performed, or where the obligation or liability arises, or the breach occurs, or in the county where the principal place of business of such corporation is situated, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial as in other cases. Code Civ. Proc. § 395, provides that all actions must be tried in the county in which the defendants or some of them reside. Section 392 provides that certain actions based on claims of interest in or damages to real property must be tried in the county where the land is situated. Held, that in view of the fact that at the time of the adoption of the Constitution all the corporations of the state had designated the city of San Francisco as their principal place of business, and that to have compelled litigants to commence and prosecute their actions against corporations in San Francisco would have subjected them to ruinous expense, a reasonable basis existed for a distinction, in respect to actions of a transitory nature between corporations and natural persons, though such basis might not have existed in respect to real actions as provided for in section 392, and hence the state constitutional provision is not violative of the fourteenth amendment of the federal Constitution as denying to corporations the equal protection of the laws.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 710; Dec. Dig. § 249.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; John E. Richards, Judge.

Action by Fred R. Cook against the W. S. Ray Manufacturing Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

L. A. Redman (Jewel Alexander, of counsel), for appellant. Will M. Beggs and R. C. McComish, for respondent. Page, McCutchen & Knight, amici curiae.

BEATTY, C. J. The defendant in this action is a California corporation, having its principal place of business in the city and county of San Francisco. The action was commenced in the county of Santa Clara to recover damages for breach of warranty of the quality and fitness of certain galvanized sheet iron which it was alleged was sold and delivered by the defendant to the plaintiff in said county of Santa Clara. The defendant demurred to the complaint, and at the same time filed its demand, affidavits, and motion for an order changing the place of trial to said city and county of San Francisco, "where said defendant resides and has its principal place of business." This is an appeal from the order denying that motion, and involves a consideration of our constitutional and code provisions relating to the place of trial of those civil actions, in which our domestic corporations are defendants.

[1] By section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is provided that all actions (with certain exceptions, among which the present does not fall) must be tried in the county in which the defendants or some of them reside. It has been frequently held in this state that a corporation resides at its principal place of business, and, if the rights of the parties depended upon the statute alone, the order denying the motion of defendant could not be upheld. But by section 16 of article 12 of the Constitution it is provided that: "Sec. 16. A corporation or association may be sued in the county where the contract is made or is to be performed, or where the obligation or liability arises, or the breach occurs; or in the county where the principal place of business of such corporation is situated, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial as in other cases." And this has been held to mean, not merely that an action against a corporation may, at the option of the plaintiff, be commenced in one of the designated counties other than the one in which the defendant has its principal place of business, but that it may be prosecuted to final judgment where commenced, unless the defendant can allege and show some sufficient ground for a change of the place of trial distinct from the fact that the residence of the corporation is in another county. Trezevant v. Strong & Co., 102 Cal. 49, 36 Pac. 395; Miller & Lux v. Kern County Land Co., 134 Cal. 589, 66 Pac. 856. So far as the construction of the Constitution and statutes of California is concerned, the doctrine of these cases has never been questioned, except possibly in Grocers' Union v. Kern County Land Co., 150 Cal. 466, 89 Pac. 120, but it is here contended that the constitutional provision above quoted, as construed by this court, excludes our domestic corporations from the benefit of a statutory right conferred upon all natural persons resident of the state, and is for that reason violative of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and whether this is so or not is the sole question to be decided.

[2] It is true that the appellant urges the objection that the complaint does not show that the breach of contract alleged therein occurred in Santa Clara county, but we have no doubt that it does.

[3] It is also contended by the respondent that the punctuation of section 16, article 12, of the Constitution, requires a construction which would allow a corporation to move for a change of the place of trial only when the action has been commenced in the county of its principal place of business. We do not consider this the proper construction of the section, and do not see how such construction would aid the disposition of the present appeal. If the main feature of said section as construed in the cases above cited is violative of the fourteenth amendment of the federal Constitution, no construction of its final clause could save it, and, if it is not violative of the fourteenth amendment, the construction contended for is of no consequence in this case.

[4] Aside from these minor questions, thus briefly considered, all that we have to decide in this case is, as above stated, whether section 16 of article 12 of the Constitution of California, as heretofore construed, is in its application to transitory actions, such as this, violative of a right secured to our domestic corporations by the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution. To sustain its contention on this point the appellant relies principally upon the decision of this court in the case of Grocers' Union v. Kern County Land Co., 150 Cal. 466, 89 Pac. 120. That case does clearly overrule our unanimous decision in Miller & Lux v. Kern County Land Company, as the case was presented on the first appeal. 134 Cal. 586, 66 Pac. 856. It is perhaps not in conflict with the point actually decided on the second appeal of the Miller & Lux case, though the correctness of the first decision was there assumed. In neither of those cases, however, was the point suggested or considered, upon which the decision in the Grocers' Union Case turned, and upon which the appellant here claims a reversal of the order denying its motion for a change of the place of trial. In that case for the first time we were asked to consider the bearing of our code provisions as to venue upon section 16, article 12, of our Constitution, as affected by the fourteenth amendment, and it was there decided, in effect, that our Legislature by section 392 of the Code of Civil Procedure has declared it to be the permanent policy of the state that certain actions based on claims of interest in or damages to, real property, must be tried in the county where the land is situate; that the right conferred upon landowners by this provision is a substantial and valuable privilege; that there is no imaginable reason why corporations owning lands within the state should be denied a right common to all other landowners, and, therefore, that the effect of such denial is to deprive them of the equal protection of the laws, contrary to the inhibition of the fourteenth amendment.

It is here contended that by section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is declared to be the permanent policy of the state that in a large class of actions, including the present case, the trial must be in the county where the defendant or some of the defendants reside, that the privilege is a valuable one, and that there is no reason for excluding our domestic corporations from its advantages. If there is a flaw in this reasoning, it consists in ignoring the essential difference between real and quasi real actions, and those personal actions covered by the terms of section 16, article 12, of the Constitution—the class of actions which the debates in the constitutional convention prove that the members had in mind when considering and adopting said section. It was notorious at that time that nearly all of the California corporations had designated San Francisco as their principal place of business, and that while they had offices in San Francisco where their books and accounts were kept, their stocks transferred, and their directors' meetings held, they were operating mines and factories, and making contracts to be performed in distant parts of the state; that the nature of their business must necessarily involve them in frequent litigation arising out of torts and breaches of contract; that, if all such cases must be tried in San Francisco, the business of the local courts would be congested; that there would be unreasonable and unnecessary delay in bringing contested cases to trial, and the complaining parties often subjected to ruinous expense in prosecuting their claims. These considerations, none of which affect the class of cases provided for in section 392 of the Code of Civil Procedure, were deemed by the framers of our Constitution sufficiently important to justify the discrimination which they made between corporations and natural persons as to the venue of personal actions, and so it seems to us, at least so far as it affects actions for breaches of contracts, damages for personal injuries, and the like. And here lies the distinction between this case and Grocers' Union v. Kern County Land Co. In that case it was found that there was no conceivable reason for any discrimination between corporations and natural persons as to the privilege of being sued only in the county where the land affected was situate. Here it appears that there were at the time our Constitution was adopted weighty considerations justifying the discrimination as to actions arising out of breach of contract. The same conditions which prevailed at that time still continue, though modified to some extent by the fact that other places outside of San Francisco are now the principal places of business of many large corporations formed since the adoption of the Constitution, which, however, may be held to have accepted as one of the conditions of their corporate existence the particular provision of our Constitution here in question. "If the views above stated are correct, this case is governed by the principle affirmed in Cincinnati St. Railway Co. v. Snell, 193 U. S. 30, 24 Sup. Ct. 319, 48 L. Ed. 604—the principle, that is to say, that the fourteenth amendment safeguards only fundamental rights, and not the mere form which the state may deem proper for their enforcement. That was a case involving a discrimination made by a statute of the state of Ohio between corporations and natural persons as to the venue of personal actions, and the statute was upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States without any dissenting opinion."

The order of the superior court is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

(159 Cal. 494)

SIMONEAU v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO. (L. A. 2,213.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 13, 1911.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 317*)—RATE OF SPEED AT CROSSING — ORDINANCES — CONSTRUCTION — TRACKS—"STREET RAILWAY."

An ordinance required cars operated over street railway tracks to be equipped with fenders, and prohibited running cars upon any street railway track, upon or over any street crossing within a certain district of a city, at a greater speed than four miles an hour, and over street crossings outside of such district, but within the city, at more than eight miles an hour. An accident occurred within the city limits at a street intersection, where for a considerable distance in either direction the track was laid on a private right of way which was fenced. The track was laid with customary railroad T-rails above the ground, except that at crossings the rails were flush with the ground, and the intersections were open, but protected with cattle guards, and had signs "Look out for the cars." The track was used by both inter-urban and local cars. Deceased was struck by a local car running for the greater part of its course over the city streets, and, after leaving the streets, over the defendant's private right of way to the city limits, and stopping at street crossings on signal. Held, that the crossing was not within the ordinance prohibiting a greater speed than eight miles an hour, as the applicability thereof does not depend upon the nature of the car, but upon the nature of the track, and such track at such place was not a street railway track.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1009-1012; Dec. Dig. § 317.*]

2. STREET RAILROADS (§ 2*)—WHAT CONSTITUTES "STREET RAILWAY."

A "street railway" is defined as "a railroad constructed upon the surface of the public street in towns or cities; a tramway," and "a railroad on the surface of the streets for the convenience of passengers; a surface railroad, as in a city," and "is one constructed and operated on and along the streets of a city or town, or to and from its suburbs."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 2-4; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 6693-6696.]

3. STREET RAILROADS (§ 2*)—WHAT CONSTITUTES STREET RAILROAD—MOTIVE POWER.

Whether a railway is a street railway does not depend solely upon the motive power, but other features are to be considered, as the location and method of construction of the track, the manner of the operation of the cars, and the general purpose of the enterprise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 2-4; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

4. STREET RAILROADS (§ 2*)—WHAT CONSTITUTES STREET RAILROAD—MOTIVE POWER—ORDINANCES.

An essential element of a street railway in the ordinary acceptance of the expression is that the road should run along and upon a street or road in such manner as not to exclude the public from such street or road as a public highway, and, where a track was laid along a private right of way in such a manner as to exclude the general public from the use of any part of the strip, it was not a street railway track, nor would the fact that the rails were laid flush with the surface at a street crossing so that vehicles and passengers might cross convert the track at such point into a street car track.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 2-4; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

5. PLEADING (§ 124*)—TRAVERSE.

Where a complaint alleged that the defendant was operating a line of street cars upon various streets and thoroughfares of a city, and particularly along a certain avenue crossing certain intersecting streets, and set forth an ordinance, and that defendant negligently and wantonly caused its car to be run at a greater speed than the ordinance allowed, and the answer did not deny ownership, but alleged that the car which collided with plaintiff's decedent was being operated upon a private right of way of the defendant running over a street to the suburb, that said line was a part of an interurban railway system, and that said street crossed a railway track at its private right of way, and was not a street crossing within the meaning of the ordinance, while not denying that the car was being operated upon a street railway track, clearly evidenced an intent to set up facts showing the inapplicability of the ordinance, and was good for that purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 256; Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

6. PLEADING (§ 120*)—TRAVERSE.

It is not necessary, in order to raise an issue, that a denial be made in the precise words of the averment sought to be controverted, but any averment in an answer which, if found to be true, necessarily shows that the allegation of the complaint as to the same matter is untrue, is a good traverse, and sufficient as a denial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 244, 253, 254, 257, 258; Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

7. RAILROADS (§ 344*)—INJURIES AT CROSSINGS—NEGLIGENCE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

Where a complaint alleged that a motorman on approaching a crossing gave a signal indicating that the car would stop, but failed to do so, the question of the signal has a double bearing, as showing negligence on the part of the motorman in failing to slow down, and as overcoming the inference that deceased was guilty of contributory negligence in attempting to cross. Hence, if the custom of so signaling were shown, it could be considered in both aspects.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 344.*]

8. DEATH (§ 69*)—ACTION—DAMAGES—EVIDENCE.

In an action against a street railroad company for negligence in running over and killing a man, testimony of the widow that one of their children, a little girl, was crippled in the right arm, and had been under the surgeon's care for a number of months, and that another little girl had a shoulder blade turned around, and had been doctoring for a good many years, and was still under the doctor's care, was admissible on the question of damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 86, 87; Dec. Dig. § 69.*]

9. DEATH (§ 86*)—ACTION—DAMAGES.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 377, providing that, when the death of a person is caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, either his heirs or personal representatives may maintain an action for damages, and that such damages may be given as under all the circumstances may be just, the jury is authorized to take into consideration the pecuniary injury resulting to those who were most nearly related to the deceased, and who in the ordinary course of human affairs would probably have been the most benefited by his labor if he had lived.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 114, 119; Dec. Dig. § 86.*]

10. DEATH (§ 81*)—ACTION—DAMAGES—LOSS OF SOCIETY, ETC.

While solace for wounded feelings may not be included in damages awarded, the loss of society, comfort, and care to a wife and children, as well as their support, may be considered in so far as they affect the question of pecuniary loss to them by the death of the husband and father.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Dec. Dig. § 81.*]

11. DEATH (§ 86*)—ACTION—DAMAGES—PECUNIARY LOSS.

The pecuniary loss suffered by the heirs of a person killed by reason of his death may be either a loss arising from the deprivation of something to which such heirs would have been legally entitled if the person had lived, or a loss arising from a deprivation of benefits which, from all the circumstances of the particular case, it could be reasonably expected such heirs would have received from the deceased had his life not been taken, although the obligation resting on him to bestow such benefits may have been a moral obligation only.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 114-119; Dec. Dig. § 86.*]

12. PARENT AND CHILD (§ 3*)—SUPPORT OF CHILD—PARENT'S DUTY—MEDICAL ATTENTION.

A father is bound to supply proper medical attention to his children.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parent and Child, Cent. Dig. §§ 33-36; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

13. TRIAL (§ 54*)—DAMAGES—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In an action for the death of the father, evidence offered on the question of damages as to the crippled condition of his children is not inadmissible merely because of its tendency to excite the sympathies of the jury, as that may be guarded against by instructions that the evidence can only be considered as bearing on the question of the pecuniary loss.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 126-128; Dec. Dig. § 54.*]

14. DEATH (§ 32*)—ACTION FOR—DAMAGES—THEORY.

Code Civ. Proc. § 377, provides that, where the death of an adult is caused by the wrongful act of another, his heirs or personal representatives may sue for damages against the person causing the same, or, if such person be an employe, against his employer also, if responsible for his conduct, and that such damages may be given as under the circumstances are just. Held, that the statute is framed to give the damages to the family of deceased as a family, and does not contemplate a division of the award into proportional parts, the various heirs taking not as heirs or by succession, but as beneficiaries of the statute, and that, while only one action will lie, recovery can be had in it for the damages sustained by each person included in the term "heirs."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. § 47; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Action by Richard F. Simoneau, administrator of the estate of William Alexander Campbell, deceased, against the Pacific Electric Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed, and new trial ordered.

Gibson, Trask, Dunn & Crutcher and Norman S. Sterry (John H. Lathrop, of counsel), for appellant. Ernest E. Wood, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Action by the administrator of the estate of William Alexander Campbell to recover damages for injuries causing the death of his intestate. The plaintiff recovered a verdict and judgment in the sum of $7,000. The defendant appeals from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

Campbell's injuries were received while he was trying to cross the track of the defendant corporation at a point where said track intersects Thirty-Eighth street in the city of Los Angeles. The complaint alleges negligence on the part of the defendant in a number of particulars, of which we need mention only the following: It is averred that the agents of the defendant in charge of its car were negligently and wantonly operating the said car at a rate of speed greatly in excess of eight miles an hour and at a rate of more than twenty miles an hour; that they "sounded a whistle twice just prior to the time of reaching the said crossing as an indication that the car would slow down and stop at said crossing, and then, on the contrary, negligently failed to cause the said car to slow down pursuant to said signal and thereby misled the said Campbell as to the rate of speed at which the said car would approach the said crossing;" and that the defendant negligently failed to equip its car with a life-saving fender. In addition to the general allegations of negligence in respect of excessive speed and the failure to equip the car with a fender, the plaintiff set up the terms of an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles limiting, as he claimed, the rate of speed at the place of the accident to eight miles an hour and requiring at such place the use of a fender. We shall have occasion to refer to this ordinance more in detail hereafter. The answer, in addition to denying or undertaking to deny the various averments of negligence on the part of the defendant, alleged that Campbell's injuries were due to contributory negligence on his part.

The jury returned a general verdict, and also returned answers as follows to interrogatories submitted by the court:

"Interrogatory No. 1. If you find that the deceased came to his death by reason of the negligence of the defendant, did that negligence consist in the running of the car at an excessive rate of speed or a lack of fenders on the car? Answer. Excessive speed.

"Interrogatory No. 2. Was the deceased guilty of contributory negligence or did he act with ordinary care and prudence? Answer. First clause, No. Second clause, Yes."

The case was submitted to the jury under instructions based on the theory that the ordinance of the city of Los Angeles limiting the rate of speed of cars and requiring the use of fenders applied to the place where the accident occurred. The jury were accordingly instructed that if Campbell, while in the exercise of ordinary care for his own safety, was struck and killed by a car operated by the defendant, the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict if the car was being operated at a rate of speed in excess of eight miles an hour, and if Campbell's death was caused by this excessive rate of speed. The court further instructed the jury that the failure to provide a fender, if such failure was the cause of Campbell's death, entitled the plaintiff to a verdict under like conditions.

The defendant contends that under the undisputed evidence concerning the location and nature of the track upon which the car was operated the ordinance had no application with reference either to the rate of speed or the use of a fender. The jury seems by its answer to special interrogatory No. 1 to have based its verdict upon the first ground, and it will be sufficient in discussing the point to consider the question of speed alone. The ordinance in question is numbered 12,829, and is entitled, "An ordinance requiring cars operated over street railway tracks to be equipped with fenders therein described, and regulating the operation of cars on street railway tracks in the city of Los Angeles." Section 1 provides for the use of a fender. Section 2 reads as follows: "That from and after the passage of this ordinance it shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to run or operate, or cause to be run or operated, any street car, or any car, upon any street railway track, upon or over any street crossing or intersection within the following district in the city of Los Angeles at a greater speed than four miles an hour, or upon or over any street crossing or intersection outside of said district, but within the city of Los Angeles, at a greater speed than eight miles an hour. * * * The ordinance then describes a district within which the four-mile limit shall apply, said district not including the place where the accident in question occurred.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It appears by the undisputed evidence that the place where the accident occurred was within the limits of the city of Los Angeles and on the defendant's line of track running from Los Angeles to Long Beach. This line, after running in part over the streets of Los Angeles, entered upon a strip of land running north and south and held and owned by the defendant as a private right of way. This strip was intersected at a right angle by Thirty-Eighth street. For a considerable distance in either direction from the crossing of Thirty-Eighth street, exceeding a mile to the north of such crossing, this right of way was fenced in. Except where Thirty-Eighth street and other streets crossed the line of road, the track was laid with T-rails upon ties above the level of the ground in the manner customary in the construction of steam roads. Thirty-Eighth street was a paved street, and where it crossed the line of railroad was built up flush with the top of the rails. The fence inclosing the right of way had openings at Thirty-Eighth street, but the crossing was protected by cattle guards as steam railroads usually are. At said point the defendant maintained a railroad crossing sign bearing the words "Look out for the cars." The track was used by both the interurban cars running between Los Angeles and Long Beach and by some local cars. The car which struck Campbell was a car running for the greater part of its course over the city streets and, after leaving the streets, over the private right of way to the then city limits. It was operated as a local car stopping on signal to take and discharge passengers. At the time of the accident it was south-bound.

Under these circumstances, was the point where Thirty-Eighth street crossed the track one of the places at which, under a fair construction of the ordinance, a speed in excess of eight miles an hour was prohibited? The ordinance makes it unlawful to operate "any street car or any car upon any street railway track upon or over any street crossing or intersection" at a greater speed than that specified. It will be observed that the applicability of the ordinance does not depend upon the nature of the car which is being operated. The running of any car, whether street car, or other, is within the terms of the prohibition. But, in order to come within the ordinance, the car must be operated "upon a street railway track upon or over any street crossing or intersection." The question, then, is whether such track as the one above described is a street railway track. Upon a consideration of the usual meaning of the words, as well as the uniform current of authority, this question must be answered in the negative.

A street railway is defined in the Century dictionary as "a railroad constructed upon the surface of the public street in towns or cities; a tramway"; in the Standard dictionary as "a railroad on the surface of the streets, for the convenience of passengers; a surface railroad, as in a city." Our own court in Board of Railroad Com'rs v. Market St. Ry., 132 Cal. at page 683, 64 Pac. 1067, quoting with approval the case of Bloxham v. Consumers', etc., Co., 36 Fla. 539, 18 South. 444, 29 L. R. A. 507, 51 Am. St. Rep. 44, uses this language: "The term 'street railroad' applies only to such roads, the rails of which are laid to conform to the grade and surface of the street, and which is otherwise constructed so that the public are not excluded from the street as a public highway, which runs at a moderate rate of speed, compared with commercial railroads, which carries no freight, but only passengers from one part of a thickly populated district to another, in a town or city and its suburbs." In Hannah v. Met. St. R. Co., 81 Mo. App. 79, the court says: "A 'street railway' has been variously defined. As the name indicates, the primary meaning of 'street railway,' or 'street railroad,' is one constructed and operated on and along the streets of a city or town for the carriage of persons from one point to another in such city or town or to and from its suburbs." Similar expressions are to be found in many cases. Philadelphia v. McManes, 175 Pa. 28, 33, 34 Atl. 331; Nichols v. Ann Arbor & Y. St. R. Co., 87 Mich. 361, 49 N. W. 538, 16 L. R. A. 371; Massachusetts Loan & Trust Co. v. Hamilton, 88 Fed. 588, 32 C. C. A. 46; Diebold v. Traction Co., 117 Ky. 146, 77 S. W. 674, 63 L. R. A. 637, 111 Am. St. Rep. 230, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 1275; Freiday v. Sioux City, etc., Co., 92 Iowa, 191, 60 N. W. 656, 26 L. R. A. 246; T. & H. Elec. Co. v. Simon, 20 Or. 60, 25 Pac. 147, 10 L. R. A. 251, 23 Am. St. Rep. 86; South & N. A. R. Co. v. Highland Ave. & B. R. Co., 119 Ala. 105, 24 South. 114.

Whether or not a railway is a street railway does not depend on the motive power. Nichols v. A. A. & Y. S. R. Co., supra; McNab v. United Ry., etc., Co., 94 Md. 719, 51 Atl. 421. Various features are to be considered. Among those are the location and method of construction of the track, the manner of the operation of the cars, and the general purpose of the enterprise. Here, however, we are confronted by a somewhat narrower question. The ordinance speaks, not of the operation of street railways, but of cars upon street railway tracks. It would seem clear that in the definition of this term the location and manner of construction are most important factors. The decisions above cited, and particularly that of this court in Board of R. R. Com'rs v. Market St. Ry.

Co., supra, indicate that an essential element of a street railway in the ordinary acceptance of the phrase is that the road should run along and upon a street or road in such manner as not to exclude the public from the use of such street or road as a public highway. Applying this test, there can be no doubt that the track of the defendant, in so far as it was laid along its private right of way in such manner as to exclude the general public from the use of any part of the strip, was not a street railway track.

The respondent draws attention to the fact that for the width of Thirty-Eighth street the track was laid flush with the surface so that passengers and vehicles might cross on the street. It cannot be said that this part of the track was thereby converted into a street railway track. A street railway, as we have seen, is one running along a public street, not across one. To adopt the contention of the respondent in this regard would mean that the track of every commercial or steam railroad which in entering the city of Los Angeles crossed any street became to the extent of the width of such street a street railway track. This is obviously not the intent of the ordinance.

We have already expressed the opinion that, giving to the words used their ordinary meaning, the language of the ordinance requires that its applicability be made to depend upon the nature and location of the track, rather than upon the character of the particular car that is running upon the track. And, apart from any consideration of mere definition of words, we think the ordinance is given a more reasonable effect by this interpretation. If it were to be held that for the purposes of this particular case the track in question was a street railroad track because the car that hit Campbell was a local or street car, the logical result would be that a car operated as a through passenger or freight car over the same track would not be required to observe the limits of speed. It would follow, too, that such through car when running on city streets over tracks which are ordinarily classed as street railway tracks would be free from such limitations. So read, the ordinance would afford very little protection to the public. The ordinance should be construed so as to require both interurban and local cars to be equipped with fenders and to limit their speed when running over street crossings upon those portions of the tracks which are laid upon public streets in the manner which has been described as pertaining to street railways, but to exclude them from the effect of the ordinance when they are being operated upon tracks of the character here described.

From these views, it follows that the court was in error in giving the instructions above referred to. The same reasoning requires the conclusion that defendant's requested instruction No. 4, to the effect that the ordinance limiting speed was not applicable, should have been given. The appellant also urges that it was error to admit the ordinance in evidence. It may be that this ruling could be defended on the ground that the character of the track could not be definitely known until the evidence was all in. The introduction of the ordinance in advance of proof of the character of the track would be a matter going merely to the order of proof, and would in itself be unimportant if on proof of the facts, as shown by this record, the court had instructed the jury that the ordinance was not to be considered.

It is contended by the respondent that the pleadings fail to raise an issue as to the applicability of the ordinance. We think this contention is based on too narrow a consideration of the averments and denials. The complaint alleges that the defendant was operating a line of street cars upon various streets and thoroughfares of the city of Los Angeles, and particularly along Long Beach avenue in said city, and past the intersection of Long Beach avenue with Thirty-Eighth street of the city of Los Angeles. It then alleges the substance of the ordinance, and declares that the defendant negligently and wantonly caused its car to be run at a greater speed than eight miles an hour. The answer does not deny that the defendant was the owner of a line of street cars operated as stated, but alleges that the car with which Campbell collided was being operated upon a private right of way of the defendant running from the city of Los Angeles to the city of Long Beach; that said line was a part of the interurban railway system, and that the said street, to wit, Thirty-Eighth street, crossed the said railway track at its private right of way, and was not a street crossing or intersection within the meaning of the said ordinance set out in the complaint.

If it be said that the answer does not deny that the car was being operated upon a street railway track, it is to be observed that the fact of such operation is not, in express terms, averred in the complaint. But, beyond this, the answer does clearly evidence an intent on the part of the pleader to set up facts showing the inapplicability of the ordinance, and we think succeeds in effecting this purpose. It is not necessary, in order to raise an issue, that a denial be made in the precise words of the averment sought to be controverted. "Any allegation in an answer which, if found to be true, necessarily shows that the allegation of the complaint as to the same matter is untrue, is a good traverse, and sufficient as a denial." Burris v. People's Ditch Co., 104 Cal. 248, 253, 37 Pac. 922; Perkins v. Brock, 80 Cal. 320, 22 Pac. 194; Stetson v. Briggs, 114 Cal. 511, 46 Pac. 603.

The errors committed with reference to the ordinance necessitate a reversal. The case seems to have been submitted to the jury without regard to any averment of negligence other than those arising from the ordinance. Upon a new trial, the plaintiff will, of course, be entitled to offer evidence in support of each specification of negligence pleaded, including the claim that, irrespective of any legislative limitation, the defendant's car was operated at a speed in excess of that which would be permitted in the exercise of due care. A discussion of some further points may be useful as a guide for rulings upon a new trial.

The complaint alleges as an element of negligence that the motorman on approaching Thirty-Eighth street gave a signal (two whistles) as an indication that the car would stop. The answer to this allegation is not so direct as it might have been. If the point were of vital importance, we should be inclined to think the denial sufficient to raise an issue on the question whether the blowing of two whistles was intended and ordinarily understood to give notice of an intention to stop. But, since there is to be a new trial, this need not be decided. The defendant on a proper showing may be granted leave to amend its answer.

The question of this signal of two whistles has a double bearing. It is counted on by plaintiff as establishing negligence on the part of the defendant in failing to slow down or stop after indicating an intent so to do, and is further urged as tending to overcome the inference—otherwise perhaps irresistible under the facts shown in the record—that Campbell had been guilty of contributory negligence. We think that, if the custom or practice of so signaling were shown, it would be legitimate matter to be considered in both aspects. That failure to follow the announced signal would tend to show negligence on the part of the motorman is not disputed. And on the issue of contributory negligence the evidence might conceivably be such as to authorize the jury to infer that the signal constituted an invitation to approach the track in the belief that the car was about to stop at Thirty-Eighth street. But these issues of negligence on the part of the defendant and of Campbell must be determined in the light of the evidence that may be introduced on a new trial. Such evidence may vary materially from that contained in the present record. There is therefore no occasion for us to attempt to say whether in the trial already had there was sufficient evidence to justify the submission to the jury of the questions whether the signal had the meaning alleged in the complaint, and whether the conduct of the decedent was free from such negligence as to bar the action.

One further suggestion may be made regarding the issue of contributory negligence. In view of what we have said in discussing the applicability of the ordinance, it seems clear that the track at the point where Campbell undertook to cross partook more of the nature of a steam railroad than of a street railroad track. The language of the District Court of Appeal in Heitman v. Pac. Elec. R. Co., 10 Cal. App. 397, 402, 102 Pac. 15, 17, is in point: "Without assuming to hold that in all cases and under all conditions the crossing of an interurban electric railway is to be governed by the same rules as those applied to steam railways, we nevertheless feel that the rule of precaution laid down in Herbert v. Southern Pac. Co., 121 Cal. 227, 230 [53 Pac. 651], is applicable here." Instructions 14, 17, 18, and 19, given by the court at the request of the defendant, embodied these views, and stated them as favorably to the defendant as it has a right to demand. This appeal was first heard by the District Court of Appeal for the Second Appellate district, which, after filing an opinion for affirmance of the order, granted a rehearing. On the rehearing, the justices were unable to agree. The original opinion considered, among other things, a point made by appellant with regard to the admission of testimony bearing on the amount of damage. We approve, and adopt that court's statement and discussion of the point, as follows:

"The wife of the deceased was permitted, against the objection of defendant, to testify that one of the children of herself and the deceased, a little girl, was crippled in the right arm and had been under the surgeon's care for seven or eight months; and that another little girl had a shoulder blade turned around, that it was so from birth, and that she had been doctored for a 'good many years' and was still under the doctor's care. We are of the opinion that this evidence was admissible. The courts have not attempted to declare any general rules to be applied in determining the evidence which may be considered by the jury in ascertaining what damages are just in an action of this kind. Even in reviewing the conclusions of the jury in view of the circumstances of the special cases under consideration (section 377, Code Civ. Proc.), it has been found to be impracticable to designate the particular elements of the loss for which damages may be awarded in such an action. Following the English court's declaration of the purpose of Lord Campbell's act, after which our statute is patterned, our own Supreme Court has said the action under section 377 of the Code of Civil Procedure is intended 'for compensating the families of persons killed, not for the solacing of their wounded feelings.' Munro v. Dredging Co., 84 Cal. 515, 523 [24 Pac. 303, 18 Am. St. Rep. 248]. Of the statute of 1862, which preceded the Code provision, it was said: 'The statute intends the recovery to be a humane provision for those who have lost their natural protector, through the negligence of another.' * * * 'The jury is authorized to take into consideration the pecuniary injury resulting to those who were most nearly related to the deceased, and who in the ordinary course of human affairs would probably have been the most benefited by his future labors if he had lived.' Taylor v. Western P. Co., 45 Cal. 323, 333. While solace for wounded feelings may not be included in the damages awarded, the loss of society, comfort, and care to a wife and children, as well as their support, may be considered in so far as they affect the question of pecuniary loss to them by the death of the husband and father. Beeson v. Green Mountain Co., 57 Cal. 20, 38; Green v. Southern Pac. Co., 122 Cal. 563 [55 Pac. 577]. And so it was held proper for a trial court to instruct the jury that the value of the services of a mother to her children in their nurture and instruction, and in their moral, physical, and intellectual training, might be considered in estimating the damage to them by her death, and that the value thereof was not to be determined by the value of such services as rendered by a hired servant, but should be ascertained in the light of the ability and willingness of the mother to perform such services, and also that the pecuniary interest of the children in such services did not of necessity terminate with their arrival at the age of majority. Redfield v. Oakland Co., 110 Cal. 277, 288 [42 Pac. 822, 1063]. The pecuniary loss suffered by the 'heirs' of a person killed, by reason of his death, 'may be either a loss arising from the deprivation of something to which such heirs would have been legally entitled if the person had lived, or a loss arising from a deprivation of benefits which, from all the circumstances of the particular case, it could be reasonably expected such heirs would have received from the deceased had his life not been taken, although the obligation resting on him to bestow such benefits on them may have been a moral obligation only,' says Shaw, J., in Sneed v. Marysville Gas Co., 149 Cal. 704, 710 [87 Pac. 376, page 378]. If the latter class does not include them, the benefits which might be expected from the kindly relations of the parties and the peculiar disposition of the deceased towards his family may be added to the foregoing (Cook v. Clay St. Co., 60 Cal. 604), and as affecting these questions evidence of the ill health and invalid condition of the wife have been held to be properly admitted. Evarts v. Santa Barbara, etc., Ry. Co., 3 Cal. App. 712, 715 [86 Pac. 830].

"Much of this kind of evidence so admitted is open to the objection urged by appellant, and which was sustained in the cases of Green v. Southern Pacific Co., 122 Cal. 563 [55 Pac. 577], and Mahoney v. S. F. Ry. Co., 110 Cal. 471 [42 Pac. 968, 43 Pac. 518], to wit, that it tends to create a sympathy for, or prejudice in favor of, the plaintiffs, but in those cases it was said that the testimony there under consideration could have been offered for no other purpose. The evidence before us cannot be so limited in its effect. The testimony introduced in those cases tended to show only that the children of the deceased (plaintiffs) had no means of their own. Had it been shown in addition to this that the children were unable to maintain themselves by work, a different question might have arisen. Section 206, Civ. Code. The obligation of support under this section is held to be cast upon the father of an invalid daughter, although over 18 years of age, and the wife who is awarded the custody of such invalid in a divorce proceeding is entitled to an allowance for her maintenance. Anderson v. Anderson, 124 Cal. 48, 54 [56 Pac. 630, 57 Pac. 81, 71 Am. St. Rep. 17]. Among the necessities which a father is called upon to supply to his children none is more clearly recognized than proper medical attention. While to the well child, food, clothing, and education, according to the parent's circumstances, are sufficient, if the child be either a temporary or permanent invalid, additional care may be required. Whether or not this shall constitute one of the elements of loss to the family of the deceased must be determined by the facts of the case under consideration. If it be urged that the ordinary support of the normal child might be considered by the jury from their own observations, there could be no such standard for sick or crippled children, as the case of each must be determined by evidence as to his or her condition. If a defendant fears the effect considered in the Mahoney and Green Cases where evidence otherwise competent is admitted, this may be provided against by instructing the jury as to such evidence, in the same manner as is done in respect to that relating to the loss of society, that it can only be considered as an element of pecuniary loss. We are unable to see upon what ground the evidence here under consideration could have been excluded.

"The statutes of some of the other states from which cases have been cited are so unlike our own that these are of little aid. Thus the statutes of the state of Illinois made the 'wife and next of kin' the beneficiaries in such an action, and the damages recovered are distributed among them in the same proportion as personal property of a deceased intestate is distributed under the statute for distribution in estates. Following this, it is held: 'The amount to be recovered is what the statute regards as the pecuniary value of the addition to such estate left as the deceased, in reasonable probability, would have made to it, and left, if his death had not been so wrongfully caused.' Chicago v. Woolridge [174 Ill. 330] 51 N. E. 701, 702. Under such a theory of the action, it is apparent that the wage-earning and accumulating capacity of the deceased would be the sole question of inquiry, and that cases decided in such a jurisdiction are so out of harmony, both with our statutes and decisions, they can be given little weight in our consideration. It seems unnecessary to distinguish the cases cited by appellant from Illinois and other states in which similar statutory provisions obtain. It has been expressly held in this state that the wage-earning capacity of the deceased was not the measure of damages. Skelton v. Pacific Lumber Co., 140 Cal. 507, 512 [74 Pac. 13]. So, also, an instruction in effect directing the jury to consider and ascertain the losses of father and children respectively by the death of the mother as distinct elements in the lump sum of damages awarded was held proper in such a case. Johnson v. S. P. Co. [154 Cal. 285] 97 Pac. 520, 526.

"While there can be but one action, and the recovery to which all persons included in the term 'heirs' are entitled must be had therein or be deemed to be waived (Daubert v. Western Meat Co., 139 Cal. 480 [69 Pac. 297, 73 Pac. 244, 96 Am. St. Rep. 154]), the loss of each and all must be considered. The statute does not provide for a distribution among the members of the family who take as the beneficiaries of the statute. There was such a provision in the statute of 1862, but it was not incorporated in the Code, thus indicating an intention to restore the action to what it was originally intended to be, a means of providing for the family and each member thereof that which each could have expected to receive in the way of comfort and support from the lost father had he lived and kept the family together, bestowing upon each such portion of his earnings as he or she were entitled to or required. It is not intended that the amount recovered shall be divided into integral or proportional parts. The persons entitled do not take as heirs or by succession, but as beneficiaries of the statute; 'the statute being framed upon the theory that the heirs will always constitute the family of the deceased.' For this reason, it was held that collateral kindred who may come technically within the meaning of the word 'heirs,' used in section 377, can only recover by alleging and showing some special damage. Burk v. Arcata, 125 Cal. 364 [57 Pac. 1065, 73 Am. St. Rep. 521]."

The order denying a new trial is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

15 Cal. App. 543

PECK v. PETERSON. (Civ. 852.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 6, 1911.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 167*)—WRONGFUL ACT OF TENANT—LIABILITY OF LANDLORD.

A landlord is not liable for injuries to adjacent land by the diversion of surface water by the tenant by plowing without the landlord's direction or control.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. § 678; Dec. Dig. § 167.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1071*)—HARMLESS ERROR—FINDINGS.

A finding in a suit to enjoin defendant from wrongfully diverting surface water on plaintiff's land that a natural water course ran from defendant's land which naturally carried the surface water thereon upon plaintiff's land became immaterial, even if unsupported, where the evidence supported another finding that defendant's land was higher than plaintiff's and the rain-water falling thereon naturally flowed down upon plaintiff's land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4234-4239; Dec. Dig. § 1071.*]

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 119*)—SURFACE WATER—RAINWATER—LIABILITY.

The owner of higher lands has an easement over lower adjacent lands to discharge surface or rain water thereon in its natural flow, whether it follows a water course or merely a depression in the ground.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 131-134; Dec. Dig. § 119.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 395*)—FINDINGS.

A finding that "paragraphs 3, 4, and 5 of plaintiff's complaint are untrue" is not to be commended as a form for making findings of fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 932; Dec. Dig. § 395.*]

5. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 119*)—SURFACE WATER—DRAINAGE—INCREASING NATURAL FLOW.

While an upper landowner is entitled to have his surface water discharged upon adjacent lower land according to its natural flow, he cannot change the natural manner of discharge by conducting the water by new channels in greater quantities onto the lower lands, thereby increasing the burden of the servient owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 131-134; Dec. Dig. § 119.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

Action by Florence E. Peck against P. A. Peterson. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Wm. M. Aydelotte, for appellant. Jas. A. Hall, for respondent.

HALL, J. Plaintiff and defendant are the owners of adjoining tracts of land, situate in Santa Cruz county, separated by a division fence. Plaintiff filed a complaint against defendant, in which she alleged that defendant had excavated and constructed a ditch or drain on and across defendant's land to the line of plaintiff's land, and thence under the division fence into and upon plaintiff's land, and thereby diverted from its natural course the water falling on defendant's land, and caused the same to be discharged and to flow over and upon the lands of plaintiff, to her damage in the sum of $1,000. Plaintiff prayed for damages and an injunction.

Defendant not only filed an answer denying the allegations constituting the gravamen of plaintiff's action, but, also, by way of cross-complaint, set up "that across the land of defendant, through his said orchard and thence on and across the said land of the plaintiff there runs a natural waterway that naturally carries the flood or surface water that falls and flows on the land of the defendant over, upon and across the said land of plaintiff, and which said natural waterway has always existed." It is further alleged that plaintiff in December, 1907, caused a dam to be built immediately below where the said natural waterway leaves the land of defendant in such a manner that the flood waters were prevented from running in their natural channel, and were backed up and caused to overflow onto the orchard of defendant, to his damage in the sum of $250. It is also alleged "that at various times during the past two years said plaintiff has caused deep furrows to be plowed across said natural water course on the said land in such a manner as to cause the flood waters to back up over defendant's said land and orchard and injure the same, all to his damage in the sum of $500." The court made findings in accordance with the contentions of defendant, and gave judgment accordingly, enjoining plaintiff from doing the acts complained of, and for $100 damages. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, which the court denied in these words: "I have very serious doubts whether the findings are supported by the evidence; but, as the decision of this case is, in my opinion, just and equitable, the plaintiff's motion for a new trial will be denied, and it is so ordered." The appeal is from this order.

Appellant attacks several of the findings as unsupported by the evidence. One of these is the finding "that the said plaintiff did at many times during the past two years cause deep furrows to be plowed across said natural water course on her land in such a manner as to cause the flood water to back up on defendant's said land and orchard, and injure the same."

[1] After a careful reading of all the testimony in the record, we have been unable to find a single word that supports the finding that plaintiff at any time caused deep or any furrows to be plowed across the alleged water course. During all the time mentioned in the complaint her said land was rented to and in the possession of tenants. Such plowing as was done was done by the tenants without any direction or control from plaintiff, and for any damage thus resulting she would not be liable. The court found that the defendant had been damaged by the acts of plaintiff in the sum of $100. This damage is found to have been caused in part by the said cross-plowing, but how much was done by the cross-plowing does not appear, nor can it in any way be ascertained from the findings. The finding as to the cross-plowing is thus a material one, upon which the judgment for damages in part rests.

[2] Appellant also attacks the finding of the court, made in substantially the language of the cross-complaint, as to the existence of a natural water course, over and across the land of defendant and plaintiff, that naturally carries the flood and surface water, that falls upon the land of defendant, over and upon the land of plaintiff. This finding is, however, unimportant and immaterial in view of the fact that upon ample evidence the court also found, in accordance with the allegation of the cross-complaint, "that the said land of defendant is higher in elevation than the land of plaintiff, and the surface water caused by heavy rains naturally flows and is accustomed to flow and discharge itself from defendant's land over and across plaintiff's land."

[3] It is the established law of this state that the owner of upper land has an easement over lower and adjacent land for the discharge of surface or rain water as it is accustomed to naturally flow; and it is quite immaterial whether such surface water flows through a water course, strictly speaking, or through a simple depression in the surface of the earth. Larrabee v. Cloverdale, 131 Cal. 96, 63 Pac. 143; Sanguinetti v. Pock, 136 Cal. 466, 69 Pac. 98, 89 Am. St. Rep. 169.

[4] The court also made a finding in the following words: "That paragraphs 3, 4, and 5 of plaintiff's complaint are untrue." It is insisted that this is not a finding of fact at all. Certainly it is not one to be commended as a model. If it be construed as a finding to the effect that all the allegations in said paragraphs are untrue, it is in direct conflict with the admissions of the pleadings as to some at least of said allegations. However, we do not deem it necessary to discuss this finding in detail. The record is in such shape as makes it difficult to understand the evidence. The witnesses testified with reference to a map, and because of frequent references to this map much of the evidence is quite unintelligible when read from the record.

From the language of the court in denying the motion for a new trial, it is evident that the court had serious doubts as to the correctness of its conclusion as to the facts.

[5] As the cause must be retried because of the lack of evidence to support the finding first discussed, it is not improper to point out that though an upper landowner has the right to have surface and rain water flow onto adjoining lower lands, as it has been accustomed naturally to flow, and such lower landowner has no right to obstruct such flow, such upper landowner has no right to increase the burden upon the servient tenement by causing the natural mode of its discharge to be changed to the injury of the servient tenement, by conducting it by new channels in greater quantities onto particular parts of the lower land, and the like. Ogburn v. Connor, 46 Cal. 347, 13 Am. Rep. 213. There is much evidence in the record tending to show that defendant in the first instance violated this rule, and did collect the surface water on his land and convey it in greater quantities to the land of plaintiff. Indeed he testifies himself that he excavated a channel through his land to the land of plaintiff so as to drain his orchard, and also so as to take water from a roadway that apparently otherwise could never reach the land of plaintiff. This apparently resulted in plaintiff putting in an obstruction at her boundary line that caused a greater amount of water to collect and stand upon the land of defendant than naturally would have collected there.

While it is not strictly the province of this court to advise such a course, we do not think it entirely out of place to suggest that the parties litigant in this case might profitably avoid the expense of further litigation in this case by the exercise of a little neighborly good will and forbearance in an effort to adjust their conflicting claims to the advantage of both of them.

Appellant makes no other point requiring notice.

The order is reversed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

15 Cal. App. 557

In re MILLER'S ESTATE. (Civ. 889.)
(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 8, 1911.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 509*)—ACCOUNTING—OPENING.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, providing that the court in its discretion may open judgments, etc., an order vacating an administrator's final accounting, which was granted upon the affidavit of the attorney of nonresident legatees protesting against the allowance of the account, and upon letters written by those legatees protesting against the allowance, was not erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 2199-2219; Dec. Dig. § 509.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 499*)—COMPENSATION—STATUTES.

Where a special administration was had, and fees and commissions were paid to the special administrator and his attorney under Code Civ. Proc. § 1417, those fees are not to be deducted from the compensation of the regular administrator and his attorney prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1618, 1619, providing for payment of a certain percentage to each.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 2130; Dec. Dig. § 499.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas J. Smith, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of John Peter Miller. S. C. Rodgers, public administrator, appeals from an order settling his final account as administrator. Modified and affirmed.

Harry J. Bias, for appellant. E. C. Kramer, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order settling the final account of an administrator.

Shortly after the death of John Peter Miller, special letters of administration were issued upon his estate to L. L. Fargo. Thereafter, on April 12, 1907, general letters with the will annexed were regularly issued to S. C. Rodgers, the public administrator of Santa Cruz county in the superior court of which county the settlement of the estate was pending. In due course the administrator filed his final account and petition for the settlement thereof, which account was in due course approved as rendered. Thereafter a motion, made under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, by certain absent heirs and legatees, to set aside and vacate that order, was granted. Subsequently, upon second hearing of the administrator's account, and objections thereto filed by said heirs and legatees, said account was settled as presented, except as to the administrator's commission and the fees of his attorney; that is to say the court deducted from the fees and commissions allowed by law to the administrator and his attorney a sum equal to the fees and commissions which it had theretofore allowed the special administrator and his attorney, and also disallowed two items of $150 each charged by the administrator and his attorney, respectively, for special services alleged to have been rendered by them to the estate. The court further ordered that the administrator be finally discharged upon paying over to the respective legatees or their attorney the residue of the estate in his hands as shown by the account thus settled.

The appeal is by the administrator, and he contends, first, that the court erred in setting aside and vacating his account; second, that it also erred in reducing the amount of commissions and fees charged by him and his attorney for their general services in the settlement of the estate; and, third, that the court erred in disallowing the two items of $150 each charged for special services by him and his attorney.

[1] First, as to the order vacating and setting aside the first order settling the administrator's account. We cannot hold with the contention of appellant that this order was erroneous, because made upon an insufficient showing. In such a matter much is left to the discretion of the trial court; and in view of the evidence offered upon the motion and admitted without objection, consisting of letters from the legatees residing out of the state protesting against the allowance of the account, the affidavit of their attorney, and the files and records of the estate, we are not prepared to say that the court abused ed its discretion in setting aside the said order.

As to the appellant's second contention, namely, that the court erred in reducing the amount of the commission of the administrator and the fees of his attorney for their general services in the settlement of the estate, the amount charged in the account was $344.49 as commission of the administrator—which sum is the statutory percentage on the amount of the estate, as provided in section 1618, Code of Civil Procedure—and the same amount was charged as the fees of the administrator's attorney, in accordance with section 1619 of the same Code. As we have already mentioned, there had been a special administration in this estate, and the special administrator and his attorney had been allowed by the court certain compensation upon the settlement of said special administrator's account. It was the contention of the legatees that the amount of compensation allowed to the special administrator and his attorney for their services should be deducted from the percentage fixed by the statute for the administrator and his attorney, and that these latter should receive only the difference between that percentage and the amount already received from the estate by the special administrator and his attorney. The court, while not altogether adopting this view as to the compensation of the administrator's attorney, did adopt it as to the administrator, and allowed the administrator only the sum of $100.49.

We think the court's construction of the law in this regard was erroneous. Where there has been a special administration in an estate, the special administrator is entitled to compensation, for which a reasonable amount must be fixed by the court. Code Civ. Proc. § 1417. Where there are joint, or successive, administrators or attorneys, there may be an apportionment of the statutory commissions and fees; but we find nothing in the Code which warrants any deduction from the percentage fixed by section 1618, Code of Civil Procedure, as the commission of the administrator merely because a special administrator has acted in the matter of the same estate, and been compensated from its funds. Under the language of sections 1618 and 1619 of said Code, we think the administrator and his attorney are entitled to the fixed percentages therein provided, and that the court cannot diminish the same. Carver Estate, 123 Cal. 102, 55 Pac. 770.

As to the charge made by the administrator and his attorney of $150 each for special services, we think the court was justified upon the showing made in disallowing these two items. In any event, it was a matter of discretion with the trial court, and it was not exercised in such a way as to call for any revisory action by this court.

In the order from which the administrator appeals, there is a direction that he be charged with the sum of $688, purporting to be the difference between the aggregate of commissions and fees charged by the special administrator, the administrator, and their attorneys, and the sum allowed by said order to the administrator and his attorney. It is not quite clear how this figure is arrived at; but it is sufficient to say that the present administrator cannot be charged with fees which have in the past been allowed by the court to a special administrator and his attorney.

The trial court is directed to modify its order in accordance with the views herein expressed, and to allow and approve the administrator's account in all respects except as to the two items of $150 each charged for special services of said administrator and his attorney, and, as thus modified, the order appealed from is affirmed, appellant to recover his costs upon this appeal.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; HALL, J.

15 Cal. App. 541

HADSALL v. CASE et al. (FERNANDEZ, Intervener). (Civ. 927.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 4, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 123*)—ORDERS APPEALABLE—ORDERS SUSTAINING DEMURRER.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 939, providing the time within which appeals may be taken from certain orders, not including an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, an appeal does not lie from an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint; the ruling being reviewable only on appeal from the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 123*)—PLEADING (§ 223*)—PLEAS IN INTERVENTION—SUSTAINING DEMURRER.

The rules applicable to pleadings in general apply to pleadings in intervention, so that judgment should be entered against intervener upon sustaining a demurrer to his complaint in intervention without leave to amend, from which judgment intervener could appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 123.* Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 568; Dec. Dig. § 223.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by H. S. Hadsall against Fred H. Case and others, in which Michael M. Fernandez intervenes. From an order sustaining demurrers to the complaint in intervention, intervener appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Harker, Overmyer & Seymour, for appellant. Scarborough & Forgy, Williams & Rutan, F. O. Daniel, and Hunsaker, Britt & Fleming, for respondents.

SHAW, J. By leave of court, Michael M. Fernandez filed his complaint in intervention in the above-entitled action. A demurrer interposed thereto was sustained, whereupon, within the time granted for so doing, he filed an amended complaint in intervention, to which both plaintiff and defendants interposed demurrers. The several demurrers were sustained without leave to amend, and the purported appeal is from the order sustaining the demurrers.

[1] An appeal does not lie from an order sustaining a demurrer, but such ruling may be reviewed on an appeal from the judgment. Section 939, Code Civ. Proc.; Ashley v. Olmstead, 54 Cal. 616; Agard v. Valencia, 39 Cal. 292.

[2] The rules applicable to pleadings in general apply with equal force to pleadings in intervention. The demurrers interposed to the complaint of the intervener raised an issue of law, which, upon trial, by sustaining the demurrers, the court determined in favor of the parties so demurring. Judgment against the intervener, as in other cases where a demurrer to a complaint is sustained without leave to amend, should have followed, from which, inasmuch as to him it was a final determination of the case, he could have prosecuted his appeal at once and thus have the order of which he complains reviewed.

The purported appeal must be dismissed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

15 Cal. App. 537

WONG FUNG HING v. SAN FRANCISCO RELIEF AND RED CROSS FUNDS.
(Civ. 916.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District,
California. March 4, 1911.)

1. VENUE (§ 40*)—RESIDENCE OF DEFENDANT —CHANGE OF PLACE OF TRIAL.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 395, providing that actions shall be tried in the county in which defendants, or some of them, reside, a defendant, on proper demand, is entitled to an order changing the place of trial to the county of his residence, in the absence of any counter showing by plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. § 61; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

2. VENUE (§ 37*)—CHANGE OF PLACE OF
TRIAL—CONVENIENCE OF WITNESSES.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 397, subd. 3, authorizing the court to change the place of trial for the convenience of witnesses, a motion either to change the place of trial, or to retain it for trial in a county other than the proper county, based on the convenience of witnesses, will not be entertained where defendant appears by demurrer only.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. §§ 56-58; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

3. VENUE (§ 72*)—CHANGE OF PLACE OF
TRIAL—CONVENIENCE OF WITNESSES.

The court in passing on a motion for a change of the place of trial for the convenience of witnesses must disregard the proposed testimony of witnesses not material to some issue of fact raised by the pleadings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. § 127; Dec. Dig. § 72.*]

4. VENUE (§ 72*)—CHANGE OF PLACE OF
TRIAL—CONVENIENCE OF WITNESSES.

Where the complaint stated a cause of action for conversion of merchandise, and defendant did not plead payment by check or otherwise on account of the merchandise, the testimony of witnesses to prove the forgery of plaintiff's name on an undelivered check given by defendant in payment for the merchandise could not be considered in determining a motion to change the place of trial for the convenience of witnesses.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. § 127; Dec. Dig. § 72.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon F. Moss, Judge.

Action by Wong Fung Hing, doing business under the name of the Chong Kee Company, against the San Francisco Relief and Red Cross Funds. From an order denying a change of place of trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Gray & Cooper, for appellant. Powers & Holland, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Defendant appeals from an order of court denying its application for a change of the place of trial from Los Angeles county, where the action was commenced, to the city and county of San Francisco.

Defendant is a corporation having its principal place of business in the city and county of San Francisco. No demurrer was interposed to the complaint. With its verified answer, merely denying all the allegations of the complaint, defendant filed an affidavit of merits, in due form and sufficient in substance, showing that defendant was a corporation having its principal place of business in the city and county of San Francisco, and accompanied by a demand in writing, therewith filed, demanding that the place of trial be changed from the county of Los Angeles to the city and county of San Francisco, upon the grounds, first, that the city and county of San Francisco, and not the county of Los Angeles, was the proper county wherein said action should be tried; and, second, that the convenience of witnesses would be promoted by such change. While defendant's application was being heard, and before the final disposal thereof, plaintiff moved that the case be retained in Los Angeles county for trial, upon the ground of the convenience of witnesses, and filed affidavits in support of such motion. Upon the final hearing the court made an order that the motion for a change of place of trial be denied, and that the trial of the case be retained in Los Angeles county, for the reason that the convenience of witnesses would be promoted by such retention.

[1] It clearly appears that defendant was a resident of San Francisco at the time of the commencement of the action, and, hence, upon demand duly made therefor, was, in the absence of a counter showing, entitled to an order changing the place of trial to the county of its residence. Section 395, Code Civ. Proc. Assuming, then, that, notwithstanding such right on the part of defendant, the court might, nevertheless, upon a proper showing that the convenience of witnesses would be subserved thereby, retain the case for trial in Los Angeles county, the question presented for determination is whether the facts set forth in the affidavits presented by plaintiff justified the order made by the court. Subdivision 3 of section 397, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that the court may, on motion, change the place of trial, "when the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be promoted by the change." Manifestly, until an answer is filed and issues of fact joined, it cannot be said a production of witnesses upon a trial will be required.

[2] Hence a motion either to change the place of trial or to retain it for trial in a county other than the proper county, based upon the convenience of witnesses, will not be entertained where the defendant appears by demurrer only. Cook v. Pendergast, 61 Cal. 76; Armstrong v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. 411. In the former case it is said: "But where no issue of fact has been raised, as where the motion to change the place of trial is made when defendant has appeared only by demurrer to the complaint, how can the court intelligently determine that it will be for the convenience of witnesses to change the place of trial, or to retain the action for trial in the county designated in the complaint?"

[3] Therefore, in passing upon motions for a change of place of trial, where an answer is filed, it is the duty of the court to disregard the proposed testimony of an alleged witness which is not material to some issue of fact made. Miller & Lux v. Kern Co. Land Co., 140 Cal. 132, 73 Pac. 836; Ennis-Brown Co. v. Long, 7 Cal. App. 313, 94 Pac. 250. It is clear that plaintiff could not successfully resist defendant's motion, unless it appeared from his affidavits that the testimony of the witnesses whose convenience was to be thereby subserved would be material and competent upon the trial of the issues involved. Applying this rule, it is apparent from an examination of the record herein that the facts did not justify the court in making the order from which defendant appeals.

The complaint alleges that on April 20, 1906, plaintiff was the owner of certain goods, wares, and merchandise then deposited upon the wharf of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in the city and county of San Francisco; that on said date an association known as the Citizens' Relief Committee, composed of persons whose names are unknown to plaintiff, did wrongfully and without the knowledge and consent of plaintiff take and carry away said goods, wares, and merchandise, and converted the same to its own use and benefit; that thereafter said Citizens' Relief Committee did transfer the said goods, wares, and merchandise to defendant, who took and received the same with full knowledge that the same belonged to plaintiff and had been taken without right or authority, which goods, wares, and merchandise defendant did then and there receive, convert, and appropriate to its own use and benefit; that the value of the goods so converted was $612.73; and that defendant did on January 14, 1907, by an instrument in writing signed and duly executed by the officers and agents of the defendant, acknowledge its indebtedness to plaintiff in said sum of $612.73, and did by said writing promise and agree to pay said sum to plaintiff, which allegations are followed by an allegation of demand and nonpayment. Defendant's answer, as before stated, consists only of a specific denial of each of these allegations, other than that of demand and nonpayment. The issues being thus established, we must look to the affidavits of plaintiff to ascertain whether or not the testimony therein set forth would be material and competent upon a trial of such issues. It is alleged in the complaint that defendant executed an instrument in writing, acknowledging its indebtedness to plaintiff for the value of the goods, and by said writing did promise and agree to pay plaintiff the value thereof, to-wit, the sum of $612.73. The action, however, is not based upon this promise, but upon the alleged conversion of the goods. It appears from defendant's affidavit that this writing consisted of a check, whereby the Bank of California was ordered to pay to the order of plaintiff $612.73. Plaintiff in his affidavit does not deny this statement, but states "that defendant, on January 14, 1907, drew its draft or check in favor of this plaintiff on the Bank of California for said sum of $612.73, which said check or draft was never delivered to this plaintiff, but came into the possession of some other person or persons," who forged the name of plaintiff thereon and collected the amount on said forged indorsement from the Bank of California; "that said check so made, as aforesaid, by the defendant is now in the possession of defendant; that the only issue to be tried in this action, as this plaintiff is informed and believes and so alleges the fact to be, is the question of the genuineness of the indorsement of the names of Chung Kee Company and Wong Fung Hing on the said check." The names of a number of witnesses were given, with a statement to the effect that all of said witnesses will testify that the names of Chung Kee Company and Wong Fung Hing, so indorsed upon the check, are forgeries; and the names of other witnesses are given who, it is stated, will testify to facts tending to show that plaintiff never indorsed said check and never received or collected the amount due thereon, and that at one time defendant was of the opinion that the indorsements on the check were genuine, and by letters and orally expressed its surprise that plaintiff claimed the same to be forged. The check was never delivered to plaintiff. He bases no claim thereon. Defendant does not plead it in payment of plaintiff's claim, nor allege that it has made any payment to plaintiff on account of the alleged conversion of his goods.

[4] Under the pleadings, the proposed testimony set forth in the affidavits tending to prove the indorsement of plaintiff's name upon the undelivered check to have been forged, and that he had not received or collected the amount thereof, would be wholly immaterial to any issue involved therein.

The order is reversed, and the trial court instructed to make an order granting defendant's motion upon the ground first mentioned in its demand for change of place of trial.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

15 Cal. App. 561

JONES et al. v. GRIEVE et al. (Civ. 782.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California, March 8, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 934*)—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—FINDINGS—PRESUMPTIONS.

The court on appeal from a judgment for plaintiff must assume, findings of fact having been waived, that the trial court found every fact necessary to support the judgment which the pleadings and evidence would warrant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3777-3781; Dec. Dig. § 934.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 434*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—WRITTEN INSTRUMENTS—FRAUD.

Fraud inducing the execution of a contract reduced to writing may be proved by parol.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2005-2020; Dec. Dig. § 434.*]

3. SALES (§ 38*)—FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS—MATTER OF OPINION.

A representation by a seller of a jack as to its potency is a representation of a fact, and not a matter of mere opinion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 65-77, 85; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

4. SALES (§ 52*)—FRAUD—EVIDENCE.

In a suit to cancel a contract for the purchase of a jack, evidence held to show that the seller's representation as to the jack's potency was false; that it was made as an inducement to the buyer to purchase; that the buyer relied thereon; and that the representation was material.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 136-144; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

5. SALES (§ 38*)—FRAUD—KNOWLEDGE OF SELLER.

Where a seller of a jack had owned it but a short time, and knew who formerly owned it, and had the means of knowledge as to the jack's potency, a false representation as to its potency made unqualifiedly and with intent to induce the buyer to act was actual fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 65-77, 85; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Lake County; M. S. Sayre, Judge.

Action by P. A. Jones and others against Dell Grieve and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Stephen C. Asbill, Herbert V. Keeling, and J. V. Kelleher, for appellants. C. M. Crawford, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action to have canceled a contract for the sale of a certain jack. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and plaintiffs had judgment, from which and from the order denying their motion for a new trial defendants appeal.

Plaintiffs set out in their complaint a written contract (Exhibit A) dated March 26, 1908, between plaintiffs and defendants. It is signed by Chas. Asbill, who is admitted by defendants to have had full authority to represent them in the sale to any extent. It reads: "1st: That Chas. Asbill party of the first part has this day sold to Jones Bro's & Jones parties of the 2nd part one Black Jack with white points, for the consideration of Seven Hundred Dollars, $700.00. 2nd: That said Jack shall be paid for by Jones Bro's & Jones parties of the 2nd part, in the following manner to-wit: That Chas. Asbill party of the first part shall receive as payment all fees of said Jack for the season (year) of 1908. The same fees to be made in payment on said Jack. Jones Bro's & Jones further agree to pay all fees to Chas. Asbill party of the 1st part for each following season until the sum of Seven Hundred Dollars ($700.00) shall have been paid in the above manner specified. That Chas. Asbill party of the 1st part shall offer (after?) the payment of the sum of Seven Hundred Dollars, deliver into the hands of Jones Bro's and Jones a bill of sale for said Jack." On April 5, 1908, the parties entered into another written agreement (Exhibit B), which is referred to as a modification of the contract (Exhibit A). It makes some changes in the manner of payment, but contains no new feature having any bearing upon the questions presented by the appeal. Defendants were served with notice of rescission and offer to restore the jack to their possession, April 14, 1909; the ground being that the said agreement of April 5, 1908, "was procured by fraud and misrepresentation; * * * that said jack was a good foal-getter, which was false." The offer being refused, the action was commenced April 30, 1909. The judgment declares the two said contracts to be void and cancels the same, upon condition that plaintiffs pay to defendants $52.50 for service of said jack less $21, costs of suit, the contracts to be canceled on such payment being made and the jack to become the property of defendants.

It is averred in the complaint that plaintiffs entered into the agreements to purchase said jack "solely for breeding purposes (serving mares) all of which was well known to defendants at the time of and prior to the time of the execution of said agreement and the said modification thereof, and that the said jack had not then, and never has had since, any value whatever, other than his value for said purposes." Then follow averments that defendants, with intent to deceive and defraud plaintiffs, at said times, falsely represented to them that said jack was "a good foal-getter," which was untrue, which defendants well knew, and that at said times "plaintiffs believed the said false and fraudulent representations and statements of defendants to be true, and acted on them as such, and that they would not have entered into or executed the said agreement or the said modification thereof but for their belief in the truth thereof, and that plaintiffs first discovered that said representations were false and fraudulent and untrue on or about the 15th day of March, 1909." The answer is a specific denial of the accusatory averments of the complaint, and it avers "the true facts to be that, at the time of the purchase by plaintiffs of said jack, the only guaranty whatsoever the defendants gave to plaintiffs, was the guaranty of one F. B. Chandler, a former owner of said jack, the substance of which was verbally stated to defendants at the time, a written copy thereof being subsequently furnished to them." This guaranty is set out in the answer, and reads: "I do hereby guarantee that the black jack, which I have sold to Asbill & Grieve and is about seven years old, will serve a mare and get her with foal, providing he lives and continues in good health, and is given a reasonable trial."

Plaintiff Zeno Jones testified: "During the month of March, 1908, myself and coplaintiffs in this action were approached at Lower Lake by Charles Asbill (brother of Stephen Asbill) with a proposition to buy a certain jack which he (Charles Asbill) then had in Lower Lake, Lake county. He told us that he would sell the jack on certain terms, and we there agreed to buy the jack as the terms were quite liberal, and a written contract for the purchase of the jack was then and there drawn up and signed by ourselves and Charles Asbill, as per 'Exhibit A' attached to plaintiffs' complaint herein. At this time Charles Asbill was asked by either myself or my brother or my cousin Herbert, plaintiffs herein, as to whether the jack was a good foal-getter, and he told us that he was a good foal-getter." No objection was made to this testimony. The witness was then asked the following question: "Did he,

Charles Asbill, say to you at that time that he would guarantee the jack to be a good foal-getter?" Defendants objected on the grounds that the question was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and that the written contract cannot be varied by parol agreements made at the time of its execution and that no foundation has been laid for the question. The court overruled the objection and the witness answered: "Yes; he said that he would guarantee the jack to be a good foal-getter, and I believed said representation to be true, and acted upon it as true, and would not have entered into the contract of purchase of said jack, had I not believed the said statement and representation that said jack was a good foal-getter, to be true." The witness then testified that about two weeks later defendant Asbill stated to plaintiffs that he, Asbill, was not satisfied with the contract, "and wanted to draw up a new one." Continuing, witness testified: "After considerable argument as to terms, a new contract was drafted and entered into by Stephen Asbill and ourselves, as per 'Exhibit B' attached to plaintiffs' complaint herein. Stephen Asbill at that time promised to send up a written guaranty that the jack was a good foal-getter. We purchased the jack solely for breeding purposes, which was well known to defendants at the time of the purchase; and said jack had no value whatever, except his value for breeding purposes. Said Charles Asbill, at the time the first contract was entered into, was very insistent that we should buy the jack, and finally said to us that he would make us an offer that we could not refuse. We could not determine that said jack was not a good foal-getter, until a short time prior to our serving notice of rescission of the agreement of sale on the defendants. * * * We have complied with the terms of the contract of sale on our part in every respect. We did not stand the jack during the season of 1909, for the reason that we had then learned that he was of no value as a breeder. The jack served sixteen mares during the breeding season of 1908 during which season, and (he?) was properly bred to said mares and nine of them our own and seven belonging to other parties, and there are now three mule colts living, the issue of such breeding. The jack received good care and treatment. None of the mares so bred by us to the jack were ever bred to a jack before so far as I know. Nine of these mares bred were mares that had colts before. We did not breed the jack to any mares in the spring of 1909, as we did not think that the jack had lived up to his guaranty. So on March, 15, 1909, we sent Mr. Asbill and Mr. Grieve an announcement of our rescission of the contract of purchase, copies of which are annexed to our complaint and marked 'Exhibits C and D.' Mares were bred to the jack during the months of April, May, and June, 1908, and ordinarily mares will show their pregnancy within six months after they are bred. No written guaranty was ever furnished us of the jack by either Stephen or Charles Asbill."

Plaintiff Andrew Jones testified to like effect, and that the written guaranty afterwards sent was that the jack "would serve one mare and get her with foal," which was not accepted. Also, that "the mares kept returning to the jack after being bred, and by the month of June, 1908, I was convinced that the jack was no good." He also testified that he understood that the jack had been purchased by the Asbills not long before said sale, and that he had been owned by one Chandler. Like testimony was given by witness Herbert Jones. Witness Turner testified to having bred two young mares to said jack in 1908 without results. There was other testimony that the jack was a good "performer," but lacked procreative potency. Expert testimony was also given that a "jack that is a good foal-getter ought to get 75 per cent. of the mares served with foal," and that "a jack that only got three mares out of sixteen with foal" was not "a good foal-getter." The evidence submitted by defendants controverted in some respects, but not in all, the account of the transaction as given by plaintiffs. The trial court accepted the testimony of plaintiffs as true and so must we.

[1] We must assume that the court found every fact necessary to support the judgment which the pleadings and evidence would warrant. Findings of fact were waived.

[2] Defendants in their brief admit "that prior to entering into said contracts defendants represented to plaintiffs that said jack 'was a good foal-getter,'" but they deny "that the evidence proves this representation to be a fraudulent one." 2 Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, § 876, is cited as setting forth the elements essential to constitute fraud: (1) Its form as a statement of fact; (2) its purpose of inducing the other party to act; (3) its untruth; (4) the knowledge or belief of the party making it; (5) the belief and reliance of the one to whom it is made; (6) its materiality. We had occasion in Hodgkins v. Dunham et al., 10 Cal. App. 690, 103 Pac. 351, to state what we understand to be the law applicable to this class of cases, and our view received the approval of the Supreme Court by its refusal, upon petition of defendants, to order the case heard in that court. The points involved in the present case are fully discussed in the case cited, and need not be here repeated. It is there shown that the fraud could be proven "notwithstanding that the contract was in writing and the representations were not."

[3] Recurring to the elements enumerated by Mr. Pomeroy, as noted above, we cannot agree with defendants that the representation as to the jack's potency was "but a matter of opinion." There is to a stock breeder nothing "vague" or "indefinite," nor would men "widely differ" as to the meaning of a representation that an animal "is a good foal-getter." Even lawyers, unfamiliar with the farm, or with stock breeding, would hardly be excusable for mistaking the meaning of a vendor of a breeding animal who made such a representation.

[4] That the representation was untrue that the plaintiffs believed the defendants and relied and acted upon it, and that the fact was material, we think satisfactorily appears. The only debatable points are, Was the representation made for the purpose of inducing defendants to act and did defendants know or believe the representation to be true? We think the evidence shows clearly enough that it was made as an inducement to defendants to purchase the jack. No other reasonable motive can be attributed to defendants in making it.

[5] Upon the other point it appears that the defendants had owned the jack but a short time, but they knew who formerly owned the animal and they had the means of knowledge as to the jack's potency. Besides, when they made an unqualified and unexplained material representation with intent to induce plaintiffs to act, plaintiffs had the right to assume that defendants believed their representation to be true. "Actual fraud is committed when one, with intent to induce another to enter into a contract, makes a positive assertion in a manner not warranted by the information of such person, of that which is not true, even though he believes it to be true. A party will always be held to make good his statement in the form in which he makes it." Muller v. Palmer, 144 Cal. 305, 77 Pac. 954, Syl.; Civ. Code, § 1572.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

15 Cal. App. 548

NAYLOR v. ADAMS. (Civ. 771.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 6, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 640*)—RECORD—TRANSCRIPT—SUFFICIENCY—RULES OF COURT.

Where a transcript failed to comply with Supreme Court rules 7 and 8 (78 Pac. viii), respectively, providing the size of paper upon which it should be written and the arrangement of the various material, an appeal will be dismissed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2788; Dec. Dig. § 640.*]

2. BROKERS (§ 43*)—EMPLOYMENT TO SELL LAND—RIGHT TO COMMISSION—CONTRACT.

Under Civ. Code, § 1624, providing that an agreement employing a broker to sell real estate for a commission is invalid, unless the same or some memorandum thereof is in writing, signed by the party sought to be charged, letters written by the owner of real estate authorizing a broker to sell or exchange it are a sufficient writing.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes Cal. Rep. 114-117 P.—21

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 44; Dec. Dig. § 43;* Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. § 131.]

3. BROKERS (§ 86*)—ACTIONS FOR COMPENSATION—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action by a broker for his compensation in selling land, evidence held to support a judgment awarding him compensation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. §§ 116-120; Dec. Dig. § 86.*]

4. CONTRACTS (§ 324*)—WORK AND LABOR—ACTIONS—NATURE AND FORM OF REMEDY.

Where the terms of a special contract have been varied or modified by the agreement of the parties, an action for the amount due for work and labor should be in the form of indebitatus assumpsit, and not upon the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1549-1557; Dec. Dig. § 324.*]

5. WORK AND LABOR (§ 27*)—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE—CONTRACT.

In indebitatus assumpsit for work and labor under a contract, the entire performance of which was prevented by subsequent changes in the agreement, the contract itself is admissible as an admission of the standard of value, or as proof of value, or as proof of any other fact necessary to the recovery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Work and Labor, Cent. Dig. § 53; Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1013*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A finding by the trial court in an action for work and labor as to the value of the services is conclusive on appeal where based upon the original contract under which the work was begun, but which was afterwards varied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3393-3395; Dec. Dig. § 1013.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Action by Charles E. Naylor, Jr., against Frank P. Adams. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

M. J. Cheatham, for appellant. Naylor & Riggins, for respondent.

HART, J. An opinion in this cause, affirming the judgment and order of the court below, was filed by this court on December 16, 1910. A petition for a rehearing was granted by this court on the grounds: (1) That the case had not, before the filing of said opinion, been submitted on the merits; the only question then under submission having arisen on a motion to dismiss the appeal for reasons which will later appear. (2) That the writer of the opinion fell into error as to certain testimony.

Upon a reconsideration of the case we have found no reason for receding from our former conclusion that the evidence is sufficient to support the findings that a contract was entered into between Adams and Stanley by which the latter was employed to secure a purchaser of the former's land; that Stanley was to receive for that service certain compensation, of which more will appear hereafter in this opinion; that Stanley did secure such purchaser, and that Adams finally disposed of the land to the purchaser so secured.

We here adopt a part of the former opinion:

"This is an action by plaintiff to recover the sum of $600 for commissions alleged to have been earned by his assignors for consummating a real estate deal by which defendant and one Draper exchanged properties. The claim was assigned to plaintiff by the real estate firm of Murdock & Son and one Herbert Stanley, a member of said firm, who personally managed the transaction. The case was tried by the court and plaintiff awarded judgment in the sum sued for. This appeal is from said judgment and the order denying defendant a new trial.

[1] "Respondent has filed a motion to dismiss these appeals on the ground that the transcript does not conform to the requirements of rules 7 and 8 of the Supreme Court (78 Pac. viii), and but for the fact that the record is not so voluminous or bulky as to require in its examination more than ordinary labor we would without the least reluctance grant the motion. The transcript was prepared according to the method prescribed by sections 953a, 953b, and 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure. Rule 7, supra, provides that, when the transcript is prepared in accordance with the sections of the Code of Civil Procedure referred to, 'the paper on which the same is written and the backs for binding the same must not exceed ten inches in length and eight inches in width, and the same must be bound together on the left-hand side.'

"The transcript here is somewhat larger in size than as prescribed by the foregoing rule, but we might perhaps pass this objection to the consideration of the record without notice but for the flagrant violation of rule 8 in the preparation of said transcript. In the hope that it may be of advantage to those of the profession who appear to be at all times otherwise too much occupied to look up and examine the rules laid down by the Supreme Court governing the appellate practice in this state, we here reproduce rule 8: 'The pleadings, proceedings and statement shall be chronologically arranged in the transcript, and each transcript shall be prefaced with an alphabetical index, specifying the folio of each separate paper, order, or proceeding, and of the testimony of each witness; and the transcript shall have at least one blank fly-sheet cover. The chronological arrangement of the several parts of the transcript, and a strict compliance with the other requirements of this rule, will be exacted of the appellant or party filing the record here in all cases, by the court, whether objection by the opposite party be made or not; and for any failure or neglect in these respects, which is found to obstruct the examination of the record, the appeal may be dismissed.'

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

"The transcript here does not even approximately conform to the requirements of said rule. In the first place, the proceedings constituting the record are not chronologically arranged in the transcript. The transcript begins, without any introduction, with the testimony taken. There were introduced at the trial some 18 exhibits, which were filed and marked as exhibits, consisting of letters between the parties evidencing the agreement, and said exhibits, as well as some mortgages and deeds also received in evidence, are, in lieu of being inserted in the transcript, as they should have been, lumped together in an appendix of some 50 pages following the testimony. Moreover, the transcript is not marked by folios, as prescribed by rule 8, and consequently the index prefacing the same specifies the pages only, and even then does not designate the pages on which the exhibits may be found. While there is absolutely no excuse for presenting this or any record in the shape in which we find it, we will nevertheless, as already intimated, consider the case on its merits. We will therefore deny the motion to dismiss with the warning that the conclusion thus announced as to said motion is not to be accepted as a precedent for the course of this court in the future as to similar motions in which there is merit for the reasons upon which the present motion is urged."

[2] In the year 1909 said Herbert Stanley entered into negotiations with defendant for the purpose of securing authority as agent to sell the latter's land, consisting of some 1,600 acres situated in Tehama county. Stanley addressed a letter to Adams inquiring whether the latter's ranch was for sale or exchange, and requesting him to state his price for said ranch, subject to the 5 per cent. commission ordinarily allowed for such services. Adams' reply was that his ranch comprised 1,600 acres of land, for which he would take $10 an acre in cash or $12.50 per acre on an exchange for other property. Upon the receipt of this letter, Stanley undertook to sell or exchange Adams' ranch, and thereafter, Stanley having interested different persons in the proposition, a series of letters passed between Adams and Stanley concerning the proposed sale and the commission which Stanley was to receive should he succeed in disposing of the ranch. On one occasion Stanley addressed a letter to Adams, in which he advised him that he (Stanley) could make a deal by which the ranch could be exchanged for certain Alameda real estate. After looking into and considering this proposition, Adams wrote a letter to Stanley, among other things, saying: "I will say in answer to your letter offering the Alameda property that I think it is inflated, and I will not pay commissions on inflated property in full. Now, to be candid with you, I will tell you what I think is fair.

I will pay $800.00 for a cash sale at $10.00 per acre, or I will pay $400 for an exchange of property that I will consider a fair exchange. That is 5 per cent. on value. I think it is not right to ask anybody to pay on inflation." Thereafter Stanley interested a Mr. T. B. Draper, of Oakland, in the Adams property, and together they went to Tehama county and visited and inspected said property. Draper was the owner of several pieces of improved real estate in the city of Berkeley. After Stanley and Draper returned to Oakland from Tehama county, the former addressed a letter to Adams, proposing to give in exchange for his ranch said real estate of Draper, which was valued at $20,000. This proposition involved a straight trade—that is, it was to be an even exchange of the two properties without any money being paid by the one to the other. The exchange on this basis did not take place, as we shall presently see. Stanley and Adams thereafter exchanged letters regarding the commissions which Stanley was to receive in the event the trade between Adams and Draper was effected. Adams, on the urgent request of Stanley, finally visited Berkeley and looked over and examined Draper's properties with a view of exchanging, upon some basis, his ranch for said properties. Stanley's letter, asking Adams to make said visit, read, in part, as follows: "* * * But I will say now, come down at once, and if you do not consider that I have earned $800, when you see property here worth $20,000, for your ranch, I will take $100." Adams, at the time of inspecting the Draper real estate, did not appear to be favorably impressed with the proposition of exchanging his ranch therefor, and returned to his home without doing anything definite one way or the other with regard to the proposed exchange.

Thereafter Stanley addressed a letter to Adams, complaining that the latter was not treating him fairly, and inclosing a written agreement, embracing the terms upon which Stanley was willing to negotiate the sale or exchange of the ranch, and to which he requested Adams to affix his signature. In this letter Stanley said, in part: "I have others who want to buy, not exchange, but I must now have an agreement that will authorize me to sell and deliver the property, or I don't want it, for I can't afford to take buyers out to see property to fool them. * * * If you want to sell (not trade) and will give me an agreement to convey if I secure a buyer let me know. * * * " Adams refused to sign said agreement. It may here be well to notice one of the points made by appellant in connection with the foregoing letter. It is claimed that the demand therein for a written agreement, with a statement by Stanley that, unless such an agreement was executed, he did not want to handle or have anything to do with the matter of selling or exchanging Adams' ranch, amounted to an abandonment by Stanley of any and all arrangements previously made with regard to the sale or exchange of said ranch. But, even if the letter referred to could well be so construed, still, the reply to said letter by Adams shows that there was an employment of Stanley by Adams as agent to sell or otherwise dispose of the latter's ranch—that is, either to sell it for cash or exchange it for property. Adams' said letter was as follows: "Your letter of the 20th inst. I got just as I got off the train at Cottonwood. You wrote it as if I went straight home. I did no such thing. I went down to Santa Cruz, and I met Mr. Draper as I was waiting for the night train at San Francisco. * * * I might trade with him yet (but it is not over likely). * * * Now you find me a buyer at $10.00 per acre and I will except and you can get me a trade if you can suit me, and I will go down again, but I do not want you to come up, because I consider you would spoil any trade I could get. You are a very good hand to begin a sale or trade, but you are not in it to conclude one." Subsequently to the receipt of the foregoing by Stanley, the latter, accompanied by Draper, went to the ranch of Adams, and thereupon the exchange of the properties of Adams and Draper was consummated on these terms: Draper to receive the 1,600-acre tract of land of Adams, to assume the payment of a note for $2,000 in favor of the Bank of Tehama County, which said note was secured by a mortgage on said tract of land, to execute to Adams two promissory notes—one for $4,000 and the other for $700—to be secured by mortgages on said land subordinate to the bank's mortgage, and to pay Adams the sum of $300 in cash, and to transfer to Adams "six lots with the four houses thereon at the corner of Sixth and Gilman street, Berkeley, Alameda county, California, and one house and lot on Haskell street, about 250 feet east of San Pablo avenue."

That Adams' letters to Stanley clearly disclose his employment of Stanley as an agent to sell the former's ranch there cannot be the slightest doubt, and this is all that is required by subdivision 6 of section 1624 of the Civil Code. Toomy v. Dunphy, 86 Cal. 639, 25 Pac. 130; Kennedy v. Merickle, 8 Cal. App. 378, 97 Pac. 81; Sanchez v. Yorba, 8 Cal. App. 490, 97 Pac. 205. Adams' letter, last referred to herein, authorized Stanley to secure a sale or an exchange of his ranch, his only qualification being that Stanley himself should not accompany the proposed purchaser on the visit to the ranch, for reasons suggested in said letter. And whether Stanley had or had not accompanied Draper to the ranch would be immaterial, in so far as Adams' obligation to pay Stanley the commissions to which he was justly entitled under his contract with Adams might be affected thereby.

[3] It is also clear that Adams' agreement was that Stanley should be paid 5 per cent.

commission if the sale was entirely for cash, and half that amount if the bargain was effected entirely on an exchange basis. The court computed the commissions to which it found the plaintiff to be entitled upon the basis that a part of the consideration moving from Draper to Adams was in cash and a part in property. Therefore, figuring that the assumption of the mortgage debt of $2,000 subsisting against the land and the notes executed to Adams aggregating $4,700 counted for cash, the court allowed commissions thereon as well as on the $300 cash payment at the rate of 5 per cent. in accordance with the terms of Adams' offer to Stanley in the event that he made a cash sale. The commissions thus computed totaled the sum of $350. The court then obviously figured that the total value of the Berkeley property was $10,000, upon which 2½ per cent. commissions were allowed, amounting in the aggregate to $250, which sum, added to the amount allowed on the cash part of the transaction, totaled the sum which the court found was due plaintiff. This finding is justified by the pleadings and the evidence.

It is clear from the evidence, as suggested, that Stanley had performed the services which he had agreed with Adams to render in the transaction by bringing the latter and Draper together in negotiations which led to the making of the bargain, upon what basis is immaterial, so far as Stanley's right to compensation is concerned. It appears from the evidence that when Stanley and Draper met Adams at the latter's home on the day on which the trade was made, and prior to any discussion of the matter, Stanley said that he would leave Draper and Adams to conduct the negotiations themselves and to make any bargain that might be the most agreeable to them. Adams, by conduct at least, acquiesced in the course thus suggested by Stanley, and he and Draper made their bargain in the absence of Stanley.

[4] As to the complaint, the first paragraph thereof sets out defendant's agreement to pay the sum of $600 for the services rendered by Stanley in the form of a common count. The second paragraph declared upon a special contract to pay said amount. It is obvious that plaintiff relied upon his indebitatus assumption for a recovery. Indeed, he could not have relied upon the special contract, for said contract called for compensation either in the sum of $800 or the sum of $400, according to the nature of the bargain, whether on a cash basis or an exchange of properties.

Under the common count the proof sustains the finding and judgment of the court as to the amount. And under the circumstances it was proper—indeed, necessary—to plead the indebtedness in the form of a common count.

[5] It is a settled rule in this state that, where the terms of a special contract have been varied or modified by the agreement of the parties, the action for the amount due for work and labor should be in the form of indebitatus assumpsit, and not upon the contract. "In such case the contract may be introduced in evidence by either party as an admission of the standard of value, or as proof of any other fact necessary to the recovery, and should be allowed to go to the jury whenever it can aid them in attaining a sound conclusion." Reynolds v. Jourdan, 6 Cal. 112; Castagnino v. Balletta, 82 Cal. 250, 23 Pac. 127; Adams v. Burbank, 103 Cal. 646, 37 Pac. 640; Boyd v. Bargagliotti, 12 Cal. App. 237, 107 Pac. 150.

[5] In the case at bar the terms of the agreement between Stanley and Adams were necessarily changed by the terms upon which the latter and Draper agreed to exchange properties, and this change was by the act of Adams himself with the tacit acquiescence of Stanley, who, we have seen, left the negotiations directly leading to the consummation of the bargain to the former and Draper.

But counsel for appellant declares that, if plaintiff relies upon the count in indebitatus assumpsit, he has failed to make out a case, since there was no proof made that the services of plaintiff's assignor were reasonably worth the sum for which judgment has been awarded. The special contract itself was evidence upon this point, and it was for the trial court to say whether from that and other evidence received the services rendered were reasonably worth $600, and the finding of the trial court that that sum represented the reasonable value of the services performed is conclusive. It was not necessary, as counsel for appellant seems to think, that witnesses should have been produced to say that a certain sum would represent the reasonable value of the services. As stated, the contract itself was competent evidence of the standard of value and upon that evidence alone the court was authorized to fix the sum that it deemed, under all the circumstances, would amount to reasonable compensation.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

15 Cal. App. 527

STANTON et al. v. CARNAHAN. (Civ. 910.)
(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 3, 1911.)

1. BROKERS (§ 75*)—PROVISION FOR COMPENSATION—CONSTRUCTION.

A contract to convey bound a purchaser to pay brokers "$300 commission. Seller agrees to pay" brokers "$100 commission when deal is complete." Held, that the $300, as well as the $100, was payable only on completion of the transaction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Dec. Dig. § 75.*]

2. BROKERS (§ 74*)—COMMISSION—RIGHT TO.

Under a contract to convey requiring payment of brokers' commission by the purchaser on completion of the transaction, the purchaser is liable where failure to complete the transaction is due to want of performance on his part.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 62; Dec. Dig. § 74.*]

3. BROKERS (§ 74*)—CONTRACT BETWEEN THIRD PARTIES—RIGHT TO ENFORCE.

Provision, in a contract to convey, for payment of a commission by the purchaser, being for brokers' benefit, is enforceable by them at any time before rescission of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 62; Dec. Dig. § 74.*]

4. BROKERS (§ 74*)—CONTRACTS FOR COMPENSATION—CONSIDERATION.

Consideration for provision, in a contract to convey, that a purchaser should pay a commission to brokers, is implied from the fact that the contract is in writing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 62; Dec. Dig. § 74.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by J. M. Stanton and another, partners as Stanton & Welch, against Alex Carnahan. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

A. M. Pence and Jones & Drake, for appellants. Anderson & Anderson, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Appeal from judgment.

[1] The action was brought to recover $300 upon a provision of a contract entered into between defendant and one Crawford, whereby the latter agreed to sell, and the former agreed to buy, the tract of land therein described for a stipulated sum to be paid at the times and in the manner therein provided, which provision was as follows: "And the buyer (Carnahan, the defendant) agrees to pay Stanton & Welch $300 commission. Seller (Crawford) agrees to pay Stanton & Welch $100 commission when deal is complete." Defendant in his answer admitted the execution of the contract and admitted that it contained the provision for the payment of the commission, punctuated as hereinabove set forth, but alleged that said sum was not to be due and payable thereunder until the deal was completed, and further alleged that the deal had not been completed.

At the trial plaintiffs offered evidence tending to show that plaintiff Stanton had prepared and drawn the contract; that it was executed in his presence on September 21, 1907; and introduced the same in evidence, with proof that no part of the $300 had been paid. Thereupon defendant moved for a nonsuit upon the ground of the want of any showing of employment of plaintiffs by the defendant, and that the contract offered in evidence was not a contract made expressly for the benefit of plaintiffs, nor was the contract made for the benefit of plaintiffs. The court then suggested that, assuming the grounds of the motion as made to be insufficient, there was an absence of any showing that the deal had been completed, and that under the terms of the contract the $300 commission was not to be due and payable until the deal was completed. It was admitted that the title never passed from Crawford to Carnahan, nor was there any evidence of any payments being made upon the purchase price of $15,500, other than the sum of $100 upon the execution of the contract. Plaintiffs then offered to prove that Crawford had, pursuant to the terms of the contract, offered to perform his part thereof, but that Carnahan had refused so to do on his part and made default therein, and that the reason for not completing the deal was due to the acts of defendant, Carnahan. Whereupon the court stated that it was "quite willing to assume that those facts will all be proved," but that upon such assumption a motion for a nonsuit, if made, would, nevertheless, be granted. Thereupon defendant moved for a nonsuit upon the ground that the contract disclosed that the commission of $300 was not to be paid until the deal was complete, and that no evidence had been offered and no allegation been made that the deal was ever completed, which motion was granted.

We agree with the learned trial judge in his interpretation of the contract. The words "when deal is complete" had reference to the performance of some future act intended to constitute the completion of the deal. This act, as conceded by appellants, was the vesting of title in the buyer and the payment of the purchase price or the delivery of evidences of obligation therefor. The provision that Carnahan should pay to Stanton & Welch $300, and that Crawford should pay them $100, must be regarded as constituting the contract, in so far as concerns them; and, so read and considered, it is clear that the words "when deal is complete" referred to and fixed a time contemporaneous with the performance of such act, not only when Crawford should pay the $100, but likewise the time when Carnahan should comply with his obligation to pay the commission of $300. The fact that the two sentences composing the contract so made for the benefit of plaintiffs are separated by a period, instead of a comma, does not affect the interpretation to be placed upon the provision. As the deal was not consummated, and inasmuch as under the terms of the contract the commission was not due until the deal was complete, the court held that plaintiffs were not entitled to recover.

[2] Upon this record, however, we must assume that evidence was introduced which tended to establish the fact that the failure to complete the deal was due to want of performance on the part of defendant, and hence the due performance or completion of the deal upon which payment was made contingent was excused. Section 1512, Civ. Code.

[3] In its determination of this case the court is limited in its consideration thereof to the particular grounds upon which the motion for nonsuit was made. Durfee v. Seale, 139 Cal. 603, 73 Pac. 435.

[4] That part of the contract upon which the action is based was made expressly for the benefit of plaintiffs, and under the provisions of section 1559, Civ. Code, they were entitled to enforce the same at any time before the parties thereto rescinded it. If the parties had rescinded, then, under the provisions of said section, no recovery could be had. It may also be true that if, under the terms of the agreement, Carnahan's assent to the contract was procured by fraud, such fact might be urged as a defense. But the record discloses no evidence in support of either proposition. It appears that the contract sued upon was an existing one expressly made for the benefit of plaintiffs, a consideration being implied from the fact that it was in writing, and that in so far as it imposed obligations upon defendant he had made default, thereby preventing performance, the want of which he pleads against recovery in the action. Such position is untenable. The record is meager, incomplete, and unsatisfactory; but from what is disclosed we are of the opinion that the court erred in granting defendant's motion for a nonsuit.

The judgment is therefore reversed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

15 Cal. App. 531

LARSON v. LARSON. (Civ. 806.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 4, 1911. On Rehearing, April 3, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 348*)—TIME TO TAKE—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE.

An appeal taken under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 941a, 941b, within six months after judgment, notice of entry of which was not given, is taken in time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1900-1904; Dec. Dig. § 348.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 165*)—NONSUIT—EVIDENCE.

A motion for nonsuit admits the truth of the evidence for plaintiff, together with every inference or presumption legitimately deducible therefrom, and the court must disregard the contradictory evidence, and construe all the evidence most strongly against defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 373, 374; Dec. Dig. § 165.*]

3. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 126*)—SEPARATE PROPERTY OF WIFE—EARNINGS—EVIDENCE—"SEPARATE ESTATE."

Where a widow, suing the administrator of her deceased husband for household furniture, showed that she had conducted business in her own name without interference from her husband, and that the furniture was bought by her with funds earned in the business, there was evidence that the property was her separate estate within Civ. Code, §§ 158, 159, authorizing a husband to relinquish to the wife his interest in her earnings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 459-464; Dec. Dig. § 126.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 6413, 6414.]

On Rehearing.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 419*)—NOTICE OF APPEAL—SUFFICIENCY.

A notice of appeal from an order of nonsuit which identifies the order with reasonable certainty is sufficient within Code Civ. Proc. § 941b.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2145, 2146; Dec. Dig. § 419.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; F. B. Ogden, Judge.

Action by Emma A. Larson against Alexander Larson, as administrator of Alfred Larson, deceased. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

John C. Scott, for appellant. Reed, Black & Reed and Walker & Moreland, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit entered in an action of claim and delivery.

Plaintiff is the widow of Alfred Larson, deceased, and brought suit against the administrator of her husband's estate to recover possession of certain personal property, consisting generally of household furniture, which she claims as her separate property.

Upon the close of plaintiff's case, defendant moved for a nonsuit, upon the ground that the evidence introduced failed to sustain the allegations of the complaint as to the separate character of the property. After due consideration this motion was on September 3, 1909, granted. Thereafter, on September 22, 1909, a judgment of nonsuit was entered in the minutes of the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Before considering the question of the correctness of the court's ruling on the motion for nonsuit, it is necessary to dispose of a motion made by respondent to dismiss the appeal. The judgment was entered by the clerk on September 22d, and the appeal therefrom was taken on November 27th following.

[1] Respondent contends that, as the appeal was perfected more than 60 days after the entry of the judgment, the evidence cannot be reviewed, and that the appeal must be dismissed. This motion would probably have to be granted if the appeal were taken under section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure. As a matter of fact, however, the appeal is taken under sections 941a and 941b of that Code; and, as no notice of the entry of judgment was given, and the appeal was taken within six months from such entry, it was taken and perfected in season to permit a consideration and review of the evidence, or for any other purpose.

This brings us to the question, Was the court warranted in granting the motion for nonsuit? To answer this query it will be necessary to review briefly the evidence. The plaintiff, as a witness in her own behalf, testified that for a long period of time she had conducted, in her own name, the business of selling leases of lodging houses and the like; that the money thus earned was deposited in banks to her credit; that she had exclusive and undisturbed control of said business and its earnings, free from any interference or participation of her husband; that the furniture in question was purchased by her with funds thus earned; that, on account of her illness at the time of this purchase, her husband attended to the details of the transaction, but that the checks given in payment thereof were drawn by her on funds standing in her own name in the bank, and representing her own earnings in said business; and that the receipts for the several payments were taken by her husband for her and in her name. As a circumstance showing her husband's recognition of the fact that he acted merely as her agent in the matter, plaintiff testified that upon the completion of the transaction, in handing her a receipt in full from the vendor of the furniture, her husband asked if she did not think he had gotten the furniture for her cheap enough. She also testified that prior to going to Portland, where it appears that she and her husband formerly resided, their joint earnings went into a common fund; but that thereafter, and for more than five years before the commencement of the present action, there had existed a verbal understanding between them to the effect that (quoting the plaintiff's language) "I should go ahead on my own business and take care of my business for myself." In one place in her testimony she said that no agreement was made that the earnings of such business were to be hers, because she and her husband did not think such agreement necessary; but it is quite evident from the context that she supposed she was being questioned with reference to a written agreement.

[2] A motion for a nonsuit admits the truth of all evidence in favor of the plaintiff, together with every inference or presumption legitimately deducible therefrom. Contradictory evidence is to be disregarded, and upon such a motion all evidence must be construed most strongly against the defendant. Goldstone v. Merchants' Ice, etc., Co., 123 Cal. 625, 56 Pac. 776; Hanley v. Cal. Bridge Co., 127 Cal. 232, 59 Pac. 577, 47 L. R. A. 597; Ferris v. Baker, 127 Cal. 520, 59 Pac. 937. In the case of Estate of Arnold, 147 Cal. 583, 82 Pac. 252, the rule is thus fully stated: "Every favorable inference fairly deducible and every favorable presumption fairly arising from the evidence produced must be considered as facts proven. If evidence is fairly susceptible of two constructions, or if either of several inferences may reasonably be made, the court must take the view most favorable to the plaintiff. All evidence must be taken as true; and, if contradictory evidence has been given, it must be disregarded. * * * If there is any substantial evidence tending to prove the facts necessary to make out a case, the plaintiff is entitled to a trial upon the merits."

[3] Tested by this rule, we think the motion for a nonsuit should have been denied. In addition to the evidence of the verbal agreement between plaintiff and her husband that she should conduct the business for herself, it was clearly shown that she, in fact, did manage and control the leasing business in every respect as her own, and without any interference at all on her husband's part except upon the single occasion and under the circumstances already described. As these facts indicate that the husband did not regard the leasing business and its earnings as community property, and that he had relinquished the same to his wife, they constituted circumstantial evidence tending to prove the allegations of plaintiff's complaint. Kaltschmidt v. Weber, 145 Cal. 596, 79 Pac. 272. We think the testimony fairly discloses the fact that the property was regarded by the spouses as the separate estate of the wife. The earnings of the wife during marriage and while living with her husband are community property, subject to the control and management of the husband; but the latter may relinquish to the wife his interest in them, and, when he does so, such earnings become the separate property of the wife. Sections 158, 159, Civ. Code; Wren v. Wren, 100 Cal. 276, 34 Pac. 775, 38 Am. St. Rep. 287.

In the case of Von Glahn v. Brennan, 81 Cal. 261, 22 Pac. 596, the evidence showed that the husband told his wife that "everything you make is yours." She went into business, made money, and purchased real property, and such property was held to be her separate estate. In Kaltschmidt v. Weber, supra, the court said: "It may well have been the case that the husband could recall no conversation between them in which such an agreement was distinctly expressed. His testimony strongly indicates this condition of memory. And yet it might also be true that the fact that there was such an agreement was perfectly well understood between them. In such a case resort may be had to circumstantial evidence. The conduct and actions of the husband with respect to such earnings, indicating that he did not regard them as community property, or that he had relinquished to her the right to control and dispose of her receipts from that source, would be competent evidence and admissible to prove the agreement."

The plaintiff is of foreign birth, and not very familiar with the English language, which doubtless accounts for the testimony being indefinite and obscure in some respects. Nevertheless, considering the portions favorable to her, and all reasonable inferences deducible therefrom, we feel constrained to say that if the case had been submitted on her testimony alone it would have supported a judgment in her favor.

Therefore the motion for nonsuit was improperly granted. Goldstone v. Merchants' Ice & Cold-Storage Co., supra.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; HALL, J.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Respondent in his petition for a rehearing calls our attention to the fact that the appellant in her notice of appeal refers to the date of the entry of the order of nonsuit as being September 22d, respondent claiming that the record shows that such entry was in fact made on September 3d. He contends, therefore, that the appeal should not have been considered. It is not as clear as it might be as to when the judgment of nonsuit was entered in the minutes of the court. We are inclined to think, however, that the first order was merely "a memorandum affording data from which a judgment * * * might be drafted," and that, therefore, the order of September 22d was the proper one from which to take the appeal. The Supreme Court so held in a similar case. Ferris v. Baker, 127 Cal. 520, 59 Pac. 937.

[4] The appeal was in time, even if the order of nonsuit was entered as claimed by respondent. The error complained of, even if it existed, could not possibly have misled any one, for the notice of appeal identified the order appealed from with reasonable certainty. That is all that is required. Section 941b, Code Civ. Proc. Such errors have always been disregarded. See Weyl v. Sonoma Valley Ry. Co., 69 Cal. 202, 10 Pac. 510; Anderson v. Goff, 72 Cal. 65, 13 Pac. 73, 1 Am. St. Rep. 34; Paul v. Crugnaz, 25 Nev. 293, 59 Pac. 857, 60 Pac. 983, 47 L. R. A. 540; The Latona et al. v. McAlle, 3 Wash. T. 332, 19 Pac. 131.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by Dorothy Smith, by her guardian ad litem, A. D. Smith, against Ada A. Dryden. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. B. Drake and Jones & Drake, for appellant. G. P. Adams, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of the negligence of defendant. Judgment went for defendant, and plaintiff appeals therefrom upon a bill of exceptions.

It appears from the findings that one Moorehead entered into a written contract with defendant and two others jointly interested with her in the property, whereby, for the sum of $3,270, he agreed to furnish the labor and materials required in the construction of two certain buildings, and to complete and finish the same in accordance with plans and specifications agreed upon; that Moorehead in the performance of his contract was not under the control or direction of defendant, except as to results only; that in the performance of his contract Moorehead was an independent contractor; that during the progress of the work Moorehead, for the purpose of drying the same, caused some boards to be stacked up in a manner which left a space underneath the same upon a lot adjoining that on which he was erecting the buildings; that, while plaintiff's younger brother was engaged in playing thereunder, she went after him to take him home, and that while she was under said stack of boards it fell and caused the injuries upon which the action is based; that the injuries were not due to the negligent stacking of the boards or the negligence of defendant.

[1] Counsel for appellant concedes that she is not entitled to recover from defendant if Moorehead was an independent contractor. The findings of the court clearly establish such fact. Appellant contends, however, that such finding is not supported by the evidence, for the sole reason that the written contract made between Moorehead and defendant, under which he was engaged in the construction of the buildings, was not filed with the county recorder, as required by section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that, in case of failure so to file the same, such contract "shall be wholly void, and no recovery shall be had by either party thereto."

While the contract, by reason of failure to file the same, was void, so far as concerned the right of either party to maintain an action thereon, such fact did not establish the relation of master and servant between defendant and Moorehead. In such cases, persons furnishing labor and materials at the

15 Cal. App. 568

SMITH v. DRYDEN. (Civ. 923.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 10, 1911.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 310*)—INJURY TO THIRD PERSONS—INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS—LIABILITY OF OWNER.

While a building contract is void when not filed as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, as concerning the right of either party to sue thereon, such condition does not change the contractor's relationship from that of an independent contractor to an employé so as to render the owner liable for his negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 1243; Dec. Dig. § 316.*]

2. CONTRACTS (§ 44*)—BUILDING CONTRACTS—VALIDITY.

Notwithstanding invalidity of a building contract for failure to file it as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, the authority of the contractor, the nature and extent of his employment, and the amount of his recovery thereon on performance are controlled by the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 168; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

instance of the contractor would possess the right to recover against him personally, but the fact that the contract was void would impose no personal liability upon the owner for such labor and materials. The only remedy against the owner is the foreclosure of such liens upon the building as they may have acquired. McMenomy v. White, 115 Cal. 339, 47 Pac. 109. Since the relation existing between the owner and contractor under a void contract imposes no personal liability upon the owner for labor and materials, it must follow that such relation can impose no liability upon the owner for damages sustained by reason of the negligence of the contractor in the performance of such contract.

Furthermore, while as between the parties thereto the failure to file the contract renders it void to the extent that neither party can maintain an action thereon for its breach, nevertheless, it stands as showing the "understanding of the parties that such work, and only such work, as is called for by the terms of the contract shall be performed."

[2] The authority of the contractor, the nature and extent of his employment, and the amount which he is entitled to recover upon performance in an action in assumpsit are all measured and determined by the provisions of the contract. Sullivan v. California Realty Co., 142 Cal. 201, 75 Pac. 767; Laidlaw v. Marye, 133 Cal. 176, 65 Pac. 391. Under the terms of this contract, as fully performed, Moorehead was an independent contractor as to whom, in the mode and manner of doing the work called for in the contract, defendant had no right to and exercised no control.

Our conclusion renders it unnecessary to discuss other points involved in the appeal. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

15 Cal. App. 571

KINNEY v. MARYLAND CASUALTY CO.
OF BALTIMORE. (Civ. 908.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 10, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 9, 1911.)

1. PLEADING (§ 126*)—ANSWER—NEGATIVE PREGNANT.

In an action on an insurance policy covering merchandise in certain safes, and indemnifying against loss through felonious abstraction by the use of tools or explosives, etc., the complaint alleged that certain persons to plaintiff unknown entered the safes by the use of tools, and feloniously abstracted therefrom, without plaintiff's consent, certain merchandise, etc. The answer denied that certain persons to plaintiff unknown entered by the use of tools the safes without plaintiff's consent, that certain persons by the use of tools entered the safes without plaintiff's consent, and abstracted therefrom the merchandise alleged in the complaint, and alleged that, if the safes were entered by the use of tools, it was with plaintiff's consent, and that the entry was procured, etc., by his consent, etc. Held, that under the rule requiring a denial of every specific averment in a sworn complaint in substance and in spirit, and not merely a denial of its literal truth, and that failure to make such denial constitutes an admission of the averment, the answer presented no issue as to the manner of effecting entrance to the safes or that merchandise was abstracted therefrom, but presented an issue as to the connivance and procurement of such entry and abstraction by plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 261-263; Dec. Dig. § 126.*]

2. WITNESSES (§ 255*)—REFRESHING MEMORY—SECONDARY EVIDENCE—BOOKS OF ACCOUNT—MEMORANDA.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1855, subd. 5, relating to proof of contents of writings, plaintiff was properly permitted to use for the purpose of refreshing his memory in order to establish his loss of goods under a burglary policy a memorandum prepared from his books containing invoices of goods bought and sold, where an examination of the books in court would have entailed inconvenience and loss of time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 878; Dec. Dig. § 255.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1048*)—HARMLESS ERROR—EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES.

In an action on a casualty policy insuring against burglary, error, if any, in permitting plaintiff to use for the purpose of refreshing his memory in order to enumerate the goods stolen a memorandum prepared from books containing invoices of goods bought and sold, was harmless; the books being in court, and no attempt being made on cross-examination to controvert the oral statements based on the memory of the witness after refreshing his memory from such memorandum.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1048.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1031*)—HARMLESS ERROR—PRESUMPTIONS OF PREJUDICE.

Where nothing in the record indicates an abuse of the court's discretion in permitting leading questions, no prejudicial error will be presumed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4038-4046; Dec. Dig. § 1031.*]

5. EVIDENCE (§ 441*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—PRIOR AGREEMENT.

In an action on a burglar insurance policy, etc., which was not ambiguous or uncertain in its terms as to any matter involved in the issues presented, evidence as to a policy of an entirely different character considered by the parties before the one in question was issued was properly excluded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2046; Dec. Dig. § 441.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Robert M. Clark, Judge.

Action by W. M. Kinney against the Maryland Casualty Company of Baltimore. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John Murray Marshall and Wilbur Bassett, for appellants. Hunsaker & Britt, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. The action was upon a policy of insurance. Findings and judgment were in favor of plaintiff, from which judgment, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals.

[1] The complaint alleged the issuance to plaintiff by defendant of a policy of insurance covering merchandise in certain safes and indemnifying against loss when, through felonious abstraction by the use of tools or explosives directly upon such safes, a loss ensued. It was averred that, "while said policy was in full force and effect, to wit, on the 16th day of March, 1907, certain persons to the plaintiff unknown made entry into the said safes by the use of tools directly thereupon, and feloniously took and abstracted from the same, against the will and without the consent of plaintiff, during the night-time, * * * certain merchandise, to wit, jewelry and precious stones, which were then and there the property of plaintiff, and took and carried away the same and deprived plaintiff thereof, and by such acts of said persons unknown the said merchandise was directly and wholly lost to the plaintiff." The actual cash value of the merchandise at the date of the loss was alleged to be $3,442.63. The answer, upon information and belief, denied "(1) that certain persons, to the plaintiff unknown, did on the 16th day of March, 1907, or thereabouts, or at any time during the continuance of said policy of indemnity, make entry into the said described safes by the use of tools directly thereupon, against the will and without the consent of plaintiff; (2) denies that * * * certain persons made entry into said safes by the use of tools directly thereupon, and feloniously took and abstracted from the same, against the will and without the consent of plaintiff, certain merchandise of plaintiff described in said complaint;" (3) denies the cash value of said merchandise as alleged; "* * * (5) alleges that, if said safes were at said time entered by the use of tools thereupon, it was with the knowledge and consent of the plaintiff, and that such entry, if so made, was procured, aided, and abetted by the negligence, connivance, or consent of the plaintiff." Construing the answer under the rule "that our system requires a denial of every specific averment in a sworn complaint, in substance and in spirit, and not merely a denial of its literal truth, and whenever the defendant fails to make such denial he admits the averment" (Doll v. Good, 38 Cal. 290; Westbay v. Gray, 116 Cal. 663, 48 Pac. 800), we are constrained to hold that paragraphs 1 and 2 of the answer presented no issue as to the manner of effecting entrance to the safes, or that merchandise was abstracted therefrom; but, on the contrary, presented an issue as to the connivance and procurement of such entry and abstraction by the plaintiff. Defendant in good conscience could have verified the answer containing the averments of the first and second paragraphs, even with full knowledge of the forcible entry by the use of tools and the abstraction of goods, if it in fact believed that the same were with the connivance and consent of plaintiff. The construction that defendant did not intend to specifically deny the manner of entrance, or the fact of the abstraction of the goods, is accentuated by paragraph 5, which alleges facts controverting the felonious character of the entry and taking, and clearly indicates that this was the issue intended to be urged by paragraphs 1 and 2. The rule sometimes invoked, that objections to the sufficiency of a pleading are waived by failure to demur or to object to the evidence offered in support thereof, has no application when, as in this case, the answer by denial of facts controverting the felonious character of the entry and the value of the goods, tendered issues sufficient as a defense, in which case the omission to negative other material allegations will be held as an admission of their truth. The bill of exceptions discloses that the entry into the safes was by means of a key, and it is argued by appellant that a key is not a tool, and therefore the entry was not effected in such manner as to render the defendant liable. In view of what we have said as to the issues presented, neither evidence nor findings were requisite as establishing the entrance by means of tools, and it is unnecessary to determine what effect should be given the word "tool," as employed in the policy.

It is next claimed by appellant that the evidence is insufficient to establish what jewelry or precious stones were so taken. The matter for determination was as to the cash value of the goods abstracted, there being, as we have before urged, no denial of the actual abstraction of some goods and merchandise. The plaintiff was permitted to use a memorandum for the purpose of refreshing his memory when called upon to enumerate the items involved in the abstraction. His memory being so refreshed, he stated that the aggregate value was $3,442.63. There was no evidence of any kind or character controverting this statement.

[2] We are of opinion that the use of the memorandum for the purpose stated was warranted by subdivision 5 of section 1855 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It appears by the record that the books of plaintiff containing invoices of goods bought and sold, from which the memorandum was prepared, were in court. It is in evidence that the general result shown by the memorandum could have been arrived at by an examination of such books. The inconvenience and loss of time attendant upon such examination justified the court in the exercise of its discretion in admitting parol proof of the matters therein contained. People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 496, 55 Pac. 581, 68 Am. St. Rep. 50.

[3] The books being in court, through the use of which upon cross-examination the accuracy of such statements could have been determined, and no attempt being made upon cross-examination to controvert such oral statements based upon the memory of the witness after refreshing his memory from such memorandum, would indicate that no prejudicial error could be said to result from the action of the court in permitting the memorandum for the purpose for which it was used.

[4] Appellant criticises the leading character of certain questions permitted upon the trial. This is but a criticism of the action of the court in the exercise of a discretion. Nothing in the record indicates an abuse thereof, and no prejudicial error will be presumed.

[5] We see no error in the action of the court sustaining objections to questions concerning a policy of an entirely different character which was considered by the parties before application was made for the one actually issued. The policy which was issued, and which is the basis of the action, is in no sense ambiguous or uncertain in its terms as to any matter involved in the issues presented. There was therefore no reason for explanation and no uncertainty therein warranting evidence of the character proposed. The rights of the parties were to be determined by the terms of the instrument issued, and, being certain and unambiguous, all parties were by its terms concluded.

We find no prejudicial error in the record, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

15 Cal. App. 576

MCCARTHY v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF MERCED COUNTY, et al. (Civ. 791.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 13, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 12, 1911.)

1. BRIDGES (§ 20*)—CONSTRUCTION—BOARD OF SUPERVISORS — POWERS — "CONTROL"—"SUPERVISION."

Under Pol. Code, § 4041, subd. 4, requiring county boards of supervisors when the cost of construction of any bridge, etc., exceeds $500 to advertise for bids, but providing that, on being advised by the county surveyor that the work can be done for less than the lowest bid, the board may reject all bids and order the work done or structure built by days' work under the "supervision and control" of such surveyor, the latter to be held personally responsible under his official bond to construct such structure at a cost not exceeding the lowest bid, the board did not exceed its power in directing the surveyor on his being instructed to construct a bridge to purchase material therefor, "supervision" implying oversight, and the word "control" being used to authorize additional power, such as is contained in one of its definitions, "to exercise a restraining or governing influence over, to regulate."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bridges, Cent. Dig. §§ 37-47; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1549-1552; vol. 8, p. 7617; vol. 8, p. 6797.]

2. COUNTIES (§ 50*)—CONSTRUCTION—POWERS OF BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.

Such authorization was not an unwarranted delegation of authority by the supervisors; the power of the board coming from the act of the Legislature.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

3. BRIDGES (§ 20*)—CONSTRUCTION—POWERS OF BOARD OF SUPERVISORS—STATUTES.

There is no inconsistency between Pol. Code, § 4041, subd. 4, authorizing county boards of supervisors to order, in certain instances, bridges, etc., to be built by the county surveyor, and section 4041 [a] that the road commissioners or road overseers in their respective districts shall employ all labor required and direct the conduct of work of any kind on all public roads, or section 2645, providing that road commissioners under the direction of the board of supervisors must take charge of the highways within their respective districts and employ all men, teams, etc., and all help necessary to do the work in their respective districts when the same is not let by contract, the former section providing for an exceptional, the latter for the ordinary condition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bridges, Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

4. BRIDGES (§ 20*)—CONSTRUCTION—STATUTES.

Pol. Code, § 4041, subd. 4, authorizing county boards of supervisors to order, in certain instances, bridges, etc., to be built by the county surveyor, is not inconsistent with section 4074, providing that no county officer shall, except for his own services, present any claim against the county, etc., there being no contractual relation in such case, as the only compensation the surveyor can receive is the fee fixed by law for his services, though an additional duty is cast on him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bridges, Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

5. EVIDENCE (§ 83*)—PUBLIC OFFICERS—PRESUMPTIONS.

The presumption is that public officials will do their duty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 105; Dec. Dig. § 83.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by D. J. McCarthy against the Board of Supervisors of the County of Merced and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

F. G. Ostrander and J. J. Griffin, for appellant. H. S. Shaffer, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought in the superior court of the county of Merced to restrain defendants from constructing a steel bridge over the Merced river in said county. The court below sustained a demurrer to the complaint for the insufficiency of the facts to constitute a cause of action. Plaintiff declined to amend his complaint, and judgment was thereupon rendered in favor of defendants, and plaintiff has appealed.

The facts alleged in the complaint, which we deem necessary for an understanding of the case, are as follows: A petition of the taxpayers of said county was presented to the board of supervisors of said county praying for the construction of a bridge at a certain point over Merced river in Merced county. At a regular session of said board, held on the 9th of July, 1909, an order was duly made by said board directing the county surveyor to submit plans and specifications for the construction of a steel bridge at the designated point, and to have the plans ready for the next regular meeting of said board in July. The plans and specifications were prepared by the surveyor and submitted to the board and were regularly accepted and adopted by said board on July 19, 1909. The board thereupon ordered the clerk of said board to advertise for bids for the construction of said bridge in accordance with the plans and specifications that were adopted. This was done, and certain bids were received and they were opened and inspected by said board. At the same session of the board the county surveyor advised said board that said bridge could be constructed for a sum less than the amount of the lowest bid, and thereupon the said board refused to award the construction of said bridge to the lowest responsible bidder, or to any bidder, and rejected all the bids and adjourned without taking further action as to the construction of the bridge. Thereafter, at a special session, held on October 6, 1909, called for the purpose of considering the construction of said bridge by days' work under the direction and control of said county surveyor, the board unanimously adopted a certain resolution which, after reciting the circumstance of the opening of the bids and the advice of the county surveyor, "ordered that A. E. Cowell, surveyor of Merced county, be and he is hereby authorized and directed to proceed and construct said bridge by days' work according to his plans and specifications, and to purchase all necessary material for the same. * * * The said defendant A. E. Cowell, pursuant to the order of said board, is proceeding, and threatens to continue to proceed, to construct said bridge, and to contract for labor, material, and supplies necessary for the construction of said bridge, and the said board of supervisors and the members thereof are aiding and advising the said A. E. Cowell in the construction of said bridge and in contracting, and providing funds, for said supplies, labor, and materials out of the funds of said county and road district and threaten to continue to so aid and advise said Cowell and provide for said funds." The said bridge will exceed in cost of construction the sum of $500.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Index

[1] Respondents claim that authority for their action is found in the language of subdivision 4 of section 4041 of the Political Code. This is a part of the enumeration of the general powers of the boards of supervisors in their respective counties, and it relates specifically to the maintenance, control, construction, etc., of public roads, turnpikes, ferries, wharves, chutes, and bridges within the county, and it provides that "when the cost of the construction of any bridge, wharf, chute, or other shipping facilities that may be built under the provisions of this subdivision exceeds the sum of five hundred dollars they must cause to be prepared and must adopt plans and specifications, strain-sheets and working details, and must advertise for bids for the construction of such bridge, wharves, chutes or other shipping facilities, unless otherwise provided by law, in accordance with the plans and specifications so adopted. All bidders shall be afforded opportunity to examine such plans and specifications and said board shall award the contract to the lowest responsible bidder, * * * provided, that after the submission of the bids as herein provided, the board of supervisors being advised by the county surveyor that the work can be done for a sum less than the lowest responsible bid, it shall then be their privilege to reject all bids and to order the work done or structure built by days' work under the supervision and control of the said surveyor; provided further, that the surveyor in such cases shall be held personally responsible (under his official bond to construct said bridge or structure) according to his plans and specifications at a cost not to exceed the amount of the lowest responsible bid received." It is perfectly apparent that the board did not exceed the privilege granted by said section unless in the command and direction to the surveyor to purchase material for the said structure, but even in this particular we are of the opinion that the action of the board was entirely within the purview of said provision. The work is to be done, not simply under the "supervision," but also under the "control," of the surveyor. "Supervision" implies oversight and direction. "Control" must have been used to authorize additional power, such as is contained in one of its definitions, "to exercise a restraining or governing influence over, to regulate." How could the surveyor govern or regulate the construction of the bridge without a supervision over the employment of labor and the purchase of material? He could supervise the structure by directing its completion in accordance with the plans and specifications. He could not "control" it without a directing power as to the cost. This power manifestly could not be exercised without the privilege of employing the labor and purchasing the material. This view, that it was the intention of the Legislature in the contingency mentioned to clothe the surveyor with the ample power suggested, is strengthened and confirmed by a consideration of the purpose of this alternative plan and of the bond required of the surveyor to do the work in accordance with his advice to the board. The scheme was devised to protect the county against collusion on the part of bidders or the payment of exorbitant charges for such public improvements. To indemnify the county against loss in consequence of the award to the surveyor, he is required to give a bond to construct the bridge at a sum not to exceed the lowest bid. It must be apparent that no surveyor, without the privilege of hiring the labor and purchasing the material, would enter into such an undertaking. By the construction contended for by appellant, the manifest purpose of the law would therefore be defeated.

[2] We can see nothing in the position of respondent that implies an unwarranted delegation of authority on the part of the supervisors. In fact, there is no delegation of authority whatever by the supervisors. The power of the board comes from the act of the Legislature. It may be admitted that, independent of the provision in question, the Legislature has empowered the board of supervisors to let the work to the lowest responsible bidder or to do it themselves. But the authority that confers power can withhold or withdraw it. It may take it away from one and confer it upon another, unless, of course, there is some constitutional barrier. As to the power of the Legislature, Judge Redfield says: "It has never been questioned that the American Legislatures have the same unlimited power in regard to legislation which resides in the British Parliament, except where they are restrained by written Constitutions. That must be conceded, I think, to be a fundamental principle in the political organization of the American states. We cannot well comprehend how, upon principle, it should be otherwise. The people must, of course, possess all legislative power originally. They have committed this, in the most general and unlimited manner, to the several state Legislatures, saving only such restrictions as are imposed by the Constitution of the United States or of the particular state in question." Thorpe v. Rutland, etc., R. R. Co., 27 Vt. 142, 62 Am. Dec. 625. Indeed, there is in our Constitution (article 11, § 5) a specific command that "the Legislature by general and uniform laws shall provide for the election or appointment in the several counties of boards of supervisors, sheriffs, county clerks, district attorneys and such other county, township and municipal officers as public convenience may require, and shall prescribe their duties and fix their terms of office." In harmony with this mandate the Legislature has prescribed the duties of the supervisors and at various times has amended certain provisions of the statute, and in 1907 (Stats. 1907, p. 367) was added this clause whereby in a certain contingency it was made the duty of the county surveyor to do the work therein prescribed. It is true that the board is not deprived of all discretion in the matter. The law contemplates that the supervisors shall act, of course, for the best interest of the public. It is fitting that they should be advised by the county surveyor who is presumably particularly qualified for that duty. They may reject his advice or they may supplement it by independent investigation, but, when they have ordered the surveyor to do the work, the Legislature has given him express authority and made it his duty to comply with said order. In brief, the case is this: The Legislature is the source of all power in the premises. In the first instance, it authorized the board of supervisors to have complete control over the work. Subsequently it modified this grant of power by authorizing, in a certain contingency, the county surveyor, when directed by the board, to perform this public duty. The matter is for the Legislature, and not for the courts.

[3] There is no inconsistency between this provision and the succeeding one providing that the road commissioners or road overseers in their respective districts "shall employ all labor required and direct the conduct of work of any kind upon any and all public roads," or section 2645 of the Political Code, providing that "road commissioners, under the direction and supervision and pursuant to orders of the board of supervisors, must: (1) Take charge of the highways within their respective districts, and shall employ all men, teams, watering carts, and all help necessary to do the work in their respective districts when the same is not let by contract." The section before us provides for an exceptional, the other sections for the ordinary, condition. The former is specific, the latter general in their operation. Manifestly the road commissioner has general supervision over the roads, including the bridges, and he must attend to repairs and to the many details required to keep the highways in proper condition. But by this later specific provision the duty of the road commissioner has been modified somewhat in a particular instance, and, reading these various sections together, it is easy to give effect to all of them without violating any principle of construction and to reach the conclusion that, in special cases requiring bids, the work may be let by the board of supervisors to the lowest responsible bidder or, to save expense, it may be done under the direction and control of the county surveyor.

[4] Nor do we see anything herein inconsistent with section 4074 of the Political Code providing that "no county officer shall, except for his own services, present any claim, account or demand for allowance against the county, or in any way except in the discharge of his official duty advocate the relief asked in the claim or demand made by any other." The contention is that the said arrangement constitutes a contract between the supervisors and the county surveyor and therefore prohibited by the above-mentioned provision. But we do not understand that there is any such contractual relation as the statute contemplates. Under the circumstances mentioned, it rather becomes the official duty of the county surveyor to perform the work. He is to derive no profit therefrom, and the only compensation he can receive is the fee fixed by the law for his services. In other words, it seems plain that by virtue of this provision an additional duty is cast upon the county surveyor without any increase whatever of his compensation in those counties where he is paid a salary for his entire official service and in other counties with simply an allowance of the legal fee for his actual work. Herein, as we view it, there is nothing opposed to the letter or spirit of the law or in contravention of sound public policy.

[5] To the suggestion that respondents' construction of the law is likely to encourage great abuse and afford an attractive allurement for designing county surveyors, it is sufficient to say that the presumption is that public officials will do their duty, although, admittedly, under any administrative scheme or system, gross wrong will sometimes be perpetrated against the public by dishonest men in official station.

Neither is it a fair interpretation of the law to hold that it deprives the Legislature of any part of its power to prescribe the duties of the county surveyor. These duties are set forth generally in sections 4214 to 4220, inclusive, of the Political Code, but the Legislature, by the provision before us, as before mentioned, has added an additional duty to be performed when directed by the board of supervisors. Nor in the work required is there anything so foreign to the general scope of the functions of the county surveyor as to compel the inference that said duty could not have been contemplated by the Legislature. It is mostly, if not entirely, ministerial in its nature and of such a character that by training and experience the county surveyor should be specially qualified to perform it.

Even upon the theory of appellant that the board of supervisors alone has the power to purchase material for the construction of the bridge, it is doubtful whether the complaint stated a cause of action, in view of the allegation as to the board of supervisors ordering and advising the said A. E. Cowell in the construction of said bridge and in contracting therefor. If the supervisors are aiding and advising in the execution of the plan, it is not unreasonable to hold that Cowell is simply their agent in the purchase of the materials and in the employment of the labor. We would then have no more than what appellant says the Legislature intended; that is, the selection of the county surveyor "to supervise the construction of a bridge when built by days' work to the end that it should be constructed according to the plans and specifications adopted." At any rate, after a consideration of all the points made by appellant, most of which we have mentioned, we are satisfied that they are more technical than substantial and that the efforts of the officers in question to save the county expense should not be thwarted by the courts.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

15 Cal. App. 587

PIERSON v. PIERSON. (Civ. 960.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 9, 1911.)

DIVORCE (§ 186*)—JUDGMENT—FINDINGS—NECESSITY.

Where parties to a divorce action have not waived findings of fact, and the record shows that no findings sufficient to support a judgment were signed or filed in the action, the judgment will be reversed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 186.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William D. Dehy, Judge.

Action for divorce, brought by Carrie D. Pierson against Charles J. Pierson. Plaintiff appeals. Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

Winslow P. Hyatt, for appellant. Morton, Riddle & Hollzer and S. A. D. Gray, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Action for divorce. The parties hereto, through their respective attorneys, having filed a stipulation that reversible error exists in the record, and upon examination of such record, it appearing that findings of fact were not waived, and that no findings sufficient to support a judgment were by the court signed or filed in the cause, it is therefore ordered that the judgment in the above-entitled cause be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

15 Cal. App. 496

LAWSON v. LAWSON. (Civ. 935.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Feb. 25, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 26, 1911.)

1. EXEMPTIONS (§ 16*)—DEBTOR'S EARNINGS—"FAMILY."

Under Civ. Code, § 206, requiring a child to support an indigent parent, and though a mother not living with her son is not strictly a member of his family, where she is in poor health, destitute, is supported by him, and resides within the state, she is a member of his family, within Code Civ. Proc. § 690, exempting a debtor's earnings within 30 days preceding attachment, when necessary for the use of his "family."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exemptions, Cent. Dig. §§ 15-19; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2673-2691; vol. 8, p. 7661.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1212*)—REVERSAL—NEW TRIAL.

On reversal of an order declaring a debtor's earnings exempt, and upon rehearing in the trial court, it was not an abuse of discretion to permit him to show facts relating to his mother's dependent condition, though the proof was not made upon the former hearing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4713; Dec. Dig. § 1212.*]

3. MOTIONS (§ 64*)—RES ADJUDICATA—SCOPE OF DETERMINATION.

The principle of res adjudicata is not strictly applicable to motions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Motions, Dec. Dig. § 64.*]

4. MOTIONS (§ 43*)—RENEWAL—JUDICIAL DISCRETION.

A granting or denial of permission to renew a motion is discretionary with the trial judge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Motions, Cent. Dig. §§ 55, 56; Dec. Dig. § 43.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thos. F. Graham, Judge.

Action by Sadie Lawson against Alfred B. Lawson. From an order, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 111 Pac. 354, 356; 115 Pac. 463.

H. H. McPike and Crittenden Thornton, for appellant. Leon Samuels and Jacob S. Meyer, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. In an action for divorce, plaintiff obtained judgment against the defendant, which provided, among other things, that defendant pay to plaintiff the sum of $100 per month for her support and maintenance. The defendant having failed to comply with this provision of the judgment, the plaintiff took proceedings under section 710, Code of Civil Procedure, and filed with the auditor of the city and county of San Francisco (defendant being at that time a justice of the peace of said city and county receiving a monthly salary of $300) a duly authenticated copy of the judgment, whereupon said auditor paid into court the sum of $1,200, the amount of salary at that time due defendant. In due time plaintiff moved the court for an order that the whole of this sum be paid to her in part satisfaction of said judgment. After hearing had, the court ordered that of the sum of $600, representing defendant's salary for two months, the plaintiff be paid $400, and that $200 was exempt from execution and should be paid to defendant. Plaintiff appeals from this order, and asks for its reversal upon the ground, among others, that the defendant was not entitled to any exemption whatever; and this is the principal question to be determined.

Section 690 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides as follows: "The following property is exempt from execution or attachment, except as herein otherwise specially provided: * * * (10) The earnings of the judgment debtor for his personal services rendered at any time within thirty days next preceding the levy of execution or attachment, when it appears by the debtor's affidavit or otherwise that such earnings are necessary for the use of his family, residing in this state, supported in whole or in part by his labors. * * *" Defendant claimed the exemption upon the ground that the fund attached constituted his earnings, and that the said earnings were necessary for the support of his family residing within this state. In substantiation of this claim, defendant introduced evidence tending to show that he contributed to the support of his mother. The evidence on this point discloses that, while the defendant and his mother do not dwell under the same roof, she is nevertheless a resident of this state; that she is old, in poor health, and unable to maintain herself, and looks to defendant for her sole means of support. Upon this evidence the court concluded that defendant's mother was a member of his family, within the meaning of the section quoted; and after careful consideration we are of the opinion that this conclusion is sound and correct.

[1] Section 206 of the Civil Code imposes upon a child the legal obligation to support an indigent parent to the extent of his ability. While in a strict sense, or perhaps we should say in a narrow sense, a mother not living in the same household as her son is not a member of his family, yet where, as here, she is in poor health, destitute of property or the means of subsistence, is supported by him and resides within the state, we think she is a member of his family within the meaning of the language employed in the section. Any other construction would make the provisions of the law inconsistent; for, on the one hand, it would require a son to support his parent by reason of the family tie, and yet deprive him of an exemption specially created for the purpose of enabling him to discharge his obligations to his family. Furthermore, the question of whether the parent occupies the same abode as the judgment debtor should not be the exclusive test; for it is apparent that the debtor's wife or children might not be living with him, and yet it would not be seriously contended that they did not form part of his family. In Lawson v. Lawson, 111 Pac. 354, the Supreme Court, after stating that the language of subdivision 10 of section 690, Code of Civil Procedure, "for the use of his family residing in this state" clearly implies that one may be a member of a debtor's family although residing apart from him, proceeded to say (speaking through Mr. Justice Angellotti): "But it seems clear that they are the only relatives who can properly be held to be members of 'his family' within the meaning of the statute, with the possible exception of such other relatives as to whom exists on his part the legal obligation of support and maintenance." In discussing this question the Supreme Court of Alabama, in Sallee v. Waters, 17 Ala. 482, said: "To constitute a family within the meaning of the act (the exemption act), the relation of parent and child or husband and wife must exist. There must be a condition of dependence of the one or the other of these relations, but it is not necessary that all the dependents should live under the same roof or that the family should live together. It is the relation and dependence of the relation, not the aggregation of the individuals, that constitutes a family." See, also, State v. Finn, 8 Mo. App. 261, 264; 12 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 93.

[2] Appellant also makes the point that the order in this case should be reversed, for the reason that the matter of the defendant's right to claim the exemption of this fund is res adjudicata, and that the trial court, therefore, erred in receiving evidence in support of defendant's said claim. It appears that the defendant had previously made a motion in the trial court for an order that all money so paid by the auditor into court under the said proceedings initiated by the plaintiff was exempt from execution and should be paid to defendant. The court duly made its order, declaring part of said money exempt and that it be paid to defendant. Upon appeal by the plaintiff to the Supreme Court this order was reversed. Lawson v. Lawson, supra. Upon the hearing of plaintiff's motion, when the defendant offered testimony in support of his claim of exemption, the plaintiff objected, upon the ground that the question was res adjudicata. The court overruled the objection, and permitted the defendant to prove the facts relating to his mother's dependent condition, which proof had not been made upon the hearing of defendant's said motion. The court committed no error in so doing. The permission to defendant to prove such facts was no more, in effect, than allowing him to renew his motion for an order of exemption.

[3, 4] The principle of res adjudicata is not in a strict sense applicable to motions. In this state the granting or denying of permission to renew a motion is a matter of discretion with the trial judge. Kenney v. Kelleher, 63 Cal. 442; Bowers v. Cherokee Bob, 46 Cal. 279; Ventura County v. Clay, 119 Cal. 213, 51 Pac. 189. And while in this matter we think that the defendant, having had the benefit of a hearing in the trial court, and of an appeal to the Supreme Court from the trial court's order, the permission accorded him by the latter court to make the proof in question was a very liberal exercise of judicial discretion, yet we are not prepared to say that such discretion was abused. The order is affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; HALL, J.

15 Cal. App. 501

LAWSON v. LAWSON. (Civ. 932.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Feb. 25, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 26, 1911.)

EXEMPTIONS (§ 16*)—DEBTOR'S EARNINGS.

A debtor's earnings within 30 days of attachment are exempt, where it appears that he not only contributes to the support of his dependent mother residing within the state, but that he is married and living with his wife.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exemptions, Cent. Dig. §§ 15-19; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thos. F. Graham, Judge.

Action by Sadie Lawson against Alfred B. Lawson. From an order in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 111 Pac. 354, 356; 115 Pac. 461.

H. H. McPike and Crittenden Thornton, for appellant. Leon Samuels and Jacob S. Meyer, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order declaring exempt from execution a proportion of a certain fund, consisting of salary of the defendant as justice of the peace, earned within 30 days prior to attachment. The order also directed that the said proportion of said fund be paid over to the defendant. The appeal is taken by the plaintiff.

Though coming here upon a separate transcript, the appeal was argued with and submitted upon the same briefs as case numbered 935 in this court, bearing the same title, and in which we have this day affirmed the order of the trial court. 115 Pac. 461.

The fund, with reference to which the order appealed from in this case was made, is in the same situation as in said case numbered 935, and the order was made under the same circumstances, except that this is the first order made in regard to the fund involved in this appeal, and that the evidence produced in support of defendant's claim of exemption showed, not only that he contributed to the support of his dependent mother residing in this state, but that he had again married and was living with such wife, thus showing that he undoubtedly came within the exemption of the statute.

The principles of law are the same in both cases; and for the reasons stated in the opinion of this court affirming the order in said case numbered 935, the order in this case is also affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; HALL, J.

15 Cal. App. 496

LAWSON v. LAWSON (two cases).
(S. F. 5,777, 5,784.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 27, 1911.)

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thos. F. Graham, Judge.

On motions for rehearing. Motions overruled.

For original opinions, see 115 Pac. 461, 463.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent from the orders denying a rehearing of these causes. Each was regularly and properly appealed to this court, and afterwards transferred to the District Court of Appeal for hearing and decision. In each was involved a question of vital importance to which no reference is made in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, notwithstanding it was fully argued by the appellant—the question, that is to say, whether the statutory exemptions from execution have any application to an award of alimony. This, in my opinion, is a question of too serious import to be passed over in silence. It may be that in view of the terms of our statutes the apparent conclusion of the appellate court could not be set aside; but, if so, I am convinced that the policy of the statute is indefensible—a view sufficiently illustrated by the result of this litigation. In such cases an explicit declaration by the courts of the grounds of their decision would serve the useful purpose of calling the attention of the Legislature to the propriety of amending the statute.

159 Cal. 700

WELDON v. ROGERS. (L. A. 2,566.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 21, 1911.)

1. EXECUTION (§ 73*)—ORDER OF COURT—SECOND ORDER.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 685, providing that "in all cases" the judgment may be enforced or carried into execution after the lapse of five years from its entry, by leave of the court, the court does not exhaust its jurisdiction by ordering execution, under which the judgment is partly satisfied, but may thereafter make such an order for the satisfaction of the rest of the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. § 161; Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

2. EXECUTION (§ 73*)—ORDER OF COURT—DISCRETION.

The court, in the exercise of its discretion, under Code Civ. Proc. § 685, to order execution on a judgment more than five years after its entry, cannot consider any matters leading up to the judgment, but only circumstances arising after entry of judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. § 161; Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by Sophie B. Weldon, executrix of T. J. Weldon, deceased, against Ralph Rogers. From an order, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

McNutt, McNutt & Hannon, for appellant.
J. W. McKinley and Louis Luckel, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. This is an appeal by defendant from an order made under the provisions of section 685 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to enforce a judgment by the issuance of an execution for a deficiency remaining after sale under a previous execution similarly obtained. A brief history of the many phases of this protracted litigation may be found in the opinion in Weldon v. Rogers, 157 Cal. 410, 108 Pac. 236. On that appeal this department sustained the issuance by the superior court of an order in the nature of a writ of venditioni exponas. Acting under the authority of that order, the sheriff sold the property which he held under the previous levy, and partially satisfied the judgment. The order now brought here for review is similar to the one granted in 1905, by authority of which execution issued on April 10th of that year, after the judgment was about 14 years old.

[1] Appellant contends that the court exhausted its jurisdiction to order execution under the authority conferred by section 685 of the Code of Civil Procedure when it acted in 1905, granting respondent's previous motion; and that, even conceding the court's right to make another order like the one now before us, there was an abuse of discretion in the present instance. Upon the first point of controversy, we think that the statute itself is a complete answer to appellant's objection. The authority granted is very broad. Under it the court may even grant the prayer for a writ of execution, when an independent action on the judgment itself would be barred by the statute of limitations. Doehla v. Phillips, 151 Cal. 494, 91 Pac. 330. Section 685 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "in all cases the judgment may be enforced" as there set forth, and clearly the quoted language would apply as aptly to partially satisfied judgments as to those entirely unsatisfied.

[2] Appellant's other point raises this question, Has the court, in the exercise of its discretion to grant or to refuse the order contemplated by section 685 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the right to consider the facts appearing at the trial of the case, or any of the circumstances leading up to the judgment? We think this question must be answered in the negative. Any other answer would give to a superior court a power to review and to determine the correctness or propriety of one of its own judgments of long standing, which no appellate tribunal possesses. We think it clear that the court's "discretion" mentioned in such cases as

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Wheeler v. Eldred, 121 Cal. 30, 53 Pac. 431, 66 Am. St. Rep. 20, must be guided by the circumstances arising after the entry of judgment. Appellant insists that, unless the judge who hears the motion may look into the whole matter and determine whether or not a judgment is one which in good conscience ought to be enforced, there will be nothing upon which his discretion may operate. But we think there may be many matters arising after judgment which might properly appeal to the court's discretion in granting or refusing the order. Such things, for example, as the petitioner's laches, or his manifest intention to annoy the judgment debtor by execution upon a judgment which had been satisfied to within a few cents of the whole amount involved, might properly cause a denial of the motion by the court; while conduct by the judgment debtor, such as frivolous and ill-founded proceedings, taken for the manifest purpose of delaying the judgment creditor in the enforcement of his rights, might well influence the court in permitting the execution of the dormant judgment. No abuse of discretion by the court appears from the record before us.

Therefore the order from which this appeal is taken is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

In Bank. Petition by George Edwards and others for writ of prohibition, to be directed against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Alameda and the Honorable John Ellsworth, Judge thereof. Writ denied.

A. F. St. Sure and J. Leonard Rose, for petitioner.

BEATTY, C. J. The petitioners recovered a money judgment in a justice's court for $82.70. Defendant therein gave notice of appeal to the superior court, and in due time filed the following undertaking:

"In the Justice's Court of Oakland Township, County of Alameda, State of California. George Edwards, Noel Stone, and John Kleis, Plaintiffs, vs. F. E. Miller, Defendant. Know all men by these presents that we, F. E. Miller, principal, and J. Russo and B. Cianciarulo, sureties, are held and firmly bound unto George Edwards, Noel Stone and John Kleis, in the sum of one hundred & sixty-five & 40/100 dollars, lawful money of the United States of America, being double the amount of the judgment and cost mentioned herein, to be paid to the said George Edwards, Noel Stone and John Kleis, their executors, administrators, or assigns, for which payment, well and truly to be made, we bind ourselves, our and each of our heirs, executors, and administrators, jointly and severally, firmly by these presents. Signed with our hands, sealed and dated this 2nd day of November, 1909. The condition of the above undertaking is such, that whereas the said Edwards, Noel Stone and John Kleis obtained a judgment against the said F. E. Miller, before James G. Quinn, justice of the peace of Oakland township, in and for the county of Alameda, state of California, on the 25th day of October, 1909, for $73.20, principal sum, and for $9.50/100 dollars costs; and whereas the above bounden F. E. Miller is desirous of appealing from the decision of said justice to the superior court in and for the county of Alameda, and a stay of proceedings is claimed: Now, if the above-bounden shall well and truly pay or cause to be paid, the amount of the said judgment and all costs, and obey any order the said superior court may make therein, if the said appeal be withdrawn or dismissed, or pay the amount of any judgment and all the costs that may be recovered against the said appellant in the said superior court, and obey any order the said court may make therein, then this obligation to be null and void; otherwise to remain in full force and virtue. F. E. Miller. J. Russo. B. Cianciarulo."

The petitioners moved to dismiss the appeal upon the ground that this undertaking was insufficient to comply with the requirements of section 978, Code of Civil Proce-

(159 Cal. 710)

EDWARDS et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT,
ALAMEDA COUNTY et al. (S. F. 5,858.)

(Supreme Court of California. April
28, 29, 1911.)

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 159*)—SUPERSEDEAS BOND—SUFFICIENCY—STATUTES.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 978, providing that, for an appeal from a justice's court to be effective, an undertaking, with two or more sureties in the sum of $100 for the payment of the costs of the appeal, must be filed, or, if a stay of proceedings be claimed, the bond must be in a sum equal to twice the amount of the judgment, including costs, an appeal bond executed by the proper number of sureties in more than the sum of $100, and conditioned for the payment of the costs of appeal, is sufficient to make the appeal effective, although it also purports to operate as a supersedeas bond, for its validity as an appeal bond is not destroyed by the mere fact that it also purports to be given to stay execution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 550-578; Dec. Dig. § 159.*]

dure, as construed in McConky v. Superior Court, 56 Cal. 83. The motion to dismiss was granted, but subsequently, on motion of the appellant, that order was vacated, and the appeal placed upon the calendar of the superior court, wherein it will be heard and determined, unless a writ of prohibition is granted.

Petitioners base their application for the writ upon two grounds: First. That the order of dismissal was a final disposition of the cause, divesting the superior court of any power to revive it or resume any jurisdiction over it, and this, notwithstanding its jurisdiction at the time of the order of dismissal may have been clear and indisputable. Second. That by reason of the defects of the undertaking the superior court never acquired jurisdiction of the appeal.

As to the first objection, it need only be said that when, according to the uncontroverted facts, it appears that an appeal to the superior court has been duly perfected and diligently prosecuted, a dismissal of such appeal is in effect nothing more nor less than an attempted abdication of a jurisdiction which the court is bound in every proper case to exercise. It is, in other words, a refusal to decide a cause which it is the plain statutory duty of the court to decide, the remedy for which dereliction is the writ of mandate. But if in such a case the superior court discovers its mistake, it is not bound to wait for a peremptory writ of mandate, commanding it to do what it is its duty to do; what, indeed, it could not otherwise be commanded to do. Evidently in this case the judge of the superior court concluded that he had refused to exercise his jurisdiction in a proper case, and that the order of dismissal was a nullity. If he was right on the first point, we have no doubt of the correctness of his conclusion as to the nullity of the order, and the only question left for consideration is the sufficiency of the undertaking to give the superior court jurisdiction of the appeal.

The latest decision of this court upon that point (Jones v. Superior Court, 151 Cal. 589, 91 Pac. 505) is a conclusive affirmation of the sufficiency of the undertaking under section 978, Code of Civil Procedure. It may be doubted whether the decision in that case successfully distinguishes the case of McConky v. Superior Court, 56 Cal. 83, in which section 978 appears to have been differently construed; but if that case was not distinguishable it was certainly overruled—and, I have no doubt, properly overruled—for the construction there given to section 978 was only reached by disregarding the express terms of the statute, i. e., by the substitution of the word "or" for "and" with the effect of requiring two undertakings, each containing the same condition, where one was amply sufficient for every conceivable purpose, and that in a class of actions where simplicity of procedure and economy are a most important desideratum.

The decisions in Duffy v. Greenebaum, 72 Cal. 157, 12 Pac. 74, 13 Pac. 323, and Duncan v. Times-Mirror Co., 109 Cal. 602, 42 Pac. 147, and in other cases involving the sufficiency of undertakings on appeal to this court, are not in point. The sufficiency of such undertakings depended upon compliance with the provisions of sections 940 et seq., Code of Civil Procedure, which in express terms required, at the date of those decisions, a separate undertaking on appeal, and they simply followed the law as it was written; whereas, in McConky v. Superior Court, section 978, Code Civ. Proc., which by its terms required but one bond, was held, if such was the decision, to require two—an unnecessary, and in its results a mischievous, construction. By the more recent decisions of this court (Jones v. Superior Court, supra; Laws v. Troutt, 147 Cal. 172, 81 Pac. 401; and Swem v. Monroe, 148 Cal. 741, 83 Pac. 1074), it is settled that an undertaking in not less than $100, or a deposit of that amount, will support an appeal from a justice's court to the superior court, and that when a judgment for money equals or exceeds the sum of $50, an undertaking in double the amount of the judgment will equally support the appeal, notwithstanding a recital that a stay of proceedings is desired. Whether it will also operate as a stay bond in that case has not been expressly held; but that seems to be the logical result of what has been decided.

The writ of prohibition is denied.

SLOSS, LORIGAN, ANGELLOTTI, SHAW, MELVIN, and HENSHAW, JJ. (specially concurring). We concur in the order denying a writ, on the ground that the bond is sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the superior court. The undertaking is in more than the sum of $100, and is conditioned for the payment of the costs on the appeal. It thus contains all that is required by the Code of Civil Procedure, § 978, to make the appeal effectual. Its validity as an appeal bond is not destroyed by the fact that it also purports to be given to stay execution. Ward v. Superior Court, 58 Cal. 519; Jones v. Superior Court, 151 Cal. 589, 91 Pac. 505. Whether or not it is effectual to operate as a stay bond is not here involved. We express no opinion on this point, nor do we think it necessary for the decision of this case, to question the correctness of McConky v. Superior Court, 56 Cal. 83.

BEATTY, C. J. In view of what is said in the concurring opinion of my Associates, I desire to say with respect to the case of Ward v. Superior Court, 58 Cal. 519, that it is a very doubtful inference from the report that the undertaking in that case was, or purported to be, intended to stay execution; while in the McConky Case the implication is very clear that the undertaking was intended to stay execution, and was held insufficient to support the appeal for that reason. But, whether this is so or not, one thing at least is clear that it was held in the McConky Case that where a stay of execution was desired there must be two distinct undertakings, one for the stay and another to perfect the appeal, and that this construction of the statute required the word "or" to be read "and"—a view plainly necessary to sustain that conclusion. Now, if section 978, Code of Civil Procedure, is to be so read, the law governing appeals to the superior court cannot be distinguished from the law governing appeals to this court (sections 940, 941, 942, Code Civ. Proc.), and if the law is the same in both cases I confess my inability to reconcile the decision in Jones v. Superior Court, 151 Cal. 589, 91 Pac. 505 (upon the authority of which this case is decided) with the decisions in Duffy v. Greenebaum, 72 Cal. 157, 12 Pac. 74, 13 Pac. 323, and Duncan v. Times-Mirror Co., 109 Cal. 602, 42 Pac. 147, in which it was plainly decided that the insertion in a stay bond of the condition required in an appeal bond is ineffectual to support the appeal. If the views here expressed are correct, it must follow, either that the McConky Case was overruled by the decision in Jones v. Superior Court, or else that under the same statutory provisions we will (the undertakings being the same) dismiss an appeal to this court, and sustain an appeal to the superior court.

I think I am safe in adding that ever since the decision in Duffy v. Greenebaum the superior courts throughout the state had understood the law to be that they were without jurisdiction to hear an appeal from a justice's court, unless there was a separate undertaking, distinct from the stay bond, to pay costs, and that numerous appeals have been dismissed in which parties have filed undertakings, such as that which was held sufficient to support the appeal in Jones v. Superior Court. And I have no doubt that the first order of the superior court, dismissing the appeal in this case, was made in obedience to those earlier decisions, and set aside when attention was called to the latter.

159 Cal. 702

JOHN RAPP & SON et al. v. KIEL et al.,
Police Com'rs. (S. F. 5,389.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 25, 1911.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 45*)—ORDINANCE IMPOSING LICENSE FEE—"TAX"—"LICENSE TAX."

An ordinance enacted by the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco is entitled "An ordinance imposing a license for the purpose of regulation upon persons * * * selling * * * malt or fermented liquors * * * in quantities of one quart or more, less than five gallons, when the same is contained in sealed packages, and not to be drunk on the premises where sold, * * * requiring a permit therefor." The ordinance makes it unlawful to sell such liquors "without first having obtained a permit therefor from the board of police commissioners, and paying the license fee herein provided"; requires any person doing such act to procure a license, paying therefor "a licence fee of $150 per annum"; requires application for renewals to be passed upon by the board of police commissioners, and declares that the ordinance and "the license herein imposed" are enacted to regulate the business described. The charter of the city and county of San Francisco (article 2, c. 2, § 1) authorizes the board of supervisors to make all necessary police regulations; and subdivision 15 authorizes it to impose "license taxes," but provides that no license taxes shall be imposed upon one who, at any fixed place of business, sells goods, etc., except such as require permits from the board of police commissioners, as provided in this charter. Held, that the ordinance was enacted solely for regulation, and not for revenue, and the license imposed was a "license tax" within subdivision 15, so that the board had no power to impose it, since, while a "tax," technically, only includes charges imposed for producing revenue, and not for purposes of regulation under the police power, the term "license tax," as used in the statutes and by the courts, includes license charges of every character, whether imposed for revenue or police regulations, or both.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 47; Dec. Dig. § 45.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4142, 4143; vol. 8, pp. 6867-6886, 7813.]

2. LICENSES (§ 5½*)—LICENSE FEES—REGULATION.

The power of a municipality to regulate a business may be exercised by imposing a license fee, or charge, in such an amount as is reasonably necessary to regulate the business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Dec. Dig. § 5½.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 58*)—POWERS OF CITY—LIMITATION.

The legislative body of a city having a freeholders' charter may be limited by the charter, in the exercise of the police power given the city by the state Constitution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by John Rapp & Son and others against Hugo Kiel and others, Police Commissioners, to enjoin the enforcement of an ordinance. From an order enjoining its enforcement, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. H. Langdon and R. W. Harrison, for appellants. Hiram W. Johnson, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This case presents the question of the validity of an ordinance adopted by the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco on May 25, 1908, entitled an ordinance "Imposing a license for the purpose of regulation upon persons, firms or corporations selling, giving away or serving malt or fermented liquors or wines, or any admixture thereof, in quantities of one quart or more, less than five gallons, when the same is contained in sealed packages, and not to be drunk on the premises where sold, given away or served, requiring a permit therefor, and regulations relating thereto." This title fairly states the nature of the ordinance, which makes it unlawful for any person to do any of the prescribed acts "without first having obtained a permit therefor from the board of police commissioners, and paying the license fee herein provided"; provides that before doing any such act every person shall procure a permit from the board of police commissioners and a license from the tax collector, paying therefor "a license fee of one hundred and fifty ($150.00) dollars per annum," payable in quarterly installments of $37.50 in advance; provides that the tax collector shall not issue any license or renewal, until the applicant has obtained the requisite permit and paid the license fee; provides that every license shall expire at the end of the quarter for which it is issued, and that application for renewals shall be passed upon by the board of police commissioners after certain notice given to the public; provides that such board shall have full power to grant or withhold a permit, or revoke any permit already granted; declares that the ordinance and the "license herein imposed" are for the purposes of regulating the business therein described, and makes a violation of any provision of the ordinance a misdemeanor. The trial court concluded that this ordinance is invalid, and made an order enjoining its enforcement. This appeal is from such order, and the sole question presented is that of the validity of the ordinance.

The theory of respondents, adopted by the trial court, is that, by reason of certain provisions of the freeholders' charter of the city and county of San Francisco, the board of supervisors was without power to impose any license fee or charge upon persons who, at any fixed place of business in the city and county, do any of the acts prescribed in the ordinance, and that the provisions of the ordinance requiring the payment of such fee or charge are so inseparably blended with the other provisions as to make the whole ordinance void. It is not disputed by appellants that if the provisions for a license fee or charge are invalid the whole ordinance is void.

The charter provisions material to the question presented are as follows:

By section 1 of chapter 2 of article 2, a chapter entitled "Powers of the supervisors," it is provided:

"Section 1. Subject to the provisions, limitations and restrictions in this charter contained, the board of supervisors shall have power:

"1. To ordain, make and enforce within the limits of the city and county all necessary local, police, sanitary and other laws and regulations. * * *

"15. To impose license taxes and to provide for the collection thereof; but no license taxes shall be imposed upon any person who, at any fixed place of business in the city and county, sells or manufactures goods, wares or merchandise, except such as require permits from the board of police commissioners as provided in this charter."

The only provisions in the charter that require a permit from the police commissioners for the sale, etc., of liquor, are those contained in chapter 3 of article 8, and such provisions are confined to those persons who sell liquor "in less quantity than one quart," and to those who sell liquor "to be drunk on the premises."

It is to be borne in mind that the ordinance before us deals solely with those who dispose of malt or fermented liquors or wines, in quantities of one quart or more, less than five gallons, when the same is contained in sealed packages, and not to be drunk on the premises where sold, including all who sell in this way at fixed places of business in the city and county of San Francisco. It is manifest that such persons are within the exemption provision of subdivision 15 of section 1, c. 2, art. 2, of the charter, and that by reason of that fact, no charge or burden within the meaning of the term "license taxes," as used in such subdivision, can be imposed upon them by the supervisors of the city and county. It is apparent, therefore, that the question presented is simply whether or not such a charge or fee as is imposed by the ordinance before us is a "license tax" within the meaning of that term in the charter provision.

The claim of appellants is, of course, that the ordinance is one enacted solely in the exercise of the police power of regulating the business therein specified, and that the charter provision invoked, fairly construed, has no application to a license fee or charge imposed solely for purposes of regulation, but has to do only with license taxes imposed for revenue purposes.

[1] We are of the opinion that a court would not be warranted in holding otherwise than that the ordinance and the license thereby imposed were, as the ordinance expressly declares, solely for the purpose of regulating the business therein specified. Every provision therein, other than those relating to the license fee, is obviously purely regulatory in character.

[2] As to the license fee provisions, "It is * * * well settled that the power to regulate a business may be exercised by means of a license fee, or charge," in such amount as "is reasonably necessary for the purpose sought, i. e., the regulation of the business" (County of Plumas v. Wheeler, 149 Cal. 763, 87 Pac. 909), and it certainly cannot be contended with any show of reason that the imposition of a license fee of $150 per annum demonstrates "that the purpose of the imposition was to realize a revenue under the guise of regulating the business."

County of Plumas v. Wheeler, supra. See Ex parte McNally, 73 Cal. 632, 15 Pac. 368. The provisions of the ordinance are not such as to warrant the courts in concluding that the board of supervisors did not therein truthfully state its purpose.

Is a license fee or charge imposed by a purely regulatory ordinance a "license tax," within the meaning of that term as used in the charter provision?

A "tax," under a strict and technical construction of the term, probably includes only charges imposed for the purpose of producing revenue, as distinguished from charges imposed for purposes of regulation in the exercise of the police power. It has been said by some authorities in other states that a license fee, or charge, imposed solely for regulatory purposes, is in no proper sense a tax, and we may concede that this holding is technically correct. But the term "license tax" has often been used in this state, by both the Legislature and by this court, as including license charges imposed for regulatory purposes, and we have no doubt that, in its popular meaning, it includes any charge imposed for a license, whether the object be regulation or revenue, or both regulation and revenue. In our original general municipal corporation act of 1883 (St. 1883, c. 49), we find that the board of trustees of a city or town of the sixth class was invested with power "to license, for purposes of regulation and revenue, all and every kind of business, * * * to fix the rates of license tax upon the same and to provide for the collection of the same by suit or otherwise." Section 862. Here clearly the term "license tax" was used to include both regulatory and revenue charges. A similar provision was incorporated as to cities of the fifth class, except that the words "including the sale of intoxicating liquors" were inserted after the word "business." Section 764. When, by an act approved March 23, 1901 (Stats. 1901, p. 635), the Legislature sought to prohibit the imposition of any license charge for revenue purposes, and to allow such licensing only for purposes of regulation, it entitled its act as being one to add a new section to the Political Code (3366), "relating to the powers of boards of supervisors, city councils, and town trustees in their respective counties, cities, and towns, and to impose a license tax." In the body of the act, such legislative bodies were authorized, "in the exercise of their police powers, and for the purpose of regulation, as herein provided, and not otherwise, * * * to license all and every kind of business, * * * to fix the rates of license tax upon the same, and to provide for the collection of the same by suit or otherwise." This court held, as was obvious, that the words "license tax" were used as synonymous with "license fee or charge," saying, also, that "the words 'license tax' do not necessarily and always mean a license tax assessed and collected for purposes of revenue." In Ex parte Ah Toy, 57 Cal. 92, this court said: "Our attention has not been called to any general statute, which in terms or by implication, prohibits the imposition of a license tax as a police regulation." In Ex parte Lemon, 143 Cal. 559, 77 Pac. 455, 65 L. R. A. 946, and in County of Plumas v. Wheeler, 149 Cal. 767, 87 Pac. 909, the words "license tax" were used by this court as synonymous with a "license fee or charge" imposed solely in the exercise of police power. The instances thus cited (undoubtedly only a few of very many that can be found in statutes and opinions of this court) are sufficient to show that the words "license tax" have been freely used as including regulatory license charges, as well as charges imposed for revenue purposes, and that the connection in which the term is used in a particular case may properly be looked to for the purpose of determining its intended scope.

There is nothing to indicate that the words "license tax" were used in the charter provision in the narrow technical sense contended for by appellants. In view of the fact that the term has been so frequently used by the Legislature and the courts in the broad sense of including license charges of every kind, it might be argued with some force that, if the charter framers had intended to confine the application of their prohibition to license taxes imposed solely for revenue purposes, they would have so stated, just as the Legislature did in limiting legislative bodies to license charges for regulation only, by the act of March 23, 1901, hereinafter referred to.

Instead of doing this, they have so expressed themselves as to leave no serious doubt in our minds of their intention to exempt from license charge of every description, whether for revenue or regulation, the persons as to whom they provide that no "license taxes" shall be imposed. The language of the exception contained in the prohibitory portion of the charter provision is such as to make the meaning very clear. The board of supervisors is empowered "to impose license taxes," etc.; "but no license taxes shall be imposed upon any person who, at any fixed place of business in the city and county, sells or manufactures goods, wares, or merchandise, except such as require permits from the board of police commissioners, as provided in this charter." This clearly shows simply the desire and intent to reserve to the board of supervisors the power to impose license charges for purposes of regulation in certain cases. Limited as it is in its application to businesses for the doing of which the obtaining of a permit from the board of police commissioners is made by the charter a prerequisite, no other conclusion is reasonable. But, if appellants' construction of the words "license tax" as used in this provision be correct, such a reservation would be entirely superfluous and without point, for any business included in the exception would necessarily be one that could be regulated in the exercise of the police power, and, in the absence of express prohibition, a license charge could be imposed thereon by the board of supervisors as a part or the whole of such regulation, in such amount as might reasonably be deemed necessary for the purposes of regulation. The very specification of those excepted from the exemption provision indicates with clearness the conception of the charter framers of the meaning of the words "license taxes" as used in the exemption provision. It is as though they had in terms provided that "license taxes" may be imposed on those referred to in the exception clause, and on no other persons engaged in selling or manufacturing at a fixed place of business in the city and county.

Taking the words "license tax" as meaning any license fee or charge imposed as a condition to the doing of business, each of the parts of the provision has its office to perform, and all the parts taken together make a consistent whole. It was evidently desired by the charter framers to make it very clear that no license charge, fee, or tax of any kind should be imposed on any person selling or manufacturing goods, wares, or merchandise at a fixed place of business in the city and county, unless the business to be conducted by such person was one which they considered it necessary to regulate by charter provision requiring the consent of the police commissioners as a condition precedent to the doing of business. This we believe to be the plain effect of the charter provision relied on by respondents. It is stated in their brief, and not denied by counsel for appellants, that such was the effect of an opinion rendered by City and County Attorney Lane, of San Francisco, just prior to the taking effect of the charter (January, 1900), and that the construction so given by him was acquiesced in until the adoption of the ordinance under consideration.

[3] It cannot now be doubted that the legislative body of a city having a freeholders' charter may be limited by charter provision, in the exercise of the police power conferred upon the city by the Constitution of the state. In this connection it is only necessary to refer to the opinion in the case of In re Pfahler, 150 Cal. 71, 81, 88 Pac. 270, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1092, which we think answers every point made in this behalf by learned counsel for appellants. See, also, People ex rel. Wilshire v. Newman, 96 Cal. 605, 31 Pac. 564.

The result of our views is that, by reason of provisions contained in the charter of the city and county of San Francisco, the board of supervisors of that city and county is without power to impose a license charge, fee, or tax of any kind, either for purposes of regulation or revenue, upon any person who, at a fixed place of business in the city and county, sells malt or fermented liquors or wines, except such as sell such liquor or wine in less quantity than one quart, or who sell the same to be drunk on the premises. The board has no such power as to those covered by the ordinance before us, viz., persons who sell in quantities of one quart or more, less than five gallons, when the same is contained in sealed packages, and not to be drunk on the premises where sold. If it be desired to change the law in this regard, such change can be made only by amendment of the charter.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.; SHAW, J.

15 Cal. App. 676

CITY OF LOS ANGELES v. KERCKHOFF CUZNER MILL & LUMBER CO.
et al. (Civ. 915.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 23, 1911.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 134*)—DAMAGES—USE OF PROPERTY—SCHEME OF IMPROVEMENT.

A landowner in condemnation proceedings is not entitled to show enhanced damages which it would suffer by reason of being prevented from carrying out a particular scheme of improvement existing in contemplation only at the time of the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 356; Dec. Dig. § 134.*]

2. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 202*)—USE OF LAND—EVIDENCE—DIAGRAM—CONTEMPLATED IMPROVEMENTS.

Where, in condemnation proceedings, the landowner was permitted to prove the particular use to which the property was being put and also its worth, considering the most valuable use to which it was adapted, a diagram of the ground, showing proposed improvements existing only in contemplation, and not limited to proof of the complete use for which the property was adapted, considering the use then being made of it, was inadmissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Dec. Dig. § 202.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by the City of Los Angeles against the Kerckhoff-Cuzner Mill & Lumber Company and others. From an award of damages for the condemnation of land belonging to R. H. Herron Company, it appeals. Affirmed.

O'Melveny, Stevens & Millikin, for appellant. Leslie R. Hewitt, Charles E. Haas, and Edward G. Kuster, for respondents.

JAMES, J. Action brought to secure, by condemnation, a strip of land for street purposes. Defendant R. H. Herron Company was dissatisfied with the award of damages made by the trial court, and appeals from the judgment.

Appellant in the course of the trial in the superior court offered in evidence a diagram showing the tract of land owned by it, and which would be divided into two parts by the opening of the street proposed to be extended through the same. John M. Sands, a witness familiar with the ground and the diagram, testified as follows: "It is a diagram showing the tract in question and the locations of the shops and improvements of various kinds already constructed by us on that tract, and the locations as planned for the additional improvements to be constructed hereafter; also location of existing switch tracks and proposed additional switch track." The court refused to admit the diagram in evidence, and this ruling is the only error claimed. From the bill of exceptions it appears that appellant was allowed, unhindered by the court or objection of counsel, to prove the particular use to which the property was being put, and also its worth, considering the most valuable use to which it was adapted. There was ample testimony before the court fully covering these matters, and the only additional subject to be illustrated by the offered diagram was the location of proposed improvements to be thereafter made and erected thereon. At best this evidence could only be received for the purpose of showing the complete use for which the property was adapted, considering the use then being made of it.

[1] Appellant could not be allowed to show enhanced damage which it would suffer by reason of being prevented from carrying out a particular scheme of improvement, existing only in contemplation at the time of the trial.

[2] The trial court did not by its ruling limit the parties from showing by proof all available uses to which the property might be put; it simply declined to allow appellant to show the location and size of its proposed improvements, and by this ruling we think no error was committed. The range allowed at the trial in the admission of evidence was broad enough to cover all matters suggested as proper to be considered, by the Supreme Court in the case of Muller v. Railway Co., 83 Cal. 245, 23 Pac. 267, where it is said: "In arriving at the value of the land, all its capabilities, or the uses to which it is adapted, should be taken into consideration." We also quote from the case of City of Santa Ana v. Harlin, 99 Cal. 543, 34 Pac. 226: "The rule as enunciated by Lewis on Eminent Domain, at section 479, is as follows: '* * * The condition of the property and all its surroundings may be shown, and its availability for any particular use. If it has a peculiar adaptation for certain uses, this may be shown; and, if such peculiar adaptation adds to its value, the owner is entitled to the benefit of it. But, when all the facts and circumstances have been shown, the question at last is: What is it worth in the market?' * * * Such proof should be limited to showing the present condition of the property and the uses to which it is adapted, and may not be extended to speculative inquiries as to possible future uses under altered circumstances, which may or may not arise." In our examination of the authorities, we find one case where testimony like that proposed to be introduced in this case was allowed to go before the jury. The case to which we refer is that of Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Blake, 116 Ill. 163, 4 N. E. 488. It was therein held by the Illinois court that, where evidence of the variety mentioned was allowed to be introduced for the limited purpose of showing the adaptability of the property to the use which it was intended to put it to, no error was committed; but it was said that the use of such testimony, even for that purpose, should not be encouraged. The language used by the court in considering the objection offered was as follows: "It is also urged that the court erred in permitting the respondent to exhibit before the jury the plans of a certain structure he had contemplated for a number of years past erecting on the premises. Whether evidence of this kind is proper or improper depends entirely upon the purpose for which it is offered and to which it is limited by the court. If the object of such evidence is to enhance the damages by showing such a structure would be a profitable investment, the testimony would clearly be inadmissible. If, on the other hand, it is offered merely as an illustration of one of the uses to which the property is adapted; or, in other words, by way of showing the capabilities of the property, and it is expressly limited by the court to such object, as was the case here, there will be no error in admitting it. The practice, however, of introducing such evidence, should not be encouraged, as there is generally more or less danger of its being misunderstood by the jury. But the purpose of the testimony in this case was so clearly and repeatedly stated by the court that it is almost impossible there could have been any misapprehension in respect to it, and consequently there was no error in admitting it."

For the reasons given, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

15 Cal. App. 584

TREFTS v. McDOUGALD. (Civ. 810.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District,
California. March 14, 1911.)

1. COURTS (§ 57*)—STENOGRAPHERS—COMPENSATION AND FEES—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.
St. 1909, p. 1077, amending Pen. Code, § 870, provides that after a defendant has been held to answer a copy of the depositions taken at a preliminary examination shall be furnished him on request, and that the compensation of the reporter therefor shall be paid by the county in the manner prescribed by section 869, subd. 6. Charter of the city and county of San Francisco (Misc. art. 16, § 34) provides that the salaries provided in the charter shall be a full compensation for all services rendered; and article 5, c. 8, § 11, provides that such reporters shall be paid for all services, including stationery and transcription, an annual salary of $2,400. Held, that since the adoption of the charter, the provisions of section 870 have no application to the appointment and compensation of reporters in preliminary examinations before police judges in said city and county, and, in so far as the amendment to section 870 encroaches on the powers of the municipality, to that extent it is inoperative.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Dec. Dig. § 57.*]

2. COURTS (§ 57*)—POLICE COURT—STENOGRAPHERS—CONTROL OF LEGISLATURE.

The Legislature has the power to prescribe the duties of the judges of police courts and their attachés, of the city and county of San Francisco, while engaged in the examination of felony cases, and a reporter of the police courts therein is an officer of the municipality, and work done by him in a preliminary examination is official in character, and the compensation therefor is fixed by the charter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Dec. Dig. § 57.*]

3. COURTS (§ 57*)—STENOGRAPHERS—COMPENSATION.

The compensation of a municipal officer is purely a municipal affair, and the charter provisions upon that subject are exclusive and conclusive, irrespective of whether the duties of the office are exacted by the charter or imposed by the general law of the state; and the fact that, subsequent to the adoption of the charter provisions defining the duties and determining the compensation of police court reporters the Legislature, by a general law, demanded additional duties of him, when serving in his official capacity at preliminary examinations, does not give the Legislature the power to provide the means and measure of his compensation therefor, but as to such compensation the charter provisions will be still paramount, under Const. art. 11, §§ 6 and 8½.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Dec. Dig. § 57.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Mandamus by the People, on the relation of Walter E. Trefts, against John E. McDougald, to compel respondent, as Treasurer of the City and County of San Francisco, to pay relator for furnishing a copy of depositions taken in a preliminary examination in the police court on the order of the police court judge, and under Penal Code, § 870. From an order of the police court requiring respondent to pay the relator for said copy, and a refusal by respondent, a mandate was issued by the superior court on the relator's petition. From an order overruling a demurrer to the petition, and from a judgment issuing the writ, the respondent appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Percy V. Long and John F. English, for appellant. John S. Partridge and Nathan C. Coghlan, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. The plaintiff and respondent is one of the official stenographers of the police court of the city and county of San Francisco, duly appointed as such under the provisions of the charter governing said city and county.

On July 7, 1909, there was pending before the Honorable E. P. Shortall, one of the judges of said court, the preliminary hearing of one Laura McDonald upon a charge of murder. The plaintiff, by direction of the judge presiding at the hearing, and at the request of the attorney for the defendant therein, was required to take in shorthand the depositions of the witnesses and notes of the proceedings.

At the conclusion of her preliminary examination, the said Laura McDonald was held to answer before the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. Thereupon respondent, by the further direction of the judge of said police court, and the requirements of section 870 of the Penal Code, transcribed and delivered to counsel for said Laura McDonald a copy of the depositions taken upon her preliminary hearing. Thereafter the said judge of the police court ordered defendant and appellant, as treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco, to pay respondent the sum of $9 out of the municipal treasury, as compensation for furnishing the said copy of the depositions. Upon the refusal of the appellant to comply with the police judge's order, respondent petitioned the superior court of the said city and county for a writ of mandate, commanding appellant as said treasurer, to honor the order. To the petition for a writ of mandate appellant interposed a general demurrer, grounded upon the insufficiency of the facts stated therein to constitute a cause of action. This demurrer was overruled. Appellant, as the defendant below, declined to answer the petition within the time allowed him, and judgment for the issuance of the writ prayed for followed. The appeal is from this judgment.

[1] The order of the magistrate, requiring the services of the reporter and providing for his compensation, as well as the subsequent judgment in mandamus, are based upon the provisions of section 870 of the Penal Code. This section as amended (Stats. 1909, p. 1077) requires, after a defendant has been held to answer, that a copy of the depositions taken at a preliminary examination be furnished, upon request, to the defendant therein, or to his counsel, and that the compensation of the reporter so furnishing such depositions shall be paid by the county wherein the examination has been held, in the manner prescribed by subdivision 6 of section 869 of the same Code.

On the other hand, the charter of the city and county of San Francisco provides for the appointment of two salaried reporters to attend upon the police courts of said city and county. Their duties under the charter, with the single exception of providing a defendant or his counsel with an extra copy of the proceedings had at a preliminary examination, are identical in effect with the service required of such reporters under the general law of the state, as declared in section 870 of the Penal Code.

The salary of respondent, as one of the official reporters of the said police courts, is fixed by the charter under which he was appointed at $2,400 per annum; and this sum, the charter expressly declares, shall be "in full compensation for all services rendered * * * including transcription and stationery. * * *" Charter, Miscellaneous, § 34, art. 16; section 11, art. 5, c. 8. The charter provisions designating the duties of police court reporters do not limit the service which may be required of them at preliminary examinations.

The jurisdiction of the judges of the police courts in the city and county of San Francisco to hold preliminary examinations is conferred upon them, as magistrates, by the general law of the state.

[2] The exercise of that jurisdiction is necessarily a state affair, and the Legislature has the undoubted power to prescribe the duties of the judges of these courts, and their attachés, when engaged in the examination of felony offenses against the laws of the state.

Respondent, as one of the reporters of the police courts of the city and county of San Francisco, is an officer of the municipality, and all service rendered by him in the conduct of a preliminary examination is work done in the performance of an official duty required of him in his capacity as a municipal officer. This compensation in full for all services rendered as such municipal officer is fixed by the charter.

[3] The compensation of a municipal officer is purely a municipal affair (Graham v. Mayor, 151 Cal. 465, 91 Pac. 147; Popper v. Broderick, 123 Cal. 456, 56 Pac. 53; Fragley v. Phelan, 126 Cal. 386, 58 Pac. 923), and the charter provisions upon that subject are exclusive and conclusive. Elder v. McDougald, 145 Cal. 740, 79 Pac. 429. This is so, irrespective of whether the duties of the office are exacted by the charter, or imposed by the general law of the state. Matter of Dodge, 135 Cal. 512, 67 Pac. 973.

The fact that, subsequent to the adoption of the charter provisions defining the duties and determining the compensation of respondent, the Legislature, by a general law, demanded additional duties of him, when serving in his official capacity at preliminary examinations, does not give the Legislature the power to provide the means and measure of his compensation therefor. In the matter of such compensation the charter provisions are paramount (Const. art. 11, §§ 6 and 8½; People v. Williamson, 135 Cal. 415, 67 Pac. 504), and prevail over any general law in conflict therewith existing at the time of the adoption of the charter (Burke v. Board of Trustees, 4 Cal. App. 235, 87 Pac. 421), or subsequently enacted by the Legislature. Graham v. Mayor, etc., supra.

It is our opinion that, since the adoption of the charter of the city and county of San Francisco, the provisions of section 870 of the Penal Code with reference to the appointment of reporters, and their compensation for the service therein required of them, have no longer any application to the appointment and compensation of reporters in preliminary examinations pending before the police judges of said city and county.

If, however, it was intended by the Legislature that the amendment to section 870 of the Penal Code should control in the matter of the compensation of police court reporters in the city and county of San Francisco, then, in so far as it conflicts with the charter provisions, it must be considered and construed as an encroachment upon the powers of the municipality, and to that extent inoperative as to such municipality.

[4] It may be true, as suggested by counsel for the respondent, that in this view of the law the city and county of San Francisco is exempted from a burden that is imposed generally upon other counties of the state; but "if this be an inequality the people themselves have created it, and if a remedy is needed they only can provide it." People v. Williamson, supra.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, and the lower court is directed to sustain appellant's demurrer to the petition for a writ of mandamus, without leave to amend.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; HALL, J.

15 Cal. App. 670

CORDANO et al. v. FERRETTI et al.
(Civ. 765.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California. March 23, 1911.)

1. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§ 129*)—CONTRACTS—PART PERFORMANCE.

The payment of the price or rendition of services is not, as a general rule, such part performance of a parol agreement to convey land for a price or services as will take it out of the statute of frauds.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. §§ 287-292; Dec. Dig. § 129.*]

2. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§ 129*)—PART PERFORMANCE—SUFFICIENCY.

To make a parol contract for the conveyance of real estate in consideration of personal services enforceable, the services must be of such a peculiar character that it is impossible to estimate their value by any pecuniary standard, and it must appear that the parties did not intend to measure them by any such standard, and that after the performance of the services the party performing them cannot be restored to the situation in which he was before their rendition.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. §§ 287-292; Dec. Dig. § 129.*]

3. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 8*)—PAROL CONTRACTS—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Whether a parol contract to convey real estate in consideration of personal services shall be specifically enforced is addressed to the conscience of the chancellor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 17, 18; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

4. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 45*)—PAROL CONTRACTS—PERSONAL SERVICES.

A parol contract to convey an interest in real estate in consideration of personal services, consisting of nursing an aged parent, will not be specifically enforced, where it does not appear that the services cannot be measured by a pecuniary standard, or that the child cannot be restored to his former position, and the mere fact that the parent was helpless and in need of most attention and that some sacrifice was demanded from the child does not justify relief.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. § 127; Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 616*)—RECORD.

A paper printed in the back of the transcript on appeal, which purports to be a notice of judgment, but which is not authenticated by the certificate of the clerk or the judge, cannot be considered on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2714-2718; Dec. Dig. § 616.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 612*)—RECORD—AUTHENTICATION.

A stipulation in the transcript on appeal signed by the attorneys, stipulating that the papers contained in the transcript are true and correct copies of the original on file in the action, is a sufficient authentication.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2694-2701; Dec. Dig. § 612.*]

7. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 128*)—JURISDICTION—AWARD OF DAMAGES.

The rule that, where equity has taken jurisdiction of a case, it will do complete justice between the parties and award the relief the evidence justifies, if within the issues, though not specifically prayed for, does not justify the court, in a suit for the specific performance of a parol contract to convey real estate in consideration of personal services to be rendered, to give judgment for the value of the services, in the absence of any issue as to their value.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 412-419; Dec. Dig. § 128.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thos. C. Denny, Judge.

Action by G. Cordano and others against G. B. Ferretti and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

T. J. Butts, for appellants. J. M. Thompson and R. L. Thompson, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought for the specific performance of a parol contract to convey real estate and personal property. The complaint alleges: "That on or about the said 15th day of December, 1907, the said defendant G. B. Ferretti entered into contract and agreement with plaintiffs at and in Sonoma county, wherein and where-by the said G. B. Ferretti agreed to pay, transfer, and assign to plaintiffs upon the death of said Victoria Ferretti one-half of all the community property of the said G. B. Ferretti and Victoria Ferretti, if the said plaintiffs would take the said Victoria Ferretti into their charge and keeping and provide her with all the necessities of life and medical attendance, and give to her the care and attention that she needed in her helpless condition during the time of her natural life, and the said plaintiffs then and there agreed to and with the said G. B. Ferretti that in consideration of his paying, transferring, and assigning to them the one-half of the said community property, that they would take the said Victoria Ferretti into their home and care for her and furnish to her all the necessities of life and would give to her such care as her condition demanded. That the said plaintiffs did then and there take the said Victoria Ferretti into their house and did care for her and did furnish to her all the necessities of life and did give to her such care and attention as was needed by her up to the time of her death, and that the said Victoria Ferretti died on the 22d day of June, 1908."

There is no dispute as to the facts included in the first three findings of the court to the effect that the said Victoria Ferretti, during the time mentioned in the complaint, resided with her husband, the said G. B. Ferretti, on the premises of plaintiffs in Sonoma county; that she was the mother of plaintiff Kate Cordano, and was afflicted with paralysis and unable to care for herself; that in July, 1905, the said G. B. Ferretti and his wife, the said Victoria Ferretti, at the invitation of plaintiffs, came to said premises from their home in Alameda county, and thenceforth, until about November 1, 1907, resided in a house built by defendant G. B. Ferretti, on the premises and near the dwelling house of plaintiffs; that thereupon the plaintiff Kate Cordano voluntarily took her mother, the said Victoria Ferretti, into plaintiffs' dwelling house and assisted in nursing and caring for the said Victoria Ferretti until the latter's death as aforesaid. The court further finds that on December 15, 1907, the defendant G. B. Ferretti made the oral agreement set out in plaintiffs' complaint. Appellants, of course, do not, and respondents cannot, assail this finding.

The whole controversy hinges upon the following findings: "(5) That, during all of said time up to the death of his wife, G. B. Ferretti assisted in the care of his said wife and furnished and paid for part of the drugs and medical attention and provisions consumed by her. (6) That the said services so performed by plaintiff Cordano were the ordinary services of nursing and attending to a sick person in a condition such as that of the said Victoria Ferretti. But that in the performance of said services there was no change of residence, circumstances, conditions, or domestic life on the part of plaintiffs, and the position of plaintiffs was not changed, and that said services were not impossible nor difficult to estimate the value of in money, but could be and were readily computed and estimated in money value." Both of these findings, in our opinion, are amply supported by the evidence, and they in turn warrant the judgment of the court in favor of defendants.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The foundation of the claim of appellants necessarily rests in a compliance upon their part with all the terms of the contract, and a failure in that respect in any important particular is sufficient to defeat the action. However, following the lead of counsel, the view by the trial court of the contract, as embodied in said finding 6, may be considered of paramount importance and entitled to more extended consideration. The principles applicable to the situation are simple and easily ascertainable. They have been under review in many decisions of the courts. We, probably, though, need not go beyond the case of Owens v. McNally, 113 Cal. 444, 45 Pac. 710, 33 L. R. A. 369. Therein the contract related to a testamentary disposition of property; but, admittedly, the character of such a contract is substantially the same as the one before us, and there is no material difference between the conditions prerequisite to the specific enforcement of the one and of the other.

[1] In that case, as in this, the contract, being in parol, was within the statute of frauds, and the court, after a comprehensive review of the authorities, declares that "it is the generally accepted rule that the payment of the purchase price or the rendition of services is not such a part performance of a parol agreement as will relieve the contract from the operation of the statute."

[2] To make the contract enforceable, it is further held that the services must be of such a peculiar character that it is impossible to estimate their value by any pecuniary standard, it must also be evident that the parties did not intend to measure them by any such standard, and it must appear after the performance of the services that plaintiff cannot be restored to the situation in which he was before the rendition of the services.

[3] It is further declared that "the question whether relief should be granted or denied in a particular case addresses itself peculiarly to the conscience of the chancellor, and before a plaintiff entitles himself to it many considerations enter and are to be weighed."

[4] We can see none of those peculiar and extraordinary circumstances present in the case at bar that would leave no discretion in the trial court but to decree specific performance. It may be admitted that the care of the deceased was quite burdensome. She was helpless and in need of much attention, but any competent nurse could have performed the services that were required. It may have been a hardship for the plaintiffs to have the old lady in their home. Some sacrifice was doubtless demanded of the daughter, but it is perhaps needless to say that such inconvenience and discomfort are a common incident of age and infirmity, and the task should have been, and no doubt was, alleviated by filial affection and devotion. At any rate, we cannot say that the services cannot be measured by a pecuniary standard, or that plaintiffs cannot be restored to the position in which they were before the services were performed.

The cases cited have invited and received examination, but further specific consideration of them is not deemed necessary, nor do we feel called upon to quote the testimony found in the record. Indeed, we probably would have been justified in declining to examine the testimony to ascertain whether it is sufficient to support the findings for the reason that the appeal was not taken within 60 days after the entry of the judgment. The judgment was filed and entered October 7, 1909. The notice of such filing and entry was served October 8, 1909. Notice of appeal was served and filed by appellants December 8, 1909, 61 days after the service of said notice of filing and entry of judgment and 62 days after the entry of judgment. Section 939, subd. 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure, provides that: "An exception to the decision, or verdict, on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence, cannot be reviewed on an appeal from the judgment, unless the appeal is taken within sixty days after the entry of the judgment."

[5] The only answer by appellants to this point is: "That there is nothing in the bill of exceptions or judgment roll that shows that the appeal was taken more than 60 days after notice. There is a paper printed in the back of the transcript which purports to be a notice of judgment, but it is not authenticated by the certificate of the clerk or of the judge and cannot be considered on this appeal."

[6] There is, however, a stipulation signed by the attorneys that the papers contained in the transcript "are true and correct copies of the original papers on file in said action." This ought to be sufficient authentication. But, regardless of this contention, we are satisfied that the decision must be upheld upon the merits of the case.

[7] For the first time, in their closing brief, appellants claim that, if the court was right in finding that the case is one in which compensation could be made in money, then the court should have found the amount that would compensate them and award them that sum and not turn them out of court destitute of any relief. In support thereof appellants cite Miller v. Edison Electric Illuminating Company, 184 N. Y. 17, 76 N. E. 734, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1060, Hurlbutt v. N. W. S. Law Co., 93 Cal. 55, 28 Pac. 795, and Zellerbach v. Allenberg, 99 Cal. 57, 33 Pac. 786. These are all to the effect that, when equity has taken jurisdiction of a case, it will endeavor to do complete justice between the parties and award whatever relief the evidence justifies, if within the issues, though not specifically prayed for. To save expense and avoid unnecessary litigation, the rule, of course, should be observed. The difficulty here is, however, that there is no issue as to the value of the services actually performed by plaintiffs. It is true that there is an allegation in the answer that "the reasonable value of said services, including all care and attention, necessities furnished and medical attendance, would not exceed the sum of $300"; but this includes services rendered and paid for by defendant G. B. Ferretti, as found by the court. Besides it may be that the trial judge believed that the plaintiffs had been compensated for their services. There is some evidence to that effect in the transcript. At any rate, no doubt, the court below would have been disposed to award whatever compensation it deemed plaintiffs entitled to if the matter had been properly presented.

As it stands here, seeing no prejudicial error in the record, we think there is no course open to us but to affirm the judgment, and it is so ordered.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

15 Cal. App. 654

PURITAS LAUNDRY CO. v. GREEN.
(Civ. 790.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District,
California. March 21, 1911.)

1. CONTRACTS (§ 177*)—CONSTRUCTION.

Defendant contracted with plaintiff to collect laundry work for plaintiff's laundry, and pay plaintiff an established schedule of prices, by paying on certain named days each week all moneys collected, and making a settlement on the 15th of each month for the previous month, defendant agreeing to promptly collect and to guarantee all accounts, and that, if he ceased to do business with plaintiff, he should settle in full within two weeks. Plaintiff agreed to pay defendant $5 a week, and on the 15th of each month a sufficient sum to make the total compensation for the previous month amount to 30 per cent. of plaintiff's gross charges for the work furnished by defendant during such month. The contract permitted defendant to collect laundry from local agents and pay them a commission on work furnished by them, and also permitted him to sell his laundry route and assign the contract, if the purchaser was satisfactory to plaintiff. Held, that the contract contemplated that plaintiff should look only to defendant for payment for laundry work delivered to it by him; there being no privity between it and defendant's customers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Dec. Dig. § 177.*]

2. CONTRACTS (§ 303*)—PERFORMANCE—EXCUSE FOR NONPERFORMANCE.

Under Civ. Code, § 1511, providing that the want of performance of an obligation is excused where performance is prevented or delayed by the act of the creditor, plaintiff's prevention of defendant's performance of a contract by which he was to secure laundry work to be done by plaintiff would be a defense to plaintiff's recovery of the balance due on a contract for work done.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1409-1443; Dec. Dig. § 303.*]

3. CONTRACTS (§ 322*)—ACTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action to recover a balance due under a contract by which defendant agreed to procure business for plaintiff's laundry, evidence held to show that defendant refused to renew his bond, tried to induce plaintiff's employes to go with a rival concern organized by defendant, and claimed that he was not bound to make collections of work, all contrary to the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Dec. Dig. § 322.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 30*)—RELATIONSHIP—TERMINATION—GROUNDS.

In view of Civ. Code, § 2000, permitting an employer to at any time terminate an employment for willful breach or habitual neglect of duty by an employe, an employer may terminate a contract of employment where an employe engages in a business which necessarily makes him a competitor to some extent of his employer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

5. CUSTOMS AND USAGES (§ 15*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—EXPLAINING CONTRACT.

Where the contract by which defendant agreed to procure work for plaintiff laundry for a stipulated compensation provided that plaintiff should recompense defendant for all claims duly made by customers for loss or damage, but did not state how such claims should be established, in an action to recover a balance due for laundry charges under the contract, plaintiff could show a custom between laundries and agents as to the manner of investigation and allowance of claims for loss and damage; it being presumed that the parties contracted with reference to the established usage in the absence of a specific provision.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Customs and Usages, Cent. Dig. §§ 30-33; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

6. CONTRACTS (§ 238*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—MODIFYING CONTRACTS.

Where the contract between plaintiff laundry and defendant provided that defendant should be allowed 30 per cent. of the gross charges for laundry work procured by him and done by plaintiff, evidence was not admissible in an action for a balance due under the contract that by an oral agreement defendant was to be allowed an additional per cent. where work was brought by him from branch agencies in a certain amount; Civ. Code, § 1698, providing that a written contract may be altered by a contract in writing or by an executed oral agreement, and not otherwise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Dec. Dig. § 238.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

Action by the Puritas Laundry Company against Charles E. Green. From a judgment for defendant and an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Ward Chapman and L. M. Chapman, for appellant. Isadore B. Dockweiler, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to recover a balance of $431.70 alleged to be due upon a contract. Judgment went for defendant, from which and an order denying its motion for a new trial plaintiff appeals.

Plaintiff was engaged in the laundry business, and defendant was the recognized owner of what is known as a "driver's route," throughout which, with a horse and buggy owned by him, he engaged in collecting and delivering articles for laundering, and, when the work was done, returned and redelivered the same to the owners thereof. On February 21, 1906, the parties entered into a contract, which was to continue in force for two years from and after the 14th day of May, 1906, and which contract contained provisions as follows:

"(1) Said party of the first part (the plaintiff) agrees to wash and launder in a first-class manner and to redeliver to said second party (the defendant) at the time and in the order and manner that all laundry work is generally handled, within three (3) days or less (Sundays excluded) after receiving the same, all articles delivered to said laundry by said second party during the life of this contract, at the regular schedule of prices for laundry work in this city. Said party of the first part agrees to pay said party of the second part the sum of $5 per week, on each Tuesday, and on the 15th of each month a further sum sufficient to make the total compensation for the previous month amount to 30 per cent. of the gross charges made by the party of the first part for the laundry work furnished by the party of the second part during the previous month.

"(2) Said first party agrees to recompense said second party for all claims duly made and established by patrons, on account of losses of or damage to articles delivered to be laundered, which occur while said articles are in the possession of said first party. * * *

"(5) It is agreed that in case said second party ceases to do business with said first party, he shall settle in full within two weeks thereafter."

The said second party agrees: "(1) To deliver to said party of the first part at its laundry, to be laundered, all articles collected by him from his route, and to pay said first party for doing said laundry work the regular established schedule of prices in this city, in the manner provided herein. (2) To take said laundered articles and return the same to the owners thereof at regular times and promptly, after the same have been laundered. (3) To collect charges for said laundry work and pay over to said first party all money collected three times per week, on each Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday; and also make regular accounting and settlement on the 15th of each month for all work done during the previous month, in the manner already provided herein. Said second party agrees to guarantee all accounts and to make all collections promptly. (4) To conform to the regular schedule of prices established by said first party, for articles collected to be laundered, and in no way to deduct from or 'cut' said schedule of prices without the consent of said first party. But this shall not prohibit said second party from collecting laundry from local agents and paying them a commission upon the work which said agents deliver to said second party. (5) The aforesaid sum of five dollars per week and a further amount equal to 30 per cent. of the net amount of work delivered by said second party shall be received and accepted by him as full compensation and profits for performing his part of the contract. * * *

(6) Upon beginning operations under this agreement said second party will cause to be executed and delivered to said first party, a bond in the sum of five hundred dollars ($500) conditioned for the faithful performance of the terms and conditions of this contract on the part of said second party."

It was further provided that operations should begin under the contract on May 14, 1906, and continue for a term of two years thereafter; and that said second party might sell and transfer his route and assign his contract, upon the condition that such purchaser and transferee should be satisfactory to the party of the first part.

The complaint alleged that defendant entered upon the performance of his contract and continued in the performance thereof until about the 4th day of August, 1907, when he was discharged for cause, and said contract terminated for good cause by plaintiff, at which time defendant was indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $431.70, which, upon demand, he refused to pay. In his answer defendant admits the execution of the contract; denies that there is due from him to plaintiff thereunder any sum whatsoever; denies that said contract was terminated upon good cause; alleges that he is entitled to the sum of $28.70 on account of extra commissions orally agreed upon between plaintiff and defendant after he entered the employ of said plaintiff under the provisions of said contract, which commissions it is alleged were to be payable for work collected by defendant from subagencies where the amount of such collections equaled the sum of $20 or more per week; alleges that he is entitled to the sum of $75.75 on account of moneys paid out by defendant in settlement of claims of patrons for losses or damages to articles delivered to said plaintiff to be laundered, and which losses and damages occurred while said articles were in the possession of plaintiff; admits that he is charged with $431.70 upon the books of plaintiff, but that $218.55 of said sum is made up of amounts due but uncollected by him, the collection of which has been interfered with by plaintiff by reason of the termination of said contract.

The court found that defendant entered upon the performance of the contract herein set out, and continued in the performance thereof until about July 27, 1907, at which time he was discharged and said contract terminated without good, sufficient, or legal cause, and at which time there was a balance unpaid to plaintiff, on account of laundry work done by it, of $431.70; that at said time there was due to defendant the sum of $28.70, additional commissions earned by him under an oral agreement made with the plaintiff providing for the payment of additional commissions, as set forth in his answer; that defendant has paid out in settlement of losses, as set forth in his answer, the sum of $75.75, for which he is entitled to credit; that there are outstanding accounts, other than those collected by defendant and upon which he is entitled to credit, in the sum of $206.70, which sum defendant has been unable to collect by reason of his discharge by plaintiff, and which sum the court found plaintiff did not use due diligence to collect.

[1] As we construe the contract, it imposed upon defendant Green the primary obligation of paying plaintiff for the laundry work done, recovery for which could only be defeated by some affirmative defense. By its terms defendant agreed "to pay said first party for doing said laundry work the regular established schedule of prices in this city, in the manner provided herein"; that is, to pay over to plaintiff on each Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday all moneys collected at such times, and "also make regular accounting and settlement on the 15th of each month for all work done during the previous month," and to make all collections promptly and guarantee all accounts. It was further provided in express terms "that, in case said second party ceases to do business with said first party, he shall settle in full within two weeks thereafter." Considering the contract as a whole, we are clearly of the opinion that there was no privity between the laundry company and those who intrusted their laundry to defendant for the purpose of having the same laundered, but that the intent of the parties was that plaintiff should look solely and alone to defendant for all charges for all laundry work done by it on laundry delivered by defendant, and that defendant should pay therefor the prevailing schedule rates, and on the 15th of each month he should make settlement in full for all work done during the preceding month. The fact that plaintiff was required to pay defendant 30 per cent. of this gross amount in no wise affects the interpretation that should be placed upon the latter's promise.

[2] If performance was prevented by the acts of plaintiff, such fact would constitute a sufficient defense to recovery. Section 1511, Civ. Code. While such defense was not pleaded, the court found that plaintiff terminated the contract without good, sufficient, or legal cause therefor, and that by reason thereof defendant had not been able to collect the balance of $206.70, due and unpaid from those for whom laundry work had been done.

[3] In our opinion, neither fact so found is supported by the evidence. The contract imposed upon defendant the duty of giving to plaintiff an indemnity bond in the sum of $500, conditioned for the faithful performance of the contract. He gave a bond which expired August 1, 1907, but some days before the expiration thereof refused to renew the same, or give any bond as required, by the terms of the contract. Upon this point defendant testifies that, when told the bond was about to expire and the company wanted a cash bond, "I told him the bond was good enough, and that he could have it renewed. When he told me the bond was about to expire and that I would have to get a new one, I told him that was all he would get. I told him to renew that bond. I declined to do it myself. The company had done so before." The contract did not require plaintiff to furnish the bond. It also appears from defendant's own testimony that some time prior to the termination of the contract defendant had actively engaged in organizing and launching a rival laundry company, known as the "Electric Laundry"; that defendant had access to the books of plaintiff and an acquaintance with plaintiff's employes; that he did solicit some of said employes to leave the employ of plaintiff and go to the Electric Laundry Company, in which defendant was one of the stockholders; that he intended to go there himself, hiring another man to drive his wagon, and that it was his intention to take his own work to said Electric Laundry; that he talked with a number of said employes, and did "ask Mr. Wonderly (one of the drivers) to quit the employ of plaintiff and take his work to the Electric before he was discharged and while his contract was still in force"; that he discussed with many of the employes the advisability of leaving the employ of plaintiff. The evidence clearly shows that defendant had not only placed himself in an attitude hostile to plaintiff's interest, but that he had violated the implied obligations of the contract, in that he was actively engaged in efforts to induce the employes of plaintiff to leave and unite their interests with that of a rival company engaged in the same business, which defendant had been instrumental in organizing and wherein he had invested his own capital.

[4] "Manifestly, when a servant becomes engaged in a business which necessarily renders him a competitor, a rival of his master, no matter how much or how little time he devotes to it, he has an interest against his duty. It would be monstrous to hold that the master was bound to retain the servant in his employment after he has thus voluntarily put himself in an attitude hostile to his master's interests." Dieringer v. Meyer, 42 Wis. 311, 24 Am. Rep. 415. See, also, section 2000, Civ. Code. The evidence discloses that defendant made little or no effort to collect the outstanding amounts due from his patrons. He says he did not dun them or ask them for the money. "What money I collected I simply took it voluntarily, or, whenever they asked me how much was the balance on the account, I told them, and at the first of the month I issued each one of them a statement of just exactly what was outstanding." It clearly appears from his own testimony that he insisted that the duty of making the collections did not devolve upon him, but upon plaintiff. Not only did defendant make no genuine effort to collect the accounts, but there is nothing in the record tending to prove that by reason of any act of plaintiff he was prevented from making such collections.

[5] The contract contains a provision to the effect that the laundry company agrees to recompense said second party for all claims duly made and established by patrons on account of losses or damage to articles delivered to be laundered which occur while said articles are in the possession of said first party. The court found that defendant had paid in settlement of losses under this provision the sum of $75.75. It does not appear that such claims were duly made and established, or made and established at all, by patrons. Defendant testified that he made settlements with customers for such losses. The contract is silent as to how such claims should be established, and it was sought by plaintiff to show the prevailing custom with respect to investigation and allowance of claims for lost articles and damaged goods under such circumstances. The court sustained an objection to such inquiry. This was error. Specific stipulations as to the manner of the establishment of claims being omitted in the contract, it will be presumed that the parties contracted with reference to the established usage in relation to such subject.

[6] Over plaintiff's objection, defendant was allowed to show that the written contract was modified by an oral agreement wherein it is claimed that, instead of being allowed 30 per cent. on the gross charges, he was to be allowed an additional $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. where work was brought in from branch agencies the items of which amounted to more than \$20 per week. This was clearly error. The contract, being in writing, could only be modified or altered by a contract in writing, or an executed oral agreement. Section 1693, Civ. Code. The alleged oral agreement as to the sum claimed was unexecuted, and hence no recovery thereon could be had.

Other alleged errors are assigned by appellant, but, in view of the conclusion reached, we deem it unnecessary to consider them. The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

15 Cal. App. 651

KRAKER v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY
AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (Civ. 939.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 21, 1911.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 166*)—APPEAL—DISMISSAL.

When an appeal from a justice's court is duly perfected by a defendant upon both questions of law and fact, the case is removed to the superior court for a trial de novo, and it is the duty of plaintiff to bring the case on for trial, and not that of the defendant, and it was error on plaintiff's motion to dismiss an appeal taken by defendant for want of prosecution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 120*)—REVIEW.

The action of the superior court in dismissing an appeal from the justice's court may be reviewed by the appellate court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 840-865; Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

3. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 166*)—APPEAL AND ERROR—DISMISSAL—EFFECT—REVIEW, RIGHT TO—MODE OF REVIEW AND TRIAL DE NOVO.

Where an appeal by defendant from a judgment of a justice of the peace was dismissed and judgment entered for plaintiff without a trial, it was in excess of the superior court's jurisdiction, and the order of dismissal and the judgment should be vacated, and the case stand for trial de novo in the superior court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

Application for a writ of review against the Superior Court and Hon. Thomas F. Graham, judge thereof, to review the action of the Superior Court in dismissing an appeal from a judgment rendered in a justice's court. Order of the superior court vacated and annulled.

Jas. P. Sweeney and Jos. P. Lucey, for petitioner. Edgar C. Levey and George M. Lipman, for respondent.

HALL, J. Petitioner filed his petition in this court for a writ of review, for the purpose of reviewing the action of the superior court in dismissing an appeal taken by said

Kraker from a judgment rendered in the justice's court against said Kraker and in favor of one Albert Mueller, who was the plaintiff in the action in said justice's court. No formal answer was made to the writ, but both parties appeared and obtained leave to file briefs. In the briefs the matter has been presented as upon a demurrer to the petition.

From the facts thus admitted, it appears that an action was commenced in the justice's court in 1904 by Albert Mueller, as plaintiff, against petitioner herein, M. Kraker, and judgment rendered against Kraker in favor of Mueller in said action in January, 1905, for the sum of $40 and costs. In due time said Kraker duly took and perfected an appeal from said judgment to the superior court upon both questions of law and fact. The papers and files in said action were destroyed by the great fire of April, 1906, but subsequently the records in said action were restored by order of the superior court duly given and made. Thereafter Mueller, the plaintiff in said action, moved the court, upon notice given to the appellant (defendant in said action), to dismiss the appeal taken to the superior court upon the ground that the defendant in said action, had failed and neglected to prosecute said appeal with due diligence. The court granted the motion to dismiss the appeal, and in the same order gave judgment for the plaintiff in said action against the defendant, said Kraker, for the sum of $40 and costs, without any trial of the issues involved in said action. The action of the superior court, both in dismissing petitioner's appeal and in entering judgment in favor of plaintiff in said action upon said appeal, was clearly without any warrant of law.

[1] When an appeal from the judgment of a justice's court is taken and duly perfected, by a defendant, upon both questions of law and fact, the case is removed to the superior court for a trial de novo, and the superior court must try the case as if there had been no trial in the justice's court. In such case, the appeal being fully perfected, the plaintiff is the actor in the superior as he was in the justice's court, and it is his duty to bring the case on for trial, and no duty in that respect devolves upon the defendant, although he is the appealing party. Rabin v. Pierce, 10 Cal. App. 734, 103 Pac. 771; Alexander v. Municipal Court of Appeal, 4 Pac. 961.

[2] There has been some conflict in the authorities in this state as to whether or not the action of the superior court in dismissing an appeal from the justice's court may be reviewed (Carlson v. Superior Court, 70 Cal. 628, 11 Pac. 788; Hall v. Superior Court, 68 Cal. 24, 8 Pac. 509; Buckley v. Superior Court, 96 Cal. 120, 31 Pac. 8); but the matter has been finally put at rest by the decision of the Supreme Court in Golden Gate Tile Co. v. Superior Court, 114 Pac. 973, filed March 11, 1911. It is there determined that, where an appeal upon questions of law and fact is properly perfected, the superior court acts in excess of its jurisdiction in dismissing such appeal, and its action may be controlled by the appropriate remedy. In that case a writ of mandamus was issued to compel the trial of an action after the appeal had been in form dismissed. In the case at bar the appeal was dismissed and a judgment in favor of plaintiff thereupon entered, without any trial of the issues presented in the action. This was all without any warrant of law and in excess of the jurisdiction of the court. The order dismissing the appeal was void, and therefore was not an affirmation of the judgment appealed from, nor did it invest the superior court with jurisdiction to enter judgment without trial against the appellant.

[3] The order of dismissal and the judgment against petitioner should be vacated and annulled, when the case will stand for trial de novo in the superior court.

The order and judgment, entered by the said superior court, in the case of Albert Mueller v. M. Kraker, dismissing the appeal to said county court by said M. Kraker, and adjudging that said Mueller have and recover from said Kraker the sum of $40 and interest and costs, is vacated and annulled, as being void and in excess of the jurisdiction of said court.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

15 Cal. App. 662

COGHLAN v. QUARTARARO et al.

SWETT-DAVENPORT LUMBER CO. et al.
v. SAME. (Civ. 853.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 21, 1911. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 19, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 302*)—BILLS OF EXCEPTION—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 648, providing that, when an exception is to a verdict or decision on the ground of insufficiency of evidence, an objection must specify the particular in which such evidence is insufficient, and section 659, providing that a party moving for a new trial must designate the grounds upon which the motion will be made, where the court refused to rule that several plaintiffs had failed to prove their several causes of action, but the bill of exceptions subsequently settled and used upon motion for new trial did not refer to the findings of fact or specify any particulars in which the evidence was insufficient to support any of them, the appellate court cannot review the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings, either on an appeal from the judgment or from the order denying a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 302.*]

2. JURY (§ 14*)—RIGHT TO JURY TRIAL—FORECLOSURE OF MECHANIC'S LIEN.

An action to foreclose a subcontractor's or materialman's lien is a suit in equity, and the defendant, sued simply as the owner of the property against which it is sought to foreclose the lien and against whom no personal judgment is sought, is not entitled to a jury trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. § 46; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

3. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 73*)—CONTRACTS—SIGNING AND FILING—VOID CONTRACTS—RIGHT TO LIEN.

Where there were two contracts, the first for the erection of a two-story building and the second for an addition of a third story thereto, and each contract provided that the work should be done in conformity with the plans, drawings, and specifications signed by the parties, and each was for over $1,000, and, as to the first, it appeared that the plans and specifications were not signed, and, as to the second, that no plans or specifications were filed therewith, both contracts were void, and the materialmen were entitled to a lien for the value of the materials and labor furnished without regard to the price named in the original contract or the balance in the owner's hands, due to the original contractor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

4. ACTION (§ 59*)—CONSOLIDATION OF ACTIONS—EFFECT—ISSUES.

Where a materialman in his complaint alleged a valid and properly filed contract between the owner and the contractor, but plaintiff in another action against the same owner alleged that the contracts were never filed, and the two cases were consolidated, either of the plaintiffs could tender an issue as to the validity of the contracts and a finding thereon would bind all parties to the action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Action, Cent. Dig. § 696; Dec. Dig. § 59.*]

5. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 271*)—PLEADING—COMPLAINT—AGREED PRICE.

An allegation of an agreed price in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, both in the claim of lien and in the complaint, is a sufficient prima facie allegation of value of the work as against a demurrer for uncertainty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Dec. Dig. § 271.*]

6. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 154*)—CLAIM BY CORPORATION—SUFFICIENCY.

A claim of lien was signed with the claimant's corporate name, by C., and was also verified by C. The evidence showed that C. had full charge of the corporation and was practically its general manager. Held, it was competent for him to make, verify, and file the claim for the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 261-267; Dec. Dig. § 154.*]

7. TRIAL (§ 163*)—NONSUIT—MOTION—SUFFICIENCY.

A general statement that plaintiff has failed to prove its case is wholly insufficient as a statement of grounds for nonsuit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 371; Dec. Dig. § 163.*]

8. INTEREST (§ 18*)—UNLIQUIDATED AMOUNT—INTEREST PRIOR TO JUDGMENT.

Where plaintiffs sold material for defendant's building at market rates, which changed from time to time, so as to require proof at the trial of their action to foreclose their lien, the amount due was unliquidated, and could not be made certain by calculation, and it only became certain when fixed by judgment, so that interest thereon cannot be allowed prior to judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Interest, Cent. Dig. § 33; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Consolidated actions by Frank Coghlan and by the Swett-Davenport Lumber Company and another against Salvatore Quartararo and others. From a judgment in each case for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for new trial, defendant Quartararo appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Daniel O'Connell, for appellant. Roger Johnson, for respondent Coghlan. Alex. G. Eells and H. K. Eells, for respondent Swett-Davenport Lumber Co. E. B. Young and F. A. Denicke, for respondent Swiss-American Bank.

